40 Mahatman", are this time held in with the greatest care. The 41 Professor's boat is here plying between the Scylla of the Christian 42 missionaries on the one hand, and the Charybdis of the tumultuous 43 Brahmos on the other. The article, "A Real Mahatman" brought 44 forth from both the parties many hard words and many carping 45 remarks on the Professor. It is a pleasure to observe that there is 46 neither the attempt made here to retort on them, nor is there any 47 display of meanness--as the refined writers of England are not in 48 the habit of indulging in that kind of thing--but with a sober, 49 dignified, not the least malignant, yet firm and thundering voice, 50 worthy of the aged scholar, he has removed the charges that were 51 levelled against some of the uncommon ideas of the great-souled 52 sage--swelling forth from a heart too deep for ordinary grasp.

1 And the charges are, indeed, surprising to us. We have 2 heard the great Minister of the Brahmo Samaj, the late revered
3 Acharya Shri Keshab Chandra Sen, speaking in his charming way
4 that Shri Ramakrishna's simple, sweet, colloquial language 5 breathed a superhuman purity; though in his speech could be 6 noticed some such words as we term obscene, the use of those 7 words, on account of his uncommon childlike innocence and of their 8 being perfectly devoid of the least breath of sensualism, instead of 9 being something reproachable, served rather the purpose of 10 embellishment--yet, this is one of the mighty charges!

11 Another charge brought against him is that his treatment of 12 his wife was barbarous because of his taking the vow of leading a 13 Sannyasin's life! To this the Professor has replied that he took the 14 vow of Sannyasa with his wife's assent, and that during the years of 15 his life on this earth, his wife, bearing a character worthy of her 16 husband, heartily received him as her Guru (spiritual guide) and, 17 according to his instructions, passed her days in infinite bliss and 18 peace, being engaged in the service of God as a lifelong 19 Brahmacharini. Besides, he asks, "Is love between husband and 20 wife really impossible without the procreation of children?" "We 21 must learn to believe in Hindu honesty"--in the matter that, without 22 having any physical relationship, a Brahmachari husband can live a 23 life of crystal purity, thus making his Brahmacharini wife a partner 24 in the immortal bliss of the highest spiritual realisation, 25 Brahmananda--"however incredulous we might justly be on such 26 matters in our own country". May blessings shower on the 27 Professor for such worthy remarks! Even he, born of a foreign 28 nationality and living in a foreign land, can understand the meaning 29 of our Brahmacharya as the only way to the attainment of 30 spirituality, and believes that it is not even in these days rare in 31 India, whilst the hypocritical heroes of our own household are 32 unable to see anything else than carnal relationship in the 33 matrimonial union! "As a man thinketh in his mind, so he seeth 34 outside."

35 Again another charge put forward is that "he did not show 36 sufficient moral abhorrence of prostitutes". To this the Professor's 37 rejoinder is very very sweet indeed; he says that in this charge 38 Ramakrishna "does not stand quite alone among the founders of 39 religion!" Ah! How sweet are these words--they remind one of the 40 prostitute Ambapali, the object of Lord Buddha's divine grace, and 41 of the Samaritan woman who won the grace of the Lord Jesus 42 Christ.

43 Yet again, another charge is that he did not hate those who 44 were intemperate in their habits. Heaven save the mark! One must 45 not tread even on the shadow of a man, because he took a sip or 46 two of drink--is not that the meaning? A formidable accusation 47 indeed! Why did not the Mahapurusha kick away and drive off in 48 disgust the drunkards, the prostitutes, the thieves, and all the 49 sinners of the world! And why did he not, with eyes closed, talk in a 50 set drawl after the never-to-be-varied tone of the Indian flute-51 player, or talk in conventional language concealing his thoughts!
52 And above all, the crowning charge is why did he not "live

1 maritalement " all his life!

2 Unless life can be framed after the ideal of such strange 3 purity and good manners as set forth by the accusers, India is 4 doomed to go to ruin. Let her, if she has to rise by the help of such 5 ethical rules!

6 The greater portion of the book has been devoted to the 7 collection of the sayings, rather than to the life itself. That those 8 sayings have attracted the attention of many of the English-9 speaking readers throughout the world can be easily inferred from 10 the rapid sale of the book. The sayings, falling direct from his holy 11 lips, are impregnate with the strongest spiritual force and power, 12 and therefore they will surely exert their divine influence in every 13 part of the world. "For the good of the many, for the happiness of 14 the many" great-souled men take their birth; their lives and works 15 are past the ordinary human run, and the method of their preaching 16 is equally marvelous.

17 And what are we doing? The son of a poor Brahmin, who has 18 sanctified us by his birth, raised us by his work, and has turned the 19 sympathy of the conquering race towards us by his immortal
20 sayings--what are we doing for him? Truth is not always palatable, 21 still there are times when it has to be told: some of us do 22 understand that his life and teachings are to our gain, but there the 23 matter ends. It is beyond our power even to make an attempt to put 24 those precepts into practice in our own lives, far less to consign our 25 whole body and soul to the huge waves of harmony of Jnana and 26 Bhakti that Shri Ramakrishna has raised. This play of the Lord, 27 those who have understood or are trying to understand, to them we 28 say, "What will mere understanding do? The proof of understanding 29 is in work. Will others believe you if it ends only in verbal 30 expressions of assurance or is put forward as a matter of personal 31 faith? Work argues what one feels; work out what you feel and let 32 the world see." All ideas and feelings coming out of the fullness of 33 the heart are known by their fruits--practical works.

34 Those who, knowing themselves very learned, think lightly of 35 this unlettered, poor, ordinary temple-priest, to them our 36 submission is: "The country of which one illiterate temple-priest, by 37 virtue of his own strength, has in so short a time caused the victory
38 of the ancient Sanatana Dharma of your forefathers to resound 39 even in lands far beyond the seas--of that country, you are the 40 heroes of heroes, the honoured of all, mighty, well-bred, the learned 41 of the learned--how much therefore must you be able to perform far 42 more uncommon, heroic deeds for the welfare of your own land and 43 nation, if you but will it! Arise, therefore, come forward, display the 44 play of your superior power within, manifest it, and we are standing 45 with offerings of deepest veneration in hand ready to worship you.
46 We are ignorant, poor, unknown, and insignificant beggars with only 47 the beggar's garb as a means of livelihood; whereas you are 48 supreme in riches and influence, of mighty power, born of noble
49 descent, centres of all knowledge and learning! Why not rouse 50 yourselves? Why not take the lead? Show the way, show us that 51 example of perfect renunciation for the good of the world, and we 52 will follow you like bond-slaves!"

1 On the other hand, those who are showing unjustified signs
2 of causeless, rancorous hostilities out of absolute malice and envy-- 3 natural to a slavish race--at the success and the celebrity of Shri 4 Ramakrishna and his name--to them we say, "Dear friends, vain are 5 these efforts of yours! If this infinite, unbounded, religious wave 6 that has engulfed in its depths the very ends of space--on whose 7 snow-white crest shineth this divine form in the august glow of a 8 heavenly presence--if this be the effect brought about by our eager 9 endeavours in pursuit of personal name, fame, or wealth, then, 10 without your or any others' efforts, this wave shall in obedience to 11 the insuperable law of the universe, soon die in the infinite womb of 12 time, never to rise again! But if, again, this tide, in accordance with 13 the will and under the divine inspiration of the One Universal 14 Mother, has begun to deluge the world with the flood of the 15 unselfish love of a great man's heart, then, O feeble man, what 16 power dost thou possess that thou shouldst thwart the onward 17 progress of the Almighty Mother's will?"

THE PARIS CONGRESS OF THE HISTORY OF RELIGIONS

In the Paris Exhibition, the Congress of the History of Religions recently sat for several days together. At the Congress, there was no room allowed for the discussions on the doctrines and spiritual views of any religion; its purpose was only to inquire into the historic evolution of the different forms of established faiths, and along with it other accompanying facts that are incidental to it. Accordingly, the representation of the various missionary sects of different religions and their beliefs was entirely left out of account in this Congress. The Chicago Parliament of Religions was a grand affair, and the representatives of many religious sects from all parts of the world were present at it. This Congress, on the other hand, was attended only by such scholars as devote themselves to the study of the origin and the history of different religions. At the Chicago Parliament the influence of the Roman Catholics was great, and they organised it with great hopes for their sect. The Roman Catholics expected to establish their superiority over the Protestants without much opposition; by proclaiming their glory and strength and laying the bright side of their faith before the assembled Christians, Hindus, Buddhists, Mussalmans, and other representatives of the world-religions and publicly exposing their weakness, they hoped to make firm their own position. But the result proving otherwise, the Christian world has been deplorably hopeless of the reconciliation of the different religious systems; so the Roman Catholics are now particularly opposed to the repetition of any such gathering. France is a Roman Catholic country; hence in spite of the earnest wish of the authorities, no religious congress was convened on account of the vehement opposition on the part of the Roman Catholic world.

The Congress of the History of Religions at Paris was like the Congress of Orientalists which is convened from time to time and at which European scholars, versed in Sanskrit, Pali, Arabic, and other Oriental languages, meet; only the antiquarianism of Christianity was added to this Paris Congress.

The conviction of many of the Sanskrit scholars of the West is that the Vedic religion is the outcome of the worship of the fire, the sun, and other awe-inspiring objects of natural phenomenon.

Swami Vivekananda was invited by the Paris Congress to contradict this conviction, and he promised to read a paper on the account. But he could not keep his promise on account of ill health, and with difficulty was only able to be personally present at the Congress, where he was most warmly received by all the Western Sanskrit scholars, whose admiration for the Swami was all the

1 greater as they had already gone through many of his lectures on 2 the Vedanta.

3 At the Congress, Mr. Gustav Oppert, a German Pandit, read
4 a paper on the origin of the Shalagrama-Shila. He traced the origin
5 of the Shalagrama worship to that emblem of the female generative 6 principle. According to him, the Shiva-Linga is the phallic emblem
7 of the male and the Shalagrama of the female generative principle.
8 And thus he wanted to establish that the worship of the Shiva-Linga 9 and that of the Shalagrama--both are but the component parts of 10 the worship of Linga and Yoni! The Swami repudiated the above 11 two views and said that though he had heard of such ridiculous 12 explanations about the Shiva-Linga, the other theory of the 13 Shalagrama-Shila was quite new and strange, and seemed 14 groundless to him.

15 The Swami said that the worship of the Shiva-Linga
16 originated from the famous hymn in the Atharva-Veda Samhita sung 17 in praise of the Yupa-Stambha, the sacrificial post. In that hymn a 18 description is found of the beginningless and endless Stambha or 19 Skambha, and it is shown that the said Skambha is put in place of 20 the eternal Brahman. As afterwards the Yajna (sacrificial) fire, its 21 smoke, ashes, and flames, the Soma plant, and the ox that used to 22 carry on its back the wood for the Vedic sacrifice gave place to the 23 conception of the brightness of Shiva's body, his tawny matted-hair, 24 his blue throat, and the riding on the bull of the Shiva, and so on-- 25 just so, the Yupa-Skambha gave place in time to the Shiva-Linga, 26 and was deified to the high Devahood of Shri Shankara. In the 27 Atharva-Veda Samhita, the sacrificial cakes are also extolled along 28 with the attributes of the Brahman.

29 In the Linga Purana, the same hymn is expanded in the 30 shape of stories, meant to establish the glory of the great Stambha 31 and the superiority of Mahadeva.

32 Again, there is another fact to be considered. The Buddhists 33 used to erect memorial topes consecrated to the memory of 34 Buddha; and the very poor, who were unable to build big 35 monuments, used to express their devotion to him by dedicating 36 miniature substitutes for them. Similar instances are still seen in 37 the case of Hindu temples in Varanasi and other sacred places of 38 India where those, who cannot afford to build temples, dedicate 39 very small temple-like constructions instead. So it might be quite 40 probable that during the period of Buddhistic ascendancy, the rich 41 Hindus, in imitation of the Buddhists, used to erect something as a 42 memorial resembling their Skambha, and the poor in a similar 43 manner copied them on a reduced scale, and afterwards the 44 miniature memorials of the poor Hindus became a new addition to 45 the Skambha.

46 One of the names of the Buddhist Stupas (memorial topes) is 47 Dhatu-garbha, that is, "metal-wombed". Within the Dhatu-garbha, in 48 small cases made of stone, shaped like the present Shalagrama, 49 used to be preserved the ashes, bones, and other remains of the 50 distinguished Buddhist Bhikshus, along with gold, silver, and other 51 metals. The Shalagrama-Shilas are natural stones resembling in

1 form these artificially-cut stone-cases of the Buddhist Dhatu-
2 garbha, and thus being first worshipped by the Buddhists, gradually 3 got into Vaishnavism, like many other forms of Buddhistic worship
4 that found their way into Hinduism. On the banks of the Narmada
5 and in Nepal, the Buddhistic influence lasted longer than in other 6 parts of India; and the remarkable coincidence that the 7 Narmadeshvara Shiva-Linga, found on the banks of the Narmada
8 and hence so called, and the Shalagrama-Shilas of Nepal are given 9 preference to by the Hindus to those found elsewhere in India is a 10 fact that ought to be considered with respect to this point of 11 contention.

12 The explanation of the Shalagrama-Shila as a phallic emblem 13 was an imaginary invention and, from the very beginning, beside 14 the mark. The explanation of the Shiva-Linga as a phallic emblem 15 was brought forward by the most thoughtless, and was forthcoming 16 in India in her most degraded times, those of the downfall of 17 Buddhism. The filthiest Tantrika literature of Buddhism of those 18 times is yet largely found and practised in Nepal and Tibet.

19 The Swami gave another lecture in which he dwelt on the 20 historic evolution of the religious ideas in India, and the historic 21 evolution of religious ideas in India, and said that the Vedas are the 22 common source of Hinduism in all its varied stages, as also of 23 Buddhism and every other religious belief in India. The seeds of the 24 multifarious growth of Indian thought on religion lie buried in the 25 Vedas. Buddhism and the rest of India's religious thought are the 26 outcome of the unfolding and expansion of those seeds, and modern 27 Hinduism also is only their developed and matured form. With the 28 expansion or the contraction of society, those seeds lie more or less 29 expanded at one place or more or less contracted at another.

30 He said a few words about the priority of Shri Krishna to 31 Buddha. He also told the Western scholars that as the histories of 32 the royal dynasties described in the Vishnu Purana were by 33 degrees being admitted as proofs throwing light on the ways of 34 research of the antiquarian, so, he said, the traditions of India were 35 all true, and desired that Western Sanskrit scholars, instead of 36 writing fanciful articles, should try to discover their hidden truths.

37 Professor Max Muller says in one of his books that, whatever 38 similarities there may be, unless it be demonstrated that some one 39 Greek knew Sanskrit, it cannot be concluded that ancient India 40 helped ancient Greece in any way. But it is curious to observe that 41 some Western savants, finding several terms of Indian astronomy 42 similar to those of Greek astronomy, and coming to know that the 43 Greeks founded a small kingdom on the borders of India, can 44 clearly read the help of Greece on everything Indian, on Indian 45 literature, Indian astronomy, Indian arithmetic. Not only so; one has 46 been bold enough to go so far as to declare that all Indian sciences 47 as a rule are but echoes of the Greek!

48 On a single Sanskrit Shloka {Sanskrit}--"The Yavanas are 49 Mlechchhas, in them this science is established (therefore) even 50 they deserve worship like Rishis, . . ."--how much the Westerners 51 have indulged their unrestrained imagination! But it remains to be

1 shown how the above Shloka goes to prove that the Aryas were 2 taught by the Mlechchhas. The meaning may be that the learning of 3 the Mlechchha disciples of the Aryan teachers is praised here, only 4 to encourage the Mlechchhas in their pursuit of the Aryan science.

5 Secondly, when the germ of every Aryan science is found in 6 the Vedas and every step of any of those sciences can be traced 7 with exactness from the Vedic to the present day, what is the 8 necessity for forcing the far-fetched suggestion of the Greek 9 influence on them? "What is the use of going to the hills in search of 10 honey if it is available at home?" as a Sanskrit proverb says.

11 Again, every Greek-like word of Aryan astronomy can be 12 easily derived from Sanskrit roots. The Swami could not understand 13 what right the Western scholars had to trace those words to a 14 Greek source, thus ignoring their direct etymology.

15 In the same manner, if on finding mention of the word
16 Yavanika (curtain) in the dramas of Kalidasa and other Indian poets, 17 the Yavanika (Ionian or Greek) influence on the whole of the 18 dramatic literature of the time is ascertained, then one should first 19 stop to compare whether the Aryan dramas are at all like the 20 Greek. Those who have studied the mode of action and style of the 21 dramas of both the languages must have to admit that any such 22 likeness, if found, is only a fancy of the obstinate dreamer, and has 23 never any real existence as a matter of fact. Where is that Greek 24 chorus? The Greek Yavanika is on one side of the stage, the Aryan 25 diametrically on the other. The characteristic manner of expression 26 of the Greek drama is one thing, that of the Aryan quite another.
27 There is not the least likeness between the Aryan and the Greek 28 dramas; rather the dramas of Shakespeare resemble to a great 29 extent the dramas of India. So the conclusion may also be drawn 30 that Shakespeare is indebted to Kalidasa and other ancient Indian 31 dramatists for all his writings, and that the whole Western 32 literature is only an imitation of the Indian.

33 Lastly, turning Professor Max Muller's own premises against 34 him, it may be said as well that until it is demonstrated that some 35 one Hindu knew Greek some time one ought not to talk even of 36 Greek influence.

37 Likewise, to see Greek influence in Indian sculpture is also 38 entirely unfounded.

39 The Swami also said that the worship of Shri Krishna is 40 much older than that of Buddha, and if the Gita be not of the same 41 date as the Mahabharata, it is surely much earlier and by no means 42 later. The style of language of the Gita is the same as that of the 43 Mahabharata. Most of the adjectives used in the Gita to explain 44 matters spiritual are used in the Vana and other Parvans of the 45 Mahabharata, respecting matters temporal. Such coincidence is 46 impossible without the most general and free use of those words at 47 one and the same time. Again, the line of thought in the Gita is the 48 same as in the Mahabharata; and when the Gita notices the 49 doctrines of all the religious sects of the time, why does it not ever 50 mention the name of Buddhism?

1 In spite of the most cautious efforts of the writers
2 subsequent to Buddha, reference to Buddhism is not withheld and 3 appears somewhere or other, in some shape or other, in histories, 4 stories, essays, and every book of the post-Buddhistic literature. In 5 covert or overt ways, some allusion is sure to be met with in 6 reference to Buddha and Buddhism. Can anyone show any such 7 reference in the Gita? Again, the Gita is an attempt at the 8 reconciliation of all religious creeds, none of which is slighted in it.
9 Why, it remains to be answered, is Buddhism alone denied the 10 tender touch of the Gita-writer?

11 The Gita willfully scorns none. Fear?--Of that there is a 12 conspicuous absence in it. The Lord Himself, being the interpreter 13 and the establisher of the Vedas, never hesitates to even censure 14 Vedic rash presumptuousness if required. Why then should He fear 15 Buddhism?

16 As Western scholars devote their whole life to one Greek 17 work, let them likewise devote their whole life to one Sanskrit work, 18 and much light will flow to the world thereby. The Mahabharata 19 especially is the most invaluable work in Indian history; and it is not 20 too much to say that this book has not as yet been even properly 21 read by the Westerners.

22 After the lecture, many present expressed their opinions for 23 or against the subject, and declared that they agreed with most of 24 what the Swami had said, and assured the Swami that the old days 25 of Sanskrit Antiquarianism were past and gone. The views of 26 modern Sanskrit scholars were largely the same as those of the 27 Swami's, they said. They believed also that there was much true 28 history in the Puranas and the traditions of India.

29 Lastly, the learned President, admitting all other points of 30 the Swami's lecture, disagreed on one point only, namely, on the 31 contemporaneousness of the Gita with the Mahabharata. But the 32 only reason he adduced was that the Western scholars were mostly 33 of the opinion that the Gita was not a part of the Mahabharata.

34 The substance of the lecture will be printed in French in the 35 General Report of the Congress.

KNOWLEDGE: ITS SOURCE AND ACQUIREMENT

Various have been the theories propounded as regards the primitive source of knowledge. We read in the Upanishads that Brahma, who was the first and the foremost among the Devas, held the key to all knowledge, which he revealed to his disciples and which, being handed down in succession, has been bequeathed as a legacy to the subsequent age. According to the Jains, during an indefinite period of cycle of Time, which comprises between one thousand and two thousand billions of "oceans" of years, are born some extraordinary, great, perfected beings whom they call Jinas, and through them the door to knowledge is now and then opened to human society. Likewise Buddhism believes in, and expects at regular intervals, the appearance of the Buddhas, that is, persons possessed of infinite universal wisdom. The same is the reason also of the introduction of Incarnations of God by the Pauranika Hindus who ascribe to them, along with other missions, the special function of restoring the lost spiritual knowledge by its proper adjustment to the needs of the time. Outside India, we find the great-souled Zoroaster bringing down the light of knowledge from above to the mortal world. So also did Moses, Jesus, and Mohammed, who, possessed of heavenly authority, proclaim to fallen humanity the tidings of divine wisdom in their own unique ways.

Brahma is the name of a high position among the Devas, to which every man can aspire by virtue of meritorious deeds. Only a selected few can become Jinas, while others can never attain to Jinahood; but they can only go so far as to gain the state of Mukti. The state of being a Buddha is open to one and all without distinction. Zoroaster, Moses, Jesus, and Mohammed are great personalities who incarnated themselves for the fulfilment of some special mission; so also did the Incarnations of God mentioned by the Pauranika sages. For others to look up to that seat of these divine personages with a longing eye is madness.

Adam got his knowledge through the tasting of the forbidden fruit. Noah was taught social science by the grace of Jehovah. In India, the theory is that every science has its presiding deity; their founders are either Devas or perfected beings; from the most menial arts as that of a cobbler to the most dignified office of the spiritual guide, everything depends on the kind intervention of the gods or supreme beings. "No knowledge is possible without a teacher." There is no way to the attainment of knowledge unless it is transmitted through an apostolic succession from disciple to disciple, unless it comes through the mercy of the Guru and direct from his mouth.

Then again, the Vedantic and other philosophers of the Indian schools hold that knowledge is not to be acquired from without. It is the innate nature of the human soul and the essential birthright of every man. The human soul is the repository of infinite

1 wisdom; what external agency can illuminate it? According to some 2 schools, this infinite wisdom remains always the same and is never 3 lost; and man is not ordinarily conscious of this, because a veil, so 4 to speak, has fallen over it on account of his evil deeds, but as soon
5 as the veil is removed it reveals itself. Others say that this infinite 6 wisdom, though potentially present in a human soul, has become 7 contracted through evil deeds, and it becomes expanded again by 8 the mercy of God gained by good deeds. We also read in our 9 scriptures various other methods of unfolding this inborn infinite 10 power and knowledge, such as devotion to God, performance of 11 work without attachment, practising the eightfold accessories of 12 the Yoga system, or constant dwelling on this knowledge, and so on.
13 The final conclusion, however, is this, that through the practice of 14 one or more or all of these methods together man gradually 15 becomes conscious of his inborn real nature, and the infinite power 16 and wisdom within, latent or veiled, becomes at last fully manifest.

17 On the other side, the modern philosophers have analysed 18 the human mind as the source of infinitely possible manifestations 19 and have come to the conclusion that when the individual mind on 20 the one hand, and favourable time, place, and causation on the 21 other can act and react upon one another, then highly developed 22 consciousness of knowledge is sure to follow. Nay, even the 23 unfavourableness of time and place can be successfully surmounted 24 by the vigour and firmness of the individual. The strong individual, 25 even if he is thrown amidst the worst conditions of place or time, 26 overcomes them and affirms his own strength. Not only so, all the 27 heavy burdens heaped upon the individual, the acting agent, are 28 being made lighter and lighter in the course of time, so that any 29 individual, however weak he may be in the beginning, is sure to 30 reach the goal at the end if he assiduously applies himself to gain it.
31 Look at the uncivilised and ignorant barbarians of the other day!
32 How through close and studious application they are making long 33 strides into the domains of civilisation, how even those of the lower 34 strata are making their way and are making their way and are 35 occupying with an irresistible force the most exalted positions in it!
36 The sons of cannibal parents are turning out elegant and educated 37 citizens; the descendants of the uncivilised Santals, thanks to the 38 English Government, have been nowadays meeting in successful 39 competition our Bengali students in the Indian Universities. As 40 such, the partiality of the scientific investigators of the present day 41 to the doctrine of hereditary transmission of qualities is being 42 gradually diminished.

43 There is a certain class of men whose conviction is that from 44 time eternal there is a treasure of knowledge which contains the 45 wisdom of everything past, present, and future. These men hold 46 that it was their own forefathers who had the sole privilege of 47 having the custody of this treasure. The ancient sages, the first 48 possessors of it, bequeathed in succession this treasure and its true 49 import to their descendants only. They are, therefore, the only 50 inheritors to it; as such, let the rest of the world worship them.

51 May we ask these men what they think should be the 52 condition of the other peoples who have not got such forefathers?

1 "Their condition is doomed", is the general answer. The more kind-
2 hearted among them is perchance pleased to rejoin. "Well, let them
3 come and serve us. As a reward for such service, they will be born
4 in our caste in the next birth. That is the only hope we can hold out
5 to them." "Well, the moderns are making many new and original 6 discoveries in the field of science and arts, which neither you 7 dreamt of , nor is there any proof that your forefathers ever had 8 knowledge of. What do you say to that?" "Why certainly our 9 forefathers knew all these things, the knowledge of which is now 10 unfortunately lost to us. Do you want a proof? I can show you one.
11 Look! Here is the Sanskrit verse. . . ." Needless to add that the 12 modern party, who believes in direct evidence only, never attaches 13 any seriousness to such replies and proofs.

14 Generally, all knowledge is divided into two classes, the 15 Apara, secular, and the Para, spiritual. One pertains to perishable 16 things, and the other to the realm of the spirit. There is, no doubt, a 17 great difference between these two classes of knowledge, and the 18 way to the attainment of the one may be entirely different from the 19 way to the attainment of the other. Nor can it be denied that no one 20 method can be pointed out as the sole and universal one which will 21 serve as the key to all and every door in the domain of knowledge.
22 But in reality all this difference is only one of degree and not of 23 kind. It is not that secular and spiritual knowledge are two opposite 24 and contradictory things; but they are the same thing--the same 25 infinite knowledge which is everywhere fully present from the 26 lowest atom to the highest Brahman--they are the same knowledge 27 in its different stages of gradual development. This one infinite 28 knowledge we call secular when it is in its lower process of 29 manifestation, and spiritual when it reaches the corresponding 30 higher phase.

31 "All knowledge is possessed exclusively by some 32 extraordinary great men, and those special personages take birth 33 by the command of God, or in conformity to a higher law of nature, 34 or in some preordained order of Karma; except through the agency 35 of these great ones, there is no other way of attaining knowledge."
36 If such a view be correct and certain, there seems to be no 37 necessity for any individual to strive hard to find any new and 38 original truth--all originality is lost to society for want of exercise 39 and encouragement; and the worst of all is that, society tries to 40 oppose and stop any attempt in the original direction, and thus the 41 faculty of the initiative dies out. If it is finally settled that the path of 42 human welfare is for ever chalked out by these omniscient men, 43 society naturally fears its own destruction if the least deviation be 44 made from the boundary line of the path, and so it tries to compel 45 all men through rigid laws and threats of punishment to follow that 46 path with unconditional obedience. If society succeeds in imposing 47 such obedience to itself by confining all men within the narrow 48 groove of these paths, then the destiny of mankind becomes no 49 better than that of a machine. If every act in a man's life has been 50 all previously determined, then what need is there for the culture of 51 the faculty of thought--where is the field for the free play of 52 independent thought and action? In course of time, for want of 1 proper use, all activity is given up, all originality is lost, a sort of 2 Tamasika dreamy lifelessness hovers over the whole nation, and 3 headlong it goes down and down. The death of such a nation is not 4 far to seek.

5 On the other hand, if the other extreme were true that the 6 society prospers the most which is not guided by the injunctions of 7 such divinely-inspired souls, then, civilisation, wisdom, and 8 prosperity--deserting the Chinese, Hindus, Egyptians, Babylonians, 9 Iranians, Greeks, Romans, and other great nations of ancient and 10 modern times, who have always followed the path laid down by 11 their sages--would have embraced the Zulus, the Kafirs, the 12 Hottentots, and the aboriginal tribes of the Andamans and the 13 Australian islands who have led a life of guideless independence.

14 Considering all these points, it must be admitted that, 15 though the presence of knowledge everywhere in every individual is 16 an eternal truism, yet the path pointed out by the great ones of the 17 earth has the glory peculiar to it, and that there is a peculiar 18 interest attached to the transmission of knowledge through the 19 succession of teachers and their disciples. Each of them has its 20 place in the development of the sum total of knowledge; and we 21 must learn to estimate them according to their respective merits.
22 But, perhaps, being carried away by their over-zealous and blind 23 devotion to their Masters, the successors and followers of these 24 great ones sacrifice truth before the altar of devotion and worship 25 to them, and misrepresent the true meaning of the purpose of those 26 great lives by insisting on personal worship, that is, they kill the 27 principle for the person.

28 This is also a fact of common experience that when man 29 himself has lost all his own strength, he naturally likes to pass his 30 days in idle remembrance of his forefathers' greatness. The devoted 31 heart gradually becomes the weakest in its constant attempt to 32 resign itself in every respect to the feet of its ancestors, and at last 33 a time comes when this weakness teaches the disabled yet proud 34 heart to make the vainglory of its ancestors' greatness as the only 35 support of its life. Even if it be true that your ancestors possessed 36 all knowledge, which has in the efflux of time been lost to you, it 37 follows that you, their descendants, must have been instrumental in 38 this disappearance of knowledge, and now it is all the same to you 39 whether you have it or not. To talk of having or losing this already 40 lost knowledge serves no useful purpose at present. You will have to 41 make new efforts, to undergo troubles over again, if you want to 42 recover it.

43 True, that spiritual illumination shines of itself in a pure 44 heart, and, as such, it is not something acquired from without; but 45 to attain this purity of heart means long struggle and constant 46 practice. It has also been found, on careful inquiry in the sphere of 47 material knowledge, that those higher truths which have now and 48 then been discovered by great scientific men have flashed like 49 sudden floods of light in their mental atmosphere, which they had 50 only to catch and formulate. But such truths never appear in the 51 mind of an uncultured and wild savage. All these go to prove that 52 hard Tapasya, or practice of austerities in the shape of devout

1 contemplation and constant study of a subject is at the root of all 2 illumination in its respective spheres.

3 What we call extraordinary, superconscious inspiration is 4 only the result of a higher development of ordinary consciousness, 5 gained by long and continued effort. The difference between the 6 ordinary and the extraordinary is merely one of degree in 7 manifestation. Conscious efforts lead the way to superconscious
8 illumination.

9 Infinite perfection is in every man, though unmanifested.
10 Every man has in him the potentiality of attaining to perfect
11 saintliness, Rishihood, or to the most exalted position of an Avatara, 12 or to the greatness of a hero in material discoveries. It is only a 13 question of time and adequate well-guided investigation, etc., to 14 have this perfection manifested. In a society where once such great 15 men were born, there the possibility of their reappearance is 16 greater. There can be no doubt that a society with the help of such 17 wise guides advances faster than the one without it. But it is 18 equally certain that such guides will rise up in the societies that are 19 now without them and will lead them to equally rapid progress in 20 the future.

3 MODERN INDIA

4 (Translated from a Bengali contribution to the Udbodhana, 5 March 1899)
6

7 The Vedic priests base their superior strength on the 8 knowledge of the sacrificial Mantras.²⁶ By the power of these 9 Mantras, the Devas are made to come down from their heavenly 10 abodes, accept the drink and food offerings, and grant the prayers 11 of the Yajamanas.²⁷ The kings as well as their subjects are, 12 therefore, looking up to these priests for their welfare during their 13 earthly life. Raja Soma²⁸ is worshipped by the priest and is made to 14 thrive by the power of his Mantras. As such, the Devas, whose 15 favourite food is the juice of the Soma plant offered in oblation by 16 the priest, are always kind to him and bestow his desired boons.
17 Thus strengthened by divine grace, he defies all human opposition; 18 for what can the power of mortals do against that of the gods? Even 19 the king, the centre of all earthly power, is a suppliant at his door.
20 A kind look from him is the greatest help; his mere blessing a 21 tribute to the State, pre-eminent above everything else.

22 Now commanding the king to be engaged in affairs fraught 23 with death and ruin, now standing by him as his fastest friend with 24 kind and wise counsels, now spreading the net of subtle, diplomatic 25 statesmanship in which the king is easily caught--the priest is seen, 26 oftentimes, to make the royal power totally subservient to him.
27 Above all, the worst fear is in the knowledge that the name and 28 fame of the royal forefathers and of himself and his family lie at the 29 mercy of the priest's pen. He is the historian. The king might have 30 paramount power; attaining a great glory in his reign, he might 31 prove himself as the father and mother in one to his subjects; but if 32 the priest is not appeased, his sun of glory goes down with his last 33 breath for ever; all his worth and usefulness deserving of universal 34 approbation are lost in the great womb of time, like unto the fall of 35 gentle dew on the ocean. Others who inaugurated the huge 36 sacrifices lasting over many years, the performers of the 37 Ashvamedha and so on--those who showered, like incessant rain in 38 the rainy season, countless wealth on the priests--their names, 39 thanks to the grace of priests, are emblazoned in the pages of 40 history. The name of Priyadarshi Dharmashoka,²⁹ the beloved of the

1 ²⁶ ?Vedic hymns uttered by the priests to invoke the Devas at the time of 2 sacrifice.
3

4 ²⁷ ?The men who perform sacrifices.
5

6 ²⁸ ?The name of the Soma plant as commonly found in the Vedas. The priests
7 offered to the Devas the juice of this plant at the time of sacrifice.
8

9 ²⁹ ?The name given to the great king, Asoka, after he embraced Buddhism.
10

1 gods, is nothing but a name in the priestly world, while 2 Janamejaya,³⁰ son of Parikshit, is a household word in every Hindu 3 family.

4 To protect the State, to meet the expenses of the personal 5 comforts and luxuries of himself and his long retinue, and, above 6 all, to fill to overflowing the coffers of the all-powerful priesthood 7 for its propitiation, the king is continually draining the resources of 8 his subjects, even as the sun sucks up moisture from the earth. His 9 especial prey--his milch cows--are the Vaishyas.

10 Neither under the Hindu kings, nor under the Buddhist rule, 11 do we find the common subject-people taking any part in expressing 12 their voice in the affairs of the State. True, Yudhishtira visits the 13 houses of Vaishyas and even Shudras when he is in Varanavata;
14 true, the subjects are praying for the installation of Ramachandra 15 to the regency of Ayodhya; nay, they are even criticising the 16 conduct of Sita and secretly making plans for the bringing about of 17 her exile: but as a recognised rule of the State they have no direct 18 voice in the supreme government. The power of the populace is 19 struggling to express itself in indirect and disorderly ways without 20 any method. The people have not as yet the conscious knowledge of 21 the existence of this power. There is neither the attempt on their 22 part to organise it into a united action, nor have they got the will to 23 do so; there is also a complete absence of that capacity, that skill, 24 by means of which small and incoherent centres of force are united 25 together, creating insuperable strength as their resultant.

26 Is this due to want of proper laws?--no, that is not it. There 27 are laws, there are methods, separately and distinctly assigned for 28 the guidance of different departments of government, there are 29 laws laid down in the minutest detail for everything, such as the 30 collection of revenue, the management of the army, the 31 administration of justice, punishments and rewards. But at the root 32 of all, is the injunction of the Rishi--the word of divine authority, the 33 revelation of God coming through the inspired Rishi. The laws have, 34 it can almost be said, no elasticity in them. Under the 35 circumstances, it is never possible for the people to acquire any 36 sort of education by which they can learn to combine among 37 themselves and be united for the accomplishment of any object for 38 the common good of the people, or by which they can have the 39 concerted intellect to conceive the idea of popular right in the 40 treasures collected by the king from his subjects, or even such 41 education by which they can be fired with the aspiration to gain the 42 right of representation in the control of State revenues and 43 expenditure. Why should they do such things? Is not the inspiration 44 of the Rishi responsible for their prosperity and progress?

45 Again, all those laws are in books. Between laws as codified 46 in books and their operation in practical life, there is a world of 47 difference. One Ramachandra is born after thousands of 48 Agnivarnas³¹ pass away! Many kings show us the life of 1 ³⁰ ?The performer of the great snake-sacrifice of Mahabharata.

3

1 ³¹ ?Agnivarna was a prince of the Solar race, who never used to come out of the 2
3

1 Chandashoka;³² Dharmashokas are rare! The number of kings like 2 Akbar, in whom the subjects find their life, is far less than that of 3 kings like Aurangzeb who live on the blood of their people!

4 Even if the kings be of as godlike nature as that of 5 Yudhishtira, Ramachandra, Dharmashoka, or Akbar, under whose 6 benign rule the people enjoyed safety and prosperity, and were 7 looked after with paternal care by their rulers, the hand of him who 8 is always fed by another gradually loses the power of taking the 9 food to his mouth. His power of self-preservation can never become 10 fully manifest who is always protected in every respect by another.
11 Even the strongest youth remains but a child if he is always looked 12 after as a child by his parents. Being always governed by kings of 13 godlike nature, to whom is left the whole duty of protecting and 14 providing for the people, they can never get any occasion for 15 understanding the principles of self-government. Such a nation, 16 being entirely dependent on the king for everything and never 17 caring to exert itself for the common good or for self-defence, 18 becomes gradually destitute of inherent energy and strength. If this 19 state of dependence and protection continues long, it becomes the 20 cause of the destruction of the nation, and its ruin is not far to seek.

21 Of course, it can be reasonably concluded that, when the 22 government of a country is guided by codes of laws enjoined by 23 Shastras which are the outcome of knowledge inspired by the 24 divine genius of great sages, such a government must lead to the 25 unbroken welfare of the rich and the poor, the wise and the 26 ignorant, the king and the subjects alike. But we have seen already 27 how far the operation of those laws was, or may be, possible in 28 practical life. The voice of the ruled in the government of their 29 land--which is the watchword of the modern Western world, and of 30 which the last expression has been echoed with a thundering voice 31 in the Declaration of the American Government, in the words, "That 32 the government of the people of this country must be by the people 33 and for the good of the people"--cannot however be said to have 34 been totally unrecognised in ancient India. The Greek travellers and 35 others saw many independent small States scattered all over this 36 country, and references are also found to this effect in many places 37 of the Buddhistic literature. And there cannot be the least doubt 38 about it that the germ of self-government was at least present in 39 the shape of the village Panchayat,³³ which is still to be found in 40 existence in many places of India. But the germ remained for ever 41 the germ; the seed though put in the ground never grew into a tree.
42 This idea of self-government never passed beyond the embryo state

1 seraglio, and died of consumption due to excessive indulgence.
2

3 ³² ?The great king Asoka was at first called Chandashoka, i.e., Fierce Asoka, 4 because of his ascending the throne by killing his brother and his other cruel 5 deeds. After nine years of reign he became a convert to Buddhism, and his 6 character underwent a complete transformation; he was thenceforth known for his 7 good deeds by the name of Dharmashoka, Virtuous Asoka.
8

9 ³³ ?Literally, "government by five", in which the village-men sit together and 10 decide, among themselves, all disputes.

1 of the village Panchayat system and never spread into society at 2 large.

3 In the religious communities, among Sannyasins in the 4 Buddhist monasteries, we have ample evidence to show that self-5 government was fully developed. Even now, one wonders to see 6 how the power of the Panchayat system, of the principles of self-7 government, is working amongst the Naga Sannyasins--what deep 8 respect the "Government by the Five" commands from them, what 9 effective individual rights each Naga can exercise within his own 10 sect, what excellent working of the power of organisation and 11 concerted action they have among themselves!

12 With the deluge which swept the land at the advent of 13 Buddhism, the priestly power fell into decay and the royal power 14 was in the ascendant. Buddhist priests are renouncers of the world, 15 living in monasteries as homeless ascetics, unconcerned with 16 secular affairs. They have neither the will nor the endeavour to 17 bring and keep the royal power under their control through the 18 threat of curses or magic arrows. Even if there were any remnant of 19 such a will, its fulfillment has now become an impossibility. For 20 Buddhism has shaken the thrones of all the oblation-eating gods 21 and brought them down from their heavenly positions. The state of 22 being a Buddha is superior to the heavenly positions of many a 23 Brahma or an Indra, who vie with each other in offering their 24 worship at the feet of the Buddha, the God-man! And to this 25 Buddhahood, every man has the privilege to attain; it is open to all 26 even in this life. From the descent of the gods, as a natural 27 consequence, the superiority of the priests who were supported by 28 them is gone.

29 Accordingly, the reins of that mighty sacrificial horse--the 30 royal power--are no longer held in the firm grasp of the Vedic
31 priest; and being now free, it can roam anywhere by its unbridled 32 will. The centre of power in this period is neither with the priests 33 chanting the Sama hymns and performing the Yajnas according to 34 the Yajur-Veda; nor is the power vested in the hands of Kshatriya 35 kings separated from each other and ruling over small independent 36 States. But the centre of power in this age is in emperors whose 37 unobstructed sway extend over vast areas bounded by the ocean, 38 covering the whole of India from one end to the other. The leaders 39 of this age are no longer Vishvamitra or Vasishtha, but emperors 40 like Chandragupta, Dharmashoka, and others. There never were 41 emperors who ascended the throne of India and led her to the 42 pinnacle of her glory such as those lords of the earth who ruled 43 over her in paramount sway during the Buddhistic period. The end 44 of this period is characterised by the appearance of Rajput power 45 on the scene and the rise of modern Hinduism. With the rise of 46 Rajput power, on the decline of Buddhism, the sceptre of the Indian 47 empire, dislodged from its paramount power, was again broken into 48 a thousand pieces and wielded by small powerless hands. At this 49 time, the Brahminical (priestly) power again succeeded in raising 50 its head, not as an adversary as before, but this time as an auxiliary 51 to the royal supremacy.

52 During this revolution, that perpetual struggle for

1 supremacy between the priestly and the royal classes, which began 2 from the Vedic times and continued through ages till it reached its 3 climax at the time of the Jain and Buddhist revolutions, has ceased 4 for ever. Now these two mighty powers are friendly to each other;
5 but neither is there any more that glorious Kshatra (warlike) valour 6 of the kings, nor that spiritual brilliance which characterised the 7 Brahmins; each has lost his former intrinsic strength. As might be 8 expected, this new union of the two forces was soon engaged in the 9 satisfaction of mutual self-interests, and became dissipated by 10 spending its vitality on extirpating their common opponents, 11 especially the Buddhists of the time, and on similar other deeds.
12 Being steeped in all the vices consequent on such a union, e.g., the 13 sucking of the blood of the masses, taking revenge on the enemy, 14 spoliation of others' property, etc., they in vain tried to imitate the 15 Rajasuya and other Vedic sacrifices of the ancient kings, and only 16 made a ridiculous farce of them. The result was that they were 17 bound hand and foot by a formidable train of sycophantic 18 attendance and its obsequious flatteries, and being entangled in an 19 interminable net of rites and ceremonies with flourishes of Mantras 20 and the like, they soon become a cheap and ready prey to the 21 Mohammedan invaders from the West.

22 That priestly power which began its strife for superiority
23 with the royal power from the Vedic times and continued it down 24 the ages, that hostility against the Kshatra power, Bhagavan Shri 25 Krishna succeeded by his superhuman genius in putting a stop to, 26 at least for the time being, during his earthly existence. That 27 Brahmanya power was almost effaced from its field of work in India 28 during the Jain and Buddhist revolutions, or, perhaps, was holding 29 its feeble stand by being subservient to the strong antagonist
30 religions. That Brahmanya power, since the appearance of Rajput 31 power, which held sway over India under the Mihira dynasty and 32 others, made its last effort to recover its lost greatness; and in its 33 effort to establish that supremacy, it sold itself at the feet of the 34 fierce hordes of barbarians newly come from Central Asia, and to 35 win their pleasure introduced in the land their hateful manners and 36 customs. Moreover, it, the Brahmanya power, solely devoting itself 37 to the easy means to dupe ignorant barbarians, brought into vogue 38 mysterious rites and ceremonies backed by its new Mantras and 39 the like; and in doing so, itself lost its former wisdom, its former 40 vigour and vitality, and its own chaste habits of long acquirement.
41 Thus is turned the whole Aryavarta into a deep and vast whirlpool 42 of the most vicious, the most horrible, the most abominable, 43 barbarous customs; and as the inevitable consequence of 44 countenancing these detestable customs and superstitions, it soon 45 lost all its own internal strength and stamina and became the 46 weakest of the weak. What wonder that it should be broken into a 47 thousand pieces and fall at the mere touch of the storm of 48 Mussulman invasions from the West! That great Brahmanya power 49 fell--who knows, if ever to rise again?

50 The resuscitation of the priestly power under the Mussalman
51 rule was, on the other hand, an utter impossibility. The Prophet 52 Mohammed himself was dead against the priestly class in any

1 shape and tried his best for the total destruction of this power by 2 formulating rules and injunctions to that effect. Under the 3 Mussalman rule, the king himself was the supreme priest; he was 4 the chief guide in religious matters; and when he became the 5 emperor, he cherished the hope of being the paramount leader in 6 all matters over the whole Mussulman world. To the Mussulman, 7 the Jews or the Christians are not objects of extreme detestation;
8 they are, at the worst, men of little faith. But not so the Hindu.
9 According to him, the Hindu is idolatrous, the hateful Kafir; hence 10 in this life he deserves to be butchered; and in the next, eternal hell 11 is in store for him. The utmost the Mussulman kings could do as a 12 favour to the priestly class--the spiritual guides of these Kafirs--was 13 to allow them somehow to pass their life silently and wait for the 14 last moment. This was again sometimes considered too much 15 kindness! If the religious ardour of any king was a little more 16 uncommon, there would immediately follow arrangements for a 17 great Yajna by way of Kafir-slaughter!

18 On one side, the royal power is now centred in kings 19 professing a different religion and given to different customs. On 20 the other, the priestly power has been entirely displaced from its 21 influential position as the controller and lawgiver of the society. The 22 Koran and its code of laws have taken the place of the Dharma
23 Shastras of Manu and others. The Sanskrit language has made 24 room for the Persian and the Arabic. The Sanskrit language has to 25 remain confined only to the purely religious writings and religious 26 matters of the conquered and detested Hindu, and, as such, has 27 since been living a precarious life at the hands of the neglected
28 priest. The priest himself, the relic of Brahmanya power, fell back 29 upon the last resource of conducting only the comparatively 30 unimportant family ceremonies, such as the matrimonial etc., and 31 that also only so long and as much as the mercy of the 32 Mohammedan rulers permitted.

33 In the Vedic and the adjoining periods, the royal power could 34 not manifest itself on account of the grinding pressure of the 35 priestly power. We have seen how, during the Buddhistic revolution, 36 resulting in the fall of the Brahminical supremacy, the royal power 37 in India reached its culminating point. In the interval between the 38 fall of the Buddhistic and the establishment of the Mohammedan 39 empire, we have seen how the royal power was trying to raise its 40 head through the Rajputs in India, and how it failed in its attempt.
41 At the root of this failure, too, could be traced the same old 42 endeavours of the Vedic priestly class to bring back and revive with 43 a new life their original (ritualistic) days.

44 Crushing the Brahminical supremacy under his feet, the 45 Mussulman king was able to restore to a considerable extent the 46 lost glories of such dynasties of emperors as the Maurya, the 47 Gupta, the Andhra, and the Kshatrapa.³⁴

48 Thus the priestly power--which sages like Kumarila, 49 Shankara, and Ramanuja tried to re-establish, which for some time

1 ³⁴ ?The Persian governors of Aryavarta and Gujarat.
2

1 was supported by the sword of the Rajput power, and which tried to 2 rebuild its structure on the fall of its Jain and Buddhist adversaries--
3 was under Mohammedan rule laid to sleep for ever, knowing no
4 awakening. In this period, the antagonism or warfare is not 5 between kings and priests, but between kings and kings. At the end 6 of this period, when Hindu power again raised its head, and, to 7 some extent, was successful in regenerating Hinduism through the 8 Mahrattas and the Sikhs, we do not find much play of the priestly 9 power with these regenerations. On the contrary, when the Sikhs
10 admitted any Brahmin into their sect, they, at first, compelled him 11 publicly to give up his previous Brahminical signs and adopt the 12 recognised signs of their own religion.

13 In this manner, after an age-long play of action and reaction 14 between these two forces, the final victory of the royal power was 15 echoed on the soil of India for several centuries, in the name of 16 foreign monarchs professing an entirely different religion from the 17 faith of the land. But at the end of this Mohammedan period, 18 another entirely new power made its appearance on the arena and 19 slowly began to assert its prowess in the affairs of the Indian world.

20 This power is so new, its nature and workings are so foreign 21 to the Indian mind, its rise so inconceivable, and its vigour so 22 insuperable that though it wields the suzerain power up till now, 23 only a handful of Indians understand what this power is.

24 We are talking of the occupation of India by England.

25 From very ancient times, the fame of India's vast wealth and 26 her rich granaries has enkindled in many powerful foreign nations 27 the desire for conquering her. She has been, in fact, again and 28 again conquered by foreign nations. Then why should we say that 29 the occupation of India by England was something new and foreign 30 to the Indian mind?

31 From time immemorial Indians have seen the mightiest royal 32 power tremble before the frown of the ascetic priest, devoid of 33 worldly desire, armed with spiritual strength--the power of Mantras 34 (sacred formulas) and religious lore--and the weapon of curses.
35 They have also seen the subject people silently obey the commands 36 of their heroic all-powerful suzerains, backed by their arms and 37 armies, like a flock of sheep before a lion. But that a handful of 38 Vaishyas (traders) who, despite their great wealth, have ever 39 crouched awestricken not only before the king but also before any 40 member of the royal family, would unite, cross for purposes of 41 business rivers and seas, would, solely by virtue of their intelligence 42 and wealth, by degrees make puppets of the long-established Hindu
43 and Mohammedan dynasties; not only so, but that they would buy 44 as well the services of the ruling powers of their own country and 45 use their valour and learning as powerful instruments for the influx 46 of their own riches--this is a spectacle entirely novel to the Indians, 47 as also the spectacle that the descendants of the mighty nobility of 48 a country, of which a proud lord, sketched by the extraordinary pen 49 of its great poet, says to a common man, "Out, dunghill! darest thou 50 brave a nobleman?" would, in no distant future, consider it the 51 zenith of human ambition to be sent to India as obedient servants of 1 a body of merchants, called The East India Company--such a sight

2 was, indeed, a novelty unseen by India before!

3 According to the prevalence, in greater or lesser degree, of 4 the three qualities of Sattva, Rajas, and Tamas in man, the four 5 castes, the Brahmin, Kshatriya, Vaishya, and Shudra, are 6 everywhere present at all times, in all civilised societies. By the 7 mighty hand of time, their number and power also vary at different 8 times in regard to different countries. In some countries the 9 numerical strength or influence of one of these castes may 10 preponderate over another; at some period, one of the classes may 11 be more powerful than the rest. But from a careful study of the 12 history of the world, it appears that in conformity to the law of 13 nature the four castes, the Brahmin, Kshatriya, Vaishya, and Shudra 14 do, in every society, one after another in succession, govern the 15 world.

16 Among the Chinese, the Sumerians, the Babylonians, the 17 Egyptians, the Chaldeans, the Aryas, the Iranians, the Jews, the 18 Arabs--among all these ancient nations, the supreme power of 19 guiding society is, in the first period of their history, in the hands of 20 the Brahmin or the priest. In the second period, the ruling power is 21 the Kshatriya, that is, either absolute monarchy or oligarchical 22 government by a chosen body of men. Among the modern Western 23 nations, with England at their head, this power of controlling 24 society has been, for the first time, in the hands of the Vaishyas or 25 mercantile communities, made rich through the carrying on of 26 commerce.

27 Though Troy and Carthage of ancient times and Venice and 28 similar other small commercial States of comparatively modern 29 times became highly powerful, yet, amongst them, there was not 30 the real rising of the Vaishya power in the proper sense of the term.

31 Correctly speaking, the descendants of the royal family had 32 the sole monopoly of the commerce of those old days by employing 33 the common people and their servants under them to carry on the 34 trade; and they appropriated to themselves the profits accruing 35 from it. Excepting these few men, no one was allowed to take any 36 part or voice an opinion even in the government of the country and 37 kindred affairs. In the oldest countries like Egypt, the priestly 38 power enjoyed unmolested supremacy for a short period, after 39 which it became subjugated to the royal power and lived as an 40 auxiliary to it. In China, the royal power, centralised by the genius 41 of Confucius, has been controlling and guiding the priestly power, 42 in accordance with its absolute will, for more than twenty-five 43 centuries; and during the last two centuries, the all-absorbing 44 Lamas of Tibet, though they are the spiritual guides of the royal 45 family, have been compelled to pass their days, being subject in 46 every way to the Chinese Emperor.

47 In India, the royal power succeeded in conquering the 48 priestly power and declaring its untrammelled authority long after 49 the other ancient civilised nations had done so; and therefore the 50 inauguration of the Indian Empire came about long after the 51 Chinese, Egyptian, Babylonian, and other Empires had risen. It was

1 only with the Jewish people that the royal power, though it tried 2 hard to establish its supremacy over the priestly, had to meet a 3 complete defeat in the attempt. Not even the Vaishyas attained the 4 ruling power with the Jews. On the other hand, the common subject 5 people, trying to free themselves from the shackles of priestcraft, 6 were crushed to death under the internal commotion of adverse 7 religious movements like Christianity and the external pressure of 8 the mighty Roman Empire.

9 As in the ancient days the priestly power, in spite of its long-10 continued struggle, was subdued by the more powerful royal power, 11 so, in modern times, before the violent blow of the newly-risen 12 Vaishya power, many a kingly crown has to kiss the ground, many a 13 sceptre is for ever broken to pieces. Only those few thrones which 14 are allowed still to exercise some power in some of the civilised 15 countries and make a display of their royal pomp and grandeur are 16 all maintained solely by the vast hordes of wealth of these Vaishya 17 communities--the dealers in salt, oil, sugar, and wine--and kept up 18 as a magnificent and an imposing front, and as a means of 19 glorification to the really governing body behind, the Vaishyas.

20 That mighty newly-risen Vaishya power--at whose command, 21 electricity carries messages in an instant from one pole to another, 22 whose highway is the vast ocean, with its mountain-high waves, at 23 whose instance, commodities are being carried with the greatest 24 ease from one part of the globe to another, and at whose mandate, 25 even the greatest monarchs tremble--on the white foamy crest of 26 that huge wave the all-conquering Vaishya power, is installed the 27 majestic throne of England in all its grandeur.

28 Therefore the conquest of India by England is not a conquest
29 by Jesus or the Bible as we are often asked to believe. Neither is it 30 like the conquest of India by the Moguls and the Pathans. But 31 behind the name of the Lord Jesus, the Bible, the magnificent 32 palaces, the heavy tramp of the feet of armies consisting of 33 elephants, chariots, cavalry, and infantry, shaking the earth, the 34 sounds of war trumpets, bugles, and drums, and the splendid 35 display of the royal throne, behind all these, there is always the 36 virtual presence of England--that England whose warflag is the 37 factory chimney, whose troops are the merchant-men, whose 38 battlefields are the market-places of the world, and whose Empress 39 is the shining Goddess of Fortune herself! It is on this account I 40 have said before that it is indeed an unseen novelty, this conquest
41 of India by England. What new revolution will be effected in India 42 by her clash with the new giant power, and as the result of that 43 revolution what new transformation is in store for future India, 44 cannot be inferred from her past history.

45 I have stated previously that the four castes, Brahmin, 46 Kshatriya, Vaishya, and Shudra do, in succession, rule the world.
47 During the period of supreme authority exercised by each of these 48 castes, some acts are accomplished which conduce to the welfare of 49 the people, while others are injurious to them.

50 The foundation of the priestly power rests on intellectual 51 strength, and not on the physical strength of arms. Therefore, with

1 the supremacy of the priestly power, there is a great prevalence of 2 intellectual and literary culture. Every human heart is always 3 anxious for communication with, and help from, the supersensuous 4 spiritual world. The entrance to that world is not possible for the 5 generality of mankind; only a few great souls who can acquire a 6 perfect control over their sense-organs and who are possessed with 7 a nature preponderating with the essence of Sattva Guna are able 8 to pierce the formidable wall of matter and come face to face, as it 9 were, with the supersensuous--it is only they who know the 10 workings of the kingdom that bring the messages from it and show 11 the way to others. These great souls are the priests, the primitive 12 guides, leaders, and movers of human societies.

13 The priest knows the gods and communicates with them; he 14 is therefore worshipped as a god. Leaving behind the thoughts of 15 the world, he has no longer to devote himself to the earning of his 16 bread by the sweat of his brow. The best and foremost parts of all 17 food and drink are due as offerings to the gods; and of these gods, 18 the visible proxies on earth are the priests. It is through their 19 mouths that they partake of the offerings. Knowingly or 20 unknowingly, society gives the priest abundant leisure, and he can 21 therefore get the opportunity of being meditative and of thinking 22 higher thoughts. Hence the development of wisdom and learning 23 originates first with the supremacy of the priestly power. There 24 stands the priest between the dreadful lion--the king--on the one 25 hand, and the terrified flock of sheep--the subject people--on the 26 other. The destructive leap of the lion is checked by the controlling 27 rod of spiritual power in the hands of the priest. The flame of the 28 despotic will of the king, maddened in the pride of his wealth and 29 men, is able to burn into ashes everything that comes in his way; 30 but it is only a word from the priest, who has neither wealth nor 31 men behind him but whose sole strength is his spiritual power, that 32 can quench the despotic royal will, as water the fire.

33 With the ascendancy of the priestly supremacy are seen the 34 first advent of civilisation, the first victory of the divine nature over 35 the animal, the first mastery of spirit over matter, and the first 36 manifestation of the divine power which is potentially present in 37 this very slave of nature, this lump of flesh, to wit, the human body.
38 The priest is the first discriminator of spirit from matter, the first to 39 help to bring this world in communion with the next, the first 40 messenger from the gods to man, and the intervening bridge that 41 connects the king with his subjects. The first offshoot of universal 42 welfare and good is nursed by his spiritual power, by his devotion to 43 learning and wisdom, by his renunciation, the watchword of his life 44 and, watered even by the flow of his own life-blood. It is therefore 45 that in every land it was he to whom the first and foremost worship 46 was offered. It is therefore that even his memory is sacred to us!

47 There are evils as well. With the growth of life is sown
48 simultaneously the seed of death. Darkness and light always go 49 together. Indeed, there are great evils which, if not checked in 50 proper time, lead to the ruin of society. The play of power through 51 gross matter is universally experienced; everyone sees, everyone 52 understands, the mighty manifestation of gross material force as

1 displayed in the play of battle-axes and swords, or in the burning 2 properties of fire and lightning. Nobody doubts these things, nor 3 can there ever be any question about their genuineness. But where 4 the repository of power and the centre of its play are wholly mental, 5 where the power is confined to certain special words, to certain 6 special modes of uttering them, to the mental repetition of certain 7 mysterious syllables, or to other similar processes and applications 8 of the mind, there light is mixed with shade, there the ebb and flow 9 naturally disturb the otherwise unshaken faith, and there even 10 when things are actually seen or directly perceived, still sometimes 11 doubts arise as to their real occurrence. Where distress, fear, anger, 12 malice, spirit of retaliation, and the like passions of man, leaving 13 the palpable force of arms, leaving the gross material methods to 14 gain the end in view which every one can understand, substitute in 15 their stead the mysterious mental processes like Stambhana, 16 Uchchatana, Vashikarana, and Marana³⁵ for their fructification-- 17 there a cloud of smoky indistinctness, as it were, naturally envelops 18 the mental atmosphere of these men who often live and move in 19 such hazy worlds of obscure mysticism. No straight line of action 20 presents itself before such a mind; even if it does, the mind distorts 21 it into crookedness. The final result of all this is insincerity--that 22 very limited narrowness of the heart--and above all, the most fatal 23 is the extreme intolerance born of malicious envy at the superior 24 excellence of another.

25 The priest naturally says to himself: "Why should I part with 26 the power that has made the Devas subservient to me, has given 27 me mastery over physical and mental illnesses, and has gained for 28 me the service of ghosts, demons, and other unseen spirits? I have 29 dearly bought this power by the price of extreme renunciation. Why 30 should I give to others that to get which I had to give up my wealth, 31 name, fame, in sort, all my earthly comforts and happiness?" Again, 32 that power is entirely mental. And how many opportunities are 33 there of keeping it a perfect secret! Entangled in this wheel of 34 circumstances, human nature becomes what it inevitably would:
35 being used to practise constant self-concealment, it becomes a 36 victim of extreme selfishness and hypocrisy, and at last succumbs to 37 the poisonous consequences which they bring in their train. In time, 38 the reaction of this very desire to concealment rebounds upon 39 oneself. All knowledge, all wisdom is almost lost for want of proper 40 exercise and diffusion, and what little remains is thought to have 41 been obtained from some supernatural source; and, therefore, far 42 from making fresh efforts to go in for originality and gain 43 knowledge of new sciences, it is considered useless and futile to 44 attempt even to improve the remnants of the old by cleansing them 45 of their corruptions. Thus lost to former wisdom, the former 46 indomitable spirit of self-reliance, the priest, now glorifying himself 47 merely in the name of his forefathers, vainly struggles to preserve 48 untarnished for himself the same glory, the same privilege, the 49 same veneration, and the same supremacy as was enjoyed by his

1 ³⁵ ?Suppression of any bodily faculty, thereby causing a person's ruin, 2 removing him from a position, subduing and getting mastery over him, and killing 3 him by means of magical incantations.
4

1 great forefathers. Consequently, his violent collision with the other 2 castes.

3 According to the law of nature, wherever there is an 4 awakening of a new and stronger life, there it tries to conquer and 5 take the place of the old and the decaying. Nature favours the dying 6 out of the unfit and the survival of the fittest. The final result of 7 such conflict between the priestly and the other classes has been 8 mentioned already.

9 That renunciation, self-control, and asceticism of the priest 10 which during the period of his ascendancy were devoted to the 11 pursuance of earnest researches of truth are on the eve of his 12 decline employed anew and spent solely in the accumulation of 13 objects of self-gratification and in the extension of privileged 14 superiority over others. That power, the centralisation of which in 15 himself gave him all honour and worship, has now been dragged 16 down from its high heavenly position to the lowest abyss of hell.
17 Having lost sight of the goal, drifting aimless, the priestly power is 18 entangled, like the spider, in the web spun by itself. The chain that 19 has been forged from generation to generation with the greatest 20 care to be put on others' feet is now tightened round its own in a 21 thousand coils, and is thwarting its own movement in hundreds of 22 ways. Caught in the endless thread of the net of infinite rites, 23 ceremonies, and customs, which it spread on all sides as external 24 means for purification of the body and the mind with a view to 25 keeping society in the iron grasp of these innumerable bonds--the 26 priestly power, thus hopelessly entangled from head to foot, is now 27 asleep in despair! There is no escaping out of it now. Tear the net, 28 and the priesthood of the priest is shaken to its foundation! There is 29 implanted in every man, naturally, a strong desire for progress; and 30 those who, finding that the fulfillment of this desire is an 31 impossibility so long as one is trammelled in the shackles of 32 priesthood, rend this net and take to the profession of other castes 33 in order to earn money thereby--them, the society immediately 34 dispossesses of their priestly rights. Society has no faith in the 35 Brahminhood of the so-called Brahmins who, instead of keeping the 36 Shikha,³⁶ part their hair, who, giving up their ancient habits and 37 ancestral customs, clothe themselves in semi-European dress and 38 adopt the newly introduced usages from the West in a hybrid 39 fashion. Again, in those parts of India, wherever this new-comer, 40 the English Government, is introducing new modes of education 41 and opening up new channels for the coming in of wealth, there 42 hosts of Brahmin youths are giving up their hereditary priestly 43 profession and trying to earn their livelihood and become rich by 44 adopting the callings of other castes, with the result that the habits 45 and customs of the priestly class, handed down from their distant 46 forefathers, are scattered to the winds and are fast disappearing 47 from the land.

48 In Gujarat, each secondary sect of the Brahmins is divided 49 into two subdivisions, one being those who still stick to the priestly

1 ³⁶ ?The sacred tuft or lock of hair left on the crown of the head at 2 tonsure.
3

1 profession, while the other lives by other professions. There only 2 the first subdivisions, carrying on the priestly profession, are called 3 "Brahmanas", and though the other subdivisions are by lineage
4 descendants from Brahmin fathers, yet the former do not link 5 themselves in matrimonial relation with the latter. For example, by 6 the name of "Nagara Brahmana" are meant only those Brahmins 7 who are priests living on alms; and by the name "Nagara" only are 8 meant those Brahmins who have accepted service under the 9 Government, or those who have been carrying on the Vaishya's 10 profession. But it appears that such distinctions will not long 11 continue in these days in Gujarat. Even the sons of the "Nagara 12 Brahmanas" are nowadays getting English education, and entering 13 into Government service, or adopting some mercantile business.
14 Even orthodox Pandits of the old school, undergoing pecuniary
15 difficulties, are sending their sons to the colleges of the English 16 universities or making them choose the callings of Vaidyas, 17 Kayasthas, and other non-Brahmin castes. If the current of affairs 18 goes on running in this course, then it is a question of most serious 19 reflection, no doubt, how long more will the priestly class continue 20 on India's soil. Those who lay the fault of attempting to bring down 21 the supremacy of the priestly class at the door of any particular 22 person or body of persons other than themselves ought to know
23 that, in obedience to the inevitable law of nature, the Brahmin caste 24 is erecting with its own hands its own sepulchre; and this is what 25 ought to be. It is good and appropriate that every caste of high birth 26 and privileged nobility should make it its principal duty to raise its 27 own funeral pyre with its own hands. Accumulation of power is as 28 necessary as its diffusion, or rather more so. The accumulation of 29 blood in the heart is an indispensable condition for life; its non-30 circulation throughout the body means death. For the welfare of 31 society, it is absolutely necessary at certain times to have all 32 knowledge and power concentrated in certain families or castes to 33 the exclusion of others, but that concentrated power is focused for 34 the time being, only to be scattered broadcast over the whole of 35 society in future. If this diffusion be withheld, the destruction of 36 that society is, without doubt, near at hand.

37 On the other side, the king is like the lion; in him are present 38 both the good and evil propensities of the lord of beasts. Never for 39 a moment his fierce nails are held back from tearing to pieces the 40 heart of innocent animals, living on herbs and grass, to allay his 41 thirst for blood when occasion arises; again, the poet says, though 42 himself stricken with old age and dying with hunger, the lion never 43 kills the weakest fox that throws itself in his arms for protection. If 44 the subject classes, for a moment, stand as impediments in the way 45 of the gratification of the senses of the royal lion, their death knell 46 is inevitably tolled; if they humbly bow down to his commands, they 47 are perfectly safe. Not only so. Not to speak of ancient days, even in 48 modern times, no society can be found in any country where the 49 effectiveness of individual self-sacrifice for the good of the many 50 and of the oneness of purpose and endeavour actuating every 51 member of the society for the common good of the whole have been 52 fully realised. Hence the necessity of the kings who are the 53 creations of the society itself. They are the centres where all the 1 forces of society, otherwise loosely scattered about, are made to 2 converge, and from which they start and course through the body 3 politic and animate society.

4 As during the Brahminical supremacy, at the first stage is 5 the awakening of the first impulse for search after knowledge, and 6 later the continual and careful fostering of the growth of that 7 impulse still in its infancy--so, during the Kshatriya supremacy, a 8 strong desire for pleasure pursuits has made its appearance at the 9 first stage, and later have sprung up inventions and developments 10 of arts and sciences as the means for its gratification. Can the king, 11 in the height of his glory, hide his proud head within the lowly 12 cottages of the poor? Or can the common good of his subjects ever 13 minister to his royal appetite with satisfaction?

14 He whose dignity bears no comparison with anyone else on 15 earth, he who is divinity residing in the temple of the human body-- 16 for the common man, to cast even a mere glance at his, the king's 17 objects of pleasure is a great sin; to think of ever possessing them 18 is quite out of the question. The body of the king is not like the 19 bodies of other people, it is too sacred to be polluted by any 20 contamination; in certain countries it is even believed never to 21 come under the sway of death. A halo of equal sacredness shines 22 around the queen, so she is scrupulously guarded from the gaze of 23 the common folk, not even the sun may cast a glance on her beauty!
24 Hence the rising of magnificent palaces to take the place of 25 thatched cottages. The sweet harmonious strain of artistic music, 26 flowing as it were from heaven, silenced the disorderly jargon of 27 the rabble. Delightful gardens, pleasant groves, beautiful galleries, 28 charming paintings, exquisite sculptures, fine and costly apparel 29 began to displace by gradual steps the natural beauties of rugged 30 woods and the rough and coarse dress of the simple rustic.
31 Thousands of intelligent men left the toilsome task of the 32 ploughman and turned their attention to the new field of fine arts, 33 where they could display the finer play of their intellect in less 34 laborious and easier ways. Villages lost their importance; cities rose 35 in their stead.

36 It was in India, again, that the kings, after having enjoyed 37 for some time earthly pleasures to their full satisfaction, were 38 stricken at the latter part of their lives with heavy world-weariness, 39 as is sure to follow on extreme sense-gratification; and thus being 40 satiated with worldly pleasures, they retired at their old age into 41 secluded forests, and there began to contemplate the deep 42 problems of life. The results of such renunciation and deep 43 meditation were marked by a strong dislike for cumbrous rites and 44 ceremonials and an extreme devotion to the highest spiritual truths
45 which we find embodied in the Upanishads, the Gita, and the Jain 46 and the Buddhist scriptures. Here also was a great conflict between 47 the priestly and the royal powers. Disappearance of the elaborate 48 rites and ceremonials meant a death-blow to the priest's profession.
49 Therefore, naturally, at all times and in every country, the priests 50 gird up their loins and try their best to preserve the ancient 51 customs and usages, while on the other side stand in opposition 52 kings like Janaka, backed by Kshatriya prowess as well as spiritual

1 power. We have dealt at length already on this bitter antagonism 2 between the two parties.

3 As the priest is busy about centralising all knowledge and 4 learning at a common centre, to wit, himself, so the king is ever up 5 and doing in collecting all the earthly powers and focusing them in 6 a central point, i.e. his own self. Of course, both are beneficial to 7 society. At one time they are both needed for the common good of 8 society, but that is only at its infant stage. But if attempts be made, 9 when society has passed its infant stage and reached its vigorous 10 youthful condition, to clothe it by force with the dress which suited 11 it in its infancy and keep it bound within narrow limits, then either 12 it bursts the bonds by virtue of its own strength and tries to 13 advance, or where it fails to do so, it retraces its footsteps and by 14 slow degrees returns to its primitive uncivilised condition.

15 Kings are like parents to their subjects, and the subjects are 16 the kings' children. The subjects should, in every respect, look up to 17 the king and stick to their king with unreserved obedience, and the 18 king should rule them with impartial justice and look to their 19 welfare and bear the same affection towards them as he would 20 towards his own children. But what rule applies to individual homes 21 applies to the whole society as well, for society is only the 22 aggregate of individual homes. "When the son attains the age of 23 sixteen, the father ought to deal with him as his friend and 24 equal"³⁷--if that is the rule, does not the infant society ever attain 25 that age of sixteen? It is the evidence of history that at a certain 26 time every society attains its manhood, when a strong conflict
27 ensues between the ruling power and the common people. The life 28 of the society, its expansion and civilisation, depend on its victory or 29 defeat in this conflict.

30 Such changes, revolutionising society, have been happening 31 in India again and again, only in this country they have been 32 effected in the name of religion, for religion is the life of India, 33 religion is the language of this country, the symbol of all its 34 movements. The Charvaka, the Jain, the Buddhist, Shankara, 35 Ramanuja, Kabir, Nanak, Chaitanya, the Brahmo Samaj, the Arya
36 Samaj--of all these and similar other sects, the wave of religion, 37 foaming, thundering, surging, breaks in the front, while in the rear 38 follows the filling-up of social wants. If all desires can be 39 accomplished by the mere utterance of some meaningless syllables, 40 then who will exert himself and go through difficulties to work out 41 the fulfillment of his desires? If this malady enters into the entire 42 body of any social system, then that society becomes slothful and 43 indisposed to any exertion, and soon hastens to its ruin. Hence the 44 slashing sarcasm of the Charvakas, who believed only in the reality
45 of sense-perceptions and nothing beyond. What could have saved
46 Indian society from the ponderous burden of omnifarious ritualistic 47 ceremonialism, with its animal and other sacrifices, which all but

1 ³⁷ ?Taken from one of the well-known didactic verses of the statesman-Pandit, 2 Chanakya, which runs thus: "Let the father treat with tenderness the child till he is 3 five, let him (the father) reprove him (the child) for the next ten years; when the 4 son attains the age of sixteen, the father ought to deal with him as his friend."
5

1 crushed the very life out of it, except the Jain revolution which took 2 its strong stand exclusively on chaste morals and philosophical 3 truth? Or without the Buddhist revolution what would have 4 delivered the suffering millions of the lower classes from the violent 5 tyrannies of the influential higher castes? When, in course of time, 6 Buddhism declined and its extremely pure and moral character 7 gave place to equally bad, unclean, and immoral practices, when 8 Indian society trembled under the infernal dance of the various 9 races of barbarians who were allowed into the Buddhistic fold by 10 virtue of its universal all-embracing spirit of equality—then 11 Shankara, and later Ramanuja, appeared on the scene and tried 12 their best to bring society back to its former days of glory and re-13 establish its lost status. Again, it is an undoubted fact that if there 14 had not been the advent of Kabir, Nanak, and Chaitanya in the 15 Mohammedan period, and the establishment of the Brahmo Samaj 16 and the Arya Samaj in our own day, then, by this time, the 17 Mohammedans and the Christians would have far outnumbered the 18 Hindus of the present day in India.

19 What better material is there than nourishing food to build 20 up the body composed of various elements, and the mind which 21 sends out infinite waves of thought? But if that food which goes to 22 sustain the body and strengthen the mind is not properly 23 assimilated, and the natural functions of the body do not work 24 properly, then that very thing becomes the root of all evil.

25 The individual's life is in the life of the whole, the 26 individual's happiness is in the happiness of the whole; apart from 27 the whole, the individual's existence is inconceivable--this is an 28 eternal truth and is the bed-rock on which the universe is built. To 29 move slowly towards the infinite whole, bearing a constant feeling 30 of intense sympathy and sameness with it, being happy with its 31 happiness and being distressed in its affliction, is the individual's 32 sole duty. Not only is it his duty, but in its transgression is his death, 33 while compliance with this great truth leads to life immortal. This is 34 the law of nature, and who can throw dust into her ever-watchful 35 eyes? None can hoodwink society and deceive it for any length of 36 time. However much there may have accumulated heaps of refuse 37 and mud on the surface of society--still, at the bottom of those 38 heaps the life-breath of society is ever to be found pulsating with 39 the vibrations of universal love and self-denying compassion for all.
40 Society is like the earth that patiently bears incessant molestation; 41 but she wakes up one day, however long that may be in coming, and 42 the force of the shaking tremors of that awakening hurls off to a 43 distance the accumulated dirt of self-seeking meanness piled up 44 during millions of patient and silent years!

45 We ignore this sublime truth; and though we suffer a 46 thousand times for our folly, yet, in our absurd foolishness, impelled 47 by the brute in us, we do not believe in it. We try to deceive, but a 48 thousand times we find we are deceived ourselves, and yet we do 49 not desist! Mad that we are, we imagine we can impose on nature!
50 With our short-sighted vision we think ministering to the self at any 51 cost is the be-all and end-all of life.

52 Wisdom, knowledge, wealth, men, strength, prowess, and

1 whatever else nature gathers and provides us with, are all only for 2 diffusion, when the moment of need is at hand. We often forget this 3 fact, put the stamp of "mine only" upon the entrusted deposits, and 4 pari passu, we sow the seed of our own ruin!

5 The king, the centre of the forces of the aggregate of his 6 subjects, soon forgets that those forces are only stored with him so 7 that he may increase and give them back a thousandfold in their 8 potency, so that they may spread over the whole community for its 9 good. Attributing all Godship to himself, in his pride, like the king 10 Vena,³⁸ he looks upon other people as wretched specimens of 11 humanity who should grovel before him; any opposition to his will, 12 whether good or bad, is a great sin on the part of his subjects.
13 Hence oppression steps into the place of protection--sucking their 14 blood in place of preservation. If the society is weak and 15 debilitated, it silently suffers all ill-treatment at the hands of the 16 king, and as the natural consequence, both the king and his people 17 go down and down and fall into the most degraded state, and thus 18 become an easy prey to any nation stronger than themselves.
19 Where the society is healthy and strong, there soon follows a fierce 20 contest between the king and his subjects, and, by its reaction and 21 convulsion, are flung away the sceptre and the crown; and the 22 throne and the royal paraphernalia become like past curiosities 23 preserved in the museum galleries.

24 As the result of this contest--as its reaction--is the 25 appearance of the mighty power of the Vaishya, before whose angry 26 glance the crowned heads, the lords of heroes, tremble like an 27 aspen leaf on their thrones--whom the poor as well as the prince 28 humbly follow in vain expectation of the golden jar in his hands, 29 that like Tantalus's fruit always recedes from the grasp.

30 The Brahmin said, "Learning is the power of all powers; that 31 learning is dependent upon me, I possess that learning, so the 32 society must follow my bidding." For some days such was the case.
33 The Kshatriya said, "But for the power of my sword, where would 34 you be, O Brahmin, with all your power of lore? You would in no 35 time be wiped off the face of the earth. It is I alone that am the 36 superior." Out flew the flaming sword from the jingling scabbard-- 37 society humbly recognised it with bended head. Even the 38 worshipper of learning was the first to turn into the worshipper of 39 the king. The Vaishya is saying, "You, madmen! what you call the 40 effulgent all-pervading deity is here, in my hand, the ever-shining 41 gold, the almighty sovereign. Behold, through its grace, I am also 42 equally all-powerful. O Brahmin! even now, I shall buy through its 43 grace all your wisdom, learning, prayers, and meditation. And, O 44 great king! your sword, arms, valour, and prowess will soon be 45 employed, through the grace of this, my gold, in carrying out my

1 ³⁸ His story occurs in the Bhagavata. The King Vena thought himself higher
2 than Brahma, Vishnu, and Maheshvara, and declared accordingly that all worship 3 should be offered to him. The Rishis once sought him and tried by good advice to 4 make him give up such egoism, but he in return insulted them and ordered them 5 to worship him, whereupon, it is said, he was destroyed by the fire of the anger of 6 the Rishis.

1 desired objects. Do you see those lofty and extensive mills? Those 2 are my hives. See, how, swarms of millions of bees, the Shudras, 3 are incessantly gathering honey for those hives. Do you know for 4 whom? For me, this me, who in due course of time will squeeze out 5 every drop of it for my own use and profit."

6 As during the supremacy of the Brahmin and the Kshatriya, 7 there is a centralisation of learning and advancement of civilisation, 8 so the result of the supremacy of the Vaishya is accumulation of 9 wealth. The power of the Vaishya lies in the possession of that coin, 10 the charm of whose clinking sound works with an irresistible 11 fascination on the minds of the four castes. The Vaishya is always in 12 fear lest the Brahmin swindles him out of this, his only possession, 13 and lest the Kshatriya usurps it by virtue of his superior strength of 14 arms. For self-preservation, the Vaishyas as a body are, therefore, 15 of one mind. The Vaishya commands the money; the exorbitant 16 interest that he can exact for its use by others, as with a lash in his 17 hand, is his powerful weapon which strikes terror in the heart of all.
18 By the power of his money, he is always busy curbing the royal 19 power. That the royal power may not anyhow stand in the way of 20 the inflow of his riches, the merchant is ever watchful. But, for all 21 that, he has never the least wish that the power should pass on 22 from the kingly to the Shudra class.

23 To what country does not the merchant go? Though himself 24 ignorant, he carries on his trade and transplants the learning, 25 wisdom, art, and science of one country to another. The wisdom, 26 civilisation, and arts that accumulated in the heart of the social 27 body during the Brahmin and the Kshatriya supremacies are being 28 diffused in all directions by the arteries of commerce to the 29 different market-places of the Vaishyas. But for the rising of this 30 Vaishya power, who would have carried today the culture, learning, 31 acquirements, and articles of food and luxury of one end of the 32 world to the other?

33 And where are they through whose physical labour only are 34 possible the influence of the Brahmin, the prowess of the Kshatriya, 35 and the fortune of the Vaishya? What is their history, who, being the 36 real body of society, are designated at all times in all countries as 37 "base-born"?--for whom kind India prescribed the mild 38 punishments, "Cut out his tongue, chop off his flesh", and others of 39 like nature, for such a grave offence as any attempt on their part to 40 gain a share of the knowledge and wisdom monopolised by her 41 higher classes--those "moving corpses" of India and the "beasts of 42 burden" of other countries--the Shudras, what is their lot in life?
43 What shall I say of India? Let alone her Shudra class, her Brahmins 44 to whom belonged the acquisition of scriptural knowledge are now 45 the foreign professors, her Kshatriyas the ruling Englishmen, and 46 Vaishyas, too, the English in whose bone and marrow is the instinct 47 of trade, so that, only the Shudra-ness--the beast-of-burdenness--is 48 now left with the Indians themselves.

49 A cloud of impenetrable darkness has at present equally 50 enveloped us all. Now there is neither firmness of purpose nor 51 boldness of enterprise, neither courage of heart nor strength of 52 mind, neither aversion to maltreatments by others nor dislike for

1 slavery, neither love in the heart nor hope nor manliness; but what 2 we have in India are only deep-rooted envy and strong antipathy 3 against one another, morbid desire to ruin by hook or by crook the 4 weak, and to lick dog-like the feet of the strong. Now the highest 5 satisfaction consists in the display of wealth and power, devotion in 6 self-gratification, wisdom in the accumulation of transitory objects, 7 Yoga in hideous diabolical practices, work in the slavery of others, 8 civilisation in base imitation of foreign nations, eloquence in the use 9 of abusive language, the merit of literature in extravagant flatteries
10 of the rich or in the diffusion of ghastly obscenities! What to speak 11 separately of the distinct Shudra class of such a land, where the 12 whole population has virtually come down to the level of the 13 Shudra? The Shudras of countries other than India have become, it 14 seems, a little awake; but they are wanting in proper education and 15 have only the mutual hatred of men of their own class--a trait 16 common to Shudras. What avails it if they greatly outnumber the 17 other classes? That unity, by which ten men collect the strength of a 18 million, is yet far away from the Shudra; hence, according to the 19 law of nature, the Shudras invariably form the subject race.

20 But there is hope. In the mighty course of time, the Brahmin 21 and the other higher castes, too, are being brought down to the 22 lower status of the Shudras, and the Shudras are being raised to 23 higher ranks. Europe, once the land of Shudras enslaved by Rome, 24 is now filled with Kshatriya valour. Even before our eyes, powerful 25 China, with fast strides, is going down to Shudra-hood, while 26 insignificant Japan, rising with the sudden start of a rocket, is 27 throwing off her Shudra nature and is invading by degrees the 28 rights of the higher castes. The attaining of modern Greece and 29 Italy to Kshatriya-hood and the decline of Turkey, Spain, and other 30 countries, also, deserve consideration here.

31 Yet, a time will come when there will be the rising of the 32 Shudra class, with their Shudra-hood; that is to say, not like that as 33 at present when the Shudras are becoming great by acquiring the 34 characteristic qualities of the Vaishya or the Kshatriya, but a time 35 will come when the Shudras of every country, with their inborn 36 Shudra nature and habits--not becoming in essence Vaishya or 37 Kshatriya, but remaining as Shudras--will gain absolute supremacy 38 in every society. The first glow of the dawn of this new power has 39 already begun to break slowly upon the Western world, and the 40 thoughtful are at their wits' end to reflect upon the final issue of 41 this fresh phenomenon. Socialism, Anarchism, Nihilism,³⁹ and other 42 like sects are the vanguard of the social revolution that is to follow.
43 As the result of grinding pressure and tyranny, from time out of 44 mind, the Shudras, as a rule, are either meanly servile, licking dog-45 like the feet of the higher class, or otherwise are as inhuman as 46 brute beasts. Again, at all times their hopes and aspirations are 47 baffled; hence a firmness of purpose and perseverance in action 48 they have none.

49 In spite of the spread of education in the West, there is a

1 ³⁹ Socialism took its birth in 1835 A.D. The initiator of Anarchism was Bakunin, 2 who was born in 1814 A.D. Nihilism was first inaugurated in Russia in 1862.

great hindrance in the way of the rising of the Shudras class, and that is the recognition of caste as determined by the inherence of more or less good or bad qualities. By this very qualitative caste system which obtained in India in ancient days, the Shudra class was kept down, bound hand and foot. In the first place, scarcely any opportunity was given to the Shudra for the accumulation of wealth or the earning of proper knowledge and education; to add to this disadvantage, if ever a man of extraordinary parts and genius were born of the Shudra class, the influential higher sections of the society forthwith showered titular honours on him and lifted him up to their own circle. His wealth and the power of his wisdom were employed for the benefit of an alien caste--and his own caste-people reaped no benefits of his attainments; and not only so, the good-for-nothing people, the scum and refuse of the higher castes, were cast off and thrown into the Shudra class to swell their number. Vasishtha, Narada, Satyakama Jabala, Vyasa, Kripa, Drona, Karna, and others of questionable parentage⁴⁰ were raised to the position of a Brahmin or a Kshatriya, in virtue of their superior learning or valour; but it remains to be seen how the prostitute, maidservant, fisherman, or the charioteer⁴¹ class was benefited by these upliftings. Again, on the other hand, the fallen from the Brahmin, the Kshatriya, or the Vaishya class were always brought down to fill the ranks of the Shudras.

In modern India, no one born of Shudra parents, be he a millionaire or a great Pandit, has ever the right to leave his own society, with the result that the power of his wealth, intellect, or wisdom, remaining confined within his own caste limits, is being employed for the betterment of his own community. This hereditary caste system of India, being thus unable to overstep its own bounds, is slowly but surely conducing to the advancement of the people moving within the same circle. The improvement of the lower classes of India will go on, in this way, so long as India will be under a government dealing with its subjects irrespective of their caste and position.

Whether the leadership of society be in the hands of those who monopolise learning or wield the power of riches or arms, the

(4) Vyasa's father was a Brahmin sage, Parashara, and mother Matsyagandha, the virgin daughter of a fisherman. (5) Kripa's father was a Brahmin sage, Sharadvan Gautama, and the mother the goddess Janapadi. (6) Drona's father was the Brahmin sage, Bharadvaja, and mother the goddess Ghrithachi. (7) Karna's mother was Kunti, who conceived during her maidenhood, and father the god Sun. For detailed information vide the accounts of their births: for (1), see chapter 174, Adiparva, Mahabharata, or in Rigveda, 7, 33, 11-13; for (2) chapter 6, Skandha 1, Srimad Bhagavata ; for (3) section 4, Prapathaka iv, Chhandogya Upanishad; for (4), (5), (6) and (7), chapters 105, 130, 130 and 111, respectively of the Adiparva of the Mahabharata.

1 source of its power is always the subject masses. By so much as the 2 class in power severs itself from this source, by so much is it sure to 3 become weak. But such is the strange irony of fate, such is the 4 queer working of Maya, that they from whom this power is directly 5 or indirectly drawn, by fair means or foul--by deceit, stratagem, 6 force, or by voluntary gift--they soon cease to be taken into account 7 by the leading class. When in course of time, the priestly power 8 totally estranged itself from the subject masses, the real dynamo of 9 its power, it was overthrown by the then kingly power taking its 10 stand on the strength of the subject people; again, the kingly power, 11 judging itself to be perfectly independent, created a gaping chasm 12 between itself and the subject people, only to be itself destroyed or 13 become a mere puppet in the hands of the Vaishyas, who now 14 succeeded in securing a relatively greater co-operation of the mass 15 of the people. The Vaishyas have now gained their end; so they no 16 longer deign to count on help from the subject people and are 17 trying their best to dissociate themselves from them; consequently, 18 here is being sown the seed of the destruction of this power as well.

19 Though themselves the reservoir of all powers, the subject 20 masses, creating an eternal distance between one another, have 21 been deprived of all their legitimate rights; and they will remain so 22 as long as this sort of relation continues.

23 A common danger, or sometimes a common cause of hatred 24 or love, is the bond that binds people together. By the same law that 25 herds beasts of prey together, men also unite into a body and form a 26 caste or a nation of their own. Zealous love for one's own people 27 and country, showing itself in bitter hatred against another--as of 28 Greece against Persia, or Rome against Carthage, of the Arab 29 against the Kafir, of Spain against the Moor, of France against 30 Spain, of England and Germany against France, and of America
31 against England--is undoubtedly one of the main causes which lead 32 to the advancement of one nation over another, by way of uniting 33 itself in hostilities against another.

34 Self-love is the first teacher of self-renunciation. For the 35 preservation of the individual's interest only one looks first to the 36 well-being of the whole. In the interest of one's own nation is one's 37 own interest; in the well-being of one's own nation is one's own 38 well-being. Without the co-operation of the many, most words can 39 by no means go on--even self-defence becomes an impossibility. The 40 joining of friendly hands in mutual help for the protection of this 41 self-interest is seen in every nation, and in every land. Of course, 42 the circumference of this self-interest varies with different people.
43 To multiply and to have the opportunity of somehow dragging on a 44 precarious existence, and over and above this, the condition that 45 the religious pursuits of the higher castes may not suffer in any 46 way, is of the highest gain and interest for Indians! For modern 47 India, there is no better hope conceivable; this is the last rung of 48 the ladder of India's life!

49 The present government of India has certain evils attendant 50 on it, and there are some very great and good parts in it as well. Of 51 highest good is this, that after the fall of the Pataliputra Empire till 52 now, India was never under the guidance of such a powerful

1 machinery of government as the British, wielding the sceptre
2 throughout the length and breadth of the land. And under this 3 Vaishya supremacy, thanks to the strenuous enterprise natural to 4 the Vaishya, as the objects of commerce are being brought from one 5 end of the world to another, so at the same time, as its natural 6 sequence, the ideas and thoughts of different countries are forcing 7 their way into the very bone and marrow of India. Of these ideas 8 and thoughts, some are really most beneficial to her, some are 9 harmful, while others disclose the ignorance and inability of the 10 foreigners to determine what is truly good for the inhabitants of 11 this country.

12 But piercing through the mass of whatever good or evil
13 there may be is seen rising the sure emblem of India's future 14 prosperity--that as the result of the action and reaction between her 15 own old national ideals on the one hand, and the newly-introduced 16 strange ideals of foreign nations on the other, she is slowly and 17 gently awakening from her long deep sleep. Mistakes she will 18 make, let her: there is no harm in that; in all our actions, errors and 19 mistakes are our only teachers. Who commits mistakes, the path of 20 truth is attainable by him only. Trees never make mistakes, nor do 21 stones fall into error; animals are hardly seen to transgress the 22 fixed laws of nature; but man is prone to err, and it is man who 23 becomes God-on-earth. If our every movement from the nursery to 24 the death-bed, if our every thought from rising at day-break till 25 retirement at midnight, be prescribed and laid down for us in 26 minutest detail by others--and if the threat of the king's sword be 27 brought into requisition to keep us within the iron grasp of those 28 prescribed rules--then, what remains for us to think independently 29 for ourselves? What makes a man a genius, a sage? Isn't it because 30 he thinks, reasons, wills? Without exercise, the power of deep 31 thinking is lost. Tamas prevails, the mind gets dull and inert, the 32 spirit is brought down to the level of matter. Yet, even now, every 33 religious preacher, every social leader is anxious to frame new laws 34 and regulations for the guidance of society! Does the country stand 35 in want of rules? Has it not enough of them? Under the oppression 36 of rules, the whole nation is verging on its ruin--who stops to 37 understand this?

38 In the case of an absolute and arbitrary monarchy, the 39 conquered race is not treated with so much contempt by the ruling 40 power. Under such an absolute government, the rights of all 41 subjects are equal, in other words, no one has any right to question 42 or control the governing authority. So there remains very little room 43 for special privileges of caste and the like. But where the monarchy 44 is controlled by the voice of the ruling race, or a republican form of 45 government rules the conquered race, there a wide distance is 46 created between the ruling and the ruled; and the most part of that 47 power, which, if employed solely for the well-being of the ruled 48 classes, might have done immense good to them within a short 49 time, is wasted by the government in its attempts and applications
50 to keep the subject race under its entire control. Under the Roman 51 Emperorship, foreign subjects were, for this very reason, happier 52 than under the Republic of Rome. For this very reason, St. Paul, the 1 Christian Apostle, though born of the conquered Jewish race, 2 obtained permission to appeal to the Roman Emperor, Caesar, to 3 judge of the charges laid against him. Because some individual 4 Englishman may call us "natives" or "niggers" and hate us as 5 uncivilised savages, we do not gain or lose by that. We, on account 6 of caste distinctions, have among ourselves far stronger feelings of 7 hatred and scorn against one another; and who can say that the 8 Brahmins, if they get some foolish unenlightened Kshatriya king on 9 their side, will not graciously try again to "cut out the Shudras' 10 tongues and chop off their limbs"? That recently in Eastern 11 Aryavarta, the different caste-people seem to develop a feeling of 12 united sympathy amidst themselves with a view to ameliorating 13 their present social condition--that in the Mahratta country, the 14 Brahmins have begun to sing paeans of praise of the "Maratha" 15 race--these, the lower castes cannot yet believe to be the outcome 16 of pure disinterestedness.

17 But gradually the idea is being formed in the minds of the 18 English public that the passing away of the Indian Empire from 19 their sway will end in imminent peril to the English nation, and be 20 their ruin. So, by any means whatsoever, the supremacy of England 21 must be maintained in India. The way to effect this, they think, is by 22 keeping uppermost in the heart of every Indian the mighty prestige 23 and glory of the British nation. It gives rise to both laughter and 24 tears simultaneously to observe how this ludicrous and pitiful 25 sentiment is gaining ground among the English, and how they are 26 steadily extending their modus operandi for the carrying out of this 27 sentiment into practice. It seems as if the Englishmen resident in 28 India are forgetting that so long as that fortitude, that 29 perseverance, and that intense national unity of purpose, by which 30 Englishmen have earned this Indian Empire--and that ever wide-31 awake commercial genius aided by science, which has turned even 32 India, the mother of all riches, into the principal mart of England-- 33 so long as these characteristics are not eliminated from their 34 national life, their throne in India is unshakable. So long as these 35 qualities are inherent in the British character, let thousands of such 36 Indian Empires be lost, thousands will be earned again. But if the 37 flow of the stream of those qualities be retarded, shall an Empire be 38 governed by the mere emblazoning of British prestige and glory?
39 Therefore when such remarkable traits of character are still 40 predominant in the English as a nation, it is utterly useless to spend 41 so much energy and power for the mere preservation of 42 meaningless "prestige". If that power were employed for the 43 welfare of the subject-people, that would certainly have been a 44 great gain for both the ruling and the ruled races.

45 It has been said before that India is slowly awakening 46 through her friction with the outside nations; and as the result of 47 this little awakening, is the appearance, to a certain extent, of free 48 and independent thought in modern India. On one side is modern 49 Western science, dazzling the eyes with the brilliancy of myriad 50 suns and driving in the chariot of hard and fast facts collected by 51 the application of tangible powers direct in their incision; on the 52 other are the hopeful and strengthening traditions of her ancient

1 forefathers, in the days when she was at the zenith of her glory-- 2 traditions that have been brought out of the pages of her history by 3 the great sages of her own land and outside, that run for 4 numberless years and centuries through her every vein with the 5 quickening of life drawn from universal love--traditions that reveal 6 unsurpassed valour, superhuman genius, and supreme spirituality, 7 which are the envy of the gods--these inspire her with future hopes.
8 On one side, rank materialism, plenitude of fortune, accumulation 9 of gigantic power, and intense sense-pursuits have, through foreign 10 literature, caused a tremendous stir; on the other, through the 11 confounding din of all these discordant sounds, she hears, in low 12 yet unmistakable accents, the heart-rending cries of her ancient 13 gods, cutting her to the quick. There lie before her various strange 14 luxuries introduced from the West--celestial drinks, costly well-15 served food, splendid apparel, magnificent palaces, new modes of 16 conveyance, new manners, new fashions dressed in which moves 17 about the well-educated girl in shameless freedom--all these are 18 arousing unfelt desires. Again, the scene changes, and in its place 19 appear, with stern presence, Sita, Savitri, austere religious vows, 20 fastings, the forest retreat, the matted locks and orange garb of the 21 semi-naked Sannyasin, Samadhi and the search after the Self. On 22 one side is the independence of Western societies based on self-23 interest; on the other is the extreme self-sacrifice of the Aryan 24 society. In this violent conflict, is it strange that Indian society 25 should be tossed up and down? Of the West, the goal is individual 26 independence, the language money-making education, the means 27 politics; of India, the goal is Mukti, the language the Veda, the 28 means renunciation. For a time, Modern India thinks, as it were, I 29 am ruining this worldly life of mine in vain expectation of uncertain 30 spiritual welfare hereafter which has spread its fascination over 31 me; and again, lo! spellbound she listens--{Sanskrit}--"Here, in this 32 world of death and change, O man, where is thy happiness?"

33 On one side, new India is saying, "We should have full 34 freedom in the selection of husband and wife; because the 35 marriage, in which are involved the happiness and misery of all our 36 future life, we must have the right to determine according to our 37 own free will." On the other, old India is dictating, "Marriage is not 38 for sense-enjoyment, but to perpetuate the race. This is the Indian 39 conception of marriage. By the producing of children, you are 40 contributing to, and are responsible for, the future good or evil of 41 the society. Hence society has the right to dictate whom you shall 42 marry and whom you shall not. That form of marriage obtains in 43 society which is conducive most to its well-being; do you give up 44 your desire of individual pleasure for the good of the many."

45 On one side, new India is saying, "If we only adopt Western 46 ideas, Western language, Western food, Western dress, and Western 47 manners, we shall be as strong and powerful as the Western 48 nations"; on the other, old India is saying, "Fools! By imitation, 49 other's ideas never become one's own; nothing, unless earned, is 50 your own. Does the ass in the lion's skin become the lion?"

51 On one side, new India is saying, "What the Western nations 52 do is surely good, otherwise how did they become so great?" On the 1 other side, old India is saying, "The flash of lightning is intensely 2 bright, but only for a moment; look out, boys, it is dazzling your 3 eyes. Beware!"

4 Have we not then to learn anything from the West? Must we 5 not needs try and exert ourselves for better things? Are we perfect?
6 Is our society entirely spotless, without any flaw? There are many 7 things to learn, we must struggle for new and higher things till we 8 die--struggle is the end of human life. Shri Ramakrishna used to 9 say, "As long as I live, so long do I learn." That man or that society
10 which has nothing to learn is already in the jaws of death. Yes, learn 11 we must many things from the West: but there are fears as well.

12 A certain young man of little understanding used always to 13 blame the Hindu Shastras before Shri RamaKrishna. One day he 14 praised the Bhagavad-Gita, on which Shri Ramakrishna said, 15 "Methinks, some European Pandit has praised the Gita, and so he 16 has also followed suit."

17 O India, this is your terrible danger. The spell of imitating 18 the West is getting such a strong hold upon you that what is good or 19 what is bad is no longer decided by reason, judgment, 20 discrimination, or reference to the Shastras. Whatever ideas, 21 whatever manners the white men praise or like are good; whatever 22 things they dislike or censure are bad. Alas! what can be a more 23 tangible proof of foolishness than this?

24 The Western ladies move freely everywhere, therefore that 25 is good; they choose for themselves their husbands, therefore that 26 is the highest step of advancement; the Westerners disapprove of 27 our dress, decorations, food, and ways of living, therefore they must 28 be very bad; the Westerners condemn image-worship as sinful, 29 surely then, image-worship is the greatest sin, there is no doubt of 30 it!

31 The Westerners say that worshipping a single Deity is 32 fruitful of the highest spiritual good, therefore let us throw our gods 33 and goddesses into the river Ganga! The Westerners hold caste 34 distinctions to be obnoxious, therefore let all the different castes be 35 jumbled into one! The Westerners say that child-marriage is the 36 root of all evils, therefore that is also very bad, of a certainty it is!

37 We are not discussing here whether these customs deserve 38 continuance or rejection; but if the mere disapproval of the 39 Westerners be the measure of the abominableness of our manners 40 and customs, then it is our duty to raise our emphatic protest 41 against it.

42 The present writer has, to some extent, personal experience
43 of Western society. His conviction resulting from such experience 44 has been that there is such a wide divergence between the Western 45 society and the Indian as regards the primal course and goal of 46 each, that any sect in India, framed after the Western model, will 47 miss the aim. We have not the least sympathy with those who, never 48 having lived in Western society and, therefore, utterly ignorant of 49 the rules and prohibitions regarding the association of men and 50 women that obtain there, and which act as safeguards to preserve

1 the purity of the Western women, allow a free rein to the 2 unrestricted intermingling of men and women in our society.

3 I have observed in the West also that the children of weaker
4 nations, if born in England, give themselves out as Englishmen, 5 instead of Greek, Portuguese, Spaniard, etc., as the case may be.
6 All drift towards the strong. That the light of glory which shines in 7 the glorious may anyhow fall and reflect on one's own body, i.e. to 8 shine in the borrowed light of the great, is the one desire of the 9 weak. When I see Indians dressed in European apparel and 10 costumes, the thought comes to my mind, perhaps they feel 11 ashamed to own their nationality and kinship with the ignorant, 12 poor, illiterate, downtrodden people of India! Nourished by the 13 blood of the Hindu for the last fourteen centuries, the Parsee is no 14 longer a "native"! Before the arrogance of the casteless, who 15 pretend to be and glorify themselves in being Brahmins, the true 16 nobility of the old, heroic, high-class Brahmin melts into 17 nothingness! Again, the Westerners have now taught us that those 18 stupid, ignorant, low-caste millions of India, clad only in loin-cloths, 19 are non-Aryans. They are therefore no more our kith and kin!

20 O India! With this mere echoing of others, with this base 21 imitation of others, with this dependence on others, this slavish 22 weakness, this vile detestable cruelty--wouldst thou, with these 23 provisions only, scale the highest pinnacle of civilisation and 24 greatness? Wouldst thou attain, by means of thy disgraceful 25 cowardice, that freedom deserved only by the brave and the heroic?
26 O India! Forget not that the ideal of thy womanhood is Sita, Savitri, 27 Damayanti; forget not that the God thou worshippest is the great 28 Ascetic of ascetics, the all-renouncing Shankara, the Lord of Uma; 29 forget not that thy marriage, thy wealth, thy life are not for sense-30 pleasure, are not for thy individual personal happiness; forget not 31 that thou art born as a sacrifice to the Mother's altar; forget not 32 that thy social order is but the reflex of the Infinite Universal 33 Motherhood; forget not that the lower classes, the ignorant, the 34 poor, the illiterate, the cobbler, the sweeper, are thy flesh and blood, 35 thy brothers. Thou brave one, be bold, take courage, be proud that 36 thou art an Indian, and proudly proclaim, "I am an Indian, every 37 Indian is my brother." Say, "The ignorant Indian, the poor and 38 destitute Indian, the Brahmin Indian, the Pariah Indian, is my 39 brother." Thou, too, clad with but a rag round thy loins proudly 40 proclaim at the top of thy voice: "The Indian is my brother, the 41 Indian is my life, India's gods and goddesses are my God. India's 42 society is the cradle of my infancy, the pleasure-garden of my youth, 43 the sacred heaven, the Varanasi of my old age." Say, brother; "The 44 soil of India is my highest heaven, the good of India is my good," 45 and repeat and pray day and night, "O Thou Lord of Gauri, O Thou 46 Mother of the Universe, vouchsafe manliness unto me! O Thou 47 Mother of Strength, take away my weakness, take away my 48 unmanliness, and make me a Man!"

THE EDUCATION THAT INDIA NEEDS

In reply to your question about the methods of work, the most important thing I have to say is that the work should be started on a scale which would be commensurate with the results desired. I have heard much of your liberal mind, patriotism, and steady perseverance from my friend Miss Muller; and the proof of your erudition is evident. I look upon it as a great good fortune that you are desirous to know what little this insignificant life has been able to attempt; I shall state it to you here, as far as I can. But first I shall lay before you my mature convictions for your deliberations.

We have been slaves for ever, i.e. it has never been given to the masses of India to express the inner light which is their inheritance. The Occident has been rapidly advancing towards freedom for the last few centuries. In India, it was the king who used to prescribe everything from Kulinism down to what one should eat and what one should not. In Western countries, the people do everything themselves.

The king now has nothing to say in any social matter; on the other hand, the Indian people have not yet even the least faith in themselves, what to say of self-reliance. The faith in one's own Self, which is the basis of Vedanta, has not yet been even slightly carried into practice. It is for this reason that the Western method--i.e. first of all, discussion about the wished-for end, then the carrying it out by the combination of all the forces--is of no avail even now in this country; it is for this reason that we appear so greatly conservative under foreign rule. If this be true, then it is a vain attempt to do any great work by means of public discussion. "There is no chance of a headache where there is no head"--where is the public? Besides, we are so devoid of strength that our whole energy is exhausted if we undertake to discuss anything, none is left for work. It is for this reason, I suppose, we observe in Bengal almost always--"Much cry but little wool." Secondly, as I have written before, I do not expect anything from the rich people of India. It is best to work among the youth in whom lies our hope--patiently, steadily, and without noise.

Now about work. From the day when education and culture etc. began to spread gradually from patricians to plebeians, grew the distinction between the modern civilisation as of Western countries, and the ancient civilisation as of India, Egypt, Rome, etc. I see it before my eyes, a nation is advanced in proportion as education and intelligence spread among the masses. The chief cause of India's ruin has been the monopolising of the whole education and intelligence of the land, by dint of pride and royal authority, among a handful of men. If we are to rise again, we shall have to do it in the same way, i.e. by spreading education among the masses. A great fuss has been made for half a century about social reform. Travelling through various places of India these last ten years, I observed the country full of social reform associations. But I did not find one association for them by sucking whose blood

1 the people known as "gentlemen" have become and continue to be 2 gentlemen! How many sepoys were brought by the Mussulmans?
3 How many Englishmen are there? Where, except in India, can be 4 had millions of men who will cut the throats of their own fathers
5 and brothers for six rupees? Sixty millions of Mussulmans in seven 6 hundred years of Mohammedan rule, and two millions of Christians 7 in one hundred years of Christian rule--what makes it so? Why has 8 originality entirely forsaken the country? Why are our deft- fingered 9 artisans daily becoming extinct, unable to compete with the 10 Europeans? By what power again has the German labourer 11 succeeded in shaking the many-century-grounded firm footing of 12 the English labourer?

13 Education, education, and education alone! Travelling
14 through many cities of Europe and observing in them the comforts 15 and education of even the poor people, there was brought to my 16 mind the state of our own poor people, and I used to shed tears.
17 What made the difference? Education was the answer I got.
18 Through education comes faith in one's own Self, and through faith 19 in one's own Self the inherent Brahman is waking up in them, while 20 the Brahman in us is gradually becoming dormant. In New York I 21 used to observe the Irish colonists come--downtrodden, haggard-22 looking, destitute of all possessions at home, penniless, and 23 wooden-headed--with their only belongings, a stick and a bundle of 24 rags hanging at the end of it, fright in their steps, alarm in their 25 eyes. A different spectacle in six months--the man walks upright, his 26 attire is changed! In his eyes and steps there is no more sign of 27 fright. What is the cause? Our Vedanta says that that Irishman was 28 kept surrounded by contempt in his own country--the whole of 29 nature was telling him with one voice, "Pat, you have no more hope, 30 you are born a slave and will remain so." Having been thus told 31 from his birth, Pat believed in it and hypnotised himself that he was 32 very low, and the Brahman in him shrank away. While no sooner had 33 he landed in America than he heard the shout going up on all sides, 34 "Pat, you are a man as we are. It is man who has done all, a man 35 like you and me can do everything: have courage!" Pat raised his 36 head and saw that it was so, the Brahman within woke up. Nature 37 herself spoke, as it were, "Arise, awake, and stop not till the goal is 38 reached" (Katha Upanishad. I. ii.4.)

39 Likewise the education that our boys receive is very 40 negative. The schoolboy learns nothing, but has everything of his 41 own broken down--want of Shraddha is the result. The Shraddha
42 which is the keynote of the Veda and the Vedanta--the Shraddha
43 which emboldened Nachiketa to face Yama and question him, 44 through which Shraddha this world moves--the annihilation of that 45 Shraddha! {Sanskrit} --"The ignorant, the man devoid of Shraddha, 46 the doubting self runs to ruin." Therefore are we so near to 47 destruction. The remedy now is the spread of education. First of all, 48 Self-knowledge. I do not mean thereby, matted hair, staff, 49 Kamandalu, and mountain caves which the word suggests. What do 50 I mean then? Cannot the knowledge, by which is attained even 51 freedom from the bondage of worldly existence, bring ordinary 52 material prosperity? Certainly it can. Freedom, dispassion,

1 renunciation all these are the very highest ideals, but {Sanskrit}
2 --"Even a little of this Dharma saves one from the great fear (of 3 birth and death)." Dualist, qualified-monist, monist, Shaiva, 4 Vaishnava, Shakta, even the Buddhist and the Jain and others--
5 whatever sects have arisen in India--are all at one in this respect 6 that infinite power is latent in this Jivatman (individualised soul); 7 from the ant to the perfect man there is the same Atman in all, the 8 difference being only in manifestation. "As a farmer breaks the 9 obstacles (to the course of water)" (Patanjali's Yoga-Sutra, 10 Kaivalyapada, 3). That power manifests as soon as it gets the 11 opportunity and the right place and time. From the highest god to 12 the meanest grass, the same power is present in all--whether 13 manifested or not. We shall have to call forth that power by going 14 from door to door.

15 Secondly, along with this, education has to be imparted. That 16 is easy to say, but how to reduce it into practice? There are 17 thousands of unselfish, kind-hearted men in our country who have 18 renounced everything. In the same way as they travel about and 19 give religious instructions without any remuneration, so at least 20 half of them can be trained as teachers or bearers of such 21 education as we need most. For that, we want first of all a centre in 22 the capital of each Presidency, from whence to spread slowly 23 throughout the whole of India. Two centres have recently been 24 started in Madras and Calcutta; there is hope of more soon. Then, 25 the greater part of the education to the poor should be given orally, 26 time is not yet ripe for schools. Gradually in these main centres will 27 be taught agriculture, industry, etc., and workshops will be 28 established for the furtherance of arts. To sell the manufactures of 29 those workshops in Europe and America, associations will be 30 started like those already in existence. It will be necessary to start 31 centres for women, exactly like those for men. But you are aware 32 how difficult that is in our country. Again, "The snake which bites 33 must take out its own poison" --and that this is going to be is my 34 firm conviction; the money required for these works would have to 35 come from the West. And for that reason, our religion should be 36 preached in Europe and America. Modern science has undermined 37 the basis of religions like Christianity. Over and above that, luxury 38 is about to kill the religious instinct itself. Europe and America are 39 now looking towards India with expectant eyes; this is the time for 40 philanthropy, this is the time to occupy the hostile strongholds.

41 In the West, women rule; all influence and power are theirs.
42 If bold and talented women like yourself versed in Vedanta, go to 43 England to preach, I am sure that every year hundreds of men and 44 women will become blessed by adopting the religion of the land of 45 Bharata. The only woman who went over from our country was 46 Ramabai; her knowledge of English, Western science and art was 47 limited; still she surprised all. If anyone like you goes, England will 48 be stirred, what to speak of America! If an Indian woman in Indian 49 dress preach there the religion which fell from the lips of the Rishis 50 of India--I see a prophetic vision--there will rise a great wave which 51 will inundate the whole Western world. Will there be no woman in 52 the land of Maitreyi, Khana, Lilavati, Savitri and Ubhayabharati,

1 who will venture to do this? The Lord knows. England we shall 2 conquer, England we shall possess, through the power of 3 spirituality. {Sanskrit}--"There is no other way of salvation." Can 4 salvation ever come by getting up meetings and societies? Our 5 conquerors must be made Devas by the power of our spirituality. I 6 am a humble mendicant, an itinerant monk; I am helpless and 7 alone. What can I do? You have the power of wealth, intellect, and 8 education; will you forgo this opportunity? Conquest of England, 9 Europe, and America--this should be our one supreme Mantra at 10 present, in it lies the well-being of the country. Expansion is the 11 sign of life, and we must spread over the world with our spiritual 12 ideals. Alas! this frame is poor, moreover, the physique of a Bengali; 13 even under this labour a fatal disease has attacked it, but there is 14 the hope:

15 {Sanskrit}

16 --"A kindred spirit is or will be born out of the limitless time 17 and populous earth to accomplish the work" (Bhavabhuti).

18 About vegetarian diet I have to say this --first, my Master 19 was a vegetarian; but if he was given meat offered to the Goddess, 20 he used to hold it up to his head. The taking of life is undoubtedly 21 sinful; but so long as vegetable food is not made suitable to the 22 human system through progress in chemistry, there is no other 23 alternative but meat-eating. So long as man shall have to live a 24 Rajasika (active) life under circumstances like the present, there is 25 no other way except through meat-eating. It is true that the 26 Emperor Asoka saved the lives of millions of animals, by the threat 27 of the sword; but is not the slavery of a thousand years more 28 dreadful than that? Taking the life of a few goats as against the 29 inability to protect the honour of one's own wife and daughter, and 30 to save the morsels for one's children from robbing hands--which of 31 these is more sinful? Rather let those belonging to the upper ten, 32 who do not earn their livelihood by manual labour, not take meat; 33 but the forcing of vegetarianism upon those who have to earn their 34 bread by labouring day and night is one of the causes of the loss of 35 our national freedom. Japan is an example of what good and 36 nourishing food can do.

37 May the All-powerful Vishvesvari inspire your heart!

3 OUR PRESENT SOCIAL PROBLEMS
4

5 {Sanskrit}--"The Lord whose nature is unspeakable love."
6 That this characteristic of God mentioned by Narada is manifest 7 and admitted on all hands is the firm conviction of my life. The 8 aggregate of many individuals is called Samashti (the whole), and 9 each individual is called Vyashti (a part). You and I --each is Vyashti, 10 society is Samashti. You, I, an animal, a bird, a worm, an insect, a 11 tree, a creeper, the earth, a planet, a star--each is Vyashti, while 12 this universe is Samashti, which is called Virat, Hiranyagarbha, or 13 Ishvara in Vedanta, and Brahma, Vishnu, Devi, etc., in the Puranas.
14 Whether or not Vyashti has individual freedom, and if it has, what 15 should be its measure, whether or not Vyashti should completely 16 sacrifice its own will, its own happiness for Samashti--are the 17 perennial problems before every society. Society everywhere is 18 busy finding the solution of these problems. These, like big waves, 19 are agitating modern Western society. The doctrine which demands 20 the sacrifice of individual freedom to social supremacy is called 21 socialism, while that which advocates the cause of the individual is 22 called individualism.

23 Our motherland is a glowing example of the results and 24 consequence of the eternal subjection of the individual to society 25 and forced self-sacrifice by dint of institution and discipline. In this 26 country men are born according to Shastric injunctions, they eat 27 and drink by prescribed rules throughout life, they go through 28 marriage and kindred functions in the same way; in short, they even 29 die according to Shastric injunctions. The hard discipline, with the 30 exception of one great good point, is fraught with evil. The good 31 point is that men can do one or two things well with very little 32 effort, having practised them every day through generations. The 33 delicious rice and curry which a cook of this country prepares with 34 the aid of three lumps of earth and a few sticks can be had nowhere 35 else. With the simple mechanism of an antediluvian loom, worth one 36 rupee, and the feet put in a pit, it is possible to make kincobs worth 37 twenty rupees a yard, in this country alone. A torn mat, an earthen 38 lamp, and that fed by castor oil--with the aid of materials such as 39 these, wonderful savants are produced in this country alone. An all-40 forbearing attachment to an ugly and deformed wife, and a lifelong 41 devotion to a worthless and villainous husband are possible in this 42 country alone. Thus far the bright side.

43 But all these things are done by people guided like lifeless 44 machines. There is no mental activity, no unfoldment of the heart, 45 no vibration of life, no flux of hope; there is no strong stimulation of 46 the will, no experience of keen pleasure, nor the contact with 47 intense sorrow; there is no stir of inventive genius, no desire for 48 novelty, no appreciation of new things. Clouds never pass away 49 from this mind, the radiant picture of the morning sun never 50 charms this heart. It never even occurs to this mind if there is any 51 better state than this; where it does, it cannot convince; in the 1 event of conviction, effort is lacking; and even where there is effort, 2 lack of enthusiasm kills it out.

3 If living by rule alone ensures excellence, if it be virtue to 4 follow strictly the rules and customs handed down through 5 generations, say then, who is more virtuous than a tree, who is a 6 greater devotee, a holier saint, than a railway train? Who has ever 7 seen a piece of stone transgress a natural law? Who has ever 8 known cattle to commit sin?

9 The huge steamer, the mighty railway engine—they are non-10 intelligent; they move, turn, and run, but they are without 11 intelligence. And yonder tiny worm which moved away from the 12 railway line to save its life, why is it intelligent? There is no 13 manifestation of will in the machine, the machine never wishes to 14 transgress law; the worm wants to oppose law--rises against law 15 whether it succeeds or not; therefore it is intelligent. Greater is the 16 happiness, higher is the Jiva, in proportion as this will is more 17 successfully manifest. The will of God is perfectly fruitful; therefore 18 He is the highest.

19 What is education? Is it book-learning? No. Is it diverse 20 knowledge? Not even that. The training by which the current and 21 expression of will are brought under control and become fruitful is 22 called education. Now consider, is that education as a result of 23 which the will, being continuously choked by force through 24 generations, is well-nigh killed out; is that education under whose 25 sway even the old ideas, let alone the new ones, are disappearing 26 one by one; is that education which is slowly making man a 27 machine? It is more blessed, in my opinion, even to go wrong, 28 impelled by one's free will and intelligence than to be good as an 29 automaton. Again, can that be called society which is formed by an 30 aggregate of men who are like lumps of clay, like lifeless machines, 31 like heaped up pebbles? How can such society fare well? Were good 32 possible, then instead of being slaves for hundreds of years, we 33 would have been the greatest nation on earth, and this soil of India, 34 instead of being a mine of stupidity, would have been the eternal 35 fountain-head of learning.

36 Is not self-sacrifice, then, a virtue? Is it not the most virtuous 37 deed to sacrifice the happiness of one, the welfare of one, for the 38 sake of the many? Exactly, but as the Bengali adage goes, "Can 39 beauty be manufactured by rubbing and scrubbing? Can love be 40 generated by effort and compulsion?" What glory is there in the 41 renunciation of an eternal beggar? What virtue is there in the sense 42 control of one devoid of sense-power? What again is the self-43 sacrifice of one devoid of idea, devoid of heart, devoid of high 44 ambition, and devoid of the conception of what constitutes society?
45 What expression of devotedness to a husband is there by forcing a 46 widow to commit Sati? Why make people do virtuous deeds by 47 teaching superstitions? I say, liberate, undo the shackles of people 48 as much as you can. Can dirt be washed by dirt? Can bondage be 49 removed by bondage? Where is the instance? When you would be 50 able to sacrifice all desire for happiness for the sake of society, then 51 you would be the Buddha, then you would be free: that is far off.
52 Again, do you think the way to do it lies through oppression? "Oh,

1 what examples of self-denial are our widows! Oh, how sweet is 2 child-marriage! Is another such custom possible! Can there be 3 anything but love between husband and wife in such a marriage!"-- 4 such is the whine going round nowadays. But as to the men, the 5 masters of the situation, there is no need of self-denial for them! Is 6 there a virtue higher than serving others? But the same does not 7 apply to Brahmins--you others do it! The truth is that in this country 8 parents and relatives can ruthlessly sacrifice the best interests of 9 their children and others for their selfish ends to save themselves 10 by compromise to society; and the teaching of generations 11 rendering the mind callous has made it perfectly easy. He, the 12 brave alone, can deny self. The coward, afraid of the lash, with one 13 hand wipes his eyes and gives with the other. Of what avail are such 14 gifts? It is a far cry to love universal. The young plant should be 15 hedged in and taken care of. One can hope gradually to attain 16 universal love if one can learn to love one object unselfishly. If 17 devotion to one particular Ishta-Deva is attained, devotion to the 18 universal Virat is gradually possible.

19 Therefore, when one has been able to deny self for an 20 individual, one should talk of self-sacrifice for the sake of society, 21 not before. It is action with desire that leads to action without 22 desire. Is the renunciation of desire possible if desire did not exist 23 in the beginning? And what could it mean? Can light have any 24 meaning if there is no darkness?

25 Worship with desire, with attachment, comes first.
26 Commence with the worship of the little, then the greater will come 27 of itself.

28 Mother, be not anxious. It is against the big tree that the 29 great wind strikes. "Poking a fire makes it burn better"; "A snake 30 struck on the head raises its hood"--and so on. When there comes 31 affliction in the heart, when the storm of sorrow blows all around, 32 and it seems light will be seen no more, when hope and courage are 33 almost gone, it is then, in the midst of this great spiritual tempest, 34 that the light of Brahman within gleams. Brought up in the lap of 35 luxury, lying on a bed of roses and never shedding a tear, who has 36 ever become great, who has ever unfolded the Brahman within?
37 Why do you fear to weep? Weep! Weeping clears the eyes and 38 brings about intuition. Then the vision of diversity--man, animal, 39 tree--slowly melting away, makes room for the infinite realisation of 40 Brahman everywhere and in every thing. Then--

41 {Sanskrit}

42 --"Verily, seeing the same God equally existent everywhere, 43 he does not injure the Self by the self, and so goes to the Supreme 44 Goal" (Gita, XIII.28).

TO A FRIEND

(Rendered from a Bengali poem composed by Swami Vivekananda)

Where darkness is interpreted as light,
Where misery passes for happiness,
Where disease is pretended to be health,
Where the new-born's cry but shows 'tis alive;
Dost thou, O wise, expect happiness here?

Where war and competition ceaseless run,
Even the father turns against the son,
Where "self", "self"--this always the only note,
Dost thou, O wise, seek for peace supreme here?

A glaring mixture of heaven and hell,
Who can fly from this Samsar⁴² of Maya?
Fastened in the neck with Karma's fetters,
Say, where can the slave escape for safety?

The paths of Yoga and of sense-enjoyment,
The life of the householder and Sannyas,
Devotion, worship, and earning riches,
Vows, Tyaga, and austerities severe,
I have seen through them all. What have I known?

--Have known there's not a jot of happiness,
Life is only a cup of Tantalus;
The nobler is your heart, know for certain,
The more must be your share of misery.

Thou large-hearted Lover unselfish, know,
There's no room in this sordid world for thee;
Can a marble figure e'er brook the blow

2

⁴² ?Samsara, the world.

1 That an iron mass can afford to bear?
 2
 3 Couldst thou be as one inert and abject,
 4 Honey-mouthed, but with poison in thy heart,
 5 Destitute of truth and worshipping self,
 6 Then thou wouldst have a place in this Samsar.
 7
 8 Pledging even life for gaining knowledge, 9 I have devoted half my days on earth;
 10 For the sake of love, even as one insane,
 11 I have often clutched at shadows lifeless; 12
 13 For religion, many creeds have I sought,
 14 Lived in mountain-caves, on cremation-grounds,
 15 By the Ganga and other sacred streams,
 16 And how many days have I passed on alms!
 17
 18 Friendless, clad in rags, with no possession, 19 Feeding from door to door on what chance would bring.
 20 The frame broken under Tapasya's⁴³ weight;
 21 What riches, ask thou, have I earned in life?
 22
 23 Listen, friend, I will speak my heart to thee; 24 I have found in my life this truth supreme-- 25 Buffeted by waves, in this whirl of life,
 26 There's one ferry that takes across the sea.⁴⁴ 27
 28 Formulas of worship, control of breath,
 29 Science, philosophy, systems varied,
 30 Relinquishment, possession, and the life,
 31 All these are but delusions of the mind--
 32 Love, Love--that's the one thing, the sole treasure.
 33
 34 In Jiva and Brahman, in man and God,

1 ⁴³ ?Of austerities.

 3 ⁴⁴ ?The sea of Samsara.
 4

1 In ghosts, and wraiths, and spirits, and so forth,
 2 In Devas, beasts, birds, insects, and in worms,
 3 This Prema⁴⁵ dwells in the heart of them all.
 4
 5 Say, who else is the highest God of gods?
 6 Say, who else moves all the universe?
 7 The mother dies for her young, robber robs--
 8 Both are but the impulse of the same Love!
 9
 10 Beyond the ken of human speech and mind, 11 It dwells in weal and woe; 'tis that which comes 12 As the all-powerful, all-destroyer
 13 Kali, and as the kindest mother.
 14
 15 Disease, bereavement, pinch of poverty,
 16 Dharma⁴⁶, and its opposite Adharma,⁴⁷
 17 Are but ITS worship in manifold modes;
 18 Say, what does by himself a Jiva do?
 20 Deluded is he who happiness seeks,
 21 Lunatic he who misery wishes,
 22 Insane he too who fondly longs for death,
 23 Immortality--vain aspiration!
 24
 25 For, far, however far you may travel,
 26 Mounted on the brilliant mental car,
 27 'Tis the same ocean of the Samsar, 28 Happiness and misery whirling on.
 29
 30 Listen O Vihangam,⁴⁸ bereft of wings,
 31 'Tis not the way to make good your escape;
 32 Time and again you get blows, and collapse,

1 ⁴⁵ ?Love.

3 ⁴⁶ ?Virtue.

4
5 ⁴⁷ ?Vice.

6
7 ⁴⁸ ?Bird, here addressed to the bound soul.
8

1 Why then attempt what is impossible?
2
3 Let go your vain reliance on knowledge, 4 Let go your prayers, offerings, and strength,
5 For Love selfless is the only resource;-- 6 Lo, the insects teach, embracing the flame!
7
8 The base insect's blind, by beauty charmed,
9 Thy soul is drunken with the wine of Love;
10 O thou Lover true, cast into the fire
11 All thy dross of self, thy mean selfishness.
12
13 Say--comes happiness e'er to a beggar?
14 What good being object of charity?
15 Give away, ne'er turn to ask in return,
16 Should there be the wealth treasured in thy heart.
17
18 Ay, born heir to the Infinite thou art, 19 Within the heart is the ocean of Love,
20 "Give", "Give away"--whoever asks return,
21 His ocean dwindles down to a mere drop.
22
23 From highest Brahman to the yonder worm,
24 And to the very minutest atom,
25 Everywhere is the same God, the All-Love;
26 Friend, offer mind, soul, body, at their feet.
27
28 These are His manifold forms before thee,
29 Rejecting them, where seekest thou for God?
30 Who loves all beings without distinction,
31 He indeed is worshipping best his God.

THE HYMN OF CREATION

(Rendered from Bengali)

One Mass, devoid of form, name, and colour,
Timeless, devoid of time past and future,
Spaceless, voiceless, boundless, devoid of all--
Where rests hushed even speech of negation.⁴⁹

From thence, down floweth the river causal,
Wearing the form of desire radiant,
Its heaving waters angrily roaring
The constant roar, "I am", "I am".

In that ocean of desire limitless,
Appear shining waves, countless, infinite,
Oh, of what power manifold they are,
Of what forms myriad, of what repose,
Of what movements varied, who can reckon?

Millions of moons, millions of suns,
Taking their birth in that very ocean,
Rushing headlong with din tumultuous,
Overspread the whole firmament, drowning
The points of heaven in light effulgent.

In it arise and reside what beings,
Quick with life, dull, and lifeless--unnumbered,
And pleasure and pain, disease, birth, and death!
Verily, the Sun is He, His the ray,
Nay, the Sun is He, and He is the ray.

THE HYMN OF SAMADHI
(Rendered from Bengali)

Lo! The sun is not, nor the comely moon,
All light extinct; in the great void of space
Floats shadow-like the image-universe.

In the void of mind involute, there floats
The fleeting universe, rises and floats,
Sinks again, ceaseless, in the current "I".

Slowly, slowly, the shadow-multitude
Entered the primal womb, and flowed ceaseless,
The only current, the "I am", "I am".

Lo! 'Tis stopped, ev'n that current flows no more,
Void merged into void--beyond speech and mind
Whose heart understands, he verily does.

A HYMN TO THE DIVINE MOTHER

O Thou most beautiful! Whose holy hands
Hold pleasure and hold pain! Doer of good!
Who art Thou? The water of existence
By Thee is whirled and tossed in mighty waves.
Is it, O Mother, to restore again
This universe's broken harmony
That Thou, without cessation, art at work?

Oh! May the Mother of the universe--
In whose activity no respite rests,
Incessantly distributing the fruits
Of action done, guiding unceasingly
All action yet to come--bestow Her boon
Of blessing on me, Her child, for evermore.

1 I realise, I know, that it is Thou
2 Who holdest in Thy hands dread Karma's rope.
3
4 Is it inherent nature? Something uncreate?
5 Or Destiny? Some unforeseen result?--
6 Who lacking nothing, is accountable,
7 Whose chain of will, untrammelled, grasps the laws, 8 May She, the Primal Guide, my shelter be!
9
10 Manifestations of Her glory show
11 In power of immeasurable might,
12 Throughout the universe, powers that swell
13 The sea of birth and death, forces that change
14 And break up the Unchanged and changed again.
15 Lo! Where shall we seek refuge, save in Her?
16
17 To friend and foe Thy lotus-eyes are even;
18 Ever Thine animating touch brings fruit
19 To fortunate and unfortunate alike;
20 The shade of death and immortality--
21 Both these, O mother, are Thy grace Supreme!
22 Mother Supreme! Oh, may Thy gracious face
23 Never be turned away from me, Thy child!
24
25 What Thou art, the Mother? the All. How praise?
26 My understanding is so little worth.
27 'Twere like desire to seize with hands of mine
28 The sole Supporter of the universe!
29 So, at Thy blessed feet--contemplated
30 By the Goddess of Fortune Herself--the abode
31 Of fearlessness, worshipped by service true-- 32 There, at those blessed feet, I take refuge!
33
34 She who, since birth, has ever led me on 35 Through paths of trouble to perfection's goal.
36 Mother-wise, in Her own sweet playful ways, 37 She, who has always through my life inspired

1 My understanding, She, my Mother, She,
2 The All, is my resort, whether my work
3 O'erflow with full fruition or with none.
4

7 A HYMN TO SHIVA
8

9 Salutation to Shiva! whose glory
10 Is immeasurable, who resembles sky
11 In clearness, to whom are attributed 12 The phenomena of all creation,
13 The preservation and dissolution
14 Of the universe! May the devotion,
15 The burning devotion of this my life
16 Attach itself to Him, to Shiva, who,
17 While being Lord of all, transcends Himself.
18

19 In whom Lordship is ever established,
20 Who causes annihilation of delusion,
21 Whose most surpassing love, made manifest,
22 Has crowned Him with a name above all names, 23 The name of "Mahadeva", the Great God!
24 Whose warm embrace, of Love personified,
25 Displays, within man's heart, that all power 26 Is but a semblance and a passing show.
27

28 In which the tempest of the whole past blows, 29 Past Samskaras,⁵⁰ stirring the energies
30 With violence, like water lashed to waves;
31 In which the dual consciousness of "I" and "Thou"
32 Plays on: I salute that mind unstable,
33 Centred in Shiva, the abode of calm!
34

35 Where the ideas of parent and produced,
36 Purified thoughts and endless varied forms,

1 ⁵⁰ ?The accumulated effects of past desires and actions.
2

1 Merge in the Real one; where the existence ends
2 Of such conceptions as "within", "without"-- 3 The wind of modification being stilled--
4 That Hara I worship, the suppression
5 Of movements of the mind. Shiva I hail!
6
7 From whom all gloom and darkness have dispersed;
8 That radiant Light, white, beautiful
9 As bloom of lotus white is beautiful;
10 Whose laughter loud sheds knowledge luminous;
11 Who, by undivided meditation,
12 Is realised in the self-controlled heart:
13 May that Lordly Swan of the limpid lake 14 Of my mind, guard me, prostrate before Him!
15
16 Him, the Master-remover of evil,
17 Who wipes the dark stain of this Iron Age;
18 Whom Daksha's Daughter gave Her coveted hand;
19 Who, like the charming water-lily white,
20 Is beautiful; who is ready ever
21 To part with life for others' good, whose gaze
22 Is on the humble fixed; whose neck is blue⁵¹
23 With the poison⁵² swallowed:
24 Him, we salute!

27

28 A HYMN TO THE DIVINITY OF SHRI
29 RAMAKRISHNA

30 (Rendered from Bengali)

31
32
33
34

We salute Thee!
Lord! Adored of the world,
Samsara's bondage breaker, taintless Thou,

1 ⁵¹ ?Nilakantha, a name of Shiva.

3 ⁵² ?The all-destructive evil.
4

1 Embodiment of blessed qualities,
 2 Thou transcendest all Gunas; human form
 3 Thus bearest.
 4 Thee we salute and adore!
 5
 6 Refuge of mind and speech, Thou art beyond
 7 The reach of either. Radiance art Thou
 8 In all radiance that is. The heart's cave
 9 Is by Thy visitance resplendent made.
 10 Verily Thou art that which dispelleth
 11 The densest darkness of Tamas in man.
 12
 13 Lo! In variety of melody
 14 Forth-breaking in fine harmony most sweet, 15 Hymns of Thy devotees, accompanied 16 By Mridanga⁵³ playing with music's grace,
 17 Fill the air, in evening worship to Thee.
 18
 19 One glancing vision at Thine eyes divine
 20 Cleared by the collyrium of Jnana
 21 Defies delusion. O thou blotter-out
 22 Of all the taints of sin, Intelligence
 23 Pure, unmingled is Thy form. Of the world
 24 Thou art embellisher. Self-luminous
 25 Art Thou. O Ocean of feeling sublime,
 26 And of Love Divine, O God-maddened One,
 27 Devotees win Thy blessed feet and cross 28 Safely the swelling sea of Samsara.
 29
 30 O Lord of the world, through Thy Yoga power
 31 Thou shinest as the Incarnation clear
 32 Of this our time. O thou of strict restraint, 33 Only through Thine unstinted grace we see 34 The mind in Samadhi completely merged;
 35 Mercy Incarnate! austere are Thy deeds.

⁵³ ?A kind of drum.

1 Thou dealest to the evil of misery
 2 Destruction. Kali's⁵⁴ binding cords
 3 Are cut by Thee asunder. Thine own life
 4 Thou gavest freely, O sweet Sacrifice,
 5 O best of men! O Saviour of the world!
 6
 7 Devoid wert Thou of the idea of sex,
 8 Thought of possession charmed Thee not. To Thee
 9 Obnoxious was all pleasure. Give to us,
 10 O greatest among Tyagis,⁵⁵ love intense
 11 Unto Thy sacred feet; give, we implore!
 12
 13 Fearless art Thou, and past all gloom of doubt;
 14 Thy mind is wrapt in its own firm resolve;
 15 Thy lovers, whose devotion mounts above
 16 The realm of reason, who renounce the pride
 17 Of caste and parentage, of name and fame--
 18 Their safe refuge art Thou alone, O Lord!
 19
 20 My one true treasure is Thy blessed feet,
 21 Reaching which the whole universe itself
 22 Seems like a puddle in the hollow made
 23 By hoof of passing cow.
 24 O offering
 25 To Love! O Seer of equality
 26 In all! O verily, in Thee the pain
 27 And evil of this mortal world escapes,
 28 And vanishes, O cherished One.

32 "AND LET SHYAMA DANCE THERE"

33 (Rendered from Bengali)

34
35 Beaut'ous blossoms ravishing with perfume,

1 ⁵⁴ ?Of the Iron Age.

3 ⁵⁵ ?Renouncers.

1 Swarms of maddened bees buzzing all around;
 2 The silver moon--a shower of sweet smile,
 3 Which all the dwellers of heaven above
 4 Shed lavishly upon the homes of earth;
 5 The soft Malaya⁵⁶ breeze, whose magic touch
 6 Opens to view distant memory's folds;
 7 Murmuring rivers and brooks, rippling lakes
 8 With restless Bhramaras⁵⁷ wheeling over
 9 Gently waving lotuses unnumbered;
 10 Foaming flow cascades--a streaming music--
 11 To which echo mountain caves in return;
 12 Warblers, full of sweet-flowing melody,
 13 Hidden in leaves, pour hearts out--love discourse;
 14 The rising orb of day, the painter divine,
 15 With his golden brush but lightly touches
 16 The canvas earth and a wealth of colours
 17 Floods at once o'er the bosom of nature,
 18 --Truly a museum of lovely hues--
 19 Waking up a whole sea of sentiments.
 20
 21 The roll of thunder, the crashing of clouds, 22 War of elements spreading earth and sky;
 23 Darkness vomiting forth blinding darkness,
 24 The Pralaya⁵⁸ wind angrily roaring;
 25 In quick bursts of dazzling splendour flashes
 26 Blood-red terrific lightning, dealing death;
 27 Monster waves roaring like thunder, foaming,
 28 Rush impetuous to leap mountain peaks;
 29 The earth booms furious, reels and totters,
 30 Sinks down to its ruin, hurled from its place;
 31 Piercing the ground, stream forth tremendous flames,
 32 Mighty ranges blow up into atoms.

1 ⁵⁶ ?A fabulous Sandal-wood mountain in the South. Hence, Malaya breeze
 2 means a fragrant breeze from the South.

4 ⁵⁷ ?A beetle somewhat like a bumble-bee, which lives solely on honey.

6 ⁵⁸ ?The time of cosmic destruction.

1 A lovely villa, on a lake of blue--
2 Festooned with clusters of water-lilies;
3 The heart-blood of ripe grapes capped with white foam
4 Whispering softly tells tale of passion;
5 The melody of the harp floods the ears,
6 And by its air, time, and harmony rich,
7 Enhances desire in the breast of man;
8 What stirring of emotions! How many 9 Hot sighs of Love! And warm tears coursing down!
10 The Bimba⁵⁹-red lips of the youthful fair,
11 The two blue eyes--two oceans of feelings;
12 The two hands eager to advance--love's cage--
13 In which the heart, like a bird, lies captive.
14 The martial music bursts, the trumpets blow, 15 The ground shakes under the warriors' tread;
16 The roar of cannon, the rattle of guns,
17 Volumes of smoke, the gruesome battlefield,
18 The thundering artillery vomits fire
19 In thousand directions; shells burst and strike
20 Vital parts of the body; elephants
21 And horses mounted are blown up in space;
22 The earth trembles under this infernal dance;
23 A million heroes mounted on steeds
24 Charge and capture the enemy's ordnance,
25 Piercing through the smoke and shower of shells
26 And rain of bullets; forward goes the flag,
27 The emblem of victory, of heroism
28 With the blood, yet hot, streaming down the staff, 29 Followed by the rifles, drunk with war-spirit;
30 Lo! the ensign falls, but the flag proceeds
31 Onwards on the shoulder of another;
32 Under his feet swell heaps of warriors
33 Perished in battle; but he falters not.
34 The flesh hankers for contacts of pleasure,
35 The senses for enchanting strains of song,
36 The mind hungers for peals of laughter sweet,

⁵⁹ ?A kind of fruit of a rich red colour.

1 The heart pants to reach realms beyond sorrow;
 2 Say, who cares exchange the soothing moonlight
 3 For the burning rays of the noontide sun?
 4 The wretch whose heart is like the scorching sun,
 5 --Even he fondly loves the balmy moon;
 6 Indeed, all thirst for joy. Breathes there the wretch
 7 Who hugs pain and sorrow to his bosom?
 8 Misery in his cup of happiness,
 9 Deadly venom in his drink of nectar,
 10 Poison in his throat--yet he clings to hope!
 11 Lo! how all are scared by the Terrific,
 12 None seek Elokeshi⁶⁰ whose form is Death.
 13 The deadly frightful sword, reeking with blood,
 14 They take from Her hand, and put a lute instead!
 15 Thou dreaded Kali, the All-destroyer,
 16 Thou alone art true; Thy shadow's shadow
 17 Is indeed the pleasant Vanamali.⁶¹
 18 O Terrible Mother, cut quick the core,
 19 Illusion dispel--the dream of happiness,
 20 Rend asunder the fondness for the flesh.
 21
 22 True, they garland Thee with skulls, but shrink back
 23 In fright and call Thee, "O All-merciful!"
 24 At Thy thunder peal of awful laughter,
 25 At Thy nudeness--for space is thy garment-- 26 Their hearts sink down with terror, but they say, 27 "It is the demons that the Mother kills!"
 28 They only pretend they wish to see Thee,
 29 But when the time comes, at Thy sight they flee.
 30 Thou art Death! To each and all in the world
 31 Thou distributest the plague and disease
 32 --Vessels of venom filled by Thine own hands.
 33 O thou insane! Thou but cheatest thyself,
 34 Thou dost not turn thy head lest thou behold,

1 ⁶⁰ ?She with untied hair, a name of Kali, the Divine Mother of the Universe.

 3 ⁶¹ ?Literally, he who is garlanded with wild flowers. The Shepherd Krishna in His 4 aspect of youthful sport.
 5

1 Ay, the form terrible of the Mother.
 2 Thou courtest hardship hoping happiness,
 3 Thou wearest cloak of Bhakti and worship,
 4 With mind full of achieving selfish ends.
 5 The blood from the severed head of a kid
 6 Fills thee with fear--thy heart throbs at the sight--
 7 Verily a coward! Compassionate?⁶²
 8 Bless my soul! A strange state of things indeed!
 9 To whom shall I tell the truth?--Who will see?
 10 Free thyself from the mighty attraction--
 11 The maddening wine of love, the charm of sex.
 12 Break the harp! Forward, with the ocean's cry!
 13 Drink tears, pledge even life--let the body fall.
 14 Awake, O hero! Shake off thy vain dreams,
 15 Death stands at thy head--does fear become thee?
 16 A load of misery, true though it is-- 17 This Becoming⁶³--know this to be thy God!
 18 His temple--the Shmashan⁶⁴ among corpses
 19 And funeral pyres; unending battle--
 20 That verily is His sacred worship;
 21 Constant defeat--let that not unnerve thee;
 22 Shattered be little self, hope, name, and fame;
 23 Set up a pyre of them and make thy heart
 24 A burning-ground.
 25 And let Shyama⁶⁵ dance there.

26
 28

29 A SONG I SING TO THEE
 30 (Rendered from Bengali)

31
 32

A song I sing. A song I sing to Thee!

1 ⁶² ?The idea is that the brave alone can be compassionate, and not the coward.
 2
 3 ⁶³ ?The wheel of constant birth and death, hence the world.
 4
 5 ⁶⁴ ?The cremation-ground.
 6
 7 ⁶⁵ ?The Dark One, Kali.
 8

1 Nor care I for men's comments, good or bad.
 2 Censure or praise I hold of no account.
 3 Servant am I, true servant of Thee Both,⁶⁶
 4 Low at Thy feet, with Shakti, I salute!
 5
 6 Thou standest steadfast, ever at my back,
 7 Hence when I turn me round, I see Thy face,
 8 Thy smiling face. Therefore I sing again
 9 And yet again. Therefore I fear no fear; 10 For birth and death lie prostrate at my feet.
 11
 12 Thy servant am I through birth after birth, 13 Sea of mercy, inscrutable Thy ways;
 14 So is my destiny inscrutable;
 15 It is unknown; nor would I wish to know.
 16 Bhakti, Mukti, Japa, Tapas, all these,
 17 Enjoyment, worship, and devotion too-- 18 These things and all things similar to these,
 19 I have expelled at Thy supreme command.
 20 But only one desire is left in me-- 21 An intimacy with Thee, mutual!
 22 Take me, O Lord across to Thee;
 23 Let no desire's dividing line prevent.
 24
 25 The eye looks out upon the universe,
 26 Nor does it seek to look upon itself;
 27 Why should it? It sees itself in others.
 28 Thou art my eyes! Thou and Thou alone;
 29 For every living temple shrines Thy face.
 30
 31 Like to the playing of a little child
 32 Is every attitude of mine toward Thee.
 33 Even, at times, I dare be angered with Thee;
 34 Even, at times, I'd wander far away:--
 35 Yet there, in greyest gloom of darkest night, 36 Yet there, with speechless mouth and tearful eyes,

⁶⁶ ?Purusha and Prakriti together.

1 Thou standest fronting me, and Thy sweet Face
 2 Stoops down with loving look on face of mine.
 3 Then, instantly, I turn me back to Thee,
 4 And at Thy feet I fall on bended knees.
 5 I crave no pardon at Thy gentle hands,
 6 For Thou art never angry with Thy son.
 7 Who else with all my foolish freaks would bear?
 8
 9 Thou art my Master! Thou my soul's real mate.
 10 Many a time I see Thee--I am Thee!
 11 Ay, I am Thee, and Thou, my Lord, art me!
 12 Thou art within my speech. Within my throat 13 Art Thou, as Vinapani,⁶⁷ learned, wise.
 14 On the flow of Thy current and its force
 15 Humanity is carried as Thou wilt.
 16 The thunder of Thy Voice is borne upon the boom
 17 Of crashing waves, of over-leaping seas;
 18 The sun and moon give utterance to Thy Voice;
 19 Thy conversation, in the gentle breeze
 20 Makes itself heard in truth, in very truth,
 21 True! True! And yet, the while, these gross precepts 22 Give not the message of the Higher Truth
 23 Known to the knower!
 24 Lo! The sun, the moon,
 25 The moving planets and the shining stars,
 26 Spheres of abode by myriads in the skies,
 27 The comet swift, the glimmering lightning-flash,
 28 The firmament, expanded, infinite--
 29 These all, observant watchful eyes behold.
 30
 31 Anger, desire, greed, Moha,⁶⁸ and the rest,⁶⁹
 32 Whence issues forth the waving of the play
 33 Of this existence; the home wherein dwells

1 ⁶⁷ ?Goddess of learning.

2
3 ⁶⁸ ?Delusion.

4
5 ⁶⁹ ?Such as pride and malice, the sixfold evil.

1 Knowledge, and non-knowledge--whose centre is 2 The feeling of small self, the "Aham!" "Aham!"
3 Full of the dual sense of pleasure and of pain,
4 Teeming with birth and life, decay and death, 5 Whose arms are "The External" and "The Internal", 6 All things that are, down to the ocean's depths,
7 Up to sun, moon, and stars in spanless space-- 8 The Mind, the Buddhi, Chitta, Ahamkar,
9 The Deva, Yaksha, man and demon, all,
10 The quadruped, the bird, the worm, all insect life, 11 The atom and its compound, all that is,
12 Animate and inanimate, all, all--
13 The Internal and the External--dwell
14 In that one common plane of existence!
15 This outward presentation is of order gross,
16 As hair on human brow, Ay! very gross.

18 On the spurs of the massive Mount Meru⁷⁰
19 The everlasting snowy ranges lie,
20 Extending miles and miles beyond more miles.
21 Piercing through clouds into the sky above
22 Its peaks thrust up in hundreds, glorious,
23 Brilliantly glistening, countless, snowy-white:
24 Flash upon flash of vivid lightning fleet,
25 The sun, high in his northern solstice hung,
26 With force of thousand rays concentrating,
27 Pours down upon the mountain floods of heat, 28 Furious as a billion thunderbolts,
29 From peak to peak.
30 Behold! The radiant sun
31 Swoons, as it were, in each. Then melts
32 The massive mountain with its crested peaks!
33 Down, down, it falls, with a horrific crash!
34 Water with water lies commingled now,
35 And all has passed like to a passing dream.

1 ⁷⁰ ?The name of a fabulous mountain round which the planets are said to 2 revolve.
3

 2 When all the many movements of the mind
 3 Are, by Thy grace, made one, and unified,
 4 The light of that unfoldment is so great 5 That, in its splendour, it surpasses far
 6 The brilliance of ten thousand rising suns.
 7 Then, sooth, the sun of Chit⁷¹ reveals itself.
 8 And melt away the sun and moon and stars,
 9 High heaven above, the nether worlds, and all!
 10 This universe seems but a tiny pool
 11 Held in a hollow caused by some cow's hoof.
 12 This is the reaching of the region which 13 Beyond the plane of the External lies.
 14 Calmed are the clamours of the urgent flesh,
 15 The tumult of the boastful mind is hushed,
 16 Cords of the heart are loosened and set free, 17 Unfastened are the bondages that bind,
 18 Attachment and delusion are no more!
 19 Ay! There sounds sonorous the Sound
 20 Void of vibration. Verily! Thy Voice!
 21 Hearing that Voice, Thy servant, reverently, 22 Stands ever ready to fulfil Thy work.
 23
 24 "I exist. When, at Pralaya time

 26 Knowledge, the knower and the known, dissolved;
 27 The world no more distinguishable, now,
 28 No more conceivable; when sun and moon
 29 And all the outspent stars, remain no more-- 30 Then is the state of Maha-Nirvana,
 31 When action, act, and actor, are no more,
 32 When instrumentality is no more;
 33 Great darkness veils the bosom of the dark--
 34 There I am present.

4 The universe no more
5 Can be distinguished or can be conceived
6 By intellect. The sun and moon and stars are not.
7 Over the bosom of the darkness, darkness moves
8 Intense. Devoid of all the threefold bonds,
9 Remains the universe. Gunas are calmed
10 Of all distinctions. Everything deluged
11 In one homogeneous mass, subtle,
12 Pure, of atom-form, indivisible--
13 There I am present.
14
15 "Once again, I unfold Myself--that 'I'; 16 Of My 'Shakti' the first great change is Om;
17 The Primal Voice rings through the void;
18 Infinite Space hears that great vibrant sound.
19 The group of Primal Causes shakes off sleep,
20 New life revives atoms interminable;
21 Cosmic existence heaves and whirls and sways,
22 Dances and gyrates, moves towards the core,
23 From distances immeasurably far.
24
25 The animate Wind arouses rings of Waves
26 Over the Ocean of great Elements;
27 Stirring, falling, surging, that vast range of Waves
28 Rushes with lightning fury. Fragments thrown 29 By force of royal resistance through the path
30 Of space, rush, endless, in the form of spheres
31 Celestial, numberless. Planets and stars
32 Speed swift; and man's abode, the earth revolves

1 I play with My own Maya, My Power Divine.
2 The One, I become the many, to behold
3 My own Form.
4
5 "At the Beginning, I, the Omniscient One,
6 I am! The moving and the un-moving;
7 All this Creation comes into being 8 By the unfoldment of My power supreme.
9 Perforce of My command, the wild storm blows
10 On the face of the earth; clouds clash and roar;
11 The flash of lightning startles and rebounds;
12 Softly and gently the Malaya breeze
13 Flows in and out like calm, unruffled breath;
14 The moon's rays pour their cooling current forth;
15 The earth's bare body in fair garb is clothed,
16 Of trees and creepers multitudinous;
17 And the flower abloom lifts her happy face,
18 Washed with drops of dew, towards the sun."

10 My Dear Fakir {Shri Yajneswar Bhattacharya},

11 . . . A word for you. Remember always, I may not see you 12 again. Be moral. Be brave. Be a heart-whole man. Strictly moral, 13 brave unto desperation. Don't bother your head with religious 14 theories. Cowards only sin, brave men never, no, not even in mind.
15 Try to love anybody and everybody. Be a man and try to make those 16 immediately under your care, namely Ram, Krishnamayi, and Indu, 17 brave, moral, and sympathising. No religion for you, my children, 18 but morality and bravery. No cowardice, no sin, no crime, no 19 weakness--the rest will come of itself. . . . And don't take Ram with 20 you ever or ever allow him to visit a theatre or any enervating entertainment whatever.

22 affectionately,

23 Vivekananda

27 My Dear Ram, Krishnamayi, and Indu,

28 Bear in mind, my children, that only cowards and those who 29 are weak commit sin and tell lies. The brave are always moral. Try 30 to be moral, try to be brave, try to be sympathising.

40 Dear Panditji Maharaj {Pandit Shankarlal of Khetri},

41 Your letter has reached me duly. I do not know why I should 42 be undeservingly praised. "None is good, save One, that is, God", as 43 the Lord Jesus hath said. The rest are only tools in His hands.
"Gloria in Excelsis", "Glory unto God in the highest", and unto men

1 that deserve, but not to such an undeserving one like me. Here "the 2 servant is not worthy of the hire"; and a Fakir, especially, has no 3 right to any praise whatsoever, for would you praise your servant
4 for simply doing his duty? . . . My unbounded gratitude to Pandit
5 Sundarlalji, and to my Professor⁷² for this kind remembrance of me.

6 Now I will tell you something else. The Hindu mind was ever 7 deductive and never synthetic or inductive. In all our philosophies, 8 we always find hair-splitting arguments, taking for granted some 9 general proposition, but the proposition itself may be as childish as 10 possible. Nobody ever asked or searched the truth of these general 11 propositions. Therefore independent thought we have almost none 12 to speak of, and hence the dearth of those sciences which are the 13 results of observation and generalisation. And why was it thus?-- 14 From two causes: The tremendous heat of the climate forcing us to 15 love rest and contemplation better than activity, and the Brahmins 16 as priests never undertaking journeys or voyages to distant lands.
17 There were voyagers and people who travelled far; but they were 18 almost always traders, i.e. people from whom priestcraft and their 19 own sole love for gain had taken away all capacity for intellectual 20 development. So their observations, instead of adding to the store 21 of human knowledge, rather degenerated it; for their observations 22 were bad and their accounts exaggerated and tortured into 23 fantastical shapes, until they passed all recognition.

24 So you see, we must travel, we must go to foreign parts. We 25 must see how the engine of society works in other countries, and 26 keep free and open communication with what is going on in the 27 minds of other nations, if we really want to be a nation again. And 28 over and above all, we must cease to tyrannise. To what a ludicrous 29 state are we brought! If a Bhangi comes to anybody as a Bhangi, he 30 would be shunned as the plague; but no sooner does he get a cupful 31 of water poured upon his head with some mutterings of prayers by 32 a Padri, and get a coat on his back, no matter how threadbare, and 33 come into the room of the most orthodox Hindu--I don't see the man 34 who then dare refuse him a chair and a hearty shake of the hands!
35 Irony can go no further. And come and see what they, the Padris, 36 are doing here in the Dakshin (south). They are converting the 37 lower classes by lakhs; and in Travancore, the most priest-ridden 38 country in India--where every bit of land is owned by the Brahmins .
39 . . . nearly one-fourth has become Christian! And I cannot blame 40 them; what part have they in David and what in Jesse? When, when, 41 O Lord, shall man be brother to man?

42 Yours,

43 Vivekananda

Yokohama
10th July,

1893

Dear Alasinga, Balaji, G.G., Banking Corporation, and all my Madras Friends,

Excuse my not keeping you constantly informed of my movements. One is so busy every day, and especially myself who am quite new to the life of possessing things and taking care of them. That consumes so much of my energy. It is really an awful botheration.

From Bombay we reached Colombo. Our steamer remained in port for nearly the whole day, and we took the opportunity of getting off to have a look at the town. We drove through the streets, and the only thing I remember was a temple in which was a very gigantic Murti (image) of the Lord Buddha in a reclining posture, entering Nirvana. . . .

The next station was Penang, which is only a strip of land along the sea in the body of the Malaya Peninsula. The Malayas are all Mohammedans and in old days were noted pirates and quite a dread to merchantmen. But now the leviathan guns of modern turreted battleships have forced the Malayas to look about for more peaceful pursuits. On our way from Penang to Singapore, we had glimpses of Sumatra with its high mountains, and the Captain pointed out to me several places as the favourite haunts of pirates in days gone by. Singapore is the capital of the Straits Settlements. It has a fine botanical garden with the most splendid collection of palms. The beautiful fan-like palm, called the traveller's palm, grows here in abundance, and the bread-fruit tree everywhere. The celebrated mangosteen is as plentiful here as mangoes in Madras, but mango is nonpareil. The people here are not half so dark as the people of Madras, although so near the line. Singapore possesses a fine museum too.

Hong Kong next. You feel that you have reached China, the Chinese element predominates so much. All labour, all trade seems to be in their hands. And Hong Kong is real China. As soon as the steamer casts anchor, you are besieged with hundreds of Chinese boats to carry you to the land. These boats with two helms are rather peculiar. The boatman lives in the boat with his family. Almost always, the wife is at the helms, managing one with her hands and the other with one of her feet. And in ninety per cent of cases, you find a baby tied to her back, with the hands and feet of the little Chin left free. It is a quaint sight to see the little John Chinaman dangling very quietly from his mother's back, whilst she is now setting with might and main, now pushing heavy loads, or jumping with wonderful agility from boat to boat. And there is such a rush of boats and steam-launches coming and going out. Baby John is every moment put into the risk of having his little head pulverised, pigtail and all; but he does not care a fig. This busy life seems to have no charm for him, and he is quite content to learn the anatomy of a bit of rice-cake given to him from time to time by the madly busy mother. The Chinese child is quite a philosopher and

1 calmly goes to work at an age when your Indian boy can hardly 2 crawl on all fours. He has learnt the philosophy of necessity too
3 well. Their extreme poverty is one of the causes why the Chinese 4 and the Indians have remained in a state of mummified civilisation.
5 To an ordinary Hindu or Chinese, everyday necessity is too hideous 6 to allow him to think of anything else.

7 Hong Kong is a very beautiful town. It is built on the slopes of 8 hills and on the tops too, which are much cooler than the city. There 9 is an almost perpendicular tramway going to the top of the hill, 10 dragged by wire-rope and steam-power.

11 We remained three days at Hong Kong and went to see 12 Canton, which is eighty miles up a river. The river is broad enough 13 to allow the biggest steamers to pass through. A number of Chinese 14 steamers ply between Hong Kong and Canton. We took passage on 15 one of these in the evening and reached Canton early in the 16 morning. What a scene of bustle and life! What an immense number 17 of boats almost covering the waters! And not only those that are 18 carrying on the trade, but hundreds of others which serve as 19 houses to live in. And quite a lot of them so nice and big! In fact, 20 they are big houses two or three storeys high, with verandahs
21 running round and streets between, and all floating!

22 We landed on a strip of ground given by the Chinese 23 Government to foreigners to live in. Around us on both sides of the 24 river for miles and miles is the big city--a wilderness of human 25 beings, pushing, struggling, surging, roaring. But with all its 26 population, all its activity, it is the dirtiest town I saw, not in the 27 sense in which a town is called dirty in India, for as to that not a 28 speck of filth is allowed by the Chinese to go waste; but because of 29 the Chinaman, who has, it seems, taken a vow never to bathe!
30 Every house is a shop, people living only on the top floor. The 31 streets are very very narrow, so that you almost touch the shops on 32 both sides as you pass. At every ten paces you find meat-stalls, and 33 there are shops which sell cat's and dog's meat. Of course, only the 34 poorest classes of Chinamen eat dog or cat.

35 The Chinese ladies can never be seen. They have got as strict 36 a zenana as the Hindus of Northern India; only the women of the 37 labouring classes can be seen. Even amongst these, one sees now 38 and then a woman with feet smaller than those of your youngest 39 child, and of course they cannot be said to walk, but hobble.

40 I went to see several Chinese temples. The biggest in Canton 41 is dedicated to the memory of the first Buddhistic Emperor and the 42 five hundred first disciples of Buddhism. The central figure is of 43 course Buddha, and next beneath Him is seated the Emperor, and 44 ranging on both sides are the statues of the disciples, all beautifully 45 carved out of wood.

46 From Canton I returned back to Hong Kong, and from thence 47 to Japan. The first port we touched was Nagasaki. We landed for a 48 few hours and drove through the town. What a contrast! The 49 Japanese are one of the cleanliest peoples on earth. Everything is 50 neat and tidy. Their streets are nearly all broad, straight, and 51 regularly paved. Their little houses are cage-like, and their pine-

1 covered evergreen little hills form the background of almost every 2 town and village. The short-statured, fair-skinned, quaintly-dressed 3 Japs, their movements, attitudes, gestures, everything is 4 picturesque. Japan is the land of the picturesque! Almost every 5 house has a garden at the back, very nicely laid out according to 6 Japanese fashion with small shrubs, grass-plots, small artificial 7 waters, and small stone bridges.

8 From Nagasaki to Kobe. Here I gave up the steamer and took 9 the land-route to Yokohama, with a view to see the interior of Japan.

10 I have seen three big cities in the interior--Osaka, a great 11 manufacturing town, Kyoto, the former capital, and Tokyo, the 12 present capital. Tokyo is nearly twice the size of Calcutta with 13 nearly double the population.

14 No foreigner is allowed to travel in the interior without a 15 passport.

16 The Japanese seem now to have fully awakened themselves to 17 the necessity of the present times. They have now a thoroughly 18 organised army equipped with guns which one of their own officers 19 has invented and which is said to be second to none. Then, they are 20 continually increasing their navy. I have seen a tunnel nearly a mile 21 long, bored by a Japanese engineer.

22 The match factories are simply a sight to see, and they are 23 bent upon making everything they want in their own country. There 24 is a Japanese line of steamers plying between China and Japan, 25 which shortly intends running between Bombay and Yokohama.

26 I saw quite a lot of temples. In every temple there are some 27 Sanskrit Mantras written in Old Bengali characters. Only a few of 28 the priests know Sanskrit. But they are an intelligent sect. The 29 modern rage for progress has penetrated even the priesthood. I 30 cannot write what I have in my mind about the Japs in one short 31 letter. Only I want that numbers of our young men should pay a visit 32 to Japan and China every year. Especially to the Japanese, India is 33 still the dreamland of everything high and good. And you, what are 34 you? . . . talking twaddle all your lives, vain talkers, what are you?
35 Come, see these people, and then go and hide your faces in shame.
36 A race of dotards, you lose your caste if you come out! Sitting down 37 these hundreds of years with an ever-increasing load of crystallised 38 superstition on your heads, for hundreds of years spending all your 39 energy upon discussing the touchableness or untouchableness of 40 this food or that, with all humanity crushed out of you by the 41 continuous social tyranny of ages--what are you? And what are you 42 doing now? . . . promenading the seashores with books in your 43 hands--repeating undigested stray bits of European brainwork, and 44 the whole soul bent upon getting a thirty-rupee clerkship, or at best 45 becoming a lawyer--the height of young India's ambition--and every 46 student with a whole brood of hungry children cackling at his heels
47 and asking for bread! Is there not water enough in the sea to drown 48 you, books, gowns, university diplomas, and all?

49 Come, be men! Kick out the priests who are always against 50 progress, because they would never mend, their hearts would never

1 become big. They are the offspring of centuries of superstition and 2 tyranny. Root out priestcraft first. Come, be men! Come out of your 3 narrow holes and have a look abroad. See how nations are on the 4 march! Do you love man? Do you love your country? Then come, let 5 us struggle for higher and better things; look not back, no, not even 6 if you see the dearest and nearest cry. Look not back, but forward!

7 India wants the sacrifice of at least a thousand of her young 8 men--men, mind, and not brutes. The English Government has been 9 the instrument, brought over here by the Lord, to break your 10 crystallised civilisation, and Madras supplied the first men who 11 helped in giving the English a footing. How many men, unselfish, 12 thorough-going men, is Madras ready now to supply, to struggle 13 unto life and death to bring about a new state of things--sympathy 14 for the poor, and bread to their hungry mouths, enlightenment to 15 the people at large--and struggle unto death to make men of them 16 who have been brought to the level of beasts, by the tyranny of your 17 forefathers?

18 Yours etc.,

19 Vivekananda

31 Dear Alasinga,

32 Received your letter yesterday. Perhaps you have by this time
33 got my letter from Japan. From Japan I reached Vancouver. The way 34 was by the Northern Pacific. It was very cold and I suffered much 35 for want of warm clothing. However, I reached Vancouver anyhow, 36 and thence went through Canada to Chicago. I remained about 37 twelve days in Chicago. And almost every day I used to go to the 38 Fair. It is a tremendous affair. One must take at least ten days to go 39 through it. The lady to whom Varada Rao introduced me and her 40 husband belong to the highest Chicago society, and they were so 41 very kind to me. I took my departure from Chicago and came to 42 Boston. Mr. Lalubhai was with me up to Boston. He was very kind to 43 me. . . .

44 The expense I am bound to run into here is awful. You 45 remember, you gave me £170 in notes and £9 in cash. It has come 46 down to £130 in all!! On an average it costs me £1 every day; a 47 cigar costs eight annas of our money. The Americans are so rich 48 that they spend money like water, and by forced legislation keep up

1 the price of everything so high that no other nation on earth can 2 approach it. Every common coolie earns nine or ten rupees a day
3 and spends as much. All those rosy ideas we had before starting 4 have melted, and I have now to fight against impossibilities. A 5 hundred times I had a mind to go out of the country and go back to 6 India. But I am determined, and I have a call from Above; I see no
7 way, but His eyes see. And I must stick to my guns, life or death. . . .

8 Just now I am living as the guest of an old lady in a village
9 near Boston. I accidentally made her acquaintance in the railway 10 train, and she invited me to come over and live with her. I have an 11 advantage in living with her, in saving for some time my 12 expenditure of £1 per day, and she has the advantage of inviting her 13 friends over here and showing them a curio from India! And all this 14 must be borne. Starvation, cold, hooting in the streets on account of 15 my quaint dress, these are what I have to fight against. But, my 16 dear boy, no great things were ever done without great labour.

17 . . . Know, then, that this is the land of Christians, and any 18 other influence than that is almost zero. Nor do I care a bit for the 19 enmity of any __ists in the world. I am here amongst the children of 20 the Son of Mary, and the Lord Jesus will help me. They like much 21 the broad views of Hinduism and my love for the Prophet of 22 Nazareth. I tell them that I preach nothing against the Great One of 23 Galilee. I only ask the Christians to take in the Great Ones of Ind 24 along with the Lord Jesus, and they appreciate it.

25 Winter is approaching and I shall have to get all sorts of 26 warm clothing, and we require more warm clothing than the 27 natives. . . . Look sharp, my boy, take courage. We are destined by 28 the Lord to do great things in India. Have faith. We will do. We, the 29 poor and the despised, who really feel, and not those. . . .

30 In Chicago, the other day, a funny thing happened. The Raja 31 of Kapurthala was here, and he was being lionised by some portion 32 of Chicago society. I once met the Raja in the Fair grounds, but he 33 was too big to speak with a poor Fakir. There was an eccentric 34 Mahratta Brahmin selling nail-made pictures in the Fair, dressed in 35 a dhoti. This fellow told the reporters all sorts of things against the 36 Raja--, that he was a man of low caste, that those Rajas were 37 nothing but slaves, and that they generally led immoral lives, etc., 38 etc. And these truthful (?) editors, for which America is famous, 39 wanted to give to the boy's stories some weight; and so the next day 40 they wrote huge columns in their papers about the description of a 41 man of wisdom from India, meaning me--extolling me to the skies, 42 and putting all sorts of words in my mouth, which I never even 43 dreamt of, and ascribing to me all those remarks made by the 44 Mahratta Brahmin about the Raja of Kapurthala. And it was such a 45 good brushing that Chicago society gave up the Raja in hot haste. . .
46 . These newspaper editors made capital out of me to give my 47 countryman a brushing. That shows, however, that in this country 48 intellect carries more weight than all the pomp of money and title.

49 Yesterday Mrs. Johnson, the lady superintendent of the 50 women's prison, was here. They don't call it prison but reformatory 51 here. It is the grandest thing I have seen in America. How the

1 inmates are benevolently treated, how they are reformed and sent 2 back as useful members of society; how grand, how beautiful, you 3 must see to believe! And, oh, how my heart ached to think of what 4 we think of the poor, the low, in India. They have no chance, no
5 escape, no way to climb up. The poor, the low, the sinner in India 6 have no friends, no help--they cannot rise, try however they may.
7 They sink lower and lower every day, they feel the blows showered 8 upon them by a cruel society, and they do not know whence the 9 blow comes. They have forgotten that they too are men. And the 10 result is slavery. Thoughtful people within the last few years have 11 seen it, but unfortunately laid it at the door of the Hindu religion, 12 and to them, the only way of bettering is by crushing this grandest 13 religion of the world. Hear me, my friend, I have discovered the 14 secret through the grace of the Lord. Religion is not in fault. On the 15 other hand, your religion teaches you that every being is only your 16 own self multiplied. But it was the want of practical application, the 17 want of sympathy--the want of heart. The Lord once more came to 18 you as Buddha and taught you how to feel, how to sympathise with 19 the poor, the miserable, the sinner, but you heard Him not. Your 20 priest invented the horrible story that the Lord was here for 21 deluding demons with false doctrines! True indeed, but we are the 22 demons, not those that believed. And just as the Jews denied the 23 Lord Jesus and are since that day wandering over the world as 24 homeless beggars, tyrannised over by everybody, so you are the 25 bond-slaves to any nation that thinks it worth while to rule over you.
26 Ah, tyrants! you do not know that the obverse is tyranny, and the 27 reverse slavery. The slave and the tyrant are synonymous.

28 Balaji and G. G. may remember one evening at the 29 Pondicherry--we were discussing the matter of sea-voyage with a 30 Pandit, and I shall always remember his brutal gestures and his 31 Kadapi Na (never)! They do not know that India is a very small part 32 of the world, and the whole world looks down with contempt upon 33 the three hundred millions of earthworms crawling upon the fair 34 soil of India and trying to oppress each other. This state of things 35 must be removed, not by destroying religion but by following the 36 great teachings of the Hindu faith, and joining with it the wonderful 37 sympathy of that logical development of Hinduism--Buddhism.

38 A hundred thousand men and women, fired with the zeal of 39 holiness, fortified with eternal faith in the Lord, and nerved to lion's 40 courage by their sympathy for the poor and the fallen and the 41 downtrodden, will go over the length and breadth of the land, 42 preaching the gospel of salvation, the gospel of help, the gospel of 43 social raising-up--the gospel of equality.

44 No religion on earth preaches the dignity of humanity in such 45 a lofty strain as Hinduism, and no religion on earth treads upon the 46 necks of the poor and the low in such a fashion as Hinduism. The 47 Lord has shown me that religion is not in fault, but it is the 48 Pharisees and Sadducees in Hinduism, hypocrites, who invent all 49 sorts of engines of tyranny in the shape of doctrines of 50 Paramarthika and Vyavaharika.

51 Despair not; remember the Lord says in the Gita, "To work 52 you have the right, but not to the result." Gird up your loins, my boy.

1 I am called by the Lord for this. I have been dragged through a 2 whole life full of crosses and tortures, I have seen the nearest and 3 dearest die, almost of starvation; I have been ridiculed, distrusted, 4 and have suffered for my sympathy for the very men who scoff and 5 scorn. Well, my boy, this is the school of misery, which is also the 6 school for great souls and prophets for the cultivation of sympathy, 7 of patience, and, above all, of an indomitable iron will which quakes 8 not even if the universe be pulverised at our feet. I pity them. It is 9 not their fault. They are children, yea, veritable children, though 10 they be great and high in society. Their eyes see nothing beyond 11 their little horizon of a few yards--the routine-work, eating, 12 drinking, earning, and begetting, following each other in 13 mathematical precision. They know nothing beyond--happy little 14 souls! Their sleep is never disturbed, their nice little brown studies 15 of lives never rudely shocked by the wail of woe, of misery, of 16 degradation, and poverty, that has filled the Indian atmosphere--the 17 result of centuries of oppression. They little dream of the ages of 18 tyranny, mental, moral, and physical, that has reduced the image of 19 God to a mere beast of burden; the emblem of the Divine Mother, to 20 a slave to bear children; and life itself, a curse. But there are others 21 who see, feel, and shed tears of blood in their hearts, who think 22 that there is a remedy for it, and who are ready to apply this 23 remedy at any cost, even to the giving up of life. And "of such is the 24 kingdom of Heaven". Is it not then natural, my friends, that they 25 have no time to look down from their heights to the vagaries of 26 these contemptible little insects, ready every moment to spit their 27 little venoms?

28 Trust not to the so-called rich, they are more dead than alive.
29 The hope lies in you--in the meek, the lowly, but the faithful. Have 30 faith in the Lord; no policy, it is nothing. Feel for the miserable and 31 look up for help--it shall come. I have travelled twelve years with 32 this load in my heart and this idea in my head. I have gone from 33 door to door of the so-called rich and great. With a bleeding heart I 34 have crossed half the world to this strange land, seeking for help.
35 The Lord is great. I know He will help me. I may perish of cold or 36 hunger in this land, but I bequeath to you, young men, this 37 sympathy, this struggle for the poor, the ignorant, the oppressed.
38 Go now this minute to the temple of Parthasarathi,⁷³ and before 39 Him who was friend to the poor and lowly cowherds of Gokula, who 40 never shrank to embrace the Pariah Guhaka, who accepted the 41 invitation of a prostitute in preference to that of nobles and saved
42 her in His incarnation as Buddha--yea, down on your faces before 43 Him, and make a great sacrifice, the sacrifice of a whole life for 44 them, for whom He comes from time to time, whom He loves above 45 all, the poor, the lowly, the oppressed. Vow, then, to devote your 46 whole lives to the cause of the redemption of these three hundred 47 millions, going down and down every day.

48 It is not the work of a day, and the path is full of the most 49 deadly thorns. But Parthasarathi is ready to be our Sarathi--we 50 know that. And in His name and with eternal faith in Him, set fire to 1 ⁷³ ?Shri Krishna as Sarathi, charioteer, of Partha or Arjuna.

2

1 the mountain of misery that has been heaped upon India for ages-- 2 and it shall be burned down. Come then, look it in the face, 3 brethren, it is a grand task, and we are so low. But we are the sons
4 of Light and children of God. Glory unto the Lord, we will succeed.
5 Hundreds will fall in the struggle, hundreds will be ready to take it
6 up. I may die here unsuccessful, another will take up the task. You 7 know the disease, you know the remedy, only have faith. Do not look 8 up to the so-called rich and great; do not care for the heartless 9 intellectual writers, and their cold-blooded newspaper articles.
10 Faith, sympathy--fiery faith and fiery sympathy! Life is nothing, 11 death is nothing, hunger nothing, cold nothing. Glory unto the 12 Lord--march on, the Lord is our General. Do not look back to see 13 who falls--forward--onward! Thus and thus we shall go on, brethren.
14 One falls, and another takes up the work.

15 From this village I am going to Boston tomorrow. I am going 16 to speak at a big Ladies' Club here, which is helping Ramabai. I 17 must first go and buy some clothing in Boston. If I am to live longer 18 here, my quaint dress will not do. People gather by hundreds in the 19 streets to see me. So what I want is to dress myself in a long black 20 coat, and keep a red robe and turban to wear when I lecture. This is 21 what the ladies advise me to do, and they are the rulers here, and I 22 must have their sympathy. Before you get this letter my money
23 would come down to somewhat about £70 or £60. So try your best 24 to send some money. It is necessary to remain here for some time to 25 have any influence here. I could not see the phonograph for Mr.
26 Bhattacharya as I got his letter here. If I go to Chicago again, I will 27 look for them. I do not know whether I shall go back to Chicago or 28 not. My friends there write me to represent India. And the 29 gentleman, to whom Varada Rao introduced me, is one of the 30 directors of the Fair; but then I refused as I would have to spend all 31 my little stock of money in remaining more than a month in 32 Chicago.

33 In America, there are no classes in the railway except in 34 Canada. So I have to travel first-class, as that is the only class; but I 35 do not venture in the Pullmans. They are very comfortable--you 36 sleep, eat, drink, even bathe in them, just as if you were in a hotel-- 37 but they are too expensive.

38 It is very hard work getting into society and making yourself
39 heard. Now nobody is in the towns, they are all away in summer 40 places. They will all come back in winter. Therefore I must wait.
41 After such a struggle, I am not going to give up easily. Only try your 42 best to help me as much as you can; and even if you cannot, I must 43 try to the end. And even if I die of cold or disease or hunger here, 44 you take up the task. Holiness, sincerity, and faith. I have left 45 instructions with Cooks to forward any letter or money to me
46 wherever I am. Rome was not built in a day. If you can keep me 47 here for six months at least, I hope everything will come right. In 48 the meantime I am trying my best to find any plank I can float upon.
49 And if I find out any means to support myself, I shall wire to you 50 immediately.

51 First I will try in America; and if I fail, try in England; if I fail, 52 go back to India and wait for further commands from High.

1 Ramdas's father has gone to England. He is in a hurry to go home.
2 He is a very good man at heart, only the Baniya roughness on the 3 surface. It would take more than twenty days for the letter to reach.
4 Even now it is so cold in New England that every day we have fires 5 night and morning. Canada is still colder. I never saw snow on such 6 low hills as there.

7 Gradually I can make my way; but that means a longer 8 residence in this horribly expensive country. Just now the raising of 9 the Rupee in India has created a panic in this country, and lots of 10 mills have been stopped. So I cannot hope for anything just now, 11 but I must wait.

12 Just now I have been to the tailor and ordered some winter
13 clothings, and that would cost at least Rs. 300 and up. And still it 14 would not be good clothes, only decent. Ladies here are very 15 particular about a man's dress, and they are the power in this 16 country. They . . . never fail the missionaries. They are helping our 17 Ramabai every year. If you fail in keeping me here, send some 18 money to get me out of the country. In the meantime if anything 19 turns out in my favour, I will write or wire. A word costs Rs.4 in 20 cable!!

21 Yours,
22 Vivekananda

28 November, 1893

29 Dear Alasinga,

30 I am so sorry that a moment's weakness on my part should 31 cause you so much trouble; I was out of pocket at that time. Since 32 then the Lord sent me friends. At a village near Boston I made the 33 acquaintance of Dr. Wright, Professor of Greek in the Harvard 34 University. He sympathised with me very much and urged upon me 35 the necessity of going to the Parliament of Religions, which he 36 thought would give me an introduction to the nation. As I was not 37 acquainted with anybody, the Professor undertook to arrange 38 everything for me, and eventually I came back to Chicago. Here I, 39 together with the oriental and occidental delegates to the 40 Parliament of Religions, were all lodged in the house of a 41 gentleman.

42 On the morning of the opening of the Parliament, we all 43 assembled in a building called the Art Palace, where one huge and 44 other smaller temporary halls were erected for the sittings of the 45 Parliament. Men from all nations were there. From India were 46 Mazoomdar of the Brahmo Samaj, and Nagarkar of Bombay, Mr.
47 Gandhi representing the Jains, and Mr. Chakravarti representing 48 Theosophy with Mrs. Annie Besant. Of these, Mazoomdar and I

1 were, of course, old friends, and Chakravarti knew me by name.
2 There was a grand procession, and we were all marshalled on to 3 the platform. Imagine a hall below and a huge gallery above, 4 packed with six or seven thousand men and women representing 5 the best culture of the country, and on the platform learned men of 6 all the nations of the earth. And I, who never spoke in public in my 7 life, to address this august assemblage!! It was opened in great 8 form with music and ceremony and speeches; then the delegates 9 were introduced one by one, and they stepped up and spoke. Of 10 course my heart was fluttering, and my tongue nearly dried up; I 11 was so nervous and could not venture to speak in the morning.
12 Mazoomdar made a nice speech, Chakravarti a nicer one, and they 13 were much applauded. They were all prepared and came with 14 ready-made speeches. I was a fool and had none, but bowed down
15 to Devi Sarasvati and stepped up, and Dr. Barrows introduced me. I 16 made a short speech. I addressed the assembly as "Sisters and 17 Brothers of America", a deafening applause of two minutes 18 followed, and then I proceeded; and when it was finished, I sat
19 down, almost exhausted with emotion. The next day all the papers 20 announced that my speech was the hit of the day, and I became 21 known to the whole of America. Truly has it been said by the great 22 commentator Shridhara--"{Sanskrit}--Who maketh the dumb a 23 fluent speaker." His name be praised! From that day I became a 24 celebrity, and the day I read my paper of Hinduism, the hall was 25 packed as it had never been before. I quote to you from one of the 26 papers: "Ladies, ladies, ladies packing every place--filling every 27 corner, they patiently waited and waited while the papers that 28 separated them from Vivekananda were read", etc. You would be 29 astonished if I sent over to you the newspaper cuttings, but you 30 already know that I am a hater of celebrity. Suffice it to say, that 31 whenever I went on the platform, a deafening applause would be 32 raised for me. Nearly all the papers paid high tributes to me, and 33 even the most bigoted had to admit that "This man with his 34 handsome face and magnetic presence and wonderful oratory is the 35 most prominent figure in the Parliament", etc., etc. Sufficient for 36 you to know that never before did an Oriental make such an 37 impression on American society.

38 And how to speak of their kindness? I have no more wants 39 now, I am well off, and all the money that I require to visit Europe I 40 shall get from here. . . . A boy called Narasimhacharya has cropped 41 up in our midst. He has been loafing about the city for the last three 42 years. Loafing or no loafing, I like him; but please write to me all 43 about him if you know anything. He knows you. He came in the year 44 of the Paris Exhibition to Europe. . . .

45 I am now out of want. Many of the handsomest houses in this 46 city are open to me. All the time I am living as a guest of somebody 47 or other. There is a curiosity in this nation, such as you meet with 48 nowhere else. They want to know everything, and their women-- 49 they are the most advanced in the world. The average American 50 woman is far more cultivated than the average American man. The 51 men slave all their life for money, and the women snatch every 52 opportunity to improve themselves. And they are a very kind-

1 hearted, frank people. Everybody who has a fad to preach comes 2 here, and I am sorry to say that most of these are not sound. The 3 Americans have their faults too, and what nation has not? But this 4 is my summing up: Asia laid the germs of civilisation, Europe 5 developed man, and America is developing the woman and the 6 masses. It is the paradise of the woman and the labourer. Now 7 contrast the American masses and women with ours, and you get 8 the idea at once. The Americans are fast becoming liberal. Judge 9 them not by specimens of hard-shelled Christians (it is their own 10 phrase) that you see in India. There are those here too, but their 11 number is decreasing rapidly, and this great nation is progressing 12 fast towards that spirituality which is the standard boast of the 13 Hindu.

14 The Hindu must not give up his religion, but must keep 15 religion within its proper limits and give freedom to society to grow.
16 All the reformers in India made the serious mistake of holding 17 religion accountable for all the horrors of priestcraft and 18 degeneration and went forthwith to pull down the indestructible 19 structure, and what was the result? Failure! Beginning from 20 Buddha down to Ram Mohan Roy, everyone made the mistake of 21 holding caste to be a religious institution and tried to pull down 22 religion and caste all together, and failed. But in spite of all the 23 ravings of the priests, caste is simply a crystallised social 24 institution, which after doing its service is now filling the 25 atmosphere of India with its stench, and it can only be removed by 26 giving back to the people their lost social individuality. Every man 27 born here knows that he is a man. Every man born in India knows 28 that he is a slave of society. Now, freedom is the only condition of 29 growth; take that off, the result is degeneration. With the 30 introduction of modern competition, see how caste is disappearing
31 fast! No religion is now necessary to kill it. The Brahmana 32 shopkeeper, shoemaker, and wine-distiller are common in Northern 33 India. And why? Because of competition. No man is prohibited from 34 doing anything he pleases for his livelihood under the present 35 Government, and the result is neck and neck competition, and thus 36 thousands are seeking and finding the highest level they were born 37 for, instead of vegetating at the bottom.

38 I must remain in this country at least through the winter, and 39 then go to Europe. The Lord will provide everything for me. You 40 need not disturb yourself about it. I cannot express my gratitude for 41 your love.

42 Day by day I am feeling that the Lord is with me, and I am 43 trying to follow His direction. His will be done. . . . We will do great 44 things for the world, and that for the sake of doing good and not for 45 name and fame.

46 "Ours not to reason why, ours but to do and die." Be of good 47 cheer and believe that we are selected by the Lord to do great 48 things, and we will do them. Hold yourself in readiness, i.e. be pure 49 and holy, and love for love's sake. Love the poor, the miserable, the 50 down-trodden, and the Lord will bless you.

51 See the Raja of Ramnad and others from time to time and

1 urge them to sympathise with the masses of India. Tell them how 2 they are standing on the neck of the poor, and that they are not fit 3 to be called men if they do not try to raise them up. Be fearless, the 4 Lord is with you, and He will yet raise the starving and ignorant 5 millions of India. A railway porter here is better educated than 6 many of your young men and most of your princes. Every American 7 woman has far better education than can be conceived of by the 8 majority of Hindu women. Why cannot we have the same 9 education? We must.

10 Think not that you are poor; money is not power, but 11 goodness, holiness. Come and see how it is so all over the world.

12 Yours with
13 blessings,

14 Vivekananda

15 PS. By the bye, your uncle's paper was the most curious 16 phenomenon I ever saw. It was like a tradesman's catalogue, and it 17 was not thought fit to be read in the Parliament. So 18 Narasimhacharya read a few extracts from it in a side hall, and 19 nobody understood a word of it. Do not tell him of it. It is a great art 20 to press the largest amount of thought into the smallest number of 21 words. Even Manilal Dvivedi's paper had to be cut very short. More 22 than a thousand papers were read, and there was no time to give to 23 such wild perorations. I had a good long time given to me over the 24 ordinary half hour, . . . because the most popular speakers were 25 always put down last, to hold the audience. And Lord bless them, 26 what sympathy they have, and what patience! They would sit from 27 ten o'clock in the morning to ten o'clock at night-only a recess of 28 half an hour for a meal, and paper after paper read, most of them 29 very trivial, but they would wait and wait to hear their favourites.

30 Dharmapala of Ceylon was one of the favourites. But 31 unfortunately he was not a good speaker. He had only quotations 32 from Max Muller and Rhys Davids to give them. He is a very sweet 33 man, and we became very intimate during the Parliament.

34 A Christian lady from Poona, Miss Sorabji, and the Jain 35 representative, Mr. Gandhi, are going to remain longer in the 36 country and make lecture tours. I hope they will succeed. Lecturing 37 is a very profitable occupation in this country and sometimes pays 38 well.

39 Mr. Ingersoll gets five to six hundred dollars a lecture. He is 40 the most celebrated lecturer in this country. Do not publish this 41 letter. After reading, send it to the Maharaja (of Khetri). I have sent 42 him my photograph in America. V.

{original in Bengali}

Dear Haripada {Mitra},

It is very strange that news of my Chicago lectures has appeared in the Indian papers; for whatever I do, I try my best to avoid publicity. Many things strike me here. It may be fairly said that there is no poverty in this country. I have never seen women elsewhere as cultured and educated as they are here. Well-educated men there are in our country, but you will scarcely find anywhere women like those here. It is indeed true, that "the Goddess Herself lives in the houses of virtuous men as Lakshmi". I have seen thousands of women here whose hearts are as pure and stainless as snow. Oh, how free they are! It is they who control social and civic duties. Schools and colleges are full of women, and in our country women cannot be safely allowed to walk in the streets! Their kindness to me is immeasurable. Since I came here, I have been welcomed by them to their houses. They are providing me with food, arranging for my lectures, taking me to market, and doing everything for my comfort and convenience. I shall never be able to repay in the least the deep debt of gratitude I owe to them.

Do you know who is the real "Shakti-worshipper"? It is he who knows that God is the omnipresent force in the universe and sees in women the manifestation of that Force. Many men here look upon their women in this light. Manu, again, has said that gods bless those families where women are happy and well treated. Here men treat their women as well as can be desired, and hence they are so prosperous, so learned, so free, and so energetic. But why is it that we are slavish, miserable, and dead? The answer is obvious.

And how pure and chaste are they here! Few women are married before twenty or twenty-five, and they are as free as the birds in the air. They go to market, school, and college, earn money, and do all kinds of work. Those who are well-to-do devote themselves to doing good to the poor. And what are we doing? We are very regular in marrying our girls at eleven years of age lest they should become corrupt and immoral. What does our Manu enjoin? "Daughters should be supported and educated with as much care and attention as the sons." As sons should be married after observing Brahmacharya up to the thirtieth year, so daughters also must observe Brahmacharya and be educated by their parents. But what are we actually doing? Can you better the condition of your women? Then there will be hope for your well-being. Otherwise you will remain as backward as you are now.

If anybody is born of a low caste in our country, he is gone for ever, there is no hope for him. Why? What a tyranny it is! There are possibilities, opportunities, and hope for every individual in this country. Today he is poor, tomorrow he may become rich and learned and respected. Here everyone is anxious to help the poor. In India there is a howling cry that we are very poor, but how many charitable associations are there for the well-being of the poor? How many people really weep for the sorrows and sufferings of the 1 millions of poor in India? Are we men ? What are we doing for their 2 livelihood, for their improvement? We do not touch them, we avoid 3 their company! Are we men? Those thousands of Brahmanas--what 4 are they doing for the low, down-trodden masses of India? "Don't 5 touch", "Don't touch", is the only phrase that plays upon their lips!

6 How mean and degraded has our eternal religion become at their 7 hands! Wherein does our religion lie now? In "Don't-touchism" 8 alone, and nowhere else!

9 I came to this country not to satisfy my curiosity, nor for name 10 or fame, but to see if I could find any means for the support of the 11 poor in India. If God helps me, you will know gradually what those 12 means are.

13 As regards spirituality, the Americans are far inferior to us, 14 but their society is far superior to ours. We will teach them our 15 spirituality and assimilate what is best in their society.

16 With love and best wishes,

17 Yours,

18 Vivekananda

26 24th January, 1894

27 Dear Friends {his disciples in Madras},

28 Your letters have reached me. I am surprised that so much 29 about me has reached you. The criticism you mention of the Interior 30 is not to be taken as the attitude of the American people. That 31 paper is almost unknown here, and belongs to what they call a 32 "blue-nose Presbyterian paper", very bigoted. Still all the "blue-33 noses" are not ungentlemanly. The American people, and many of 34 the clergy, are very hospitable to me. That paper wanted a little 35 notoriety by attacking a man who was being lionised by society.
36 That trick is well known here, and they do not think anything of it.
37 Of course, our Indian missionaries may try to make capital out of it.
38 If they do, tell them, "Mark, Jew, a judgment has come upon you!"
39 Their old building is tottering to its foundation and must come down 40 in spite of their hysterical shrieks. I pity them--if their means of 41 living fine lives in India is cut down by the influx of oriental 42 religions here. But not one of their leading clergy is ever against 43 me. Well, when I am in the pond, I must bathe thoroughly.

44 I sent you a newspaper cutting of the short sketch of our 45 religion which I read before them. Most of my speeches are 46 extempore. I hope to put them in book form before I leave the 47 country. I do not require any help from India, I have plenty here.

Employ the money you have in printing and publishing this short speech; and translating it into the vernaculars, throw it broadcast; that will keep us before the national mind. In the meantime do not forget our plan of a central college, and the starting from it to all directions in India. Work hard. . . .

About the women of America, I cannot express my gratitude for their kindness. Lord bless them. In this country, women are the life of every movement, and represent all the culture of the nation, for men are too busy to educate themselves.

I have received Kidi's letters. With the question whether caste shall go or come I have nothing to do. My idea is to bring to the door of the meanest, the poorest, the noble ideas that the human race has developed both in and out of India, and let them think for themselves. Whether there should be caste or not, whether women should be perfectly free or not, does not concern me. "Liberty of thought and action is the only condition of life, of growth and well-being." Where it does not exist, the man, the race, the nation must go down.

Caste or no caste, creed or no creed, any man, or class, or caste, or nation, or institution which bars the power of free thought and action of an individual---even so long as that power does not injure others---is devilish and must go down.

My whole ambition in life is to set in motion a machinery which will bring noble ideas to the door of everybody, and then let men and women settle their own fate. Let them know what our forefathers as well as other nations have thought on the most momentous questions of life. Let them see specially what others are doing now, and then decide. We are to put the chemicals together, the crystallisation will be done by nature according to her laws. Work hard, be steady, and have faith in the Lord. Set to work, I am coming sooner or later. Keep the motto before you---"Elevation of the masses without injuring their religion".

Remember that the nation lives in the cottage. But, alas! nobody ever did anything for them. Our modern reformers are very busy about widow remarriage. Of course, I am a sympathiser in every reform, but the fate of a nation does not depend upon the number of husbands their widows get, but upon the condition of the masses. Can you raise them? Can you give them back their lost individuality without making them lose their innate spiritual nature? Can you become an occidental of occidentals in your spirit of equality, freedom, work, and energy, and at the same time a Hindu to the very backbone in religious culture and instincts? This is to be done and we will do it. You are all born to do it. Have faith in yourselves, great convictions are the mothers of great deeds. Onward for ever! Sympathy for the poor, the downtrodden, even unto death--this is our motto.

Onward, brave lads!

Yours

affectionately.

Vivekananda

1 P.S. Do not publish this letter; but there is no harm in 2 preaching the idea of elevating the masses by means of a central 3 college, and bringing education as well as religion to the door of the 4 poor by means of missionaries trained in this college. Try to interest 5 everybody.

6 I send you a few newspaper cuttings--only from the very best 7 and highest. The one by Dr. Thomas is very valuable as written by 8 one of the, if not the leading clergymen of America. The Interior 9 with all its fanaticism and thirst for notoriety was bound to say that 10 I was the public favourite. I cut a few lines from that magazine also.

18 Dear Alasinga,

19 I got your last letter a few days ago. You see I am so very 20 busy here, and have to write so many letters every day, that you 21 cannot expect frequent communications from me. But I try my best 22 to keep you in touch with whatever is going on here. I will write to 23 Chicago for one of the books on the Parliament of Religions to be 24 sent over to you. But by this time you have got two of my short 25 speeches.

26 Secretary Sahab writes me that I must come back to India, 27 because that is my field. No doubt of that. But my brother, we are to 28 light a torch which will shed a lustre over all India. So let us not be 29 in a hurry; everything will come by the grace of the Lord. I have 30 lectured in many of the big towns of America, and have got enough 31 to pay my passage back after paying the awful expenses here. I 32 have made a good many friends here, some of them very influential.
33 Of course, the orthodox clergymen are against me; and seeing that 34 it is not easy to grapple with me, they try to hinder, abuse, and vilify 35 me in every way; and Mazoomdar has come to their help. He must 36 have gone mad with jealousy. He has told them that I was a big 37 fraud, and a rogue! And again in Calcutta he is telling them that I 38 am leading a most sinful life in America, specially unchaste! Lord 39 bless him! My brother, no good thing can be done without 40 obstruction. It is only those who persevere to the end that 41 succeed. . . . I believe that the Satya Yuga (Golden Age) will come 42 when there will be one caste, one Veda, and peace and harmony.
43 This idea of Satya Yuga is what would revivify India. Believe it. One 44 thing is to be done if you can do it. Can you convene a big meeting 45 in Madras, getting Ramnad or any such big fellow as the President, 46 and pass a resolution of your entire satisfaction at my 47 representation of Hinduism here, and send it to the Chicago
48 Herald, Inter-Ocean, and the New York Sun, and the Commercial 49 Advertiser of Detroit (Michigan). Chicago is in Illinois. New York

1 Sun requires no particulars. Detroit is in the State of Michigan.
2 Send copies to Dr. Barrows, Chairman of the Parliament of 3 Religions, Chicago. I have forgotten his number, but the street is 4 Indiana Avenue. One copy to Mrs. J. J. Bagley of Detroit, Washington 5 Ave.

6 Try to make this meeting as big as possible. Get hold of all 7 the big bugs who must join it for their religion and country. Try to 8 get a letter from the Mysore Maharaja and the Dewan approving 9 the meeting and its purpose--so of Khetri--in fact, as big and noisy a 10 crowd as you can.

11 The resolution would be of such a nature that the Hindu 12 community of Madras, who sent me over, expressing its entire 13 satisfaction in my work here etc.

14 Now try if it is possible. This is not much work. Get also 15 letters of sympathy from all parts you can and print them and send 16 copies to the American papers--as quickly as you can. That will go a 17 long way, my brethren. The B-S- fellows here are trying to talk all 18 sorts of nonsense. We must stop their mouths as fast as we can.

19 Up boys, and put yourselves to the task! If you can do that, I 20 am sure we will be able to do much in future. Old Hinduism for 21 ever! Down with all liars and rogues! Up, up, my boys, we are sure 22 to win!

23 As to publishing my letters, such parts as ought to be 24 published may be published for our friends till I come. When once 25 we begin to work, we shall have a tremendous "boom", but I do not 26 want to talk without working. I do not know, but G. C. Ghosh and 27 Mr. Mitra of Calcutta can get up all the sympathisers of my late 28 Gurudeva to do the same in Calcutta. If they can, so much the 29 better. Ask them, if they can, to pass the same resolutions in 30 Calcutta. There are thousands in Calcutta who sympathise with our 31 movement. However I have more faith in you than in them.

32 Nothing more to write.

33 Convey my greetings to all our friends--for whom I am always 34 praying.

36 blessings,

44 My Dear Sharat {Saradananda},

45 I am in receipt of your letter and am glad to learn that Shashi 46 (Ramakrishnananda) is all right. Now I tell you a curious fact.
47 Whenever anyone of you is sick, let him himself or anyone of you

1 visualise him in your mind, and mentally say and strongly imagine 2 that he is all right. That will cure him quickly. You can do it even 3 without his knowledge, and even with thousands of miles between 4 you. Remember it and do not be ill any more. You have received the 5 money by this time. If you all like, you can give to Gopal Rs. 300--
6 from the amount I sent for the Math. I have no more to send now. I 7 have to look after Madras now.

8 I cannot understand why Sanyal is so miserable on account of 9 his daughters' marriage. After all, he is going to drag his daughters 10 through the dirty Samsara (world) which he himself wants to 11 escape! I can have but one opinion of that--condemnation! I hate 12 the very name of marriage, in regard to a boy or a girl. Do you 13 mean to say that I have to help in putting someone into bondage, 14 you fool! If my brother Mohin marries, I will throw him off. I am 15 very decided about that. . . .

16 Yours in love,

24 Dear Alasinga,

25 I could not reply to your note earlier, because I was whirling 26 to and fro from New York to Boston, and also I awaited Narasimha's 27 letter. I do not know when I am going back to India. It is better to 28 leave everything in the hands of Him who is at my back directing 29 me. Try to work without me, as if I never existed. Do not wait for 30 anybody or anything. Do whatever you can. Build your hope on 31 none. Before writing about myself, I will tell you about Narasimha.
32 He has proved a complete failure. . . . However he wrote to me for 33 help in the last stage, and I will try to help him as much as is in my 34 power. Meanwhile you tell his people to send money as soon as they 35 can for him to go over. . . . He is in distress. Of course I will see that 36 he does not starve.

37 I have done a good deal of lecturing here. . . . The expenses 38 here are terrible; money has to fly, although I have been almost 39 always taken care of everywhere by the nicest and the highest 40 families.

41 I do not know whether I shall go away this summer or not.
42 Most probably not. In the meantime try to organise and push on our 43 plans. Believe you can do everything. Know that the Lord is with us, 44 and so, onward, brave souls!

45 I have had enough appreciation in my own country.
46 Appreciation or no appreciation, sleep not, slacken not. You must 47 remember that not a bit even of our plans has been as yet carried 48 out.

1 Act on the educated young men, bring them together, and 2 organise them. Great things can be done by great sacrifices only.
3 No selfishness, no name, no fame, yours or mine, nor my Master's 4 even! Work, work the idea, the plan, my boys, my brave, noble, 5 good souls--to the wheel, to the wheel put your shoulders! Stop not 6 to look back for name, or fame, or any such nonsense. Throw self 7 overboard and work. Remember, "The grass when made into a rope 8 by being joined together can even chain a mad elephant." The 9 Lord's blessings on you all! His power be in you all--as I believe it is 10 already. "Wake up, stop not until the goal is reached", say the 11 Vedas. Up, up, the long night is passing, the day is approaching, the 12 wave has risen, nothing will be able to resist its tidal fury. The 13 spirit, my boys, the spirit; the love, my children, the love; the faith, 14 the belief; and fear not! The greatest sin is fear.

15 My blessings on all. Tell all the noble souls in Madras who 16 have helped our cause that I send them my eternal love and 17 gratitude, but I beg of them not to slacken. Throw the idea 18 broadcast. Do not be proud; do not insist upon anything dogmatic; 19 do not go against anything--ours is to put chemicals together, the 20 Lord knows how and when the crystal will form. Above all, be not 21 inflated with my success or yours. Great works are to be done; what 22 is this small success in comparison with what is to come? Believe, 23 believe, the decree has gone forth, the fiat of the Lord has gone
24 forth--India must rise, the masses and the poor are to be made 25 happy. Rejoice that you are the chosen instruments in His hands.
26 The flood of spirituality has risen. I see it is rolling over the land 27 resistless, boundless, all-absorbing. Every man to the fore, every 28 good will be added to its forces, every hand will smooth its way, and 29 glory be unto the Lord! . . .

30 I do not require any help. Try to get up a fund, buy some 31 magic lanterns, maps, globes, etc., and some chemicals. Get every 32 evening a crowd of the poor and low, even the Pariahs, and lecture 33 to them about religion first, and then teach them through the magic 34 lantern and other things, astronomy, geography, etc., in the dialect 35 of the people. Train up a band of fiery young men. Put your fire in 36 them and gradually increase the organisation, letting it widen and 37 widen its circle. Do the best you can, do not wait to cross the river 38 when the water has all run down. Printing magazines, papers, etc., 39 are good, no doubt, but actual work, my boys even if infinitesimal, is 40 better than eternal scribbling and talking. Call a meeting at 41 Bhattacharya's. Get a little money and buy those things I have just 42 now stated, hire a hut, and go to work. Magazines are secondary, 43 but this is primary. You must have a hold on the masses. Do not be 44 afraid of a small beginning, great things come afterwards. Be 45 courageous. Do not try to lead your brethren, but serve them. The 46 brutal mania for leading has sunk many a great ship in the waters 47 of life. Take care especially of that, i.e. be unselfish even unto 48 death, and work. I could not write all I was going to say, but the 49 Lord will give you all understanding, my brave boys. At it, my boys!
50 Glory unto the Lord! . . .

52 affectionately,

XI

11th July,

1894

Dear Alasinga,

You must never write to me anywhere else but 541 Dearborn Ave., Chicago. Your last letter has travelled the whole country to come to me, and this was only because I am so well known. Some of the resolutions are to be sent to Dr. Barrows with a letter thanking him for his kindness to me and asking him to publish the letter in some American newspapers--as that would be the best refutation of the false charges of the missionaries that I do not represent anybody. Learn business, my boy. We will do great things yet! Last year I only sowed the seeds; this year I mean to reap. In the meanwhile, keep up as much enthusiasm as possible in India. Let Kidi go his own way. He will come out all right in time. I have taken his responsibility. He has a perfect right to his own opinion. Make him write for the paper; that will keep him in good temper! My blessings on him.

Start the journal and I will send you articles from time to time. You must send a paper and a letter to Professor J.H. Wright of Harvard University, Boston, thanking him as having been the first man who stood as my friend and asking him to publish it in the papers, thus giving the lie to the missionaries.

In the Detroit lecture I got $900, i.e. Rs. 2,700. In other lectures, I earned in one, $2,500, i.e. Rs. 7,500 in one hour, but got only 200 dollars! I was cheated by a roguish Lecture Bureau. I have given them up. I spent a good deal here; only about $3,000 remains.

I shall have to print much matter next year. I am going regularly to work. . . . The sheer power of the will will do everything. . . . You must organise a society which should regularly meet, and write to me about it as often as you can. In fact, get up as much enthusiasm as you can. Only, beware of falsehood. Go to work, my boys, the fire will come to you! The faculty of organisation is entirely absent in our nature, but this has to be infused. The great secret is--absence of jealousy. Be always ready to concede to the opinions of your brethren, and try always to conciliate. That is the whole secret. Fight on bravely! Life is short! Give it up to a great cause. Why do you not write anything about Narasimha? He is almost starving. I gave him something. Then he went over to somewhere, I do not know where, and does not write. Akshaya is a good boy. I like him very much. No use quarrelling with the Theosophists. Do not go and tell them all I write to you. . . . Theosophists are our pioneers, do you know? Now Judge is a Hindu and Col. a Buddhist, and Judge is the ablest man here. Now tell the Hindu Theosophists to support Judge. Even if you can write Judge a

1 letter, thanking him as a co-religionist and for his labours in 2 presenting Hinduism before Americans; that will do his heart much 3 good. We must not join any sect, but we must sympathise and work
4 with each. . . . Work, work--conquer all by your love! . .

5 Try to expand. Remember the only sign of life is motion and 6 growth. You must send the passed resolution to Dr. J.H.
7 Barrows . . ., Dr. Paul Carus . . ., Senator Palmer . . ., Mrs. J. J.
8 Bagley . . ., it must come officially. . . . I write this because I do not 9 think you know the ways of foreign nations. . . . Keep on steadily. So 10 far we have done wonderful things. Onward, brave souls, we will 11 gain! Organise and found societies and go to work, that is the only 12 way.

13 At this time of the year there is not much lecturing to be done 14 here; so I will devote myself to my pen and write. I shall be hard at 15 work all the time, and then, when the cold weather comes and 16 people return to their homes, I shall begin lecturing again and at 17 the same time organise societies.

18 My love and blessings to you all. I never forget anybody, 19 though I do not write often. Then again, I am now, continuously 20 travelling, and letters have to be redirected from one place to 21 another.

22 Work hard. Be holy and pure and the fire will come.

24 affectionately,

Vivekananda

29 Annisquam

30 20th August,

31 1894

32 Dear Sister {Isabelle McKindley},

33 Your very kind letter duly reached me at Annisquam. I am 34 with the Bagleys once more. They are kind as usual. Professor 35 Wright was not here. But he came day before yesterday and we 36 have very nice time together. Mr. Bradley of Evanston, whom you 37 have met at Evanston, was here. His sister-in-law had me sit for a 38 picture several days and had painted me. I had some very fine 39 boating and one evening overturned the boat and had a good 40 drenching--clothes and all.

41 I had very very nice time at Greenacre. They were all so 42 earnest and kind people. Fanny Hartley and Mrs. Mills have by this 43 time gone back home I suppose.

44 From here I think I will go back to New York. Or I may go to 45 Boston to Mrs. Ole Bull. Perhaps you have heard of Mr. Ole Bull, the 46 great violinist of this country. She is his widow. She is a very 47 spiritual lady. She lives in Cambridge and has a fine big parlour

1 made of woodwork brought all the way from India. She wants me to 2 come over to her any time and use her parlour to lecture. Boston of 3 course is the great field for everything, but the Boston people as 4 quickly take hold of anything as give it up; while the New Yorkers 5 are slow, but when they get hold of anything they do it with a 6 mortal grip.

7 I have kept pretty good health all the time and hope to do in 8 the future. I had no occasion yet to draw on my reserve, yet I am 9 rolling on pretty fair. And I have given up all money-making 10 schemes and will be quite satisfied with a bite and a shed and work 11 on.

12 I believe you are enjoying your summer retreat. Kindly 13 convey my best regards and love to Miss Howe and Mr. Frank 14 Howe.

15 Perhaps I did not tell you in my last how I slept and lived and 16 preached under the trees and for a few days at least found myself 17 once more in the atmosphere of heaven.

18 Most probably I will make New York my centre for the next 19 winter; and as soon as I fix on that, I will write to you. I am not yet 20 settled in my ideas of remaining in this country any more. I cannot 21 settle anything of that sort. I must bide my time. May the Lord bless 22 you all for ever and ever is the constant prayer of your ever 23 affectionate brother,

24 Vivekananda

28 U.S.A.

29 31st August,

30 1894

31 Dear Alasinga,

32 I just now saw an editorial on me about the circular from 33 Madras in the Boston Transcript. Nothing has reached me yet. They 34 will reach me soon if you have sent them already. So far you have 35 done wonderfully, my boy. Do not mind what I write in some 36 moments of nervousness. One gets nervous sometimes alone in a 37 country 15,000 miles from home, having to fight every inch of 38 ground with orthodox inimical Christians. You must take those into 39 consideration, my brave boy, and work right along.

40 Perhaps you have heard from Bhattacharya that I received a 41 beautiful letter from G. G. His address was scrawled in such a 42 fashion as to become perfectly illegible to me. So I could not reply 43 to him direct. But I have done all that he desired. I have sent over 44 my photograph and written to the Raja of Mysore. Now I have sent 45 a phonograph to Khetri Raja. . . .

46 Now send always Indian newspapers about me to me over 47 here. I want to read them in the papers themselves--do you know?

1 Now lastly, you must write to me all about Mr. Charu Chandra who 2 has been so kind to me. Give him my heartfelt thanks; but (between 3 you and me) I unfortunately do not remember him. Would you give 4 me particulars?

5 The Theosophists here now like me, but they are 650 in all!
6 There are the Christian Scientists. All of them like me. They are 7 about a million. I work with both, but join none, and will with the 8 Lord's grace mould them both after the true fashion; for they are 9 after all mumbling half realised truth. Narasimha, perhaps, by the 10 time this reaches you, will get the money etc.

11 I have received a letter from Cat, but it requires a book to 12 answer all his queries. So I send him my blessings through you and 13 ask you to remind him that we agree to differ--and see the harmony 14 of contrary points. So it does not matter what he believes in; he 15 must act. Give my love to Balaji, G. G., Kidi, Doctor, and to all our 16 friends and all the great and patriotic souls, who were brave and 17 noble enough to sink their differences for their country's cause.

18 With a magazine or journal or organ--you become the 19 Secretary thereof. You calculate the cost of starting the magazine 20 and the work, how much the least is necessary to start it, and then 21 write to me giving name and address of the Society, and I will send 22 you money myself, and not only that, I will get others in America to 23 subscribe annually to it liberally. So ask them of Calcutta to do the 24 same. Give me Dharmapala's address. He is a great and good man.
25 He will work wonderfully with us. Now organise a little society. You 26 will have to take charge of the whole movement, not as a leader, 27 but as a servant. Do you know, the least show of leading destroys 28 everything by rousing jealousy?

29 Accede to everything. Only try to retain all of my friends 30 together. Do you see? And work slowly up. Let G. G. and others, 31 who have no immediate necessity for earning something, do as they 32 are doing, i.e. casting the idea broadcast. G. G. is doing well at 33 Mysore. That is the way. Mysore will be in time a great stronghold.

34 I am now going to write my mems in a book and next winter 35 will go about this country organising societies here. This is a great 36 field of work, and everything done here prepares England. So far 37 you have done very well indeed, my brave boy--all strength shall be 38 given to you.

39 I have now Rs. 9,000 with me, part of which I will send over 40 to you for the organisation; and I will get many people to send 41 money to you in Madras yearly, half-yearly, or monthly. You now 42 start a Society and a journal and the necessary apparatus. This 43 must be a secret amongst only a few--but at the same time try to 44 collect funds from Mysore and elsewhere to build a temple in 45 Madras which should have a library and some rooms for the office 46 and the preachers who should be Sannyasins, and for Vairagis (men 47 of renunciation) who may chance to come. Thus we shall progress 48 inch by inch. This is a great field for my work, and everything done 49 here prepares the way for my coming work in England. . . .

50 You know the greatest difficulty with me is to keep or even to

1 touch money. It is disgusting and debasing. So you must organise a 2 Society to take charge of the practical and pecuniary part of it. I
3 have friends here who take care of all my monetary concerns. Do
4 you see? It will be a wonderful relief to me to get rid of horrid 5 money affairs. So the sooner you organise yourselves and you be 6 ready as secretary and treasurer to enter into direct communication 7 with my friends and sympathisers here, the better for you and me.
8 Do that quickly, and write to me. Give the society a non-sectarian 9 name. . . . Do you write to my brethren at the Math to organise in a 10 similar fashion. . . . Great things are in store for you Alasinga. Or if 11 you think proper, you get some of the big folks to be named as 12 office-bearers of the Society, while you work in the real sense. Their 13 name will be a great thing. If your duties are too severe and do not 14 let you have any time, let G. G. do the business part, and by and by I 15 hope to make you independent of your college work so that you 16 may, without starving yourself and family, devote your whole soul to 17 the work. So work, my boys, work! The rough part of the work has 18 been smoothened and rounded; now it will roll on better and better 19 every year. And if you can simply keep it going well until I come to 20 India, the work will progress by leaps and bounds. Rejoice that you 21 have done so much. When you feel gloomy, think what has been 22 done within the last year. How, rising from nothing, we have the 23 eyes of the world fixed upon us now. Not only India, but the world 24 outside, is expecting great things of us. Missionaries or M- or 25 foolish officials--none will be able to resist truth and love and 26 sincerity. Are you sincere? unselfish even unto death? and loving?
27 Then fear not, not even death. Onward, my lads! The whole world 28 requires Light. It is expectant! India alone has that Light, not in 29 magic, mummery, and charlatanism, but in the teaching of the 30 glories of the spirit of real religion--of the highest spiritual truth.
31 That is why the Lord has preserved the race through all its 32 vicissitudes unto the present day. Now the time has come. Have 33 faith that you are all, my brave lads, born to do great things! Let not 34 the barks of puppies frighten you--no, not even the thunderbolts of 35 heaven--but stand up and work!

36
37 affectionately, Ever yours

44 September, 1894

45 Dear Alasinga,

46 . . . I have been continuously travelling from place to place 47 and working incessantly, giving lectures, holding classes, etc.

48 I have not been able to write a line yet for my proposed book.
49 Perhaps I may be able to take it in hand later on. I have made some

1 nice friends here amongst the liberal people, and a few amongst the 2 orthodox. I hope to return soon to India--I have had enough of this 3 country, and especially as too much work is making me nervous.
4 The giving of too many public lectures and constant hurry have 5 brought on this nervousness. I do not care for this busy, 6 meaningless, money-making life. So you see, I will soon return. Of 7 course, there is a growing section with whom I am very popular, 8 and who will like to have me here all the time. But I think I have 9 had enough of newspaper blazoning and humbugging of a public
10 life. I do not care the least for it. . . .

11 There is no hope for money for our project here. It is useless 12 to hope. No large number of men in any country do good out of 13 mere sympathy. The few who really give money in the Christian 14 lands often do so through priestcraft and fear of hell. So it is as in 15 our Bengali proverb, "Kill a cow and make a pair of shoes out of the 16 leather and give them in charity to a Brahmana". So it is here, and 17 so everywhere; and then, the Westerners are miserly in comparison 18 to our race. I sincerely believe that the Asians are the most 19 charitable race in the world, only they are very poor.

20 I am going to live for a few months in New York. That city is 21 the head, hand, and purse of the country. Of course, Boston is 22 called the Brahmanical city, and here in America there are 23 hundreds of thousands that sympathise with me. . . . The New York 24 people are very open. I will see what can be done there, as I have 25 some very influential friends. After all, I am getting disgusted with 26 this lecturing business. It will take a long time for the Westerners to 27 understand the higher spirituality. Everything is f.s.d. to them. If a 28 religion brings them money or health or beauty or long life, they 29 will all flock to it, otherwise not. . . .

30 Give to Balaji, G. G., and all of our friends my best love.

31 Yours with 32 everlasting love,

Dear Sister {Isabelle McKindley},

Your letter with the India mail just to hand. A quantity of newspaper clippings were sent over to me from India. I send them back for your perusal and safe keeping.

I am busy writing letters to India last few days. I will remain a few days more in Boston.

With my love and blessings.

Yours ever

affly,

Dear Alasinga,

. . . One thing I find in the books of my speeches and sayings published in Calcutta. Some of them are printed in such a way as to savour of political views; whereas I am no politician or political agitator. I care only for the Spirit--when that is right everything will be righted by itself. . . . So you must warn the Calcutta people that no political significance be ever attached falsely to any of my writings or sayings. What nonsense! . . . I heard that Rev. Kali Charan Banerji in a lecture to Christian missionaries said that I was a political delegate. If it was said publicly, then publicly ask the Babu for me to write to any of the Calcutta papers and prove it, or else take back his foolish assertion. This is their trick! I have said a few harsh words in honest criticism of Christian governments in general, but that does not mean that I care for, or have any connection with politics or that sort of thing. Those who think it very grand to print extracts from those lectures and want to prove that I am a political preacher, to them I say, "Save me from my friends." . . .

. . . Tell my friends that a uniform silence is all my answer to my detractors. If I give them tit for tat, it would bring us down to a level with them. Tell them that truth will take care of itself, and that they are not to fight anybody for me. They have much to learn yet, and they are only children. They are still full of foolish golden dreams--mere boys!

1 . . . This nonsense of public life and newspaper blazoning has 2 disgusted me thoroughly. I long to go back to the Himalayan quiet.

3 Ever yours
4 affectionately,

12 Dear Alasinga,

13 You all have done well, my brave unselfish children. I am so 14 proud of you. . . . Hope and do not despair. After such a start, if you 15 despair you are a fool. . . .

16 Our field is India, and the value of foreign appreciation is in 17 rousing India up. That is all. . . . We must have a strong base from 18 which to spread. . . . Do not for a moment quail. Everything will 19 come all right. It is will that moves the world.

20 You need not be sorry, my son, on account of the young men 21 becoming Christians. What else can they be under the existing 22 social bondages, especially in Madras? Liberty is the first condition 23 of growth. Your ancestors gave every liberty to the soul, and 24 religion grew. They put the body under every bondage, and society 25 did not grow. The opposite is the case in the West--every liberty to 26 society, none to religion. Now are falling off the shackles from the 27 feet of Eastern society as from those of Western religion.

28 Each again will have its type; the religious or introspective in 29 India, the scientific or out-seeing in the West. The West wants every 30 bit of spirituality through social improvement. The East wants every 31 bit of social power through spirituality. Thus it was that the modern 32 reformers saw no way to reform but by first crushing out the 33 religion of India. They tried, and they failed. Why? Because few of 34 them ever studied their own religion, and not one ever underwent 35 the training necessary to understand the Mother of all religions. I 36 claim that no destruction of religion is necessary to improve the 37 Hindu society, and that this state of society exists not on account of 38 religion, but because religion has not been applied to society as it 39 should have been. This I am ready to prove from our old books, 40 every word of it. This is what I teach, and this is what we must 41 struggle all our lives to carry out. But it will take time, a long time 42 to study. Have patience and work. {Sanskrit}--Save yourself by 43 yourself.

44 Yours etc.,

45 Vivekananda

46 PS. The present Hindu society is organised only for spiritual 47 men, and hopelessly crushes out everybody else. Why? Where shall

1 they go who want to enjoy the world a little with its frivolities? Just 2 as our religion takes in all, so should our society. This is to be 3 worked out by first understanding the true principles of our religion 4 and then applying them to society. This is the slow but sure work to 5 be done.

13 Dear Vehemia Chand Limbdi,

14 I am going on well in this country. By this time I have become 15 one of their own teachers. They all like me and my teachings. . . . I 16 travel all over the country from one place to another, as was my 17 habit in India, preaching and teaching. Thousands and thousands 18 have listened to me and taken my ideas in a very kindly spirit. It is 19 the most expensive country, but the Lord provides for me

35 Dear Sister {Isabelle McKindley},

36 Excuse my long silence; but I have been regularly writing to 37 Mother Church. I am sure you are all enjoying this nice cool 38 weather. I am enjoying Baltimore and Washington very much. I will 39 go hence to Philadelphia. I thought Miss Mary was in Philadelphia, 40 and so I wanted her address. But as she is in some other place near 41 Philadelphia, I do not want to give her the trouble to come up to see 42 me, as Mother Church says.

The lady with whom I am staying is Mrs. Totten, a niece of Miss Howe. I will be her guest more than a week yet; so you may write to me to her care.

I intend going over to England this winter somewhere in January or February. A lady from London with whom one of my friends is staying has sent an invitation to me to go over as her guest; and from India they are urging me every day to come back.

How did you like Pitoo in the cartoon? Do not show it to anybody. It is too bad of our people to caricature Pitoo that way.

I long ever so much to hear from you, but take a little more care to make your letter just a bit more distinct. Do not be angry for the suggestion.

Dear Blessed and Beloved {Alasinga Perumal},

By this time you must have received my other letters. You must excuse me for certain harshness of tone sometimes, and you know full well how I love you. You have asked me often to send over to you all about my movements in this country and all my lecture reports. I am doing exactly here what I used to do in India. Always depending on the Lord and making no plans ahead. . . . Moreover you must remember that I have to work incessantly in this country, and that I have no time to put together my thoughts in the form of a book, so much so, that this constant rush has worn my nerves, and I am feeling it. I cannot express my obligation to you, G. G., and all my friends in Madras, for the most unselfish and heroic work you did for me. But it was not at all meant to blazon me, but to make you conscious of your own strength. I am not an organiser, my nature tends towards scholarship and meditation. I think I have worked enough, now I want rest and to teach a little to those that have come to me from my Gurudeva (venerable Guru). You have known now what you can do, for it is really you, young men of Madras, that have done all; I am only the figurehead. I am a Tyagi (detached) monk. I only want one thing. I do not believe in a God or religion which cannot wipe the widow's tears or bring a piece of bread to the orphan's mouth. However sublime be the theories, however well-spun may be the philosophy--I do not call it religion so long as it is confined to books and dogmas. The eye is in the forehead and not in the back. Move onward and carry into practice that which you are very proud to call your religion, and God bless you!

1 Look not at me, look to yourselves. I am happy to have been 2 the occasion of rousing an enthusiasm. Take advantage of it, float 3 along with it, and everything will come right. Love never fails, my 4 son; today or tomorrow or ages after, truth will conquer. Love shall 5 win the victory. Do you love your fellow men? Where should you go 6 to seek for God--are not all the poor, the miserable, the weak, Gods?
7 Why not worship them first? Why go to dig a well on the shores of 8 the Ganga? Believe in the omnipotent power of love. Who cares for 9 these tinsel puffs of name? I never keep watch of what the 10 newspapers are saying. Have you love?--You are omnipotent. Are 11 you perfectly unselfish? If so, you are irresistible. It is character 12 that pays everywhere. It is the Lord who protects His children in 13 the depths of the sea. Your country requires heroes; be heroes! God 14 bless you!

15 Everybody wants me to come over to India. They think we 16 shall be able to do more if I come over. They are mistaken, my 17 friend. The present enthusiasm is only a little patriotism, it means 18 nothing. If it is true and genuine, you will find in a short time 19 hundreds of heroes coming forward and carrying on the work.
20 Therefore know that you have really done all, and go on. Look not 21 for me. Akshoy Kumar Ghosh is in London. He sent a beautiful 22 invitation from London to come to Miss Muller's. And I hope I am 23 going in January or February next. Bhattacharya writes me to come 24 over. Here is a grand field. What have I to do with this "ism" or that 25 "ism"? I am the servant of the Lord, and where on earth is there a 26 better field than here for propagating all high ideas? Here, where if 27 one man is against me, a hundred hands are ready to help me; here, 28 where man feels for man, weeps for his fellow-men and women are 29 goddesses! Even idiots may stand up to hear themselves praised, 30 and cowards assume the attitude of the brave when everything is 31 sure to turn out well, but the true hero works in silence. How many 32 Buddhas die before one finds expression! My son, I believe in God, 33 and I believe in man. I believe in helping the miserable. I believe in 34 going even to hell to save others. Talk of the Westerners? They have 35 given me food, shelter, friendship, protection--even the most 36 orthodox Christians! What do our people do when any of their 37 priests go to India? You do not touch them even, they are 38 MLECHCHHAS! No man, no nation, my son, can hate others and 39 live; India's doom was sealed the very day they invented the word 40 MLECHCHHA and stopped from communion with others. Take care 41 how you foster that idea. It is good to talk glibly about the Vedanta, 42 but how hard to carry out even its least precepts!

43 Ever yours with
44 blessings,

45 Vivekananda

46 PS. Take care of these two things--love of power and jealousy.
47 Cultivate always "faith in yourself."

Dear Alasinga,

I am glad to learn that the phonograph and the letter have reached you safely. You need not send any more newspaper cuttings. I have been deluged with them. Enough of that. Now go to work for the organisation. I have started one already in New York and the Vice-President will soon write to you. Keep correspondence with them. Soon I hope to get up a few in other places. We must organise our forces not to make a sect--not on religious matters, but on the secular business part of it.

A stirring propaganda must be launched out. Put your heads together and organise.

What nonsense about the miracle of Ramakrishna! . . . Miracles I do not know nor understand. Had Ramakrishna nothing to do in the world but turning wine into the Gupta's medicine? Lord save me from such Calcutta people! What materials to work with! If they can write a real life of Shri Ramakrishna with the idea of showing what he came to do and teach, let them do it, otherwise let them not distort his life and sayings. These people want to know God who see in Shri Ramakrishna nothing but jugglery! . . . Now let Kidi translate his love, his knowledge, his teachings, his eclecticism, etc. This is the theme. The life of Shri Ramakrishna was an extraordinary searchlight under whose illumination one is able to really understand the whole scope of Hindu religion. He was the object-lesson of all the theoretical knowledge given in the Shastras (scriptures). He showed by his life what the Rishis and Avatars really wanted to teach. The books were theories, he was the realisation. This man had in fifty-one years lived the five thousand years of national spiritual life and so raised himself to be an object-lesson for future generations. The Vedas can only be explained and the Shastras reconciled by his theory of Avastha or stages--that we must not only tolerate others, but positively embrace them, and that truth is the basis of all religions. Now on these lines a most impressive and beautiful life can be written. Well, everything in good time. Avoid all irregular indecent expressions about sex etc. . . ., because other nations think it the height of indecency to mention such things, and his life in English is going to be read by the whole world. I read a Bengali life sent over. It is full of such words. . . . So take care, carefully avoid such words and expressions. The Calcutta friends have not a cent worth of ability; but they have their assertions of individuality.

They are too high to listen to advice. I do not know what to do with these wonderful gentlemen. I have not got much hope in that quarter. His will be done. I am simply ashamed of the Bengali book. The writer perhaps thought he was a frank recorder of truth and keeping the very language of Paramahansa. But he does not remember that Ramakrishna would never use that language before ladies. And this man expects his work to be read by men and women alike! Lord, save me from fools! They, again, have their own

1 freaks; they all knew him! Bosh and rot. . . . Beggars taking upon 2 themselves the air of kings! Fools thinking they are all wise! Puny
3 slaves thinking that they are masters! That is their condition. I do 4 not know what to do. Lord save me. I have all hope in Madras. Push 5 on with your work; do not be governed by the Calcutta people. Keep 6 them in good humour in the hope that some one of them may turn 7 good. But push on with your work independently. "Many come to sit 8 at dinner when it is cooked." Take care and work on.

18 Dear Kidi,

19 . . . As to the wonderful stories published about Shri 20 Ramakrishna, I advise you to keep clear of them and the fools who 21 write them. They are true, but the fools will make a mess of the 22 whole thing, I am sure. He had a whole world of knowledge to 23 teach, why insist upon unnecessary things as miracles really are!
24 They do not prove anything. Matter does not prove Spirit. What 25 connection is there between the existence of God, Soul, or 26 immortality, and the working of miracles? . . . Preach Shri 27 Ramakrishna. Pass the Cup that has satisfied your thirst. . . . Preach 28 Bhakti. Do not disturb your head with metaphysical nonsense, and 29 do not disturb others by your bigotry. . . .

39 Dear Blessed and Beloved {Alasinga Perumal},

40 . . . In reference to me every now and then attacks are made 41 in missionary papers (so I hear), but I never care to see them. If you 42 send any of those made in India, I should throw them into the 43 wastepaper basket. A little agitation was necessary for our work.
44 We have had enough. Pay no more attention to what people say 45 about me, whether good or bad. You go on with your work and 46 remember that "Never one meets with evil who tries to do good"

1 (Gita, VI. 40).

2 Every day the people here are appreciating me. And between 3 you and me, I am more of an influence here than you dream of.
4 Everything must proceed slowly. . . . I have written to you before,
5 and I write again, that I shall not pay heed to any criticism or praise 6 in the newspapers. They are consigned to the fire. Do you do the 7 same. Pay no attention whatsoever to newspaper nonsense or 8 criticism. Be sincere and do your duty. Everything will come all 9 right. Truth must triumph. . . .

10 Missionary misrepresentations should be beneath your 11 notice. . . . Perfect silence is the best refutation to them, and I wish 12 you to maintain the same. . . . Make Mr. Subrahmanya Iyer the 13 President of your Society. He is one of the sincerest and noblest 14 men I know; and in him, intellect and emotion are beautifully
15 blended. Push on in your work, without counting much on me; work 16 on your own account. . . . As for me, I do not know when I shall go 17 back; I am working here and in India as well. . . .

18 With my love to you all,

19 Yours ever with

29 Dear Alasinga,

30 Your letter just to hand. . . . I was mistaken in asking you to 31 publish the scraps I sent you. It was one of my awful mistakes. It 32 shows a moment's weakness. Money can be raised in this country 33 by lecturing for two or three years. But I have tried a little, and 34 although there is much public appreciation of my work, it is 35 thoroughly uncongenial and demoralising to me. . . .

36 I have read what you say about the Indian papers and their 37 criticisms, which are natural. Jealousy is the central vice of every 38 enslaved race. And it is jealousy and want of combination which 39 cause and perpetuate slavery. You cannot feel the truth of this 40 remark until you come out of India. The secret of Westerners' 41 success is this power of combination, the basis of which is mutual 42 trust and appreciation. The weaker and more cowardly a nation is, 43 so much the more is this sin visible. . . . But, my son, you ought not 44 to expect anything from a slavish race. The case is almost desperate 45 no doubt, but let me put the case before you all. Can you put life 46 into this dead mass--dead to almost all moral aspiration, dead to all 47 future possibilities--and always ready to spring upon those that 48 would try to do good to them? Can you take the position of a

1 physician who tries to pour medicine down the throat of a kicking
2 and refractory child? . . . An American or a European always 3 supports his countrymen in a foreign country. . . . Let me remind 4 you again, "Thou hast the right to work but not to the fruits 5 thereof." Stand firm like a rock. Truth always triumphs. Let the 6 children of Shri Ramakrishna be true to themselves and everything 7 will be all right. We may not live to see the outcome, but as sure as 8 we live, it will come sooner or later. What India wants is a new 9 electric fire to stir up a fresh vigour in the national veins. This was 10 ever, and always will be, slow work. Be content to work, and, above 11 all, be true to yourself. Be pure, staunch, and sincere to the very 12 backbone, and everything will be all right. If you have marked 13 anything in the disciples of Shri Ramakrishna, it is this--they are 14 sincere to the backbone. My task will be done, and I shall be quite 15 content to die, if I can bring up and launch one hundred such men 16 over India. He, the Lord, knows best. Let ignorant men talk 17 nonsense. We neither seek aid nor avoid it--we are the servants of 18 the Most High. The petty attempts of small men should be beneath 19 our notice. Onward! Upon ages of struggle a character is built. Be 20 not discouraged. One word of truth can never be lost; for ages it 21 may be hidden under rubbish, but it will show itself sooner or later.
22 Truth is indestructible, virtue is indestructible, purity is 23 indestructible. Give me a genuine man; I do not want masses of 24 converts. My son, hold fast! Do not care for anybody to help you. Is 25 not the Lord infinitely greater than all human help? Be holy--trust in 26 the Lord, depend on Him always, and you are on the right track; 27 nothing can prevail against you. . . .

28 Let us pray, "Lead, Kindly Light"--a beam will come through 29 the dark, and a hand will be stretched forth to lead us. I always 30 pray for you: you must pray for me. Let each one of us pray day and 31 night for the down-trodden millions in India who are held fast by 32 poverty, priestcraft, and tyranny--pray day and night for them. I 33 care more to preach religion to them than to the high and the rich. I 34 am no metaphysician, no philosopher, nay, no saint. But I am poor, I 35 love the poor. I see what they call the poor of this country, and how 36 many there are who feel for them! What an immense difference in 37 India! Who feels there for the two hundred millions of men and 38 women sunken for ever in poverty and ignorance? Where is the way 39 out? Who feels for them? They cannot find light or education. Who 40 will bring the light to them--who will travel from door to door 41 bringing education to them? Let these people be your God--think of 42 them, work for them, pray for them incessantly--the Lord will show 43 you the way. Him I call a Mahatman (great soul) whose heart bleeds 44 for the poor, otherwise he is a Duratman (wicked soul). Let us unite 45 our wills in continued prayer for their good. We may die unknown, 46 unpitied, unbewailed, without accomplishing anything--but not one 47 thought will be lost. It will take effect, sooner or later. My heart is 48 too full to express my feeling; you know it, you can imagine it. So 49 long as the millions live in hunger and ignorance, I hold every man 50 a traitor who, having been educated at their expense, pays not the 51 least heed to them! I call those men who strut about in their finery, 52 having got all their money by grinding the poor, wretches, so long 53 as they do not do anything for those two hundred millions who are

1 now no better than hungry savages! We are poor, my brothers, we 2 are nobodies, but such have been always the instruments of the 3 Most High. The Lord bless you all.

4 With all love,

10 Dear Dharmapala,

11 I have forgotten your address in Calcutta; so I direct this to 12 the Math. I heard about your speeches in Calcutta and how 13 wonderful was the effect produced by them. A certain retired 14 missionary here wrote me a letter addressing me as brother and 15 then hastily went to publish my short answer and make a show. But 16 you know what people here think of such gentlemen. Moreover, the 17 same missionary went privately to some of my friends to ask them 18 not to befriend me. Of course he met with universal contempt. I am 19 quite astonished at this man's behaviour--a preacher of religion to 20 take to such underhand dealings! Unfortunately too much of that in 21 every country and in every religion. Last winter I travelled a good 22 deal in this country although the weather was very severe. I
23 thought it would be dreadful, but I did not find it so after all. You 24 remember Col. Neggenson, President of the Free Religious Society.
25 He makes very kind inquiries about you. I met Dr. Carpenter of 26 Oxford (England) the other day. He delivered an address on the 27 ethics of Buddhism at Plymouth. It was very sympathetic and 28 scholarly. He made inquiries about you and your paper. Hope, your 29 noble work will succeed. You are a worthy servant of Him who came 30 Bahujana Hitaya Bahujana Sukhaya (for the good of the many, for 31 the happiness of the many).

32 . . . The Christianity that is preached in India is quite different 33 from what one sees here; you will be astonished to hear, 34 Dharmapala, that I have friends in this country amongst the clergy 35 of the Episcopal and even Presbyterian churches, who are as broad, 36 as liberal, and as sincere as you are in your own religion. The real 37 spiritual man is broad everywhere. His love forces him to be so.
38 Those to whom religion is a trade are forced to become narrow and 39 mischievous by their introduction into religion of the competitive, 40 fighting, and selfish methods of the world.

Dear Alasinga,

Listen to an old story. A lazy tramp sauntering along the road saw an old man sitting at the door of his house and stopped to inquire of him the whereabouts of a certain place. "How far is such and such a village?" he asked. The old man remained silent. The man repeated his query several times. Still there was no answer. Disgusted at this, the traveller turned to go away. The old man then stood up and said, "The village of__ is only a mile from here." "What!" said the tramp, "Why did you not speak when I asked you before?" "Because then", said the old man, "you seemed so halting and careless about proceeding, but now you are starting off in good earnest, and you have a right to an answer."

Will you remember this story, my son? Go to work, the rest will come: "Whosoever not trusting in anything else but Me, rests on Me, I supply him with everything he needs" (Gita, IX.22). This is no dream.

. . . The work should be in the line of preaching and serving, at the present time. Choose a place of meeting where you can assemble every week holding a service and reading the Upanishads with the commentaries, and so slowly go on learning and working. Everything will come to you if you put your shoulders to the wheel. . .

Now, go to work! G. G.'s nature is of the emotional type, you have a level head; so work together; plunge in; this is only the beginning. Every nation must save itself; we must not depend upon funds from America for the revival of Hinduism, for that is a delusion. To have a centre is a great thing; try to secure such a place in a large town like Madras, and go on radiating a living force in all directions. Begin slowly. Start with a few lay missionaries; gradually others will come who will devote their whole lives to the work. Do not try to be a ruler. He is the best ruler who can serve well. Be true unto death. The work we want--we do not seek wealth, name or fame. . . . Be brave. . . . Endeavour to interest the people of Madras in collecting funds for the purpose, and then make a beginning. . . . Be perfectly unselfish, and you will be sure to succeed. . . . Without losing the independence in work, show all regards to your superiors. Work in harmony. . . . My children must be ready to jump into fire, if needed, to accomplish their work. Now work, work, work! We will stop and compare notes later on. Have patience, perseverance, and purity.

I am writing no book on Hinduism just now. I am simply jotting down my thoughts. I do not know if I shall publish them. What is in books? The world is too full of foolish things already. If you could start a magazine on Vedantic lines, it would further our object. Be positive; do not criticise others. Give your message, teach what you have to teach, and there stop. The Lord knows the rest. . . .

1 Do not send me any more newspapers, as I do not notice the 2 missionary criticisms on myself; and here the public estimation of 3 me is better for that reason.

4 . . . If you are really my children, you will fear nothing, stop at 5 nothing. You will be like lions. We must rouse India and the whole
6 world. No cowardice. I will take no nay. Do you understand? Be true
7 unto death! . . . The secret of this is Guru-Bhakti--faith in the Guru
8 unto death! Have you that? I believe with all my heart that you 9 have, and you know that I have confidence in you--so go to work.
10 You must succeed. My prayers and benedictions follow every step 11 you take. Work in harmony. Be patient with everybody. Every one 12 has my love. I am watching you. Onward! Onward! This is just the 13 beginning. My little work here makes a big echo in India, do you 14 know? So I shall not return there in a hurry. My intention is to do 15 something permanent here, and with that object I am working day 16 by day. I am every day gaining the confidence of the American 17 people. . . . Expand your hearts and hopes, as wide as the world.
18 Study Sanskrit, especially the three Bhashyas (commentaries) on 19 the Vedanta. Be ready, for I have many plans for the future. Try to 20 be a magnetic speaker. Electrify the people. Everything will come to 21 you if you have faith. So tell Kidi, in fact, tell all my children there.
22 In time they will do great things at which the world will wonder.
23 Take heart and work. Show me something you have done. Show me 24 a temple, a press, a paper, a home for me. Where shall I come to if 25 you cannot make a home for me in Madras? Electrify people. Raise 26 funds and preach. Be true to your mission. Thus far you promise 27 well, so go on and do better and better still.

28 . . . Do not fight with people; do not antagonise anyone. Why 29 should we mind if Jack and John become Christians? Let them 30 follow whatever religion suits them. Why should you mix in 31 controversies? Bear with the various opinions of everybody.
32 Patience, purity, and perseverance will prevail.

43 Dear Mrs. Bull,

44 I lectured at Brooklyn last Sunday. Mrs. Higgins gave a little 45 reception the evening I arrived, and some of the prominent 46 members of the Ethical Society including Dr. Jain [Janes] were 47 there. Some of them thought that such Oriental religious subjects 48 will not interest the Brooklyn public.

1 But the lecture, through the blessings of the Lord, proved a 2 tremendous success. About 800 of the elite of Brooklyn were 3 present, and the very gentlemen who thought it would not prove a 4 success are trying for organising a series in Brooklyn. The New 5 York course for me is nearly ready, but I do not wish to fix the dates 6 until Miss Thursby comes to New York. As such Miss Phillips who is 7 a friend of Miss Thursby's and who is arranging the New York 8 course for me will act with Miss Thursby in case she wants to get 9 up something in New York.

10 I owe much to the Hale family and I thought to give them a 11 little surprise by dropping in on New Year's day. I am trying to get a 12 new gown here. The old gown is here, but it is so shrunk by 13 constant washings that it is unfit to wear in public. I am almost 14 confident of finding the exact thing in Chicago.

15 I hope your father is all right by this time.

16 With my love to Miss Farmer, Mr. and Mrs. Gibbons, and the 17 rest of the holy family, I am ever yours,

18 Affectionately,

20 Vivekananda

21 PS. I saw Miss Curing at Brooklyn. She was as kind as ever.
22 Give her my love if you write her soon.

28 Dear G. G. {Narasimhachariar},

29 Your letter just to hand. . . . The Parliament of Religions was 30 organised with the intention of proving the superiority of the 31 Christian religion over other forms of faith, but the philosophic 32 religion of Hinduism was able to maintain its position 33 notwithstanding. Dr. Barrows and the men of that ilk are very 34 orthodox, and I do not look to them for help. . . . The Lord has sent 35 me many friends in this country, and they are always on the 36 increase. The Lord bless those who have tried to injure me. . . . I 37 have been running all the time between Boston and New York, two 38 great centres of this country, of which Boston may be called the 39 brain and New York, the purse. In both, my success is more than 40 ordinary. I am indifferent to the newspaper reports, and you must 41 not expect me to send any of them to you. A little boom was 42 necessary to begin work. We have had more than enough of that.

43 I have written to Mani Iyer, and I have given you my 44 directions already. Now show me what you can do. No foolish talk 45 now, but actual work; the Hindus must back their talk with real 46 work; if they cannot they do not deserve anything; that is all.
47 America is not going to give you money for your fads. And why 48 should they? As for me, I want to teach the truth; I do not care

1 whether here or elsewhere.

2 In future do not pay any heed to what people say either for or 3 against you or me. Work on, be lions; and the Lord will bless you. I 4 shall work incessantly until I die, and even after death I shall work 5 for the good of the world. Truth is infinitely more weighty than 6 untruth; so is goodness. If you possess these, they will make their 7 way by sheer gravity.

8 I have no connection with the Theosophists. And Judge will 9 help me--pooh! . . . Thousands of the best men do care for me; you 10 know this, and have faith in the Lord. I am slowly exercising an 11 influence in this land greater than all the newspaper blazoning of 12 me can do. The orthodox feel it, but they cannot help it. It is the 13 force of character, of purity, and of truth--of personality. So long as I 14 have these things, you can feel easy; no one will be able to injure a 15 hair of my head. If they try, they will fail, saith the Lord. . . . Enough 16 of books and theories. It is the life that is the highest and the only 17 way to stir the hearts of people; it carries the personal magnetism. .
18 . . The Lord is giving me a deeper and deeper insight every day.
19 Work, work, work. . . . Truce to foolish talk; talk of the Lord. Life is 20 too short to be spent in talking about frauds and cranks.

21 You must always remember that every nation must save itself;
22 so must every man; do not look to others for help. Through hard 23 work here, I shall be able now and then to send you a little money 24 for your work; but that is all. If you have to look forward to that, 25 better stop work. Know also that this is a grand field for my ideas, 26 and that I do not care whether they are Hindus or Mohammedans 27 or Christians, but those that love the Lord will always command my 28 service.

29 . . . I like to work on calmly and silently, and the Lord is 30 always with me. Follow me, if you will, by being intensely sincere, 31 perfectly unselfish, and, above all, by being perfectly pure. My 32 blessings go with you. In this short life there is no time for the 33 exchange of compliments. We can compare notes and compliment
34 each other to our hearts' content after the battle is finished. Now, 35 do not talk; work, work, work! I do not see anything permanent you 36 have done in India--I do not see any centre you have made--I do not 37 see any temple or hall you have erected--I do not see anybody 38 joining hands with you. There is too much talk, talk, talk! We are 39 great, we are great! Nonsense! We are imbeciles; that is what we 40 are! This hankering after name and fame and all other humbugs-- 41 what are they to me? What do I care about them? I should like to 42 see hundreds coming to the Lord! Where are they? I want them, I 43 want to see them. You must seek them out. You only give me name 44 and fame. Have done with name and fame; to work, my brave men, 45 to work! You have not caught my fire yet--you do not understand 46 me! You run in the old ruts of sloth and enjoyments. Down with all 47 sloth, down with all enjoyments here or hereafter. Plunge into the 48 fire and bring the people towards the Lord.

49 That you may catch my fire, that you may be intensely 50 sincere, that you may die the heroes' death on the field of battle--is 51 the constant prayer of

Vivekananda

PS. Tell Alasinga, Kidi, Dr. Balaji, and all the others not to pin their faith on what Tom, Dick, and Harry say for or against us, but to concentrate all their energy on work.

Dear Alasinga,

I am sorry you still continue to send me pamphlets and newspapers, which I have written you several times not to do. I have no time to peruse them and take notice of them. Please send them no more. I do not care a fig for what the missionaries or the Theosophists say about me. Let them do as they please. The very taking notice of them will be to give them importance. Besides, you know, the missionaries only abuse and never argue.

Now know once and for all that I do not care for name or fame, or any humbug of that type. I want to preach my ideas for the good of the world. You have done a great work; but so far as it goes, it has only given me name and fame. My life is more precious than spending it in getting the admiration of the world. I have no time for such foolery. What work have you done in the way of advancing the ideas and organising in India? None, none, none !

An organisation that will teach the Hindus mutual help and appreciation is absolutely necessary. Five thousand people attended that meeting that was held in Calcutta, and hundreds did the same in other places, to express an appreciation of my work here--well and good! But if you asked them each to give an anna, would they do it? The whole national character is one of childish dependence. They are all ready to enjoy food if it is brought to their mouth, and even some want it pushed down. . . . You do not deserve to live if you cannot help yourselves. . . .

I have given up at present my plan for the education of the masses. It will come by degrees. What I now want is a band of fiery missionaries. We must have a College in Madras to teach comparative religions, Sanskrit, the different schools of Vedanta, and some European languages; we must have a press, and papers printed in English and in the vernaculars. When this is done, then I shall know that you have accomplished something. Let the nation show that they are ready to do. If you cannot do anything of the kind in India, then let me alone. I have a message to give, let me give it to the people who appreciate it and who will work it out. What care I who takes it? "He who doeth the will of my Father," is my own. . . .

My name should not be made prominent; it is my ideas that I want to see realised. The disciples of all the prophets have always

1 inextricably mixed up the ideas of the Master with the person, and 2 at last killed the ideas for the person. The disciples of Shri 3 Ramakrishna must guard against doing the same thing. Work for 4 the idea, not the person. The Lord bless you.

5 Yours ever with
6 blessings,

14 (Written to Mrs. Ole Bull whom Swamiji called "Dhira Mata", the 15 "Steady Mother" on the occasion of the loss of her father)

16 . . . I had a premonition of your father's giving up the old body 17 and it is not my custom to write to anyone when a wave of would-be 18 inharmonious Maya strikes him. But these are the great turning 19 points in life, and I know that you are unmoved. The surface of the 20 sea rises and sinks alternately, but to the observant soul--the child 21 of light--each sinking reveals more and more of the depth and of the 22 beds of pearls and coral at the bottom. Coming and going is all pure 23 delusion. The soul never comes nor goes. Where is the place to 24 which it shall go when all space is in the soul ? When shall be the 25 time for entering and departing when all time is in the soul ? The 26 earth moves, causing the illusion of the movement of the sun; but 27 the sun does not move. So Prakriti, or Maya, or Nature, is moving, 28 changing, unfolding veil after veil, turning over leaf after leaf of this 29 grand book--while the witnessing soul drinks in knowledge, 30 unmoved, unchanged. All souls that ever have been, are, or shall 31 be, are all in the present tense and--to use a material simile--are all 32 standing at one geometrical point. Because the idea of space does 33 occur in the soul, therefore all that were ours, are ours, and will be 34 ours, are always with us, were always with us, and will be always 35 with us. We are in them. They are in us. Take these cells {diagram}.
36 Though each separate, they are all nevertheless inseparably joined 37 at AB. There they are one. Each is an individual, yet all are one at 38 the axis AB. None can escape from that axis, and however broken 39 or torn the circumference, yet by standing at the axis, we may enter 40 any one of the chambers. This axis is the Lord. There we are one 41 with Him, all in all, and all in God.

42 The cloud moves across the face of the moon, creating the 43 illusion that the moon is moving. So nature, body, matter moves on, 44 creating the illusion that the soul is moving. Thus we find at last 45 that, that instinct (or inspiration?) which men of every race, 46 whether high or low, have had to feel, viz. the presence of the 47 departed about them, is true intellectually also.

48 Each soul is a star, and all stars are set in that infinite azure, 49 that eternal sky, the Lord. There is the root, the reality, the real

1 individuality of each and all. Religion began with the search after 2 some of these stars that had passed beyond our horizon, and ended 3 in finding them all in God, and ourselves in the same place. The 4 whole secret is, then, that your father has given up the old garment 5 he was wearing and is standing where he was through all eternity.
6 Will he manifest another such garment in this or any other world? I 7 sincerely pray that he may not, until he does so in full 8 consciousness. I pray that none may be dragged anywhere by the 9 unseen power of his own past action. I pray that all may be free, 10 that is to say, may know that they are free. And if they are to dream 11 again, let us pray that their dreams be all of peace and bliss. . . .

21 Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

22 I just received your beautiful note. . . . Well, sometimes it is a 23 good discipline to be forced to work for work's sake, even to the 24 length of not being allowed to enjoy the fruits of one's labour. . . . I 25 am very glad of your criticisms and am not sorry at all. The other 26 day at Miss Thursby's I had an excited argument with a 27 Presbyterian gentleman, who, as usual, got very hot, angry, and 28 abusive. However, I was afterwards severely reprimanded by Mrs.
29 Bull for this, as such things hinder my work. So, it seems, is your 30 opinion.

31 I am glad you write about it just now, because I have been 32 giving a good deal of thought to it. In the first place, I am not at all 33 sorry for these things--perhaps that may disgust you--it may. I know 34 full well how good it is for one's worldly prospects to be sweet. I do 35 everything to be sweet, but when it comes to a horrible compromise 36 with the truth within, then I stop. I do not believe in humility. I 37 believe in Samadarshitva --same state of mind with regard to all.
38 The duty of the ordinary man is to obey the commands of his "God", 39 society; but the children of light never do so. This is an eternal law.
40 One accommodates himself to surroundings and social opinion and 41 gets all good things from society, the giver of all good to such. The 42 other stands alone and draws society up towards him. The 43 accommodating man finds a path of roses; the non-accommodating, 44 one of thorns. But the worshippers of "Vox populi" go to annihilation 45 in a moment; the children of truth live for ever.

46 I will compare truth to a corrosive substance of infinite 47 power. It burns its way in wherever it falls--in soft substance at 48 once, hard granite slowly, but it must. What is writ is writ. I am so, 49 so sorry, Sister, that I cannot make myself sweet and

1 accommodating to every black falsehood. But I cannot. I have 2 suffered for it all my life. But I cannot. I have essayed and essayed.
3 But I cannot. At last I have given it up. The Lord is great. He will 4 not allow me to become a hypocrite. Now let what is in come out. I
5 have not found a way that will please all, and I cannot but be what I 6 am, true to my own self. "Youth and beauty vanish, life and wealth 7 vanish, name and fame vanish, even the mountains crumble into 8 dust. Friendship and love vanish. Truth alone abides." God of Truth, 9 be Thou alone my guide! I am too old to change now into milk and 10 honey. Allow me to remain as I am. "Without fear--without 11 shopkeeping, caring neither for friend nor foe, do thou hold on to 12 Truth, Sannyasin, and from this moment give up this world and the 13 next and all that are to come--their enjoyments and their vanities.
14 Truth, be thou alone my guide." I have no desire for wealth or name 15 or fame or enjoyments, Sister--they are dust unto me. I wanted to 16 help my brethren. I have not the tact to earn money, bless the Lord.
17 What reason is there for me to conform to the vagaries of the world 18 around me and not obey the voice of Truth within? The mind is still 19 weak, Sister, it sometimes mechanically clutches at earthly help.
20 But I am not afraid. Fear is the greatest sin my religion teaches.

21 The last fight with the Presbyterian priest and the long fight
22 afterwards with Mrs. Bull showed me in a clear light what Manu 23 says to the Sannyasin, "Live alone, walk alone." All friendship, all 24 love, is only limitation. There never was a friendship, especially of 25 women, which was not exacting. O great sages! You were right. One 26 cannot serve the God of Truth who leans upon somebody. Be still, 27 my soul! Be alone! and the Lord is with you. Life is nothing! Death 28 is a delusion! All this is not, God alone is! Fear not, my soul! Be 29 alone. Sister, the way is long, the time is short, evening is 30 approaching. I have to go home soon. I have no time to give my 31 manners a finish. I cannot find time to deliver my message. You are 32 good, you are so kind, I will do anything for you; and do not be 33 angry, I see you all are mere children.

34 Dream no more! Oh, dream no more, my soul! In one word, I 35 have a message to give, I have no time to be sweet to the world, 36 and every attempt at sweetness makes me a hypocrite. I will die a 37 thousand deaths rather than lead a jelly-fish existence and yield to 38 every requirement of this foolish world, no matter whether it be my 39 own country or a foreign country. You are mistaken, utterly 40 mistaken, if you think I have a work, as Mrs. Bull thinks; I have no 41 work under or beyond the sun. I have a message, and I will give it 42 after my own fashion. I will neither Hinduise my message, nor 43 Christianise it, nor make it any "ise" in the world. I will only my-ise 44 it, and that is all. Liberty, Mukti, is all my religion, and everything 45 that tries to curb it, I will avoid by fight or flight. Pooh! I try to 46 pacify the priests!! Sister, do not take this amiss. But you are babies 47 and babies must submit to be taught. You have not yet drunk of that 48 fountain which makes "reason unreason, mortal immortal, this 49 world a zero, and of man a God". Come out if you can of this 50 network of foolishness they call this world. Then I will call you 51 indeed brave and free. If you cannot, cheer those that dare dash 52 this false God, society, to the ground and trample on its unmitigated

1 hypocrisy; if you cannot cheer them, pray, be silent, but do not try 2 to drag them down again into the mire with such false nonsense as 3 compromise and becoming nice and sweet.

4 I hate this world, this dream, this horrible nightmare, with its 5 churches and chicaneries, its books and black-guardisms, its fair 6 faces and false hearts, its howling righteousness on the surface and 7 utter hollowness beneath, and, above all, its sanctified shopkeeping.
8 What! measure my soul according to what the bond-slaves of the 9 world say? --Pooh! Sister, you do not know the Sannyasin. "He 10 stands on the heads of the Vedas!" say the Vedas, because he is free 11 from churches and sects and religions and prophets and books and 12 all of that ilk! Missionary or no missionary, let them howl and attack 13 me with all they can, I take them as Bhartrihari says, "Go thou thy 14 ways, Sannyasin! Some will say, 'Who is this mad man?' Others, 15 'Who is this Chandala?' Others will know thee to be a sage. Be glad 16 at the prattle of the worldlings." But when they attack, know that, 17 "The elephant passing through the marketplace is always beset by 18 curs, but he cares not. He goes straight on his own way. So it is 19 always, when a great soul appears there will be numbers to bark 20 after him."⁷⁴

21 I am living with Landsberg at 54 W. 33rd Street. He is a 22 brave and noble soul, Lord bless him. Sometimes I go to the 23 Guernseys' to sleep.

24 Lord bless you all ever and ever--and may He lead you quickly 25 out of this big humbug, the world! May you never be enchanted by 26 this old witch, the world! May Shankara help you! May Uma open 27 the door of truth for you and take away all your delusions!

28 Yours with love and
29 blessings,

Dear Alasinga,

. . . Do not for a moment think the "Yankees" are practical in religion. In that the Hindu alone is practical, the Yankee in money-making, so that as soon as I depart, the whole thing will disappear. Therefore I want to have a solid ground under my feet before I depart. Every work should be made thorough. . . . You need not insist upon preaching Shri Ramakrishna. Propagate his ideas first, though I know the world always wants the Man first, then the idea. . . . Do not figure out big plans at first, but begin slowly, feel your ground, and proceed up and up.

. . . Work on, my brave boys. We shall see the light some day.

Harmony and peace! . . . Let things slowly grow. Rome was not built in a day. The Maharaja of Mysore is dead--one of our greatest hopes. Well! the Lord is great. He will send others to help the cause.

⁷⁵ ?Swamiji took delight in gently teasing the Hale sisters (of whom Isabelle was one) about their study and practice of Christian Science. He wrote this short note from New York, and in this he slyly poked fun at the "Scientists'" practice of never confessing to sickness.

1 Life goes on the same old ruts. Sometimes I get disgusted

19 huge country, the majority do not care much about religion. . . .
20 Christianity holds its ground as a mere patriotism, and nothing 21 more.

22 . . . Now my son, do not lose courage. . . . Send me the 23 Vedanta-Sutras and the Bhashyas (commentaries) of all the 24 sects. . . . I am in His hands. What is the use of going back to India?
25 India cannot further my ideas. This country takes kindly to my 26 ideas. I will go back when I get the Command. In the meanwhile, do 27 you all gently and patiently work. If anybody attacks me, simply 28 ignore his existence. . . . My idea is for you to start a Society where 29 people could be taught the Vedas and the Vedanta, with the 30 commentaries. Work on this line at present. . . . Know that every 31 time you feel weak, you not only hurt yourself but also the Cause.
32 Infinite faith and strength are the only conditions of success.

33 Be cheerful. . . . Hold on to your own idea. . . . Above all,

45 Dear S--,

So you have made up your mind to renounce the world. I have sympathy with your desire. There is nothing so high as renunciation of self. But you must not forget that to forgo your own favourite desire for the welfare of those that depend upon you is no small sacrifice. Follow the spotless life and teachings of Shri Ramakrishna and look after the comforts of your family. You do your own duty, and leave the rest to Him.

Love makes no distinction between man and man, between an Aryan and a Mlechchha, between a Brahmana and a Pariah, nor even between a man and a woman. Love makes the whole universe as one's own home. True progress is slow but sure. Work among those young men who can devote heart and soul to this one duty--the duty of raising the masses of India. Awake them, unite them, and inspire them with this spirit of renunciation; it depends wholly on the young people of India.

Cultivate the virtue of obedience, but you must not sacrifice your own faith. No centralisation is possible unless there is obedience to superiors. No great work can be done without this centralisation of individual forces. The Calcutta Math is the main centre; the members of all other branches must act in unity and conformity with the rules of that centre.

Give up jealousy and conceit. Learn to work unitedly for others. This is the great need of our country.

U.S.A.

6th May,

1895.

Dear Alasinga,

This morning I received your last letter and that first volume of the Bhashya of Ramanujacharya. A few days ago I received another letter from you. Also I received a letter from Mr. Mani Iyer. I am doing well and going on in the same old rate. You mention about the lectures of Mr. Lund. I do not know who he is or where he is. He may be some one lecturing in Churches; for had he big platforms, we would have heard of him. Maybe, he gets them reported in some newspapers and sends them to India; and the missionaries may be making trade out of it. Well, so far I guess from the tone of your letters. It is no public affair here to call forth any defence from us; for in that case I will have to fight hundreds of them here every day. For India is now in the air, and the orthodox, including Dr. Barrows and all the rest, are struggling hard to put out the fire. In the second place, every one of these orthodox lectures against India must have a good deal of abuse hurled

1 against me. If you hear some of the filthy stories the orthodox men
2 and women invent against me, you will be astonished. Now, do you
3 mean to say that a Sannyasin should go about defending himself
4 against the brutal and cowardly attacks of these self-seeking men 5 and women? I have some very influential friends here who, now and 6 then, give them their quietus. Again, why should I waste my 7 energies defending Hinduism if the Hindus all go to sleep? What 8 are you three hundred millions of people doing there, especially 9 those that are so proud of their learning etc.? Why do you not take 10 up the fighting and leave me to teach and preach? Here am I 11 struggling day and night in the midst of stranger. . . . What help 12 does India send? Did the world ever see a nation with less 13 patriotism than the Indian? If you could send and maintain for a few 14 years a dozen well-educated strong men to preach in Europe and 15 America, you would do immense service to India, both morally and 16 politically. Every man who morally sympathises with India becomes 17 a political friend. Many of the Western people think of you as a 18 nation of half-naked savages, and therefore only fit to be whipped 19 into civilisation. If you three hundred millions become cowed by the 20 missionaries--you cowards--and dare not say a word, what can one 21 man do in a far distant land? Even what I have done, you do not 22 deserve.

23 Why do you not send your defences to the American 24 magazines? What prevents you? You race of cowards--physical, 25 moral, and spiritual! You animals fit to be treated as you are with 26 two ideas before you--lust and money--you want to prod a Sannyasin
27 to a life of constant fighting, and you are afraid of the "Saheb logs", 28 even missionaries! And you will do great things, pish! Why not some 29 of you write a beautiful defence and send it to the Arena Publishing 30 Company of Boston? The Arena is a magazine which will gladly 31 publish it and perhaps pay you hard money. So far it ends. Think of 32 this when you will be tempted to be a fool. Think that up to date 33 every blackguard of a Hindu that had hitherto come to Western 34 lands had too often criticised his own faith and country in order to 35 get praise or money. You know that I did not come to seek name and 36 fame; it was forced upon me. Why shall I go back to India? Who will 37 help me? . . . You are children, you prattle you do not know what.
38 Where are the men in Madras who will give up the world to preach
39 religion? Worldliness and realisation of God cannot go together. I 40 am the one man who dared defend his country, and I have given 41 them such ideas as they never expected from a Hindu. There are 42 many who are against me, but I will never be a coward like you.
43 There are also thousands in the country who are my friends, and 44 hundreds who would follow me unto death; every year they will 45 increase, and if I live and work with them, my ideals of life and 46 religion will be fulfilled. Do you see?

47 I do not hear much now about the Temple Universal that was 48 to be built in America; yet I have a firm footing in New York, the 49 very centre of American life, and so my work will go on. I am taking 50 several of my disciples to a summer retreat to finish their training 51 in Yoga and Bhakti and Jnana, and then they will be able to help 52 carry the work on. Now my boys, go to work.

1 Within a month I shall be in a position to send some money
2 for the paper. Do not go about begging from the Hindu beggars. I
3 will do it all myself with my own brain and strong right hand. I do
4 not want the help of any man here or in India. . . . Do not press too 5 much the Ramakrishna Avatara.

6 Now I will tell you my discovery. All of religion is contained in 7 the Vedanta, that is, in the three stages of the Vedanta philosophy, 8 the Dvaita, Vishishtadvaita and Advaita; one comes after the other.
9 These are the three stages of spiritual growth in man. Each one is 10 necessary. This is the essential of religion: the Vedanta, applied to 11 the various ethnic customs and creeds of India, is Hinduism. The 12 first stage, i.e. Dvaita, applied to the ideas of the ethnic groups of 13 Europe, is Christianity; as applied to the Semitic groups, 14 Mohammedanism. The Advaita, as applied in its Yoga-perception 15 form, is Buddhism etc. Now by religion is meant the Vedanta; the 16 applications must vary according to the different needs, 17 surroundings, and other circumstances of different nations. You will 18 find that although the philosophy is the same, the Shaktas, Shaivas, 19 etc. apply it each to their own special cult and forms. Now, in your 20 journal write article after article on these three systems, showing 21 their harmony as one following after the other, and at the same time 22 keeping off the ceremonial forms altogether. That is, preach the 23 philosophy, the spiritual part, and let people suit it to their own 24 forms. I wish to write a book on this subject, therefore I wanted the 25 three Bhashyas; but only one volume of the Ramanuja (Bhashya) 26 has reached me as yet.

27 The American Theosophists have seceded from the others, 28 and now they hate India. Poor things! And Sturdy of England who 29 has lately been in India and met my brother Shivananda wrote me a 30 letter wanting to know when I go over to England. I wrote him a 31 nice letter. What about Babu Akshay Kumar Ghosh? I do not hear 32 anything from him more. Give the missionaries and others their 33 dues. Get up some of our very strong men and write a nice, strong, 34 but good-toned article on the present religious revival in India and 35 send it to some American magazine. I am acquainted with only one 36 or two of them. You know I am not much of a writer. I am not in the 37 habit of going from door to door begging. I sit quiet and let things 38 come to me. . . . Now, my children, I could have made a grand 39 success in the way of organising here, if I were a worldly hypocrite.
40 Alas! That is all of religion here; money and name=priest, money 41 and lust=layman. I am to create a new order of humanity here who 42 are sincere believers in God and care nothing for the world. This 43 must be slow, very slow. In the meantime you go on with your work, 44 and I shall steer my boat straight ahead. The journal must not be 45 flippant but steady, calm, and high-toned. . . . Get hold of a band of 46 fine, steady writers. . . . Be perfectly unselfish, be steady and work 47 on. We will do great things; do not fear. . . . One thing more. Be the 48 servant of all, and do not try in the least to govern others. That will 49 excite jealousy and destroy everything. . . . Go on. You have worked 50 wonderfully well. We do not wait for help, we will work it out, my 51 boy, be self-reliant, faithful and patient. Do not antagonise my other 52 friends, live in harmony with all. My eternal love to all.

1 proverb says, that "a pestle must pound even if it goes to heaven". I 2 have to work hard all the same. I am going to Chicago in the 3 beginning of August. When are you starting?

4 All our friends here send their respects to you. Hoping you all 5 bliss and joy and health, and ever praying for the same.

6 I remain, yours
7 affectionately,

8 Vivekananda

15 Dear Kidi,

16 I will write you a whole letter instead of a line. I am glad you 17 are progressing. You are mistaken in thinking that I am not going to 18 return to India; I am coming soon. I am not giving to failures, and 19 here I have planted a seed, and it is going to become a tree, and it 20 must. Only I am afraid it will hurt its growth if I give it up too 21 soon. . . .

22 Work on, my boy. Rome was not built in a day. I am guided by 23 the Lord, so everything will come all right in the end.

24 With my love ever and ever to you,

33 Dear Alasinga,

34 I received your missionary book and the Ramnad photos. I 35 have written to the Raja as well as the Dewan at Mysore. The 36 missionary pamphlet must have reached here long ago, as the 37 Ramabai circle controversy with Dr. Janes savoured of it, it seems.
38 Now you need not be afraid of anything. There is one misstatement 39 in that pamphlet. I never went to a big hotel in this country, and 40 very few times to any other. At Baltimore, the small hotels, being 41 ignorant, would not take in a black man, thinking him a negro. So 42 my host, Dr. Vrooman, had to take me to a larger one, because they 43 knew the difference between a negro and a foreigner. Let me tell 44 you, Alasinga, that you have to defend yourselves. Why do you

1 behave like babies? If anybody attacks your religion, why cannot 2 you defend it? As for me, you need not be afraid, I have more 3 friends than enemies here, and in this country one-third are 4 Christians, and only a small number of the educated care about the 5 missionaries. Again, the very fact of the missionaries being against 6 anything makes the educated like it. They are less of a power here
7 now and are becoming less so every day. If their attacks pain you, 8 why do you behave like a petulant child and refer to me? . . .
9 Cowardice is no virtue.

10 Here I have already got a respectable following. Next year I 11 will organise it on a working basis, and then the work will be 12 carried on. And when I am off to India, I have friends who will back 13 me here and help me in India too; so you need not fear. So long as 14 you shriek at the missionary attempts and jump without being able 15 to do anything, I laugh at you; you are little dollies, that is what you 16 are. . . . What can Swami do for old babies!!

17 I know, my son, I shall have to come and manufacture men 18 out of you. I know that India is only inhabited by women and 19 eunuchs. So do not fret. I will have to get means to work there. I do 20 not put myself in the hands of imbeciles. You need not worry, do 21 what little you can. I have to work alone from top to bottom. . . .
22 "This Atman (Self) is not to be reached by cowards." You need not 23 be afraid for me. The Lord is with me, you defend yourselves only 24 and show me you can do that; and I will be satisfied. Don't bother 25 me any more with what any one says about me. I am not waiting to 26 hear any fool's judgment of me. You babies, great results are 27 attained only by great patience, great courage, and great 28 attempts. . . . Kidi's mind is taking periodic somersaults, I am 29 afraid. . . .

30 The brave alone do great things, not the cowards.

31 Know once for all, you faithless ones, that I am in the hands 32 of the Lord. So long as I am pure and His servant, not a hair of my 33 head will be touched. . . . Do something for the nation, then the 34 nation will be with you. Be brave, be brave! Man dies but once. My 35 disciples must not be cowards.

36 Ever yours
37 with love,

{to Mrs. William Sturges}

47 A glorious time to you, dear Mother, and I am sure this letter 48 will find you in all health. Many thanks for the $50 you sent; it went 1 a long way.

2 We have had such a nice time here. Two ladies came up all
3 the way from Detroit to be with us here. They are so pure and good.
4 I am going from the Thousand Island to Detroit and thence to 5 Chicago.

6 Our class in New York is going on, and they have carried it
7 bravely on, although I was not there.

8 By the by, the two ladies who have come from Detroit were in 9 the class, and unfortunately were mighty frightened with imps and 10 other persons of that ilk. They have been taught to put a little salt, 11 just a little, in burning alcohol, and if there is a black precipitate, 12 that must be the impurities showing the presence of the imps.
13 However, these two ladies had too much fright from the imps. It is 14 said that these imps are everywhere filling the whole universe.
15 Father Leggett must be awfully downcast at your absence, as I did 16 not hear from him up to date. Well, it is better to let grief have its 17 way. So I do not bother him any more.

18 Aunt Joe Joe must have had a terrible time at sea. All is well 19 that ends well.

20 The babies⁷⁶ must be enjoying their stay in Germany very 21 much. My shiploads of love to them.

22 We all here send you love, and I wish you a life that will be 23 like a torch to generations to come.

34 Dear Mother {Mrs. Betty Sturges},

35 I am sure you are in New York by this time, and that it is not 36 very hot there now.

37 We are having great times here. Marie Louise arrived 38 yesterday. So we are exactly seven now including all that have come 39 yet.

40 All the sleep of the world has come upon me. I sleep at least 41 two hours during the day and sleep through the whole night as a 42 piece of log. This is a reaction, I think, from the sleeplessness of 43 New York. I am also writing and reading a little, and have a class

1 ⁷⁶ ?Hollister and Alberta--then at school in Germany.

1 every morning after breakfast. The meals are being conducted on 2 the strictest vegetarian principles, and I am fasting a good deal.

3 I am determined that several pounds of my fat shall be off 4 before I leave. This is a Methodist place, and they will have their 5 camp meeting in August. It is a very beautiful spot, but I am afraid 6 it becomes too crowded during the season.

7 Miss Joe Joe's fly-bite has been cured completely by this time,
8 I am sure. Where is . . . Mother? Kindly give her my best regards 9 when you write her next.

10 I will always look back upon the delightful time I had at 11 Percy, and always thank Mr. Leggett for that treat. I shall be able to 12 go to Europe with him. When you meet him next, kindly give him my 13 eternal love and gratitude. The world is always bettered by the love 14 of the likes of him.

15 Are you with your friend, Mrs. Dora (long German name)?
16 She is a noble soul, a genuine Mahatma (great soul). Kindly give 17 her my love and regards.

18 I am in a sort of sleepy, lazy, happy state now and do not 19 seem to dislike it. Marie Louise brought a little tortoise from New 20 York, her pet. Now, arriving here, the pet found himself surrounded 21 with his natural element. So by dint of persistent tumbling and 22 crawling, he has left the love and fondlings of Marie Louise far, far 23 behind. She was a little sorry at first, but we preached liberty with 24 such a vigour that she had to come round quick.

25 May the Lord bless you and yours for ever and ever is the 26 constant prayer of

27 Vivekananda

28 PS. Joe Joe did not send the birch bark book. Mrs. Bull was 29 very glad to have the one I had sent her.

30 I had a large number of very beautiful letters from India.
31 Everything is all right there. Send my love to the babies on the 32 other side--the real "innocents abroad".

43 I see you are enjoying New York very much, so excuse my 44 breaking into your reverie with a letter.

45 I had two beautiful letters from Miss MacLeod and Mrs.

1 Sturges. Also they sent over two pretty birch bark books. I have 2 filled them with Sanskrit texts and translations, and they go by 3 today's post.

4 Mrs. Dora⁷⁷ is giving, I hear, some startling performances in 5 the Mahatma line.

6 Since leaving Percy⁷⁸ I have invitations to come over to 7 London from unexpected quarters, and that I look forward to with 8 great expectations.

9 I do not want to lose this opportunity of working in London.
10 And so your invitation, coupled with the London one, is, I know, a 11 divine call for further work.

12 I shall be here all this month and only have to go to Chicago
13 for a few days sometime in August.

14 Don't fret, Father Leggett, this is the best time for 15 expectation--when sure in love.

16 Lord bless you ever and ever, and may all happiness be yours

27 . . . About my coming to India, the matter stands thus. I am, 28 as your Highness well knows, a man of dogged perseverance. I
29 have planted a seed in this country; it is already a plant, and I
30 expect it to be a tree very soon. I have got a few hundred followers.
31 I shall make several Sannyasins, and then I go to India, leaving the 32 work to them. The more the Christian priests oppose me, the more I 33 am determined to leave a permanent mark on their country. . . . I 34 have already some friends in London. I am going there by the end 35 of August. . . . This winter anyway has to be spent partly in London 36 and partly in New York, and then I shall be free to go to India.
37 There will be enough men to carry on the work here after this 38 winter if the Lord is kind. Each work has to pass through these 39 stages--ridicule, opposition, and then acceptance. Each man who 40 thinks ahead of his time is sure to be misunderstood. So opposition

31 {to Alasinga}

32 By the time this reaches you, dear Alasinga, I shall be in 33 Paris. . . . I have done a good deal of work this year and hope to do 34 a good deal more in the next. Don't bother about the missionaries.
35 It is quite natural that they should cry. Who does not when his 36 bread is dwindling away? The missionary funds have got a big gap 37 the last two years, and it is on the increase. However, I wish the 38 missionaries all success. So long as you have love for God and Guru 39 and faith in truth, nothing can hurt you, my son. But the loss of any 40 of these is dangerous. You have remarked well; my ideas are going 41 to work in the West better than in India. . . . I have done more for 42 India than India ever did for me. . . . I believe in truth, the Lord 43 sends me workers by the scores wherever I go--and they are not 44 like the . . . disciples either--they are ready to give up their lives for

1 their Guru. Truth is my God, the universe my country. I do not 2 believe in duty. Duty is the curse of the Samsari (householder), not 3 for the Sannyasin. Duty is humbug. I am free, my bonds are cut; 4 what care I where this body goes or does not go? You have helped 5 me well right along. The Lord will reward you. I sought praise
6 neither from India nor from America, nor do I seek such bubbles. I 7 have a truth to teach, I, the child of God. And He that gave me the 8 truth will send me fellow workers from the earth's bravest and best.
9 You Hindus will see in a few years what the Lord does in the West.
10 You are like the Jews of old--dogs in the manger, who neither eat 11 nor allow others to eat. You have no religion, your God is the 12 kitchen, your Bible the cooking pots. . . . You are a few brave 13 lads. . . . Hold on, boys, no cowards among my children. . . . Are 14 great things ever done smoothly? Time, patience, and indomitable 15 will must show. I could have told you many things that would have 16 made your heart leap, but I will not. I want iron wills and hearts 17 that do not know how to quake. Hold on. The Lord bless you.

27 Dear Mrs. Bull,

28 . . . Now here is another letter from Mr. Sturdy. I send it over 29 to you. See how things are being prepared ahead. Don't you think 30 this coupled with Mr. Leggett's invitation as a divine call? I think so 31 and am following it. I am going by the end of August with Mr.
32 Leggett to Paris, and then I go to London.

33 What little can be done for my brethren and my work is all 34 the help I want from you now. I have done my duty to my people 35 fairly well. Now for the world that gave me this body--the country 36 that gave me the ideas, the humanity which allows me to be one of 37 them!

38 The older I grow, the more I see behind the idea of the 39 Hindus that man is the greatest of all beings. So say the 40 Mohammedans too. The angels were asked by Allah to bow down to 41 Adam. Iblis did not, and therefore he became Satan. This earth is 42 higher than all heavens; this is the greatest school in the universe; 43 and the Mars or Jupiter people cannot be higher than we, because 44 they cannot communicate with us. The only so-called higher beings 45 are the departed, and these are nothing but men who have taken 46 another body. This is finer, it is true, but still a man-body, with 47 hands and feet, and so on. And they live on this earth in another 48 Akasha, without being absolutely invisible. They also think, and 49 have consciousness, and everything else like us. So they also are

1 men, so are the Devas, the angels. But man alone becomes God ;
2 and they all have to become men again in order to become God. . . .

30 Dear Alasinga,

31 . . . I am surprised you take so seriously the missionaries' 32 nonsense. If the people in India want me to keep strictly to my 33 Hindu diet, please tell them to send me a cook and money enough 34 to keep him. This silly bossism without a mite of real help makes 35 me laugh. On the other hand, if the missionaries tell you that I have 36 ever broken the two great vows of the Sannyasin--chastity and 37 poverty--tell them that they are big liars. Please write to the 38 missionary Hume asking him categorically to write you what 39 misdemeanour he saw in me, or give you the names of his 40 informants, and whether the information was first-hand or not, that 41 will settle the question and expose the whole thing. . . .

42 As for me, mind you, I stand at nobody's dictation. I know my 43 mission in life, and no chauvinism about me; I belong as much to 44 India as to the world, no humbug about that. I have helped you all I

1 could. You must now help yourselves. What country has any special
2 claim on me? Am I any nation's slave? Don't talk any more silly 3 nonsense, you faithless atheists.

4 I have worked hard and sent all the money I got to Calcutta
5 and Madras, and then after doing all this, stand their silly dictation!
6 Are you not ashamed? What do I owe to them? Do I care a fig for 7 their praise or fear their blame? I am a singular man, my son, not 8 even you can understand me yet. Do your work; if you cannot, stop; 9 but do not try to "boss" me with your nonsense. I see a greater 10 Power than man, or God, or devil at my back. I require nobody's 11 help. I have been all my life helping others. . . . They cannot raise a 12 few rupees to help the work of the greatest man their country every 13 produced--Ramakrishna Paramahansa; and they talk nonsense and 14 want to dictate to the man for whom they did nothing, and who did 15 everything he could for them! Such is the ungrateful world!

16 Do you mean to say I am born to live and die one of those 17 caste-ridden, superstitious, merciless, hypocritical, atheistic
18 cowards that you find only amongst the educated Hindus? I hate 19 cowardice; I will have nothing to do with cowards or political 20 nonsense. I do not believe in any politics. God and truth are the only 21 politics in the world, everything else is trash.

22 I am going to London tomorrow. . . .

32 Dear Alasinga,

33 . . . I have already delivered my first address, and you may 34 see how well it has been received by the notice in the Standard.
35 The Standard is one of the most influential conservative papers. I 36 am going to be in London for a month, then I go off to America and 37 shall come back again next summer. So far you see the seed is well 38 sown in England. . . .

39 Take courage and work on. Patience and steady work--this is 40 the only way. Go on; remember--patience and purity and courage 41 and steady work. . . . So long as you are pure, and true to your 42 principles, you will never fail--Mother will never leave you, and all 43 blessings will be yours.

LIV

London

18th

November, 1895

Dear Alasinga,

. . . In England my work is really splendid, I am astonished myself at it. The English people do not talk much in the newspapers, but they work silently. I am sure of more work in England than in America. Bands and bands come, and I have no room for so many; so they squat on the floor, ladies and all. I tell them to imagine that they are under the sky of India, under a spreading banyan, and they like the idea. I shall have to go away next week, and they are so sorry. Some think my work here will be hurt a little if I go away so soon. I do not think so. I do not depend on men or things. The Lord alone I depend upon--and He works through me.

. . . Please everybody without becoming a hypocrite and without being a coward. Hold on to your own ideas with strength and purity, and whatever obstructions may now be in your way, the world is bound to listen to you in the long run. . . .

I have no time even to die, as the Bengalis say. I work, work, work, and earn my own bread and help my country, and this all alone, and then get only criticism from friends and foes for all that! Well, you are but children, I shall have to bear everything. I have sent for a Sannyasin from Calcutta and shall leave him to work in London. I want one more for America--I want my own man. Guru-Bhakti is the foundation of all spiritual development.

. . . I am really tired from incessant work. Any other Hindu would have died if he had to work as hard as I have to. . . . I want to go to India for a long rest. . . .

Ever yours with love and
blessings,

Vivekananda

Dear Alasinga,

. . . Have patience and be faithful unto death. Do not fight among yourselves. Be perfectly pure in money dealings. . . . We will do great things yet. . . . So long as you have faith and honesty and

1 devotion, everything will prosper.

2 . . . In translating the Suktas, pay particular attention to the 3 Bhashyakaras (commentators), and pay no attention whatever to 4 the orientalist. They do not understand a single thing about our 5 Shastras (scriptures). It is not given to dry philologists to 6 understand philosophy or religion. . . . For instance the word Anid-7 avatam in the Rig Veda was translated--"He lived without 8 breathing". Now, here the reference is really to the chief Prana, and 9 Avatam has the root meaning for unmoved, that is, without 10 vibration. It describes the state in which the universal cosmic
11 energy, or Prana, remains before the Kalpa (cycle of creation) 12 begins: vide--the Bhashyakaras. Explain according to our sages and 13 not according to the so-called European scholars. What do they 14 know?

15 . . . Be bold and fearless, and the road will be clear. . . . Mind, 16 you have nothing whatsoever to do with the Theosophists. If you all 17 stand by me and do not lose patience, I assure you, we shall do 18 great work yet. The great work will be in England, my boy, by and 19 by. I feel you sometimes get disheartened, and I am afraid you get 20 temptations to play in the hands of the Theosophists. Mind you, the 21 Guru-Bhakta will conquer the world--this is the one evidence of 22 history. . . . It is faith that makes a lion of a man. You must always 23 remember how much work I have to do. Sometimes I have to 24 deliver two or three lectures a day--and thus I make my way against 25 all odds--hard work; any weaker man would die.

26 . . . Hold on with faith and strength; be true, be honest, be 27 pure, and don't quarrel among yourselves. Jealousy is the bane of 28 our race.

29 With love to you and all our friends there,

30 Yours,

31 Vivekananda

40 Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

1 I was astonished at learning that you have not received my 2 letter yet. I wrote immediately after the receipt of yours and also 3 sent you some booklets of three lectures I delivered in New York.
4 These Sunday public lectures are now taken down in shorthand and 5 printed. Three of them made two little pamphlets, several copies of 6 which I have forwarded to you. I shall be in New York two weeks 7 more, and then I go to Detroit to come back to Boston for a week or 8 two.

9 My health is very much broken down this year by constant 10 work. I am very nervous. I have not slept a single night soundly this 11 winter. I am sure I am working too much, yet a big work awaits me 12 in England.

13 I will have to go through it, and then I hope to reach India 14 and have a rest all the rest of my life. I have tried at least to do my 15 best for the world, leaving the result to the Lord. Now I am longing 16 for rest. Hope I will get some, and the Indian people will give me 17 up. How I would like to become dumb for some years and not talk 18 at all! I was not made for these struggles and fights of the world. I 19 am naturally dreamy and restful. I am a born idealist, can only live 20 in a world of dreams; the very touch of fact disturbs my visions and 21 makes me unhappy. Thy will be done!

22 I am ever grateful to you four sisters; to you I owe everything 23 I have in this country. May you be ever blessed and happy.
24 Wherever I be, you will always be remembered with the deepest 25 gratitude and sincerest love. The whole life is a succession of 26 dreams. My ambition is to be a conscious dreamer, that is all. My 27 love to all--to Sister Josephine.

28 Ever your affectionate
29 brother,

37 Blessed and Beloved {E.T. Sturdy},

38 About the Sannyasin coming over from India, I am sure he 39 will help you in the translation work, also in other work. Later on, 40 when I come, I may send him over to America. Today another 41 Sannyasin has been added to the list. This time it is a man who is a 42 genuine American and a religious teacher of some standing in the 43 country. He was Dr. Street. He is now Yogananda, as his leaning is 44 all towards Yoga.

45 I have been sending regular reports to the Brahmavadin
46 from here. They will be published soon. It takes such a long time for 47 things to reach India! Things are growing nobly in America. As 48 there was no hocus-pocus from the beginning, the Vedanta is

1 drawing the attention of the highest classes in American society.
2 Sarah Bernhardt, the French actress, has been playing "Iziel" here.
3 It is a sort of Frenchified life of Buddha, where a courtesan "Iziel"
4 wants to seduce the Buddha, under the banyan--and the Buddha 5 preaches to her the vanity of the world, whilst she is sitting all the 6 time in Buddha's lap. However, all is well that ends well--the 7 courtesan fails. Madame Bernhardt acts the courtesan. I went to 8 see the Buddha business--and Madame spying me in the audience 9 wanted to have an interview with me. A swell family of my 10 acquaintance arranged the affair. There were besides Madame M.
11 Morrel, the celebrated singer, also the great electrician Tesla.
12 Madame is a very scholarly lady and has studied up the 13 metaphysics a good deal. M. Morrel was being interested, but Mr.
14 Tesla was charmed to hear about the Vedantic Prana and Akasha
15 and the Kalpas, which according to him are the only theories
16 modern science can entertain. Now both Akasha and Prana again 17 are produced from the cosmic Mahat, the Universal Mind, the 18 Brahma or Ishvara. Mr. Tesla thinks he can demonstrate 19 mathematically that force and matter are reducible to potential 20 energy. I am to go and see him next week, to get this new 21 mathematical demonstration.

22 In that case, the Vedantic cosmology will be placed on the 23 surest of foundations. I am working a good deal now upon the 24 cosmology and eschatology⁷⁹ of the Vedanta. I clearly see their 25 perfect unison with modern science, and the elucidation of the one 26 will be followed by that of the other. I intend to write a book later 27 on in the form of questions and answers.⁸⁰ The first chapter will be 28 on cosmology showing the harmony between Vedantic theories and 29 modern science.

30 {chart showing relationship between energy and Prana}

31 The eschatology will be explained from the Advaitic 32 standpoint only. That is to say, the dualist claims that the soul after 33 death passes on to the Solar sphere, thence to the Lunar sphere, 34 thence to the Electric sphere. Thence he is accompanied by a 35 Purusha to Brahmaloaka. (Thence, says the Advaitist, he goes to 36 Nirvana.)

37 Now on the Advaitic side, it is held that the soul neither 38 comes nor goes, and that all these spheres or layers of the universe 39 are only so many varying products of Akasha and Prana. That is to 40 say, the lowest or most condensed is the Solar sphere, consisting of 41 the visible universe, in which Prana appears as physical force, and 42 Akasha as sensible matter. The next is called the Lunar sphere, 43 which surrounds the Solar sphere. This is not the moon at all, but 44 the habitation of the gods, that is to say, Prana appears in it as 45 psychic forces, and Akasha as Tanmatras or fine particles. Beyond

1 ⁷⁹ ?That is, doctrine of the last things--death, judgment, etc.
2

3 ⁸⁰ ?This was never done. But from his lectures in London in 1896, it
4 is easy to see that his mind was still working on these ideas. (See 5 also Vol. VIII, pp. 277-78, 363).
6

1 this is the Electric sphere, that is to say, a condition in which the 2 Prana is almost inseparable from Akasha, and you can hardly tell
3 whether Electricity is force or matter. Next is the Brahmalo-4 ka, where there is neither Prana nor Akasha, but both are merged in 5 the mind-stuff, the primal energy. And here--there being neither 6 Prana nor Akasha--the Jiva contemplates the whole universe as 7 Samashti or the sum total of Mahat or mind. This appears as a 8 Purusha, an abstract universal soul, yet not the Absolute, for still 9 there is multiplicity. From this the Jiva finds at last that Unity which 10 is the end. Advaitism says that these are the visions which rise in 11 succession before the Jiva, who himself neither goes nor comes, and 12 that in the same way this present vision has been projected. The 13 projection (Srishti) and dissolution must take place in the same 14 order, only one means going backward, and the other coming out.

15 Now as each individual can only see his own universe, that 16 universe is created with his bondage and goes away with his 17 liberation, although it remains for others who are in bondage. Now 18 name and form constitute the universe. A wave in the ocean is a 19 wave, only in so far as it is bound by name and form. If the wave 20 subsides, it is the ocean, but those name and form have 21 immediately vanished for ever. So though the name and form of 22 wave could never be without water that was fashioned into the 23 wave by them, yet the name and form themselves were not the 24 wave. They die as soon as ever it returns to water. But other names 25 and forms live in relation to other waves. This name-and-form is 26 called Maya, and the water is Brahman. The wave was nothing but 27 water all the time, yet as a wave it had the name and form. Again 28 this name and form cannot remain for one moment separated from 29 the wave, although the wave as water can remain eternally 30 separate from name and form. But because the name and form can 31 never be separated, they can never be said to exist. Yet they are not 32 zero. This is called Maya.

33 I want to work all this out carefully, but you will see at a 34 glance that I am on the right track. It will take more study in 35 physiology, on the relations between the higher and lower centres, 36 to fill out the psychology of mind, Chitta (mind-stuff), and Buddhi 37 (intellect), and so on. But I have clear light now, free of all hocus-38 pocus. I want to give them dry, hard reason, softened in the 39 sweetest syrup of love and made spicy with intense work, and 40 cooked in the kitchen of Yoga, so that even a baby can easily digest 41 it.

42 Yours etc.,

43 Vivekananda

1 Dear Alasinga,

2 . . . I have used some very harsh words in my letters, which 3 you ought to excuse, as you know, I get nervous at times. The work 4 is terribly hard; and the more it is growing, the harder it is 5 becoming. I need a long rest very badly. Yet a great work is before 6 me in England.

7 Have patience, my son--it will grow beyond all your 8 expectations. . . . Every work has got to pass through hundreds of 9 difficulties before succeeding. Those that persevere will see the 10 light, sooner or later.

11 I have succeeded now in rousing the very heart of the 12 American civilisation, New York, but it has been a terrific struggle. .
13 . . I have spent nearly all I had on this New York work and in 14 England. Now things are in such a shape that they will go on. Just 15 as I am writing to you, every one of my bones is paining after last 16 afternoon's long Sunday public lecture. Then you see, to put the 17 Hindu ideas into English and then make out of dry philosophy and 18 intricate mythology and queer startling psychology, a religion which 19 shall be easy, simple, popular, and at the same time meet the 20 requirements of the highest minds--is a task only those can 21 understand who have attempted it. The dry, abstract Advaita must 22 become living--poetic--in everyday life; out of hopelessly intricate 23 mythology must come concrete moral forms; and out of bewildering
24 Yogi-ism must come the most scientific and practical psychology-- 25 and all this must be put in a form so that a child may grasp it. That 26 is my life's work. The Lord only knows how far I shall succeed. "To 27 work we have the right, not to the fruits thereof." It is hard work, 28 my boy, hard work! To keep one's self steady in the midst of this 29 whirl of Kama-Kanchana (lust and gold) and hold on to one's own 30 ideals, until disciples are moulded to conceive of the ideas of 31 realisation and perfect renunciation, is indeed difficult work, my 32 boy. Thank God, already there is great success. I cannot blame the 33 missionaries and others for not understanding me--they hardly ever 34 saw a man who did not care in the least about women and money.
35 At first they could not believe it to be possible; how could they? You 36 must not think that the Western nations have the same ideas of 37 chastity and purity as the Indians. Their equivalents are virtue and 38 courage. . . . People are now flocking to me. Hundreds have now 39 become convinced that there are men who can really control their 40 bodily desires; and reverence and respect for these principles are 41 growing. All things come to him who waits. May you be blessed for 42 ever and ever!

43 Yours with
44 love,

Vivekananda

Dear Alasinga,

. . . One of my new Sannyasins is indeed a woman. . . . The others are men. I am going to make some more in England and take them over to India with me. These "white" faces will have more influence in India than the Hindus; moreover, they are vigorous, the Hindus are dead. The only hope of India is from the masses. The upper classes are physically and morally dead. . . .

My success is due to my popular style--the greatness of a teacher consists in the simplicity of his language.

. . . I am going to England next month. I am afraid I have worked too much; my nerves are almost shattered by this long-continued work. I don't want you to sympathise, but only I write this so that you may not expect much from me now. Work on, the best way you can. I have very little hope of being able to do great things now. I am glad, however, that a good deal of literature has been created by taking down stenographic notes of my lectures. Four books are ready. . . . Well, I am satisfied that I have tried my best to do good, and shall have a clear conscience when I retire from work and sit down in a cave.

With love and blessings to all,

Vivekananda

Dear Alasinga,

. . . Push on with the work. I will do all I can. . . . If it pleases the Lord, yellow-garbed Sannyasins will be common here and in England. Work on, my children.

Mind, so long as you have faith in your Guru, nothing will be able to obstruct your way. That translation of the three Bhashyas (commentaries) will be a great thing in the eyes of the Westerners.

. . . Wait, my child, wait and work on. Patience, patience. . . . I will burst on the public again in good time. . . .

Dear Dr. Nanjunda Rao,

I received your note this morning. As I am sailing for England tomorrow, I can only write a few hearty lines. I have every sympathy with your proposed magazine for boys, and will do my best to help it on. You ought to make it independent, following the same lines as the Brahmavadin, only making the style and matter much more popular. As for example, there is a great chance, much more than you ever dream of, for those wonderful stories scattered all over the Sanskrit literature, to be re-written and made popular. That should be the one great feature of your journal. I will write stories, as many as I can, when time permits. Avoid all attempts to make the journal scholarly--the Brahmavadin stands for that--and it will slowly make its way all over the world, I am sure. Use the simplest language possible, and you will succeed. The main feature should be the teaching of principles through stories. Don't make it metaphysical at all. As to the business part, keep it wholly in your hands. "Too many cooks spoil the broth." In India the one thing we lack is the power of combination, organisation, the first secret of which is obedience.

I have also promised to help starting a magazine in Bengali in Calcutta. Only the first year I used to charge for my lectures. The last two years, my work was entirely free of all charges. As such, I have almost no money to send you or the Calcutta people. But I will get people to help you with funds very soon. Go on bravely. Do not expect success in a day or a year. Always hold on to the highest. Be steady. Avoid jealousy and selfishness. Be obedient and eternally faithful to the cause of truth, humanity, and your country, and you will move the world. Remember it is the person, the life, which is the secret of power--nothing else. Keep this letter and read the last lines whenever you feel worried or jealous. Jealousy is the bane of all slaves. It is the bane of our nation. Avoid that always. All blessings attend you and all success.

Yours

affectionately,

Vivekananda

Dear Dr. Nanjunda Rao,

The numbers of Prabuddha Bharata have been received and distributed too to the class. It is very satisfactory. It will have a great sale, no doubt, in India. In America I may get also a number

1 of subscribers. I have already arranged for advertising it in America
2 and Goodyear has done it already. But here in England the progress 3 will be slower indeed. The great drawback here is--they all want to 4 start papers of their own; and it is right that it should be so, seeing 5 that, after all, no foreigner will ever write the English language as 6 well as the native Englishman, and the ideas, when put in good 7 English, will spread farther than in Hindu English. Then again it is 8 much more difficult to write a story in a foreign language than an 9 essay. I am trying my best to get you subscribers here. But you 10 must not depend on any foreign help. Nations, like individuals, must 11 help themselves. This is real patriotism. If a nation cannot do that, 12 its time has not yet come. It must wait. It is from Madras that the 13 new light must spread all over India. With this end you must work.
14 One point I will remark however. The cover is simply barbarous. It 15 is awful and hideous. If it is possible, change it. Make it symbolical 16 and simple, without human figures at all. The banyan tree does not 17 mean awakening, nor does the hill, nor the saint, nor the European 18 couple. The lotus is a symbol of regeneration.

19 We are awfully behindhand in art especially in that of 20 painting. For instance, make a small scene of spring re-awakening 21 in a forest, showing how the leaves and buds are coming again.
22 Slowly go on, there are hundreds of ideas to be put forward. You 23 see the symbol I made for the Raja-Yoga, printed by Longman 24 Green and Co. You can get it at Bombay. It consists of my lectures 25 on Raja-Yoga in New York.

26 I am going to Switzerland next Sunday, and shall return to 27 London in the autumn, and take up the work again. . . . I want rest 28 very badly, you know.

30 blessings etc.,

38 Dear Alasinga,

39 I learnt from your letter the bad financial state the 40 Brahmavadin is in. I will try to help you when I go back to London.
41 You must not lower the tone. Keep up the paper. Very soon I will be 42 able to help you in such a manner as to make you free of this 43 nonsense teacher business. Do not be afraid. Great things are going 44 to be done, my child. Take heart. The Brahmavadin is a jewel--it 45 must not perish. Of course, such a paper has to be kept up by 46 private help always, and we will do it. Hold on a few months more.

47 Max Muller's article of Shri Ramakrishna has been published 48 in the Nineteenth Century. I will send you a copy as soon as I get it.

1 He writes me very nice letters and wants material for a big work on 2 Ramakrishna's life. Write to Calcutta to send all the material they 3 can to Max Muller.

4 I have received the communication to the American paper
5 before. You must not publish it in India. Enough of this newspaper 6 blazoning, I am tired of it anyhow. Let us go our own way, and let 7 fools talk. Nothing can resist truth.

8 I am, as you see, now in Switzerland and am always on the 9 move. I cannot and must not do anything in the way of writing, nor 10 much reading either. There is a big London work waiting for me 11 from next month. In winter I am going back to India and will try to 12 set things on their feet there.

13 My love to all. Work on, brave hearts, fail not--no saying nay; 14 work on--the Lord is behind the work. Mahashakti is with you.

15 Yours with love and
16 blessings,

Vivekananda

PS. Do not be afraid, money and everything will come soon.

LXIV

Switzerland,
8th August,

1896

Dear Alasinga,

Since writing to you a few days ago I have found my way to let you know that I am in a position to do this for the Brahmavadin.
I will give you Rs. 100 a month for a year or two, i.e. £60 or £70 a year, i.e. as much as would cover Rs. 100 a month. That will set you free to work for the Brahmavadin and make it a better success. Mr.
Mani Iyer and a few friends can help in raising fund that would cover the printing etc. What is the income from subscription? Can these be employed to pay the contributors and get a fine series of articles? It is not necessary that everybody should understand all that is written in the Brahmavadin, but that they must subscribe from patriotism and good Karma--the Hindus I mean.

Several things are necessary. First there should be strict integrity. Not that I even hint that any of you would digress from it, but the Hindus have a peculiar slovenliness in business matters, not being sufficiently methodical and strict in keeping accounts etc.

Secondly, entire devotion to the cause, knowing that your SALVATION depends upon making the Brahmavadin a success. Let this paper be your Ishtadevata, and then you will see how success comes. I have already sent for Abhedananda from India. I hope there will be no delay with him as it was with the other Swami. On

1 receipt of this letter you send me a clear account of all the income
2 and the expenses of the Brahmavadin so that I may judge from it
3 what best can be done. Remember that perfect purity, 4 disinterestedness, and obedience to the Guru are the secret of all 5 success. . . .

6 A big foreign circulation of a religious paper is impossible. It 7 must be supported by the Hindus if they have any sense of virtue or 8 gratitude left to them.

9 By the by, Mrs. Annie Besant invited me to speak at her 10 Lodge, on Bhakti. I lectured there one night. Col. Olcott also was 11 there. I did it to show my sympathy for all sects. . . . Our 12 countrymen must remember that in things of the Spirit we are the 13 teachers, and not foreigners--but in things of the world we ought to 14 learn from them.

15 I have read Max Muller's article, which is a good one, 16 considering that when he wrote it, six months ago, he had no 17 material except Mazoomdar's leaflet. Now he writes me a long and 18 nice letter offering to write a book on Shri Ramakrishna. I have 19 already supplied him with much material, but a good deal more is 20 needed from India.

21 Work on! Hold on! Be brave! Dare anything and everything!

22 . . . It is all misery, this Samsara, don't you see!

23 Yours with blessings
24 and love,

32 Blessed and Beloved {E.T. Sturdy},

33 Today I received a letter from India written by Abhedananda 34 that in all probability he had started on the 11th August by the 35 B.I.S.N., "S.S. Mombassa". He could not get an earlier steamer; else 36 he would have started earlier. In all probability he would be able to 37 secure a passage on the Mombassa. The Mombassa will reach 38 London about the 15th of September. As you already know, Miss 39 Muller changed the date of my visiting Deussen to the 19th 40 September. I shall not be in London to receive Abhedananda. He is 41 also coming without any warm clothing; but I am afraid by that time 42 it will begin to cool in England, and he will require at least some 43 underwear and an overcoat. You know all about these things much 44 better than I. So kindly keep a look out for this Mombassa. I expect 45 also another letter from him.

46 I am suffering from a very bad cold indeed. I hope by this 47 time Mohin's money from the Raja has arrived to your care. If so, I

1 do not want the money I gave him back. You may give him the 2 whole of it.

3 I had some letters from Goodwin and Saradananda. They are 4 doing well. Also one from Mrs. Bull regretting that you and I could 5 not be corresponding members of some Society, she is founding at 6 Cambridge. I do remember to have written to her about your and 7 my non-acquiescence in this membership. I have not yet been able 8 to write even a line. I had not a moment's time even to read, 9 climbing up hill and going down dale all the time. We will have to 10 begin the march again in a few days. Kindly give my love to Mohin 11 and Fox when you see them next.

12 With love to all our friends,

21 Dear Nanjunda Rao,

22 I have just now got your letter. I am on the move. I have been 23 doing a great deal of mountain-climbing and glacier-crossing in the 24 Alps. Now I am going to Germany. I have an invitation from Prof.
25 Deussen to visit him at Kiel. From thence I go back to England.
26 Possibly I will return to India this winter.

27 What I objected to in the design for the Prabuddha Bharata 28 was not only its tawdriness, but the crowding in of a number of 29 figures without any purpose. A design should be simple, symbolical, 30 and condensed. I will try to make a design for Prabuddha Bharata
31 in London and send it over to you. . . .

32 The work is going on beautifully, I am very glad to say. . . . I 33 will give you one advice however. All combined efforts in India sink 34 under the weight of one iniquity--we have not yet developed strict 35 business principles. Business is business, in the highest sense, and 36 no friendship--or as the Hindu proverb says "eye-shame"--should be 37 there. One should keep the clearest account of everything in one's 38 charge--and never, never apply the funds intended for one thing to 39 any other use whatsoever--even if one starves the next moment.
40 This is business integrity. Next, energy unfailing. Whatever you do 41 let that be your worship for the time. Let this paper be your God for 42 the time, and you will succeed.

43 When you have succeeded in this paper, start vernacular ones
44 on the same lines in Tamil, Telugu, Canarese, etc. We must reach 45 the masses. The Madrasis are good, energetic, and all that, but the 46 land of Shankaracharya has lost the spirit of renunciation, it seems.

47 My children must plunge into the breach, must renounce the 1 world--then the firm foundation will be laid.

2 Go on bravely--never mind about designs and other details at 3 present--"With the horse will come the reins". Work unto death--I 4 am with you, and when I am gone, my spirit will work with you. This 5 life comes and goes--wealth, fame, enjoyments are only of a few 6 days. It is better, far better to die on the field of duty, preaching the 7 truth, than to die like a worldly worm. Advance!

8 Yours with all love and
9 blessings,

18 22nd September,

20 Dear Alasinga,

21 I am sure you have got the article on Ramakrishna, I sent 22 you, by Max Muller. Do not be sorry, he does not mention me there 23 at all, as it was written six months before he knew me. And then 24 who cares whom he mentions, if he is right in the main point. I had 25 a beautiful time with Prof. Deussen in Germany. Later, he and I 26 came together to London, and we have already become great 27 friends.

28 I am soon sending you an article on him. Only pray do not put 29 that old-fashioned "Dear Sir" before my articles. Have you seen the 30 Raja-Yoga book yet? I will try to send you a design for the coming 31 year. I send you a Daily News article on a book of travel written by 32 the Czar of Russia. The paragraph in which he speaks of India as 33 the land of spirituality and wisdom, you ought to quote in your 34 paper and send the article to the Indian Mirror.

35 You are very welcome to publish the Jnana-Yoga lectures, as 36 well as Dr. (Nanjunda Rao) in his Awakened India --only the simpler 37 ones. They have to be very carefully gone through and all 38 repetitions and contradictions taken out. I am sure I will now have 39 more time to write. Work on with energy.

40 With love to all,

41 Yours,

42 Vivekananda

43 PS. I have marked the passage to be quoted, the rest of 44 course is useless for a paper.

45 I do not think it would be good just now to make the paper a

1 monthly one yet, unless you are sure of giving a good bulk. As it is 2 now, the bulk and the matter are all very poor. There is yet a vast 3 untrodden field, namely--the writing of the lives and works of 4 Tulasidasa, Kabir, Nanak, and of the saints of Southern India. They 5 should be written in a thorough-going, scholarly style, and not in a 6 slipshod, slovenly way. In fact, the ideal of the paper, apart from the 7 preaching of Vedanta, should be to make it a magazine of Indian 8 research and scholarship, of course, bearing on religion. You must 9 approach the best writers and get carefully-written articles from 10 their pen. Work on with all energy.

11 Yours with
12 love,

Vivekananda

22 Dear Alasinga,

23 I have returned about three weeks from Switzerland but 24 could not write you further before. I have sent you by last mail a 25 paper of Paul Deussen of Kiel. Sturdy's plan about the magazine is 26 still hanging fire. As you see, I have left the St. George's Road 27 place. We have a lecture hall at 39 Victoria Street. C/o E. T. Sturdy 28 will always reach me for a year to come. The rooms at Grey Coat 29 Gardens are only lodgings for self and the other Swami taken for 30 three months only. The work in London is growing apace, the 31 classes are becoming bigger as they go on. I have no doubt this will 32 go on increasing at this rate and the English people are steady and 33 loyal. Of course, as soon as I leave, most of this fabric will tumble 34 down. Something will happen. Some strong man will arise to take it 35 up. The Lord knows what is good. In America there is room for 36 twenty preachers on the Vedanta and Yoga. Where to get these 37 preachers and where also the money to bring them? Half the 38 United States can be conquered in ten years, given a number of 39 strong and genuine men. Where are they? We are all boobies over 40 there! Selfish cowards, with our nonsense of lip-patriotism, 41 orthodoxy, and boasted religious feeling! The Madras have more 42 of go and steadiness, but every fool is married. Marriage!
43 Marriage! Marriage! . . . Then the way our boys are married 44 nowadays! . . . It is very good to aspire to be a non-attached 45 householder; but what we want in Madras is not that just now--but 46 non-marriage. . . .

47 My child, what I want is muscles of iron and nerves of steel, 48 inside which dwells a mind of the same material as that of which 49 the thunderbolt is made. Strength, manhood, Kshatra-Virya +

1 Brahma-Teja. Our beautiful hopeful boys--they have everything, only 2 if they are not slaughtered by the millions at the altar of this 3 brutality they call marriage. O Lord, hear my wails! Madras will 4 then awake when at least one hundred of its very heart's blood, in 5 the form of its educated young men, will stand aside from the 6 world, gird their loins, and be ready to fight the battle of truth, 7 marching on from country to country. One blow struck outside of 8 India is equal to a hundred thousand struck within. Well, all will 9 come if the Lord wills it.

10 Miss Muller was the person who offered that money I 11 promised. I have told her about your new proposal. She is thinking 12 about it. In the meanwhile I think it is better to give her some work.
13 She has consented to be the agent for the Brahmavadin and 14 Awakened India. Will you write to her about it? Her address is 15 Airlie Lodge, Ridgeway Gardens, Wimbledon, England. I was living 16 with her over there for the last few weeks. But the London work 17 cannot go on without my living in London. As such I have changed 18 quarters. I am sorry it has chagrined Miss Muller a bit. Cannot 19 help. Her full name is Miss Henrietta Muller. Max Muller is getting 20 very friendly. I am soon going to deliver two lectures at Oxford.

21 I am busy writing something big on the Vedanta philosophy. I 22 am busy collecting passages from the various Vedas bearing on the 23 Vedanta in its threefold aspect. You can help me by getting 24 someone to collect passages bearing on, first the Advaitic idea, then 25 the Vishishtadvaitic, and the Dvaitic from the Samhitas, the 26 Brahmanas, the Upanishads, and the Puranas. They should be 27 classified and very legibly written with the name and chapter of the 28 book, in each case. It would be a pity to leave the West without 29 leaving something of the philosophy in book form.

30 There was a book published in Mysore in Tamil characters, 31 comprising all the one hundred and eight Upanishads; I saw it in 32 Professor Deussen's library. Is there a reprint of the same in 33 Devanagari? If so, send me a copy. If not, send me the Tamil edition, 34 and also write on a sheet the Tamil letters and compounds, and all 35 juxtaposed with its Nagari equivalents, so that I may learn the 36 Tamil letters.

37 Mr. Satyanathan, whom I met in London the other day, said 38 that there has been a friendly review of my Raja-Yoga book in the 39 Madras Mail, the chief Anglo-Indian paper in Madras. The leading 40 physiologist in America, I hear, has been charmed with my 41 speculations. At the same time, there have been some in England, 42 who ridiculed my ideas. Good! My speculations of course are 43 awfully bold; a good deal of them will ever remain meaningless; but 44 there are hints in it which the physiologists had better taken up 45 earlier. Nevertheless, I am quite satisfied with the result. "Let them 46 talk badly of me if they please, but let them talk", is my motto.

47 In England, of course, they are gentlemen and never talk the 48 rot I had in America. Then again the English missionaries you see 49 over there are nearly all of them from the dissenters. They are not 50 from the gentleman class in England. The gentlemen here, who are 51 religious, all belong to the English Church. The dissenters have

1 very little voice in England and no education. I never hear of those 2 people here against whom you time to time warn me. They are 3 unknown here and dare not talk nonsense. I hope Ram K. Naidu is 4 already in Madras, and you are enjoying good health.

5 Persevere on, my brave lads. We have only just begun. Never 6 despond! Never say enough! . . . As soon as a man comes over to 7 the West and sees different nations, his eyes open. This way I get 8 strong workers--not by talking, but by practically showing what we 9 have in India and what we have not. I wish at least that a million 10 Hindus had travelled all over the world!

11 Yours ever
12 with love,

22 Dear Alasinga,

23 . . . I am not yet sure what month I shall reach India. I will 24 write later about it. The new Swami⁸¹ delivered his maiden speech 25 yesterday at a friendly society's meeting. It was good and I liked it; 26 he has the making of a good speaker in him, I am sure.

27 . . . You have not yet brought out the-- . . . Again, books must 28 be cheap for India to have a large sale; the types must be bigger to 29 satisfy the public. . . . You can very well get out a cheap edition of--if 30 you like. I have not reserved any copyright on it purposely. You have 31 missed a good opportunity by not getting out the --book earlier, but 32 we Hindus are so slow that when we have done a work, the 33 opportunity has already passed away, and thus we are the losers.
34 Your--book came out after a year's talk! Did you think the Western 35 people would wait for it till Doomsday? You have lost three-fourths 36 of the sale by this delay. . . . That Haramohan is a fool, slower than 37 you, and his printing is diabolical. There is no use in publishing 38 books that way; it is cheating the public, and should not be done. I 39 shall most probably return to India accompanied by Mr. and Mrs.
40 Sevier, Miss Muller, and Mr. Goodwin. Mr. and Mrs. Sevier are 41 probably going to settle in Almora at least for some time, and 42 Goodwin is going to become a Sannyasin. He of course will travel 43 with me. It is he to whom we owe all our books. He took shorthand 44 notes of my lectures, which enabled the books to be published. . . .
45 All these lectures were delivered on the spur of the moment, 46 without the least preparation, and as such, they should be carefully

⁸¹ ?Swami Abhedananda.

17 (On the eve of the lecture-tour of Dr. Barrows in India at the 18 end of 1896, Swami Vivekananda in a letter to the Indian Mirror, 19 Calcutta, introduced the distinguished visitor to his countrymen and 20 advised them to give him a fitting reception. He wrote among other 21 things as follows:)

22 Dr. Barrows was the ablest lieutenant Mr. C. Boney could 23 have selected to carry out successfully his great plan of the 24 Congresses at the World's Fair, and it is now a matter of history 25 how one of these Congresses scored a unique distinction under the 26 leadership of Dr. Barrows.

27 It was the great courage, untiring industry, unruffled 28 patience, and never-failing courtesy of Dr. Barrows that made the 29 Parliament a grand success.

30 India, its people, and their thoughts have been brought more 31 prominently before the world than ever before by that wonderful 32 gathering at Chicago, and that national benefit we certainly owe to 33 Dr. Barrows more than to any other man at that meeting.

Moreover, he comes to us in the sacred name of religion, in the name of one of the great teachers of mankind, and I am sure, his exposition of the system of the Prophet of Nazareth would be extremely liberal and elevating. The Christ-power this man intends to bring to India is not that of the intolerant, dominant superior, with heart full of contempt for everything else but its own self, but that of a brother who craves for a brother's place as a co-worker of the various powers already working in India. Above all, we must remember that gratitude and hospitality are the peculiar characteristics of Indian humanity; and as such, I would beg my countrymen to behave in such a manner that this stranger from the other side of the globe may find that in the midst of all our misery, our poverty, and degradation, the heart beats as warm as of yore, when the "wealth of Ind" was the proverb of nations and India was the land of the "Aryas".

Dear Alasinga,

I shall most probably start on the 16th of December, or may be a day or two later. I go from here to Italy, and after seeing a few places there, join the steamer at Naples. Miss Muller, Mr. and Mrs. Sevier, and a young man called Goodwin are accompanying me. The Seviere are going to settle at Almora. So is Miss Muller. Sevier was an officer in the Indian army for 5 years. So he knows India a good deal. Miss Muller was a Theosophist who adopted Akshay. Goodwin is an Englishman, through whose shorthand notes it has been possible for the pamphlets to be published.

I arrive at Madras first from Colombo. The other people go their way to Almora. I go from thence direct to Calcutta. I will write you the exact information when I start.

Yours affly.,

Vivekananda

PS. The first edition of Raja-Yoga is sold out, and a second is in the press. India and America are the biggest buyers.

5 Dear Alasinga,

6 I am leaving England on the 16th of December for Italy, and 7 shall catch the North German Lloyd S.S. Prinz Regent Luitpold at 8 Naples. The steamer is due at Colombo on the 14th of January next.

9 I intend to see a little of Ceylon, and shall then go to Madras.
10 I am being accompanied by three English friends--Capt. and Mrs.
11 Sevier and Mr. Goodwin. Mr. Sevier and his wife are going to start a 12 place near Almora in the Himalayas which I intend to make my 13 Himalayan Centre, as well as a place for Western disciples to live as 14 Brahmacharins and Sannyasins. Goodwin is an unmarried young 15 man who is going to travel and live with me; he is like a Sannyasin.

16 I am very desirous to reach Calcutta before the birthday
17 festival of Sri Ramakrishna. . . . My present plan of work is to start 18 two centres, one in Calcutta and the other in Madras, in which to 19 train up young preachers. I have funds enough to start the one in 20 Calcutta, which being the scene of Shri Ramakrishna's life-work, 21 demands my first attention. As for the Madras one, I expect to get 22 funds in India.

23 We will begin work with these three centres; and later on, we 24 will get to Bombay and Allahabad. And from these points, if the 25 Lord is pleased, we will invade not only India, but send over bands 26 of preachers to every country in the world. That should be our first 27 duty. Work on with a heart. 39 Victoria will be the London 28 headquarters for some time to come, as the work will be carried on 29 there. Sturdy had a big box of Brahmavadin I did not know before.
30 He is now canvassing subscribers for it.

31 Now we have got one Indian magazine in English fixed. We 32 can start some in the vernaculars also. Miss M. Noble of Wimbledon 33 is a great worker. She will also canvass for both the Madras papers.
34 She will write you. These things will grow slowly but surely. Papers 35 of this kind are supported by a small circle of followers. Now they 36 cannot be expected to do too many things at a time--they have to 37 buy the books, find the money for the work in England, subscribers
38 for the paper here, and then subscribe to Indian papers. It is too 39 much. It is more like trading than teaching. Therefore you must 40 wait, and yet I am sure there will be a few subscribers here. Again, 41 there must be work for the people here to do when I am gone, else
42 the whole thing will go to pieces. Therefore there must be a paper 43 here, also in America by and by. The Indian papers are to be 44 supported by the Indians. To make a paper equally acceptable to all 45 nationalities means a staff of writers from all nations; and that 46 means at least a hundred thousand rupees a year.

47 You must not forget that my interests are international and 48 not Indian alone. I am in good health; so is Abhedananda.

49 With all love and

1 blessings,

Vivekananda

Dear Madam {An American lady},

We have only to grasp the idea of gradation of morality and everything becomes clear.

Renunciation--non-resistance--non-destructiveness--are the ideals to be attained through less and less worldliness, less and less resistance, less and less destructiveness. Keep the ideal in view and work towards it. None can live in the world without resistance, without destruction, without desire. The world has not come to that state yet when the ideal can be realised in society.

The progress of the world through all its evils is making it fit for the ideals, slowly but surely. The majority will have to go on with this slow growth--the exceptional ones will have to get out to realise the idea in the present state of things.

Doing the duty of the time is the best way, and if it is done only as a duty, it does not make us attached.

Music is the highest art and, to those who understand, is the highest worship.

We must try our best to destroy ignorance and evil. Only we have to learn that evil is destroyed by the growth of good.

Yours

faithfully,

Vivekananda

Rose Bank
The Maharaja of

Burdwan's House

Darjeeling,
6th April, 1897

Honoured Madam {Shrimati Sarala Ghoshal--Editor of Bharati },

I feel obliged for the Bharati sent by you, and consider myself fortunate that the cause, to which my humble life has been dedicated, has been able to win the approbation of highly talented ladies like you.

In this battle of life, men are rare who encourage the initiator of new thought, not to speak of women who would offer him

1 encouragement, particularly in our unfortunate land. It is therefore 2 that the approbation of an educated Bengali lady is more valuable 3 than the loud applause of all the men of India.

4 May the Lord grant that many women like you be born in this 5 country, and devote their lives to the betterment of their 6 motherland!

7 I have something to say in regard to the article you have 8 written about me in the Bharati. It is this. It has been for the good 9 of India that religious preaching in the West has been and will be 10 done. It has ever been my conviction that we shall not be able to 11 rise unless the Western people come to our help. In this country no 12 appreciation of merit can yet be found, no financial strength, and 13 what is most lamentable of all, there is not a bit of practicality.

14 There are many things to be done, but means are wanting in 15 this country. We have brains, but no hands.

16 We have the doctrine of Vedanta, but we have not the power 17 to reduce it into practice. In our books there is the doctrine of 18 universal equality, but in work we make great distinctions. It was in 19 India that unselfish and disinterested work of the most exalted type 20 was preached; but in practice we are awfully cruel, awfully 21 heartless--unable to think of anything besides our own mass-of-flesh 22 bodies.

23 Yet it is only through the present state of things that it is 24 possible to proceed to work. There is no other way. Every one has 25 the power to judge of good and evil, but he is the hero who 26 undaunted by the waves of Samsara--which is full of errors, 27 delusions, and miseries--with one hand wipes the tears, and with 28 the other, unshaken, shows the path of deliverance. On the one 29 hand there is the conservative society, like a mass of inert matter; 30 on the other, the restless, impatient, fire-darting reformer; the way 31 to good lies between the two. I heard in Japan that it was the belief 32 of the girls of that country that their dolls would be animated if they 33 were loved with all their heart. The Japanese girl never breaks her 34 doll. O you of great fortune! I too believe that India will awake 35 again if anyone could love with all his heart the people of the 36 country--bereft of the grace of affluence, of blasted fortune, their 37 discretion totally lost, downtrodden, ever-starved, quarrelsome, and 38 envious. Then only will India awake, when hundreds of large-39 hearted men and women, giving up all desires of enjoying the 40 luxuries of life, will long and exert themselves to their utmost for 41 the well-being of the millions of their countrymen who are gradually 42 sinking lower and lower in the vortex of destitution and ignorance. I 43 have experienced even in my insignificant life that good motives, 44 sincerity, and infinite love can conquer the world. One single soul 45 possessed of these virtues can destroy the dark designs of millions 46 of hypocrites and brutes.

47 My going to the West again is yet uncertain; if I go, know that 48 too will be for India. Where is the strength of men in this country?
49 Where is the strength of money? Many men and women of the West
50 are ready to do good to India by serving even the lowest Chandalas, 51 in the Indian way, and through the Indian religion. How many such 1 are there in this country? And financial strength! To meet the 2 expenses of my reception, the people of Calcutta made me deliver a 3 lecture and sold tickets! . . . I do not blame nor censure anybody for 4 this, I only want to show that our well-being is impossible without 5 men and money coming from the West.

6 Ever grateful and ever praying to the Lord for your welfare,

7 Vivekananda

13 1897

14 My Dear Doctor Shashi {Bhushan Ghosh},

15 Your letter and the two bottles containing the medicines were 16 duly received. I have begun from last evening a trial of your 17 medicines. Hope the combination will have a better effect than the 18 one alone.

19 I began to take a lot of exercise on horseback, both morning
20 and evening. Since that I am very much better indeed. I was so 21 much better the first week of my gymnastics that I have scarcely 22 felt so well since I was a boy and used to have kusti (wrestling)
23 exercises. I really began to feel that it was a pleasure to have a 24 body. Every movement made me conscious of strength--every 25 movement of the muscles was pleasurable. That exhilarating feeling 26 has subsided somewhat, yet I feel very strong. In a trial of strength 27 I could make both G. G. and Niranjana go down before me in a 28 minute. In Darjeeling I always felt that I was not the same man.
29 Here I feel that I have no disease whatsoever, but there is one 30 marked change. I never in my life could sleep as soon as I got into 31 bed. I must toss for at least two hours. Only from Madras to 32 Darjeeling (during the first month) I would sleep as soon as my 33 head touched the pillow. That ready disposition to sleep is gone now 34 entirely, and my old tossing habit and feeling hot after the evening 35 meal have come back. I do not feel any heat after the day meal.
36 There being an orchard here, I began to take more fruit than usual 37 as soon as I came. But the only fruit to be got here now is the 38 apricot. I am trying to get more varieties from Naini Tal. There has 39 not been any thirst even though the days are fearfully hot. . . . On 40 the whole my own feeling is one of revival of great strength and 41 cheerfulness, and a feeling of exuberant health, only I am afraid I 42 am getting fat on too much milk diet. Don't you listen to what Yogen 43 writes. He is a hypochondriac himself and wants to make everybody 44 so. I ate one-sixteenth of a barphi (sweetmeat) in Lucknow, and that 45 according to Yogen was what put me out of sorts in Almora! Yogen 46 is expected here in a few days. I am going to take him in hand. By 47 the by, I am very susceptible to malarious influences. The first 48 week's indisposition at Almora might have been caused to a certain 49 extent by my passage through the Terai. Anyhow I feel very, very 1 strong now. You ought to see me, Doctor, when I sit meditating in 2 front of the beautiful snow peaks and repeat from the Upanishads:

3 "{Sanskrit}--He has neither disease, nor decay, nor death; for,
4 verily, he has obtained a body full of the fire of Yoga."

5 I am very glad to learn of the success of the meetings of the 6 Ramakrishna Mission at Calcutta. All blessings attend those that

Dear Mr.--

The objections you show about the Vedas would be valid if the word Vedas meant Samhitas. The word Vedas includes the three parts, the Samhitas, the Brahmanas, and the Upanishads, according to the universally received opinion in India. Of these, the first two portions, as being the ceremonial parts, have been nearly put out of sight; the Upanishads have alone been taken up by all our philosophers and founders of sects.

The idea that the Samhitas are the only Vedas is very recent and has been started by the late Swami Dayananda. This opinion has not got any hold on the orthodox population.

The reason of this opinion was that Swami Dayananda thought he could find a consistent theory of the whole, based on a new interpretation of the Samhitas, but the difficulties remained the same, only they fell back on the Brahmanas. And in spite of the theories of interpretation and interpolation a good deal still remains.

Now if it is possible to build a consistent religion on the Samhitas, it is a thousand times more sure that a very consistent and harmonious faith can be based upon the Upanishads, and moreover, here one has not to go against the already received national opinion. Here all the Acharyas (Teachers) of the past would side with you, and you have a vast scope for new progress.

The Gita no doubt has already become the Bible of Hinduism, and it fully deserves to be so; but the personality of Krishna has become so covered with haze that it is impossible today to draw any life-giving inspiration from that life. Moreover, the present age requires new modes of thought and new life.

Hoping this will help you in thinking along these lines.

1 I am yours with
2 blessings,
3 Vivekananda

9
10 Translation {of above letter to Sharat Chandra Chakravarty, 11 a disciple of Swamiji}:

12
13 Almora,

14 3rd July, 1897

15 Constant salutation be to Shri Ramakrishna, the Free, the 16 Ishvara, the Shiva-form, by whose power we and the whole world 17 are blessed!

18 Mayest thou live long, O Sharat Chandra!

19 Those writers of Shastra who do not tend towards work say 20 that all-powerful destiny prevails; but others who are workers 21 consider the will of man as superior. Knowing that the quarrel 22 between those who believe in the human will as the remover of 23 misery and others who rely on destiny is due to indiscrimination--try 24 to ascend the highest peak of knowledge.

25 It has been said that adversity is the touchstone of true 26 knowledge, and this may be said a hundred times with regard to the 27 truth: "Thou art That." This truly diagnoses the Vairagya 28 (dispassion) disease. Blessed is the life of one who has developed 29 this symptom. In spite of your dislike I repeat the old saying: "Wait 30 for a short time." You are tired with rowing; rest on your oars. The 31 momentum will take the boat to the other side. This has been said 32 in the Gita (IV.38), "In good time, having reached perfection in 33 Yoga, one realises That in one's own heart;" and in the Upanishad, 34 "Neither by rituals, nor by progeny, nor by riches, but by 35 renunciation alone a few (rare) people attained immortality" 36 (Kaivalya, 2). Here, by the word renunciation Vairagya is referred 37 to. It may be of two kinds, with or without purpose. If the latter, 38 none but worm-eaten brains will try for it. But if the other is 39 referred to, then renunciation would mean the withdrawal of the 40 mind from other things and concentrating it on God or Atman. The 41 Lord of all cannot be any particular individual. He must be the sum 42 total. One possessing Vairagya does not understand by Atman the 43 individual ego but the All-pervading Lord, residing as the Self and 44 Internal Ruler in all. He is perceivable by all as the sum total. This 45 being so, as Jiva and Ishvara are in essence the same, serving the 46 Jivas and loving God must mean one and the same thing. Here is a 47 peculiarity: when you serve a Jiva with the idea that he is a Jiva, it is

1 Daya (compassion) and not Prema (love); but when you serve him
2 with the idea that he is the Self, that is Prema. That the Atman is 3 the one objective of love is known from Shruti, Smriti, and direct 4 perception. Bhagavan Chaitanya was right, therefore, when he said, 5 "Love to God and compassion to the Jivas". This conclusion of the 6 Bhagavan, intimating differentiation between Jiva and Ishvara, was 7 right, as He was a dualist. But for us, Advaitists, this notion of Jiva 8 as distinct from God is the cause of bondage. Our principle, 9 therefore, should be love, and not compassion. The application of 10 the word compassion even to Jiva seems to me to be rash and vain.
11 For us, it is not to pity but to serve. Ours is not the feeling of 12 compassion but of love, and the feeling of Self in all.

13 For thy good, O Sharman, may thine be Vairagya, the feeling 14 of which is love, which unifies all inequalities, cures the disease of 15 Samsara, removes the threefold misery inevitable in this 16 phenomenal world, reveals the true nature of all things, destroys 17 the darkness of Maya, and which brings out the Selfhood of 18 everything from Brahma to the blade of grass!

19 This is the constant prayer of

20 Vivekananda
21 Ever bound to 22 thee in love.

27 9th July, 1897

28 Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

29 I am very sorry to read between the lines the desponding 30 tone of your letter, and I understand the cause; thank you for your 31 warning, I understand your motive perfectly. I had arranged to go 32 with Ajit Singh to England; but the doctors not allowing, it fell 33 through. I shall be so happy to learn that Harriet has met him. He 34 will be only too glad to meet any of you.

35 I had also a lot of cuttings from different American papers 36 fearfully criticising my utterances about American women and 37 furnishing me with the strange news that I had been outcasted! As 38 if I had any caste to lose, being a Sannyasin!

39 Not only no caste has been lost, but it has considerably
40 shattered the opposition to sea voyage--my going to the West. If I 41 should have to be outcasted, it would be with half the ruling princes 42 of India and almost all of educated India. On the other hand, a 43 leading Raja of the caste to which I belonged before my entering 44 the order got up a banquet in my honour, at which were most of the 45 big bugs of that caste. The Sannyasins, on the other hand, may not 46 dine with any one in India, as it would be beneath the dignity of 47 gods to dine with mere mortals. They are regarded as Narayanas, 48 while the others are mere men. And dear Mary, these feet have

1 been washed and wiped and worshipped by the descendants of 2 kings, and there has been a progress through the country which 3 none ever commanded in India.

4 It will suffice to say that the police were necessary to keep 5 order if I ventured out into the street! That is outcasting indeed! Of 6 course, that took the starch out of the missionaries, and who are 7 they here?--Nobodies. We are in blissful ignorance of their 8 existence all the time. I had in a lecture said something about the 9 missionaries and the origin of that species except the English 10 Church gentlemen, and in that connection had to refer to the very 11 churchy women of America and their power of inventing scandals.
12 This the missionaries are parading as an attack on American 13 women en masse to undo my work there, as they well know that 14 anything said against themselves will rather please the U.S. people.
15 My dear Mary, supposing I had said all sorts of fearful things 16 against the "Yanks"--would that be paying off a millionth part of 17 what they say of our mothers and sisters ? "Neptune's waters" 18 would be perfectly useless to wash off the hatred the Christian 19 "Yanks" of both sexes bear to us "heathens of India"--and what harm 20 have we done them? Let the "Yanks" learn to be patient under 21 criticism and then criticise others. It is a well-known psychological 22 fact that those who are ever ready to abuse others cannot bear the 23 slightest touch of criticism from others. Then again, what do I owe 24 them? Except your family, Mrs. Bull, the Leggetts, and a few other 25 kind persons, who else has been kind to me? Who came forward to 26 help me work out my ideas? I had to work till I am at death's door 27 and had to spend nearly the whole of that energy in America, so 28 that the Americans may learn to be broader and more spiritual. In 29 England I worked only six months. There was not a breath of 30 scandal save one, and that was the working of an American woman, 31 which greatly relieved my English friends--not only no attacks but 32 many of the best English Church clergymen became my firm
33 friends, and without asking I got much help for my work, and I am 34 sure to get much more. There is a society watching my work and 35 getting help for it, and four respectable persons followed me to 36 India to help my work, and dozens were ready, and the next time I 37 go, hundreds will be.

1 Dear, dear Mary, do not be afraid for me. . . . The world is 2 big, very big, and there must be some place for me even if the 3 "Yankees" rage. Anyhow, I am quite satisfied with my work. I never 4 planned anything. I have taken things as they came. Only one idea 5 was burning in my brain--to start the machine for elevating the 6 Indian masses--and that I have succeeded in doing to a certain 7 extent. It would have made your heart glad to see how my boys are 8 working in the midst of famine and disease and misery--nursing by 9 the mat-bed of the cholera-stricken Pariah and feeding the starving 10 Chandala--and the Lord sends help to me and to them all. "What are 11 men?" He is with me, the Beloved, He was when I was in America, 12 in England, when I was roaming about unknown from place to place 13 in India. What do I care about what they talk--the babies, they do 14 not know any better. What! I, who have realised the Spirit and the 15 vanity of all earthly nonsense, to be swerved from my path by 16 babies' prattle! Do I look like that?

17 I had to talk a lot about myself because I owed that to you. I 18 feel my task is done--at most three or four years more of life are 19 left. I have lost all wish for my salvation. I never wanted earthly 20 enjoyments. I must see my machine in strong working order, and 21 then knowing sure that I have put in a lever for the good of 22 humanity, in India at least, which no power can drive back, I will 23 sleep, without caring what will be next; and may I be born again
24 and again, and suffer thousands of miseries so that I may worship 25 the only God that exists, the only God I believe in, the sum total of 26 all souls--and above all, my God the wicked, my God the miserable, 27 my God the poor of all races, of all species, is the special object of 28 my worship.

29 "He who is in you and is outside of you, who works through 30 every hand, who walks through every foot, whose body you are, 31 Him worship, and break all other idols.

32 "He who is the high and the low, the saint and the sinner, the 33 god and the worm, Him worship, the visible, the knowable, the real, 34 the omnipresent, break all other idols.

35 "In whom there is neither past life nor future birth, nor death 36 nor going or coming, in whom we always have been and always will 37 be one, Him worship, break all other idols.

38 "Ay, fools, neglecting the living Gods and His infinite 39 reflection with which the world is full, and running after imaginary 40 shadows! Him worship, the only visible, and break all other idols."

41 My time is short. I have got to unbreast whatever I have to 42 say, without caring if it smarts some or irritates others. Therefore, 43 my dear Mary, do not be frightened at whatever drops from my lips, 44 for the power behind me is not Vivekananda but He the Lord, and 45 He knows best. If I have to please the world, that will be injuring 46 the world; the voice of the majority is wrong, seeing that they 47 govern and make the sad state of the world. Every new thought 48 must create opposition--in the civilised a polite sneer, in the vulgar 49 savage howls and filthy scandals.

50 Even these earthworms must stand erect, even children must

1 see light. The Americans are drunk with new wine. A hundred 2 waves of prosperity have come and gone over my country. We have 3 learned the lesson which no child can yet understand. It is vanity.
4 This hideous world is Maya. Renounce and be happy. Give up the 5 idea of sex and possessions. There is no other bond. Marriage and 6 sex and money are the only living devils. All earthly love proceeds 7 from the body. No sex, no possessions; as these fall off, the eyes
8 open to spiritual vision. The soul regains its own infinite power.
9 How I wish I were in England to see Harriet. I have one wish left-- 10 to see you four sisters before I die, and that must happen.

11 Yours ever
12 affly.,

13 Vivekananda

34 Many many thanks for your second leaflet (leaves from the 36 never was the life of a great Teacher brought before the public 37 untarnished by the writer's mind, as you are presenting this one.

38 The language also is beyond all praise, so fresh, so pointed, and 39 withal so plain and easy.

40 I cannot express in adequate terms how I have enjoyed the 41 leaflets. I am really in a transport when I read them. Strange, isn't 42 it? Our Teacher and Lord was so original, and each one of us will 16 Deoghar,

18 3rd January,

20 {original in Bengali}

21 Dear Mother {Shrimati Mrinalini Bose},

22 Some very important questions have been raised in your 23 letter. It is not possible to answer them fully in a short note, still I 24 reply to them as briefly as possible.

25 (1) Rishi, Muni, or God--none has power to force an 26 institution on society. When the needs of the times press hard on it, 27 society adopts certain customs for self-preservation. Rishis have 28 only recorded those customs. As a man often resorts even to such 29 means as are good for immediate self-protection but which are very 30 injurious in the future, similarly society also not unfrequently saves 31 itself for the time being, but these immediate means which 32 contributed to its preservation turn out to be terrible in the long 33 run.

34 For example, take the prohibition of widow-marriage in our 35 country. Don't think that Rishis or wicked men introduced the law 36 pertaining to it. Notwithstanding the desire of men to keep women 37 completely under their control, they never could succeed in 38 introducing those laws without betaking themselves to the aid of a 39 social necessity of the time. Of this custom two points should be 40 specially observed:

41 (a) Widow-marriage takes place among the lower classes.

42 (b) Among the higher classes the number of women is greater 43 than that of men.

44 Now, if it be the rule to marry every girl, it is difficult enough 45 to get one husband apiece; then how to get, in succession, two or

1 three for each? Therefore has society put one party under 2 disadvantage, i.e. it does not let her have a second husband, who 3 has had one; if it did, one maid would have to go without a husband.
4 On the other hand, widow-marriage obtains in communities having 5 a greater number of men than women, as in their case the objection
6 stated above does not exist. It is becoming more and more difficult 7 in the West, too, for unmarried girls to get husbands.

8 Similar is the case with the caste system and other social 9 customs.

10 So, if it be necessary to change any social custom the 11 necessity underlying it should be found out first of all, and by 12 altering it, the custom will die of itself. Otherwise no good will be 13 done by condemnation or praise.

14 (2) Now the question is: Is it for the good of the public at 15 large that social rules are framed or society is formed? Many reply 16 to this in the affirmative; some, again, may hold that it is not so.
17 Some men, being comparatively powerful, slowly bring all others 18 under their control and by stratagem, force, or adroitness gain their 19 own objects. If this be true, what can be the meaning of the 20 statement that there is danger in giving liberty to the ignorant?
21 What, again, is the meaning of liberty?

22 Liberty does not certainly mean the absence of obstacles in 23 the path of misappropriation of wealth etc. by you and me, but it is 24 our natural right to be allowed to use our own body, intelligence, or 25 wealth according to our will, without doing any harm to others; and 26 all the members of a society ought to have the same opportunity for 27 obtaining wealth, education, or knowledge. The second question is:
28 Those who say that if the ignorant and the poor be given liberty, i.e.
29 full right to their body, wealth, etc., and if their children have the 30 same opportunity to better their condition and acquire knowledge 31 as those of the rich and the highly situated, they would become 32 perverse--do they say this for the good of society or blinded by their 33 selfishness? In England too I have heard, "Who will serve us if the 34 lower classes get education?"

35 For the luxury of a handful of the rich, let millions of men and 36 women remain submerged in the hell of want and abysmal depth of 37 ignorance, for if they get wealth and education, society will be 38 upset!

39 Who constitute society? The millions--or you, I, and a few 40 others of the upper classes?

41 Again, even if the latter be true, what ground is there for our 42 vanity that we lead others? Are we omniscient?

43 "{Sanskrit}"--One should raise the self by the self." Let each 44 one work out one's own salvation. Freedom in all matters, i.e.
45 advance towards Mukti is the worthiest gain of man. To advance 46 oneself towards freedom--physical, mental, and spiritual--and help 47 others to do so, is the supreme prize of man. Those social rules 48 which stand in the way of the unfoldment of this freedom are 49 injurious, and steps should be taken to destroy them speedily. Those 50 institutions should be encouraged by which men advance in the 1 path of freedom.

2 That in this life we feel a deep love at first sight towards a 3 particular person who may not be endowed with extraordinary 4 qualities, is explained by the thinkers of our country as due to the 5 associations of a past incarnation.

6 Your question regarding the will is very interesting: it is the 7 subject to know. The essence of all religions is the annihilation of 8 desire, along with which comes, of a certainty, the annihilation of 9 the will as well, for desire is only the name of a particular mode of 10 the will. Why, again, is this world? Or why are these manifestations 11 of the will? Some religions hold that the evil will should be 12 destroyed and not the good. The denial of desire here would be 13 compensated by enjoyments hereafter. This reply does not of course 14 satisfy the wise. The Buddhists, on the other hand, say that desire is 15 the cause of misery, its annihilation is quite desirable. But like 16 killing a man in the effort to kill the mosquito on his cheek, they 17 have gone to the length of annihilating their own selves in their 18 efforts to destroy misery according to the Buddhistic doctrine.

19 The fact is, what we call will is an inferior modification of 20 something higher. Desirelessness means the disappearance of the 21 inferior modification in the form of will and the appearance of that 22 superior state. That state is beyond the range of mind and intellect.
23 But though the look of the gold mohur is quite different from that of 24 the rupee and the pice, yet as we know for certain that the gold 25 mohur is greater than either, so, that highest state--Mukti, or 26 Nirvana, call it what you like--though out of the reach of the mind 27 and intellect, is greater than the will and all other powers. It is no 28 power, but power is its modification, therefore it is higher. Now you 29 will see that the result of the proper exercise of the will, first with 30 motive for an object and then without motive, is that the will-power 31 will attain a much higher state.

32 In the preliminary state, the form of the Guru is to be 33 meditated upon by the disciple. Gradually it is to be merged in the 34 Ishta. By Ishta is meant the object of love and devotion. . . . It is 35 very difficult to superimpose divinity on man, but one is sure to 36 succeed by repeated efforts. God is in every man, whether man 37 knows it or not; your loving devotion is bound to call up the divinity 38 in him.

39 Ever your well-
40 wisher,

My dear Joe {Miss MacLeod},

You must have reached N. Y. by this time and are in the midst of your own after a long absence. Fortune has favoured you at every step of this journey--even the sea was smooth and calm, and the ship nearly empty of undesirable company. Well, with me it is doing otherwise. I am almost desperate I could not accompany you. Neither did the change at Vaidyanath do me any good. I nearly died there, was suffocating for eight days and nights!! I was brought back to Calcutta more dead than alive, and here I am struggling to get back to life again.

Dr. Sarkar is treating me now.

I am not so despondent now as I was. I am reconciled to my fate. This year seems to be very hard for us. Yogananda, who used to live in Mother's house, is suffering for the last month and every day is at death's door. Mother knows best. I am roused to work again, though not personally but am sending the boys all over India to make a stir once more. Above all, as you know, the chief difficulty is of funds. Now that you are in America, Joe, try to raise some funds for our work over here.

I hope to rally again by March, and by April I start for Europe. Again Mother knows best.

I have suffered mentally and physically all my life, but Mother's kindness has been immense. The joy and blessings I had infinitely more than I deserve. And I am struggling not to fail Mother, but that she will always find me fighting, and my last breath will be on the battlefield.

My best love and blessings for you ever and ever.

Ever yours in the Truth,

Vivekananda

I want your Highness in that fashion as I am here, you need most of friendship and love just now.

I wrote you a letter a few weeks ago but could not get news of yours. Hope you are in splendid health now. I am starting for England again on the 20th this month.

14 Dear--,

15 . . . Life is a series of fights and disillusionments. . . . The 16 secret of life is not enjoyment, but education through experience.
17 But, alas, we are called off the moment we begin really to learn.
18 That seems to be a potent argument for a future existence. . . .
19 Everywhere it is better to have a whirlwind come over the work.
20 That clears the atmosphere and gives us a true insight into the 21 nature of things. It is begun anew, but on adamantine foundations. .

33 Dear Shashi {Swami Ramakrishnananda},

34 I got all the news from your letter. If your health is bad, then 35 certainly you should not come here; and also I am going to 36 Mayavati tomorrow. It is absolutely necessary that I should go there 37 once.

38 If Alasinga comes here, he will have to await my return. I do
39 not know what those here are deciding about Kanai. I shall return 40 shortly from Almora, and then I may be able to visit Madras. From 41 Vaniyambadi I have received a letter. Write to the people there

43 Madras I shall surely visit them. Give my love to all. Don't work too

17 My dear Mother {Mrs. Bull},

18 I send you forthwith a translation of the Nasadiya Hymn sent 19 by Dr. Bose through you. I have tried to make it as literal as 20 possible.

21 I hope Dr. Bose has recovered his health perfectly by this 22 time.

23 Mrs. Sevier is a strong woman, and has borne her loss quietly 24 and bravely. She is coming over to England in April, and I am going 25 over with her.

26 I ought to come to England as early as I can this summer; and 27 as she must go to attend to her husband's affairs, I accompany her.

28 This place is very, very beautiful, and they have made it 29 simply exquisite. It is a huge place several acres in area, and is very 30 well kept. I hope Mrs. Sevier will be in a position to keep it up in 31 the future. She wishes it ever so much, of course.

32 My last letter from Joe informed me that she was going up 33 the . . . with Mme Calve.

34 I am very glad to learn that Margot is leaving her lore for 35 future use. Her book has been very much appreciated here, but the 36 publishers do not seem to make any effort at sale.

37 The first day's touch of Calcutta brought the asthma back;
38 and every night I used to get a fit during the two weeks I was there.
39 I am, however, very well in the Himalayas.

40 It is snowing heavily here, and I was caught in a blizzard on 41 the way; but it is not very cold, and all this exposure to the snows 42 for two days on my way here seems to have done me a world of 43 good.

44 Today I walked over the snow uphill about a mile, seeing Mrs.
45 Sevier's lands; she has made beautiful roads all over. Plenty of 1 gardens, fields, orchards, and large forests, all in her land. The 2 living houses are so simple, so clean, and so pretty, and above all so 3 suited for the purpose.

4 Are you going to America soon? If not, I hope to see you in 5 London in three months.

6 Kindly give my best wishes to Miss Olcock and kindly convey 7 my undying love to Miss Muller the next time you see her; so to 8 Sturdy. I have seen my mother, my cousin, and all my people in 9 Calcutta.

10 Kindly send the remittance you send my cousin to me--in my 11 name so that I shall cash the cheque and give her the money.
12 Saradananda and Brahmananda and the rest were well in the Math

36 I learn from Saradananda that you have sent over Rs. 1,529-

38 England. I am sure it will be rightly used.

39 Capt. Sevier passed away about three months ago. They have 40 made a fine place here in the mountains and Mrs. Sevier means to 41 keep it up. I am on a visit to her, and I may possibly come over to 42 England with her.

43 I wrote you a letter from Paris. I am afraid you did not get it.

44 So sorry to learn the passing away of Mrs. Sturdy. She has

1 been a very good wife and good mother, and it is not ordinarily one 2 meets with such in this life.

3 This life is full of shocks, but the effects pass away anyhow,
4 that is the hope.

5 It is not because of your free expression of opinion in your

22 My dear Mother {Mrs. Ole Bull},

23 Many thanks for your very encouraging words. I needed them 24 very much just now. The gloom has not lifted with the advent of the 25 new century, it is visibly thickening. I went to see Mrs. Sevier at 26 Mayavati. On my way I learnt of the sudden death of the Raja of 27 Khetri. It appears he was restoring some old architectural 28 monument at Agra, at his own expense, and was up some tower on 29 inspection. Part of the tower came down, and he was instantly 30 killed.

31 The three cheques have arrived. They will reach my cousin
32 when next I see her.

33 Joe is here, but I have not seen her yet.

34 The moment I touch Bengal, especially the Math, the 35 asthmatic fits return! The moment I leave, I recover!

36 I am going to take my mother on pilgrimage next week. It 37 may take months to make the complete round of pilgrimages. This 38 is the one great wish of a Hindu widow. I have brought only misery 39 to my people all my life. I am trying at least to fulfil this one wish of 40 hers.

41 I am so glad to learn all that about Margot; everybody here is 42 eager to welcome her back.

43 I hope Dr. Bose has completely recovered by this time.

17 stand a single person. I do not want anybody. I have neither the 18 strength nor the money, nor the will to take up anybody with me.
19 Bhaktas (devotees) of Guru Maharaj or not, it does not matter. It 20 was very foolish of you even to ask such a question. Let me tell you 21 again, I am more dead than alive, and strictly refuse to see anybody.
22 If you cannot manage this, I don't go to Madras. I have to become a

2 Mrs. Sevier is expected here soon--en route to England. I expected
3 to go to England with her, but as it now turns out, I must go on a 4 long pilgrimage with my mother.

5 My health suffers the moment I touch Bengal; anyhow, I don't 6 much mind it now; I am going on well and so do things about me.

7 Glad to learn about Margot's success, but, says Joe, it is not 8 financially paying; there is the rub. Mere continuance is of little 9 value, and it is a far cry from London to Calcutta. Well, Mother 10 knows. Everybody is praising Margot's Kali the Mother; but alas!

My dear Mother {Mrs. Bull},

20 By this time you must have received my other note from 21 Dacca. Saradananda has been suffering badly from fever in 22 Calcutta, which has become simply a hell of demons this year. He 23 has recovered and is now in the Math which, thank God, is one of 24 the healthiest places in our Bengal.

25 I do not know what conversation took place between you and 26 my mother; I was not present. I suppose it was only an eager desire 27 on her part to see Margot, nothing else.

28 My advice to Margot would be to mature her plans in 29 England and work them out a good length before she comes back.
30 Good solid work must wait.

31 Saradananda expects to go to Darjeeling to Mrs. Banerji, who 32 has been in Calcutta for a few days, as soon as he is strong enough.

33 I have no news yet of Joe from Japan. Mrs. Sevier expects to 34 sail soon. My mother, aunt, and cousin came over five days ago to 35 Dacca, as there was a great sacred bath in the Brahmaputra river.
36 Whenever a particular conjunction of planets takes place, which is 37 very rare, a huge concourse of people gather on the river on a 38 particular spot. This year there has been more than a hundred 39 thousand people; for miles the river was covered with boats.

40 The river, though nearly a mile broad at the place, was one 41 mass of mud! But it was firm enough, so we had our bath and Puja 42 (worship), and all that.

43 I am rather enjoying Dacca. I am going to take my mother 44 and the other ladies to Chandranath, a holy place at the 45 easternmost corner of Bengal.

37 My dear Mary {Hale},

38 Sometimes it is hard work to be tied to the shoestrings of a 39 great name. And that was just what happened to my letter. You 40 wrote on the 22nd January, 1901. You tied me to the latchet of a 41 great name, Miss MacLeod. Consequently the letter has been 42 following her up and down the world. Now it reached me yesterday 43 from Japan, where Miss MacLeod is at present. Well, this,

1 therefore, is the solution of the sphinx's riddle. "Thou shalt not join 2 a great name with a small one."

3 So, Mary, you have been enjoying Florence and Italy, and I do
4 not know where you be by this time. So, fat old "laidy", I throw this 5 letter to the mercy of Monroe & Co., 7 rue Scribe.

6 Now, old "laidy"--so you have been dreaming away in 7 Florence and the Italian lakes. Good; your poet objects to its being 8 empty though.

9 Well, devoted sister, how about myself? I came to India last 10 fall, suffered all through winter, and went this summer touring 11 through Eastern Bengal and Assam--through a land of giant rivers 12 and hills and malaria--and after hard work of two months had a 13 collapse, and am now back to Calcutta slowly recovering from the 14 effects of it.

15 The Raja of Khetri died from a fall a few months ago. So you 16 see things are all gloomy with me just now, and my own health is 17 wretched. Yet I am sure to bob up soon and am waiting for the next 18 turn.

19 I wish I were in Europe, just to have a long chat with you, and 20 then return as quick to India; for, after all, I feel a sort of quiet 21 nowadays, and have done with three-fourths of my restlessness.

22 My love to Harriet Woolley, to Isabel, to Harriet McKindley;
23 and to mother my eternal love and gratitude. Tell mother, the subtle

39 My dear Shashi {Swami Ramakrishnananda},

40 Reading your letter I felt like laughing, and also rather sorry.
41 The cause of the laughter is that you had a dream through 42 indigestion and made yourself miserable, taking it to be real. The 43 cause of my sorrow is that it is clear from this that your health is 44 not good, and that your nerves require rest very badly.

45 Never have I laid a curse on you, and why should I do so

1 now? All your life you have known my love for you, and today are 2 you doubting it? True, my temper was ever bad, and nowadays 3 owing to illness it occasionally becomes terrible--but know this for 4 certain that my love can never cease.

5 My health nowadays is becoming a little better. Have the 6 rains started in Madras? When the rains begin a little in the South, 7 I may go to Madras via Bombay and Poona. With the onset of the 8 rains the terrible heat of the South will perhaps subside.

9 My great love to you and all others. Yesterday Sharat
10 returned to the Math from Darjeeling--his health is much better 11 than it was before. I have come here after a tour of East Bengal and 12 Assam. All work has its ups and down, its periods of intensity and 13 slackness. Again it will rise up. What fear? . . .

14 Whatever that may be, I say that you stop your work for some 15 time and come straight back to the Math. After you have taken a 16 month's rest here, you and I together will make a grand tour via 17 Gujarat, Bombay, Poona, Hyderabad, Mysore to Madras. Would not 18 that be grand? If you cannot do this, stop your lectures in Madras 19 for a month. Take a little good food and sleep well. Within two or

33 Dear Joe {Miss MacLeod},

34 I am so glad you are enjoying Japan--especially Japanese art.
35 You are perfectly correct in saying that we will have to learn many 36 things from Japan. The help that Japan will give us will be with 37 great sympathy and respect, whereas that from the West 38 unsympathetic and destructive. Certainly it is very desirable to 39 establish a connection between India and Japan.

40 As for me, I was thrown hors de combat in Assam. The 41 climate of the Math is just reviving me a bit. At Shillong--the hill 42 sanatorium of Assam--I had fever, asthma, increase of albumen, and 43 my body swelled to almost twice its normal size. These symptoms 44 subsided, however, as soon as I reached the Math. It is dreadfully 45 hot this year; but a bit of rain has commenced, and I hope we will 46 soon have the monsoon in full force. I have no plans just now, 47 except that the Bombay Presidency wants me so badly that I think

1 of going there soon. We are thinking of starting touring through 2 Bombay in a week or so.

3 The 300 dollars you speak of sent by Lady Betty have not 4 reached me yet, nor have I any intimation of its arrival from 5 General Patterson.

6 He, poor man, was rather miserable, after his wife and 7 children sailed for Europe and asked me to come and see him, but 8 unfortunately I was so ill, and am so afraid of going into the City 9 that I must wait till the rains have set in.

10 Now, Joe dear, if I am to go to Japan, this time it is necessary 11 that I take Saradananda with me to carry on the work. Also I must 12 have the promised letter to Li Huang Chang from Mr. Maxim; but 13 Mother knows the rest. I am still undecided.

14 So you went to Alanquinan to see the foreteller? Did he 15 convince you of his powers? What did he say? Write particular s'il 16 vous plait.

17 Jules Bois went as far as Lahore, being prevented from 18 entering Nepal. I learn from the papers that he could not bear the 19 heat and fell ill; then he took ship et bon voyage. He did not write 20 me a single line since we met in the Math. You also are determined 21 to drag Mrs. Bull down to Japan from Norway all the way--bien, 22 Mademoiselle, vous etes une puissante magicienne, sans doute.⁸²
23 Well, Joe, keep health and spirits up; the Alanquinan man's words 24 come out true most of them; and glorie et honneur await you--and 25 Mukti. The natural ambition of woman is through marriage to climb 26 up, leaning upon a man; but those days are gone. You shall be great 27 without the help of any man, just as you are, plain, dear Joe--our 28 Joe, everlasting Joe. . . .

29 We have seen enough of this life to care for any of its 30 bubbles, have we not Joe? For months I have been practising to 31 drive away all sentiments; therefore I stop here, and good-bye just 32 now. It is ordained by Mother we work together; it has been already 33 for the good of many; it shall be for the good of many more; so let it 34 be. It is useless planning, useless high flights; Mother will find Her 35 own way; . . . rest assured.

36 Ever yours with love and heart's

8 However, I am really trying to come, but you know--one

23 Dear Joe,

24 I can't even in imagination pay the immense debt of gratitude 25 I owe you. Wherever you are you never forget my welfare; and, 26 there, you are the only one that bears all my burdens, all my brutal 27 outbursts.

28 Your Japanese friend has been very kind, but my health is so 29 poor that I am rather afraid I have not much time to spare for 30 Japan. I will drag myself through the Bombay Presidency even if 31 only to say, "How do you do?" to all kind friends.

32 Then two months will be consumed in coming and going, and 33 only one month to stay; that is not much of a chance for work, is it?

34 So kindly pay the money your Japanese friend has sent for my 35 passage. I shall give it back to you when you come to India in 36 November.

37 I have had a terrible collapse in Assam from which I am 38 slowly recovering. The Bombay people have waited and waited till 39 they are sick--must see them this time.

40 If in spite of all this you wish me to come, I shall start the 41 minute you write.

1 I had a letter from Mrs. Leggett from London asking whether 2 the £300 have reached me safe. They have, and I had written a
3 week or so before to her the acknowledgment, c/o Monroe & Co., 4 Paris, as per her previous instructions.

5 Her last letter came to me with the envelope ripped up in a 6 most barefaced manner! The post offices in India don't even try to 7 do the opening of my mail decently.

16 My Dear Mary {Hale},

17 I am very thankful for your very long and nice letter, 18 especially as I needed just such a one to cheer me up a bit. My 19 health has been and is very bad. I recover for a few days only; then 20 comes the inevitable collapse. Well, this is the nature of the disease 21 anyway.

22 I have been touring of late in Eastern Bengal and Assam.
23 Assam is, next to Kashmir, the most beautiful country in India, but 24 very unhealthy. The huge Brahmaputra winding in and out of 25 mountains and hills, studded with islands, is of course worth one's 26 while to see.

27 My country is, as you know, the land of waters. But never did 28 I realise before what that meant. The rivers of East Bengal are 29 oceans of rolling fresh water, not rivers, and so long that steamers 30 work on them for weeks. Miss MacLeod is in Japan. She is of course 31 charmed with the country and asked me to come over, but my 32 health not permitting such a long voyage, I desisted. I have seen 33 Japan before.

34 So you are enjoying Venice. The old man must be delicious; 35 only Venice was the home of old Shylock, was it not?

36 Sam is with you this year--I am so glad! He must be enjoying 37 the good things of Europe after his dreary experience in the North.
38 I have not made any interesting friends of late, and the old ones 39 that you knew of, have nearly all passed away, even the Raja of 40 Khetri. He died of a fall from a high tower at Secundra, the tomb of 41 Emperor Akbar. He was repairing this old grand piece of 42 architecture at his own expense at Agra, and one day while on 43 inspection, he missed his footing, and it was a sheer fall of several 44 hundred feet. Thus we sometimes come to grief on account of our 45 zeal for antiquity. Take care, Mary, don't be too zealous for your 46 piece of Indian antiquity.

15 Dear Christine,

16 Things come to me by fits--today I am in a fit of writing. The 17 first thing to do is, therefore, to pen a few lines to you. I am known 18 to be nervous, I worry much; but it seems, dear Christine, you are 19 not far behind in that trick. One of our poets says, "Even the 20 mountains will fly, the fire will be cold, yet the heart of the great 21 will never change." I am small, very, but I know you are great, and 22 my faith is always in your true heart. I worry about everything
23 except you. I have dedicated you to the Mother. She is your shield,

38 My dear Mary {Hale},

39 I would that my health were what you expected--at least to 40 write you a long letter. It is getting worse, in fact, every day, and so 41 many complications and botherations without that. I have ceased to 42 notice it at all.

43 I wish you all joy in your lovely Swiss chalet--splendid health, 44 good appetite, and a light study of Swiss or other antiquities just to 1 liven things up a bit. I am so glad you are breathing the free air of 2 the mountains, but sorry that Sam is not in the best of health. Well, 3 there is no anxiety about it, he has naturally such a fine physique. . .

5 "Women's moods and man's luck--the gods themselves do not 6 know, what to speak of man?" My instincts may be very feminine,
7 but what I am exercised with just this moment is, that you get a 8 little bit of manliness about you. Oh! Mary, your brain, health, 9 beauty, everything is going to waste just for lack of that one 10 essential--assertion of individuality. Your haughtiness, spirit, etc.
11 are all nonsense, only mockery; you are at best a boarding-school 12 girl, no backbone! no backbone!

13 Alas! this lifelong leading-string business! This is very harsh, 14 very brutal; but I can't help it. I love you, Mary, sincerely, 15 genuinely; I can't cheat you with namby-pamby sugar candies. Nor 16 do they ever come to me.

17 Then again, I am a dying man; I have no time to fool in. Wake 18 up, girl. I expect now from you letters of the right slashing order; 19 give it right straight; I need a good deal of rousing.

20 I did not hear anything of the MacVeaghs when they were 21 here. I have not had any direct message from Mrs. Bull or Nivedita, 22 but I hear regularly from Mrs. Sevier, and they are all in Norway as 23 guests of Mrs. Bull.

24 I don't know when Nivedita comes to India or if she ever 25 comes back.

26 I am in a sense a retired man; I don't keep much note of what 27 is going on about the Movement; then the Movement is getting 28 bigger, and it is impossible for one man to know all about it 29 minutely.

30 I now do nothing, except trying to eat and sleep and nurse my 31 body the rest of the time. Good-bye, dear Mary; hope we shall meet 32 again somewhere in this life, but, meeting or not meeting, I remain,

44 Blessed and Beloved {Shri M. N. Banerji},

45 I am getting better, though still very weak. . . . The present 46 disturbance is simply nervous. Anyhow I am getting better every 1 day.

2 I am so much beholden to mother⁸³ for her kind proposal,
3 only I am told by everybody in the Math that Nilambar Babu's place 4 and the whole of the village of Belur at that becomes very 5 malarious this month and the next. Then the rent is so extravagant.
6 I would therefore advise mother to take a little house in Calcutta if 7 she decides to come. I may in all probability go and live there, as it 8 is not good for me to catch malaria over and above the present 9 prostration. I have not asked the opinion of Saradananda or 10 Brahmananda yet. Both are in Calcutta. Calcutta is healthier these 11 two months and very much less expensive.

12 After all, let her do as she is guided by the Lord. We can only 13 suggest and may be entirely wrong.

14 If she selects Nilambar's house for residence, do first arrange 15 the rent etc. beforehand. "Mother" knows best. That is all I know

29 Blessed and Beloved {Shri M. N. Banerji},

30 I had to consult Brahmananda and others, and they were 31 everyone in Calcutta, hence the delay in replying to your last.

32 The idea of taking a house for a whole year must be worked 33 out with deliberation. As on the one hand there is some risk of 34 catching malaria in Belur this month, in Calcutta on the other hand 35 there is the danger of plague. Then again one is sure to avoid fever 36 if one takes good care not to go into the interior of this village, the 37 immediate bank of the river being entirely free from fever. Plague 38 has not come to the river yet, and all the available places in this 39 village are filled with Marwaris during the plague season.

40 Then again you ought to mention the maximum rent you can 41 pay, and we seek the house accordingly. The quarter in the city is 42 another suggestion. For myself, I have almost become a foreigner to 43 Calcutta. But others will soon find a house after your mind. The 44 sooner you decide these two points: (1) Whether mother stays at 1 ⁸³ ?Holy Mother--Shri Sarada Devi.

1 Belur or Calcutta, (2) If Calcutta, what rent and quarter, the better, 2 as it can be done in a trice after receiving your reply.

4 My dear Swarup{ananda},

5 . . . In answer to Charu's letter, tell him to study the Brahma-
6 Sutras himself. What does he mean by the Brahma-Sutras
7 containing references to Buddhism? He means the Bhashyas, of 8 course, or rather ought to mean, and Shankara was only the last 9 Bhashyakara (commentator). There are references, though in 10 Buddhistic literature, to Vedanta, and the Mahayana school of 11 Buddhism is even Advaitistic. Why does Amara Singha, a Buddhist, 12 give as one of the names of Buddha--Advayavadi? Charu writes, the 13 word Brahman does not occur in the Upanishads! Quelle betise !

14 I hold the Mahayana to be the older of the two schools of 15 Buddhism.

16 The theory of Maya is as old as the Rik-Samhita. The 17 Shvetashvatara Upanishad contains the word "Maya" which is 18 developed out of Prakriti. I hold that Upanishad to be at least older 19 than Buddhism.

20 I have had much light of late about Buddhism, and I am ready 21 to prove:

22 (1) That Shiva-worship, in various forms, antedated the 23 Buddhists, that the Buddhists tried to get hold of the sacred places
24 of the Shaivas but, failing in that, made new places in the precincts 25 just as you find now at Bodh-Gaya and Sarnath (Varanasi).

26 (2) The story in the Agni Purana about Gayasura does not 27 refer to Buddha at all--as Dr. Rajendralal will have it--but simply to 28 a pre-existing story.

29 (3) That Buddha went to live on Gayashirsha mountain proves 30 the pre-existence of the place.

31 (4) Gaya was a place of ancestor-worship already, and the 32 footprint-worship the Buddhists copied from the Hindus.

33 (5) About Varanasi, even the oldest records go to prove it as 34 the great place of Shiva-worship; etc., etc.

35 Many are the new facts I have gathered in Bodh-Gaya and 36 from Buddhist literature. Tell Charu to read for himself, and not be 37 swayed by foolish opinions.

38 I am rather well here, in Varanasi, and if I go on improving in 39 this way, it will be a great gain.

40 A total revolution has occurred in my mind about the relation 41 of Buddhism and Neo-Hinduism. I may not live to work out the 42 glimpses, but I shall leave the lines of work indicated, and you and 43 your brethren will have to work it out.

{to Mrs. Ole Bull}

Welcome to India once more, dear mother and daughter. A copy of a Madras journal that I received through the kindness of Joe delighted me exceedingly, as the reception Nivedita had in Madras was for the good of both Nivedita and Madras. Her speech was indeed beautiful.

I hope you are resting well after your long journey, and so is Nivedita. I wish it so much that you should go for a few hours to a few villages west of Calcutta to see the old Bengali structures made of wood, bamboo, cane, mica, and grass.

These are the bungalows, most artistic. Alas! the name is travestied nowadays by every pigsty appropriating the name.

In old days a man who built a palace still built a bungalow for the reception of guests. The art is dying out. I wish I could build the whole of Nivedita's School in that style. Yet it is good to see a few that yet remained, at least one.

Brahmananda will arrange for it, and you have only to take a journey of a few hours.

Mr. Okakura has started on his short tour. He intends to visit Agra, Gwalior, Ajanta, Ellora, Chittore, Udaipur, Jaipur, and Delhi.

A very well-educated rich young man of Varanasi, with whose father we had a long-standing friendship, came back to this city yesterday. He is especially interested in art, and spending purposely a lot of money in his attempts to revive dying Indian arts. He came to see me only a few hours after Mr. Okakura left. He is just the man to show him artistic India (i.e. what little is left), and I am sure he will be much benefited by Okakura's suggestions. Okakura just found a common terracotta water-vessel here used by the servants. The shape and the embossed work on it simply charmed him, but as it is common earthenware and would not bear the journey, he left a request with me to have it reproduced in brass. I was at my wit's end as to what to do. My young friend comes a few hours after, and not only undertakes to have it done, but offers to show a few hundreds of embossed designs in terracotta infinitely superior to the one Okakura fancied.

He also offers to show us old painting in that wonderful old style. Only one family is left in Varanasi who can paint after the old style yet. One of them has painted a whole hunting scene on a pea, perfect in detail and action!

I hope Okakura will come to this city on his return and be this gentleman's guest and see a bit of what is left.

Niranjana has gone with Mr. Okakura, and as he is a Japanese, they don't object to his going into any temple. It seems that the Tibetans and the other Northern Buddhists have been coming here to worship Shiva all along.

They allowed him to touch the sign of Shiva and worship. Mrs. Annie Besant tried once, but, poor woman, although she bared her feet, put on a Sari, and humiliated herself to the dust before the priests, she was not admitted even into the compound of the temple. The Buddhists are not considered non-Hindus in any of our great temples. My plans are not settled; I may shift from this place very soon.

Shivananda and the boys send you all their welcome, regards, and love.

I am, as ever, your most affectionate son

I was glad to get all the detailed news from your letter. Regarding Nivedita's School, I have written to her what I have to say. My opinion is that she should do what she considers to be best.

Don't ask my opinion on any other matter either. That makes

Kanai (Nirbhayananda) lives on Madhukari,⁸⁴ does his Japa at the bathing ghat, and comes and sleeps here at night; Nyeda does a poor man's work and comes and sleeps here at night. "Uncle"⁸⁵ and Niranjan have gone to Agra. I may get their letter today.

My dear Rakhal,

You must have received by this time my letter of yesterday containing an acknowledgement of the money.

The main object of this letter is to write about--. You should go and meet him as soon as you get this letter. . . . Get a competent doctor and have the disease diagnosed properly. Now where is Vishnu Mohini, the eldest daughter of Ram Babu?⁸⁶ She has recently been widowed. . . .

Anxiety is worse than the disease. Give a little money--whatever is needed. If in this hell of a world one can bring a little joy and peace even for a day into the heart of a single person, that much alone is true; this I have learnt after suffering all my life; all else is mere moonshine. . . .

Reply very soon. "Uncle" and Niranjan have written a letter from Gwalior. . . . Here it is now becoming hot gradually. This place was cooler than Bodh-Gaya. . . . I was very pleased to hear that the Saraswati-Puja was celebrated by Nivedita with great success. If she wants to open the School soon, let her do so. Readings from the sacred books, worship, study--see that all these are being ⁸⁴ ?Cooked food obtained by begging from several houses.

⁸⁵ ?Mr. Okakura was endearingly so called. "Kura" approximating to "Khurha" in Bengali which means uncle; Swamiji out of fun calls him uncle.

17 The Math
18 14th June,

20 Dear Dhira Mata {Mrs. Ole Bull},
21 . . . In my opinion, a race must first cultivate a great respect 22 for motherhood, through the sanctification and inviolability of 23 marriage, before it can attain to the ideal of perfect chastity. The 24 Roman Catholics and the Hindus, holding marriage sacred and 25 inviolate, have produced great chaste men and women of immense 26 power. To the Arab, marriage is a contract or a forceful possession, 27 to be dissolved at will, and we do not find there the development of 28 the idea of the virgin or the Brahmacharin. Modern Buddhism-- 29 having fallen among races who had not yet come up to the evolution 30 of marriage--has made a travesty of monasticism. So until there is 31 developed in Japan a great and sacred ideal about marriage (apart 32 from mutual attraction and love), I do not see how there can be 33 great monks and nuns. As you have come to see that the glory of 34 life is chastity, so my eyes also have been opened to the necessity of 35 this great sanctification for the vast majority, in order that a few 36 lifelong chaste powers may be produced. . . .

INTERVIEWS

MIRACLES

(The Memphis Commercial, 15th January, 1894)

Asked by the reporter for his impressions of America, he said:

"I have a good impression of this country especially of the American women. I have especially remarked on the absence of poverty in America."

The conversation afterward turned to the subject of religions. Swami Vive Kananda expressed the opinion that the World's Parliament of Religions had been beneficial in that it had done much toward broadening ideas.

"What", asked the reporter, "is the generally accepted view held by those of your faith as to the fate after death of one holding the Christian religion?"

"We believe that if he is a good man he will be saved. Even an atheist, if he is a good man, we believe must be saved. That is our religion. We believe all religions are good, only those who hold them must not quarrel."

Swami Vive Kananda was questioned concerning the truthfulness of the marvelous stories of the performance of wonderful feats of conjuring, levitation, suspended animation, and the like in India. Vive Kananda said:

"We do not believe in miracles at all but that apparently strange things may be accomplished under the operation of natural laws. There is a vast amount of literature in India on these subjects, and the people there have made a study of these things.

"Thought-reading and foretelling of events are successfully practised by the Hathayogis.

"As to levitation, I have never seen anyone overcome gravitation and rise by will into the air, but I have seen many who were trying to do so. They read books published on the subject and spend years trying to accomplish the feat. Some of them in their efforts nearly starve themselves and become so thin that if one presses his finger upon their stomachs he can actually feel the spine.

"Some of these Hathayogis live to a great age."

The subject of suspended animation was broached and the Hindu monk told the Commercial reporter that he himself had known a man who went into a sealed cave, which was then closed up with a trap door, and remained there for many years without food. There was a decided stir of interest among those who heard this assertion. Vive Kananda entertained not the slightest doubt of the genuineness of this case. He says that in the case of suspended animation, growth is for the time arrested. He says the case of the

1 man in India who was buried with a crop of barley raised over his 2 grave and who was finally taken out still alive is perfectly well 3 authenticated. He thinks the studies which enabled persons to 4 accomplish that feat were suggested by the hibernating animals.

5 Vive Kananda said that he had never seen the feat which 6 some writers have claimed has been accomplished in India, of 7 throwing a rope into the air and the thrower climbing up the rope 8 and disappearing out of sight in the distant heights.

9 A lady present when the reporter was interviewing the monk
10 said some one had asked her if he, Vive Kananda, could perform 11 wonderful tricks, and if he had been buried alive as a part of his 12 installation in the Brotherhood. The answer to both questions was a 13 positive negative. "What have those things to do with religion?" he 14 asked. "Do they make a man purer? The Satan of your Bible is 15 powerful, but differs from God in not being pure."

16 Speaking of the sect of Hathayoga, Vive Kananda said there 17 was one thing, whether a coincidence or not, connected with the 18 initiation of their disciples, which was suggestive of the one 19 passage in the life of Christ. They make their disciples live alone for 20 just forty days.

23 AN INDIAN YOGI IN LONDON

24 (The Westminster Gazette, 23rd October, 1895)

25 Indian philosophy has in recent years had a deep and 26 growing fascination for many minds, though up to the present time 27 its exponents in this country have been entirely Western in their 28 thought and training, with the result that very little is really known 29 of the deeper mysteries of the Vedanta wisdom, and that little only 30 by a select few. Not many have the courage or the intuition to seek 31 in heavy translations, made greatly in the interests of philologists, 32 for that sublime knowledge which they really reveal to an able 33 exponent brought up in all the traditions of the East.

34 It was therefore with interest and not without some curiosity, 35 writes a correspondent, that I proceeded to interview an exponent
36 entirely novel to Western people, in the person of the Swami 37 Vivekananda, an actual Indian Yogi, who has boldly undertaken to 38 visit the Western world to expound the traditional teaching which 39 has been handed down by ascetics and Yogis through many ages, 40 and who in pursuance of this object, delivered a lecture last night in 41 the Princes' Hall.

42 The Swami Vivekananda is a striking figure with his turban 43 (or mitre-shaped black cloth cap) and his calm but kindly features.

1 On my inquiring as to the significance, if any, of his name, the 2 Swami said: "Of the name by which I am now known (Swami
3 Vivekananda), the first word is descriptive of a Sannyasin, or one 4 who formally renounces the world, and the second is the title I
5 assumed--as is customary with all Sannyasins--on my renunciation 6 of the world; it signifies, literally, 'the bliss of discrimination'."

7 "And what induced you to forsake the ordinary course of the 8 world, Swami?" I asked.

9 "I had a deep interest in religion and philosophy from my 10 childhood," he replied, "and our books teach renunciation as the 11 highest ideal to which man can aspire. It only needed the meeting 12 with a great Teacher--Ramakrishna Paramahansa--to kindle in me 13 the final determination to follow the path he himself had trod, as in 14 him I found my highest ideal realised."

15 "Then did he found a sect, which you now represent?"

16 "No", replied the Swami quickly. "No, his whole life was spent 17 in breaking down the barriers of sectarianism and dogma. He 18 formed no sect. Quite the reverse. He advocated and strove to 19 establish absolute freedom of thought. He was a great Yogi."

20 "Then you are connected with no society or sect in this 21 country? Neither Theosophical nor Christian Scientist, nor any 22 other?"

23 "None whatever!" said the Swami in clear and impressive 24 tones. (His face lights up like that of a child, it is so simple, 25 straightforward and honest.) "My teaching is my own interpretation 26 of our ancient books, in the light which my Master shed upon them.
27 I claim no supernatural authority. Whatever in my teaching may 28 appeal to the highest intelligence and be accepted by thinking men, 29 the adoption of that will be my reward." "All religions", he 30 continued, "have for their object the teaching either of devotion, 31 knowledge, or Yoga, in a concrete form. Now, the philosophy of 32 Vedanta is the abstract science which embraces all these methods, 33 and this it is that I teach, leaving each one to apply it to his own 34 concrete form. I refer each individual to his own experiences, and 35 where reference is made to books, the latter are procurable, and 36 may be studied by each one for himself. Above all, I teach no
37 authority proceeding from hidden beings speaking through visible 38 agents, any more than I claim learning from hidden books or 39 manuscripts. I am the exponent of no occult societies, nor do I 40 believe that good can come of such bodies. Truth stands on its own 41 authority, and truth can bear the light of day."

42 "Then you do not propose to form any society, Swami?" I 43 suggested.

44 "None; no society whatever. I teach only the Self, hidden in 45 the heart of every individual and common to all. A handful of strong 46 men knowing that Self and living in Its light would revolutionise the 47 world, even today, as has been the case by single strong men 48 before, each in his day."

1 "Have you just arrived from India?" I inquired--for the Swami
2 is suggestive of Eastern suns.

3 "No," he replied, "I represented the Hindu religion at the 4 Parliament of Religions held at Chicago in 1893. Since then I have 5 been travelling and lecturing in the United States. The American 6 people have proved most interested audiences and sympathetic
7 friends, and my work there has so taken root that I must shortly 8 return to that country."

9 "And what is your attitude towards the Western religions, 10 Swami?"

11 "I propound a philosophy which can serve as a basis to every 12 possible religious system in the world, and my attitude towards all 13 of them is one of extreme sympathy--my teaching is antagonistic to 14 none. I direct my attention to the individual, to make him strong, to 15 teach him that he himself is divine, and I call upon men to make 16 themselves conscious of this divinity within. That is really the ideal-- 17 conscious or unconscious--of every religion."

18 "And what shape will your activities take in this country?"

19 "My hope is to imbue individuals with the teachings to which 20 I have referred, and to encourage them to express these to others 21 in their own way; let them modify them as they will; I do not teach 22 them as dogmas; truth at length must inevitably prevail.

23 "The actual machinery through which I work is in the hands 24 of one or two friends. On October 22, they have arranged to me to 25 deliver an address to a British audience at Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, 26 at 8-30 p.m. The event is being advertised. The subject will be on 27 the key of my philosophy--'Self-Knowledge'. Afterwards I am 28 prepared to follow any course that opens--to attend meetings in 29 people's drawing-rooms or elsewhere, to answer letters, or discuss 30 personally. In a mercenary age I may venture to remark that none 31 of my activities are undertaken for a pecuniary reward."

32 I then took my leave from one of the most original of men that 33 I have had the honour of meeting.

36 INDIA'S MISSION

37 (Sunday Times, London, 1896)

38 English people are well acquainted with the fact that they 39 send missionaries to India's "coral strands". Indeed, so thoroughly 40 do they obey the behest, "Go ye forth into all the world and preach 41 the Gospel", that none of the chief British sects are behindhand in 42 obedience to the call to spread Christ's teaching. People are not so 43 well aware that India also sends missionaries to England.

1 By accident, if the term may be allowed, I fell across the 2 Swami Vivekananda in his temporary home at 63 St. George's Road, 3 S.W., and as he did not object to discuss the nature of his work and 4 visit to England, I sought him there and began our talk with an 5 expression of surprise at his assent to my request.

6 "I got thoroughly used to the interviewer in America. Because 7 it is not the fashion in my country, that is no reason why I should 8 not use means existing in any country I visit, for spreading what I 9 desire to be known! There I was representative of the Hindu 10 religion at the World's Parliament of Religions at Chicago in 1893.
11 The Raja of Mysore and some other friends sent me there. I think I 12 may lay claim to having had some success in America. I had many 13 invitations to other great American cities besides Chicago; my visit 14 was a very long one, for, with the exception of a visit to England last 15 summer, repeated as you see this year, I remained about three 16 years in America. The American civilisation is, in my opinion, a very 17 great one. I find the American mind peculiarly susceptible to new 18 ideas; nothing is rejected because it is new. It is examined on its 19 own merits, and stands or falls by these alone."

20 "Whereas in England--you mean to imply something?"

21 "Yes, in England, civilisation is older, it has gathered many 22 accretions as the centuries have rolled on. In particular, you have 23 many prejudices that need to be broken through, and whoever 24 deals with you in ideas must lay this to his account."

25 "So they say. I gather that you did not found anything like a 26 church or a new religion in America."

27 "That is true. It is contrary to our principles to multiply 28 organisations, since, in all conscience, there are enough of them.
29 And when organisations are created, they need individuals to look 30 after them. Now, those who have made Sannyasa--that is, 31 renunciation of all worldly position, property, and name--whose aim 32 is to seek spiritual knowledge, cannot undertake this work, which 33 is, besides, in other hands."

34 "Is your teaching a system of comparative religion?"

1 "It might convey a more definite idea to call it the kernel of all 2 forms of religion, stripping from them the non-essential, and laying 3 stress on that which is the real basis. I am a disciple of 4 Ramakrishna Paramahansa, a perfect Sannyasin whose influence 5 and ideas I fell under. This great Sannyasin never assumed the 6 negative or critical attitude towards other religions, but showed 7 their positive side--how they could be carried into life and practised.
8 To fight, to assume the antagonistic attitude, is the exact contrary of 9 his teaching, which dwells on the truth that the world is moved by 10 love. You know that the Hindu religion never persecutes. It is the 11 land where all sects may live in peace and amity. The 12 Mohammedans brought murder and slaughter in their train, but 13 until their arrival peace prevailed. Thus the Jains, who do not 14 believe in a God and who regard such belief as a delusion, were 15 tolerated, and still are there today. India sets the example of real 16 strength, that is meekness. Dash, pluck, fight, all these things are 17 weakness."

18 "It sounds very like Tolstoy's doctrine; it may do for 19 individuals, though personally I doubt it. But how will it answer for 20 nations?"

21 "Admirably for them also. It was India's Karma, her fate, to 22 be conquered, and in her turn, to conquer her conqueror. She has 23 already done so with her Mohammedan victors: Educated 24 Mohammedans are Sufis, scarcely to be distinguished from Hindus.
25 Hindu thought has permeated their civilisation; they assumed the 26 position of learners. The great Akbar, the Mogul Emperor, was 27 practically a Hindu. And England will be conquered in her turn.
28 Today she has the sword, but it is worse than useless in the world of 29 ideas. You know what Schopenhauer said of Indian thought. He 30 foretold that its influence would be as momentous in Europe, when 31 it became well known, as the revival of Greek and Latin culture
32 after the Dark Ages."

33 "Excuse me saying that there do not seem many signs of it 34 just now."

35 "Perhaps not", said the Swami, gravely. "I dare say a good 36 many people saw no signs of the old Renaissance and did not know 37 it was there, even after it had come. But there is a great movement, 38 which can be discerned by those who know the signs of the times.
39 Oriental research has of recent years made great progress. At 40 present it is in the hands of scholars, and it seems dry and heavy in 41 the work they have achieved. But gradually the light of 42 comprehension will break."

43 "And India is to be the great conqueror of the future? Yet she 44 does not send out many missionaries to preach her ideas. I presume 45 she will wait until the world comes to her feet?"

46 "India was once a great missionary power. Hundreds of years 47 before England was converted to Christianity, Buddha sent out 48 missionaries to convert the world of Asia to his doctrine. The world 49 of thought is being converted. We are only at the beginning as yet.
50 The number of those who decline to adopt any special form of 51 religion is greatly increasing, and this movement is among the 1 educated classes. In a recent American census, a large number of 2 persons declined to class themselves as belonging to any form of 3 religion. All religions are different expressions of the same truth; all 4 march on or die out. They are the radii of the same truth, the 5 expression that variety of minds requires."

6 "Now we are getting near it. What is that central truth?"

7 "The Divine within; every being, however degraded, is the 8 expression of the Divine. The Divinity becomes covered, hidden 9 from view. I call to mind an incident of the Indian Mutiny. A Swami, 10 who for years had fulfilled a vow of eternal silence, was stabbed by 11 a Mohammedan. They dragged the murderer before his victim and 12 cried out, 'Speak the word, Swami, and he shall die.' After many 13 years of silence, he broke it to say with his last breath: 'My 14 children, you are all mistaken. That man is God Himself.' The great 15 lesson is, that unity is behind all. Call it God, Love, Spirit, Allah, 16 Jehovah--it is the same unity that animates all life from the lowest 17 animal to the noblest man. Picture to yourself an ocean ice-bound, 18 pierced with many different holes. Each of these is a soul, a man, 19 emancipated according to his degree of intelligence, essaying to 20 break through the ice."

21 "I think I see one difference between the wisdom of the East 22 and that of the West. You aim at producing very perfect individuals 23 by Sannyasa, concentration, and so forth. Now the ideal of the West 24 seems to be the perfecting of the social state; and so we work at 25 political and social questions, since we think that the permanence 26 of our civilisation depends upon the well-being of the people."

27 "But the basis of all systems, social or political," said the 28 Swami with great earnestness, "rests upon the goodness of men.
29 No nation is great or good because Parliament enacts this or that, 30 but because its men are great and good. I have visited China which 31 had the most admirable organisation of all nations. Yet today China 32 is like a disorganised mob, because her men are not equal to the 33 system contrived in the olden days. Religion goes to the root of the 34 matter. If it is right, all is right."

35 "It sounds just a little vague and remote from practical life, 36 that the Divine is within everything but covered. One can't be 37 looking for it all the time."

38 "People often work for the same ends but fail to recognise the 39 fact. One must admit that law, government, politics are phases not 40 final in any way. There is a goal beyond them where law is not 41 needed. And by the way, the very word Sannyasin means the divine 42 outlaw, one might say, divine nihilist, but that miscomprehension 43 pursues those that use such a word. All great Masters teach the 44 same thing. Christ saw that the basis is not law, that morality and 45 purity are the only strength. As for your statement that the East 46 aims at higher self-development and the West at the perfecting of 47 the social state, you do not of course forget that there is an 48 apparent Self and a real Self."

49 "The inference, of course, being that we work for the 50 apparent, you for the real?"

1 "The mind works through various stages to attain its fuller
2 development. First, it lays hold of the concrete, and only gradually 3 deals with abstractions. Look, too, how the idea of universal 4 brotherhood is reached. First it is grasped as brotherhood within a 5 sect--hard, narrow, and exclusive. Step by step we reach broad 6 generalisations and the world of abstract ideas."

7 "So you think that those sects, of which we English are so 8 fond, will die out. You know what the Frenchman said, 'England, the 9 land of a thousand sects and but one sauce'."

10 "I am sure that they are bound to disappear. Their existence 11 is founded on non-essentials; the essential part of them will remain 12 and be built up into another edifice. You know the old saying that it 13 is good to be born in a church, but not to die in it."

14 "Perhaps you will say how your work is progressing in 15 England?"

16 "Slowly, for the reasons I have already named. When you deal 17 with roots and foundations, all real progress must be slow. Of 18 course, I need not say that these ideas are bound to spread by one 19 means or another, and to many of us the right moment for their 20 dissemination seems now to have come."

21 Then I listened to an explanation of how the work is carried 22 on. Like many an old doctrine, this new one is offered without 23 money and without price, depending entirely upon the voluntary 24 efforts of those who embrace it.

25 The Swami is a picturesque figure in his Eastern dress. His 26 simple and cordial manner, savouring of anything but the popular 27 idea of asceticism, an unusual command of English and great 28 conversational powers add not a little to an interesting personality. .
29 . . His vow of Sannyasa implies renunciation of position, property, 30 and name, as well as the persistent search for spiritual knowledge.

33 INDIA AND ENGLAND

34 (India, London, 1896)

35 During the London season, Swami Vivekananda has been 36 teaching and lecturing to considerable numbers of people who have 37 been attracted by his doctrine and philosophy. Most English people 38 fancy that England has the practical monopoly of missionary 39 enterprise, almost unbroken save for a small effort on the part of 40 France. I therefore sought the Swami in his temporary home in 41 South Belgravia to enquire what message India could possibly send 42 to England, apart from the remonstrances she has too often had to 43 make on the subject of home charges, judicial and executive 44 functions combined in one person, the settlement of expenses
45 connected with Sudanese and other expeditions.

46 "It is no new thing", said the Swami composedly, "that India 47 should send forth missionaries. She used to do so under the 48 Emperor Asoka, in the days when the Buddhist faith was young,

1 when she had something to teach the surrounding nation."

2 "Well, might one ask why she ever ceased doing so, and why 3 she has now begun again?"

4 "She ceased because she grew selfish, forgot the principle 5 that nations and individuals alike subsist and prosper by a system of 6 give and take. Her mission to the world has always been the same.
7 It is spiritual, the realm of introspective thought has been hers 8 through all the ages; abstract science, metaphysics, logic, are her 9 special domain. In reality, my mission to England is an outcome of 10 England's to India. It has been hers to conquer, to govern, to use 11 her knowledge of physical science to her advantage and ours. In 12 trying to sum up India's contribution to the world, I am reminded of 13 a Sanskrit and an English idiom. When you say a man dies, your 14 phrase is, 'He gave up the ghost', whereas we say, 'He gave up the 15 body'. Similarly, you more than imply that the body is the chief part 16 of man by saying it possesses a soul. Whereas we say a man is a 17 soul and possesses a body. These are but small ripples on the 18 surface, yet they show the current of your national thought. I 19 should like to remind you how Schopenhauer predicted that the 20 influence of Indian philosophy upon Europe would be as momentous 21 when it became well known as was the revival of Greek and Latin 22 learning at the close of the Dark Ages. Oriental research is making 23 great progress; a new world of ideas is opening to the seeker after 24 truth."

25 "And is India finally to conquer her conquerors?"

26 "Yes, in the world of ideas. England has the sword, the 27 material world, as our Mohammedan conquerors had before her.
28 Yet Akbar the Great became practically a Hindu; educated 29 Mohammedans, the Sufis, are hardly to be distinguished from the 30 Hindus; they do not eat beef, and in other ways conform to our 31 usages. Their thought has become permeated by ours."

32 "So, that is the fate you foresee for the lordly Sahib? Just at 33 this moment he seems to be a long way off it."

34 "No, it is not so remote as you imply. In the world of religious 35 ideas, the Hindu and the Englishman have much in common, and 36 there is proof of the same thing among other religious communities.
37 Where the English ruler or civil servant has had any knowledge of 38 India's literature, especially her philosophy, there exists the ground 39 of a common sympathy, a territory constantly widening. It is not too 40 much to say that only ignorance is the cause of that exclusive-- 41 sometimes even contemptuous--attitude assumed by some."

42 "Yes, it is the measure of folly. Will you say why you went to 43 America rather than to England on your mission?"

44 "That was a mere accident--a result of the World's Parliament 45 of Religions being held in Chicago at the time of the World's Fair, 46 instead of in London, as it ought to have been. The Raja of Mysore 47 and some other friends sent me to America as the Hindu 48 representative. I stayed there three years, with the exception of last 49 summer and this summer, when I came to lecture in London. The 50 Americans are a great people, with a future before them. I admire

1 them very much, and found many kind friends among them. They 2 are less prejudiced than the English, more ready to weigh and 3 examine a new idea, to value it in spite of its newness. They are 4 most hospitable too; far less time is lost in showing one's 5 credentials, as it were. You travel in America, as I did, from city to 6 city, always lecturing among friends. I saw Boston, New York, 7 Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Des Moines, Memphis, and 8 numbers of other places."

9 "And leaving disciples in each of them?"

10 "Yes, disciples, but not organisations. That is no part of my 11 work. Of these there are enough in all conscience. Organisations 12 need men to manage them; they must seek power, money, influence.
13 Often they struggle for domination, and even fight."

14 "Could the gist of this mission of yours be summed up in a 15 few words? Is it comparative religion you want to preach?"

16 "It is really the philosophy of religion, the kernel of all its 17 outward forms. All forms of religion have an essential and a non-18 essential part. If we strip from them the latter, there remains the 19 real basis of all religion, which all forms of religion possess in 20 common. Unity is behind them all. We may call it God, Allah, 21 Jehovah, the Spirit, Love; it is the same unity that animates all life, 22 from its lowest form to its noblest manifestation in man. It is on this 23 unity that we need to lay stress, whereas in the West, and indeed 24 everywhere, it is on the non-essential that men are apt to lay stress.
25 They will fight and kill each other for these forms, to make their 26 fellows conform. Seeing that the essential is love of God and love of 27 man, this is curious, to say the least."

28 "I suppose a Hindu could never persecute."

29 "He never yet has done so; he is the most tolerant of all the 30 races of men. Considering how profoundly religious he is, one might 31 have thought that he would persecute those who believe in no God.
32 The Jains regard such belief as sheer delusion, yet no Jain has even 33 been persecuted. In India the Mohammedans were the first who 34 ever took the sword."

35 "What progress does the doctrine of essential unity make in 36 England? Here we have a thousand sects."

37 "They must gradually disappear as liberty and knowledge 38 increase. They are founded on the non-essential, which by the 39 nature of things cannot survive. The sects have served their 40 purpose, which was that of an exclusive brotherhood on lines 41 comprehended by those within it. Gradually we reach the idea of 42 universal brotherhood by flinging down the walls of partition which 43 separate such aggregations of individuals. In England the work 44 proceeds slowly, possibly because the time is not yet ripe for it; but 45 all the same, it makes progress. Let me call your attention to the 46 similar work that England is engaged upon in India. Modern caste 47 distinction is a barrier to India's progress. It narrows, restricts, 48 separates. It will crumble before the advance of ideas.

49 "Yet some Englishmen, and they are not the least sympathetic

1 to India nor the most ignorant of her history, regard caste as in the 2 main beneficent. One may easily be too much Europeanised. You 3 yourself condemn many of our ideals as materialistic."

4 "True. No reasonable person aims at assimilating India to 5 England; the body is made by the thought that lies behind it. The 6 body politic is thus the expression of national thought, and in India, 7 of thousands of years of thought. To Europeanise India is therefore 8 an impossible and foolish task: the elements of progress were 9 always actively present in India. As soon as a peaceful government 10 was there, these have always shown themselves. From the time of 11 the Upanishads down to the present day, nearly all our great 12 Teachers have wanted to break through the barriers of caste, i.e.
13 caste in its degenerate state, not the original system. What little 14 good you see in the present caste clings to it from the original 15 caste, which was the most glorious social institution. Buddha tried 16 to re-establish caste in its original form. At every period of India's 17 awakening, there have always been great efforts made to break 18 down caste. But it must always be we who build up a new India as 19 an effect and continuation of her past, assimilating helpful foreign 20 ideas wherever they may be found. Never can it be they; growth 21 must proceed from within. All that England can do is to help India 22 to work out her own salvation. All progress at dictation of another, 23 whose hand is at India's throat, is valueless in my opinion. The 24 highest work can only degenerate when slave-labour produces it."

25 "Have you given any attention to the Indian National 26 Congress movement?"

27 "I cannot claim to have given much; my work is in another 28 part of the field. But I regard the movement as significant, and 29 heartily wish it success. A nation is being made out of India's 30 different races. I sometimes think they are no less various than the 31 different peoples of Europe. In the past, Europe has struggled for 32 Indian trade, a trade which has played a tremendous part in the 33 civilisation of the world; its acquisition might almost be called a 34 turning-point in the history of humanity. We see the Dutch, 35 Portuguese, French, and English contending for it in succession.
36 The discovery of America may be traced to the indemnification the 37 Venetians sought in the far distant West for the loss they suffered in 38 the East."

39 "Where will it end?"

40 "It will certainly end in the working out of India's 41 homogeneity, in her acquiring what we may call democratic ideas.
42 Intelligence must not remain the monopoly of the cultured few; it 43 will be disseminated from higher to lower classes. Education is 44 coming, and compulsory education will follow. The immense power 45 of our people for work must be utilised. India's potentialities are 46 great and will be called forth."

47 "Has any nation ever been great without being a great 48 military power?"

49 "Yes," said the Swami without a moment's hesitation, "China
50 has. Amongst other countries, I have travelled in China and Japan.

1 Today, China is like a disorganised mob; but in the heyday of her 2 greatness she possessed the most admirable organisation any 3 nation has yet known. Many of the devices and methods we term 4 modern were practised by the Chinese for hundreds and even 5 thousands of years. Take competitive examination as an 6 illustration."

7 "Why did she become disorganised?"

8 "Because she could not produce men equal to the system. You 9 have the saying that men cannot be made virtuous by an Act of 10 Parliament; the Chinese experienced it before you. And that is why 11 religion is of deeper importance than politics, since it goes to the 12 root, and deals with the essential of conduct."

13 "Is India conscious of the awakening that you allude to?"

14 "Perfectly conscious. The world perhaps sees it chiefly in the 15 Congress movement and in the field of social reform; but the 16 awakening is quite as real in religion, though it works more 17 silently."

18 "The West and East have such different ideals of life. Ours 19 seems to be the perfecting of the social state. Whilst we are busy 20 seeing to these matters, Orientals are meditating on abstractions.
21 Here has Parliament been discussing the payment of the Indian 22 army in the Sudan. All the respectable section of the Conservative 23 press has made a loud outcry against the unjust decision of the 24 Government, whereas you probably think the whole affair not worth 25 attention."

26 "But you are quite wrong", said the Swami, taking the paper
27 and running his eyes over extracts from the Conservative Journals.
28 "My sympathies in this matter are naturally with my country. Yet it 29 reminds one of the old Sanskrit proverb: 'You have sold the 30 elephant, why quarrel over the goad?' India always pays. The 31 quarrels of politicians are very curious. It will take ages to bring 32 religion into politics."

33 "One ought to make the effort very soon all the same."

34 "Yes, it is worth one's while to plant an idea in the heart of 35 this great London, surely the greatest governing machine that has 36 ever been set in motion. I often watch it working, the power and 37 perfection with which the minutest vein is reached, its wonderful 38 system of circulation and distribution. It helps one to realise how 39 great is the Empire and how great its task. And with all the rest, it 40 distributes thought. It would be worth a man's while to place some 41 ideas in the heart of this great machine, so that they might circulate 42 to the remotest part."

43 The Swami is a man of distinguished appearance. Tall, broad, 44 with fine features enhanced by his picturesque Eastern dress, his 45 personality is very striking. By birth, he is a Bengali, and by 46 education, a graduate of the Calcutta University. His gifts as an 47 orator are high. He can speak for an hour and a half without a note 48 or the slightest pause for a word.

INDIAN MISSIONARY'S MISSION TO ENGLAND

(The Echo, London, 1896)

. . . I presume that in his own country the Swami would live under a tree, or at most in the precincts of a temple, his head shaved, dressed in the costume of his country. But these things are not done in London, so that I found the Swami located much like other people, and, save that he wears a long coat of a dark orange shade, dressed like other mortals likewise. He laughingly related that his dress, especially when he wears a turban, does not commend itself to the London street arab, whose observations are scarcely worth repeating. I began by asking the Indian Yogi to spell his name very slowly. . . .

"Do you think that nowadays people are laying much stress on the non-essential?"

"I think so among the backward nations, and among the less cultured portion of the civilised people of the West. Your question implies that among the cultured and the wealthy, matters are on a different footing. So they are; the wealthy are either immersed in the enjoyment of wealth or grubbing for more. They, and a large section of the busy people, say of religion that it is rot, stuff, nonsense, and they honestly think so. The only religion that is fashionable is patriotism and Mrs. Grundy. People merely go to church when they are marrying or burying somebody."

"Will your message take them oftener to church?"

"I scarcely think it will. Since I have nothing whatever to do with ritual or dogma; my mission is to show that religion is everything and in everything. . . . And what can we say of the system here in England? Everything goes to show that Socialism or some form of rule by the people, call it what you will, is coming on the boards. The people will certainly want the satisfaction of their material needs, less work, no oppression, no war, more food. What guarantee have we that this or any civilisation will last, unless it is based on religion, on the goodness of man? Depend on it, religion goes to the root of the matter. If it is right, all is right."

"It must be difficult to get the essential, the metaphysical, part of religion into the minds of the people. It is remote from their thoughts and manner of life."

"In all religions we travel from a lesser to a higher truth, never from error to truth. There is a Oneness behind all creation, but minds are very various. 'That which exists is One, sages call It variously.' What I mean is that one progresses from a smaller to a greater truth. The worst religions are only bad readings of the truth. One gets to understand bit by bit. Even devil-worship is but a perverted reading of the ever-true and immutable Brahman. Other phases have more or less of the truth in them. No form of religion possesses it entirely."

1 "May one ask if you originated this religion you have come to 2 preach to England?"

3 "Certainly not. I am a pupil of a great Indian sage, 4 Ramakrishna Paramahansa. He was not what one might call a very 5 learned man, as some of our sages are, but a very holy one, deeply 6 imbued with the spirit of the Vedanta philosophy. When I say
7 philosophy, I hardly know whether I ought not to say religion, for it 8 is really both. You must read Professor Max Muller's account of my 9 Master in a recent number of the Nineteenth Century. Ramakrishna 10 was born in the Hooghly district in 1836 and died in 1886. He 11 produced a deep effect on the life of Keshab Chandra Sen and 12 others. By discipline of the body and subduing of the mind he 13 obtained a wonderful insight into the spiritual world. His face was 14 distinguished by a childlike tenderness, profound humility, and 15 remarkable sweetness of expression. No one could look upon it 16 unmoved."

17 "Then your teaching is derived from the Vedas?"

18 "Yes, Vedanta means the end of the Vedas, the third section 19 or Upanishads, containing the ripened ideas which we find more as 20 germs in the earlier portion. The most ancient portion of the Vedas 21 is the Samhita, which is in very archaic Sanskrit, only to be 22 understood by the aid of a very old dictionary, the Nirukta of 23 Yaska."

24 "I fear that we English have rather the idea that India has 25 much to learn from us; the average man is pretty ignorant as to 26 what may be learnt from India."

27 "That is so, but the world of scholars know well how much is 28 to be learnt and how important the lesson. You would not find Max 29 Muller, Monier Williams, Sir William Hunter, or German Oriental 30 scholars making light of Indian abstract science."

31 . . . The Swami gives his lecture at 39 Victoria Street. All are 32 made welcome, and as in ancient apostolic times, the new teaching 33 is without money and without price. The Indian missionary is a man 34 of exceptionally fine physique; his command of English can only be 35 described as perfect.

37 38 39 WITH THE SWAMI VIVEKANANDA AT MADURA

40 (The Hindu, Madras, February, 1897)

41 Q.--The theory that the universe is false seems to be 42 understood in the following senses: (a) the sense in which the 43 duration of perishing forms and names is infinitesimally small with 44 reference to eternity; (b) the sense in which the period between any 45 two Pralayas (involution of the universe) is infinitesimally small with 46 reference to eternity; (c) the sense in which the universe is 47 ultimately false though it has an apparent reality at present, 48 depending upon one sort of consciousness, in the same way as the 1 idea of silver superimposed on a shell or that of a serpent on a rope, 2 is true for the time being, and, in effect, is dependent upon a 3 particular condition of mind; (d) the sense in which the universe is a 4 phantom just like the son of a barren woman or like the horns of a 5 hare.

6 In which of these senses is the theory understood in the 7 Advaita philosophy?

8 A.--There are many classes of Advaitists and each has 9 understood the theory in one or the other sense. Shankara taught 10 the theory in the sense (c), and it is his teaching that the universe, 11 as it appears, is real for all purposes for every one in his present 12 consciousness, but it vanishes when the consciousness assumes a 13 higher form. You see the trunk of a tree standing before you, and 14 you mistake it for a ghost. The idea of a ghost is for the time being 15 real, for it works on your mind and produces the same result upon it 16 as if it were a ghost. As soon as you discover it to be a stump, the 17 idea of the ghost disappears. The idea of a stump and that of the 18 ghost cannot co-exist, and when one is present, the other is absent.

19 Q.--Is not the sense (d) also adopted in some of the writings of 20 Shankara?

21 A.--No. Some other men who, by mistake, carried Shankara's 22 notion to an extreme have adopted the sense (d) in their writing.
23 the senses (a) and (b) are peculiar to the writings of some other 24 classes of Advaita philosophers but never received Shankara's 25 sanction.

26 Q.--What is the cause of the apparent reality?

27 A.--What is the cause of your mistaking a stump for a ghost?
28 The universe is the same, in fact, but it is your mind that creates 29 various conditions for it.

30 Q.--What is the true meaning of the statement that the Vedas
31 are beginningless and eternal? Does it refer to the Vedic utterances 32 or the statements contained in the Vedas? If it refers to the truth 33 involved in such statements, are not the sciences, such as Logic, 34 Geometry, Chemistry, etc., equally beginningless and eternal, for 35 they contain an everlasting truth?

36 A.--There was a time when the Vedas themselves were 37 considered eternal in the sense in which the divine truths contained 38 therein were changeless and permanent and were only revealed to 39 man. At a subsequent time, it appears that the utterance of the 40 Vedic hymns with the knowledge of its meaning was important, and 41 it was held that the hymns themselves must have had a divine 42 origin. At a still later period the meaning of the hymns showed that 43 many of them could not be of divine origin, because they inculcated 44 upon mankind performance of various unholy acts, such as 45 torturing animals, and we can also find many ridiculous stories in 46 the Vedas. The correct meaning of the statement "The Vedas are 47 beginningless and eternal" is that the law or truth revealed by them 48 to man is permanent and changeless. Logic, Geometry, Chemistry, 49 etc., reveal also a law or truth which is permanent and changeless, 50 and in that sense they are also beginningless and eternal. But no

1 truth or law is absent from the Vedas, and I ask any one of you to 2 point out to me any truth which is not treated of in them.

3 Q.--What is the notion of Mukti, according to the Advaita 4 philosophy, or in other words, is it a conscious state? Is there any 5 difference between the Mukti of the Advaitism and the Buddhistic
6 Nirvana?

7 A.--There is a consciousness in Mukti, which we call 8 superconsciousness. It differs from your present consciousness. It is 9 illogical to say that there is no consciousness in Mukti. The 10 consciousness is of three sorts--the dull, mediocre, and intense--as 11 is the case of light. When vibration is intense, the brilliancy is so 12 very powerful as to dazzle the sight itself and in effect is as 13 ineffectual as the dullest of lights. The Buddhistic Nirvana must 14 have the same degree of consciousness whatever the Buddhists 15 may say. Our definition of Mukti is affirmative in its nature, while 16 the Buddhistic Nirvana has a negative definition.

17 Q.--Why should the unconditioned Brahman choose to assume 18 a condition for the purpose of manifestation of the world's creation?

19 A.--The question itself is most illogical. Brahman is 20 Avangmanasogocharam, meaning that which is incapable of being 21 grasped by word and mind. Whatever lies beyond the region of 22 space, time and causation cannot be conceived by the human mind, 23 and the function of logic and enquiry lies only within the region of 24 space, time, and causation. While that is so, it is a vain attempt to 25 question about what lies beyond the possibilities of human 26 conception.

27 Q.--Here and there attempts are made to import into the 28 Puranas hidden ideas which are said to have been allegorically 29 represented. Sometimes it is said that the Puranas need not contain 30 any historical truth, but are mere representations of the highest 31 ideals illustrated with fictitious characters. Take for instance, 32 Vishnupurana, Ramayana, or Bharata. Do they contain historical 33 veracity or are they mere allegorical representations of 34 metaphysical truths, or are they representations of the highest 35 ideals for the conduct of humanity, or are they mere epic poems
36 such as those of Homer?

37 A.--Some historical truth is the nucleus of every Purana. The 38 object of the Puranas is to teach mankind the sublime truth in 39 various forms; and even if they do not contain any historical truth, 40 they form a great authority for us in respect of the highest truth 41 which they inculcate. Take the Ramayana, for illustration, and for 42 viewing it as an authority on building character, it is not even 43 necessary that one like Rama should have ever lived. The sublimity 44 of the law propounded by Ramayana or Bharata does not depend 45 upon the truth of any personality like Rama or Krishna, and one can 46 even hold that such personages never lived, and at the same time 47 take those writings as high authorities in respect of the grand ideas 48 which they place before mankind. Our philosophy does not depend 49 upon any personality for its truth. Thus Krishna did not teach 50 anything new or original to the world, nor does Ramayana profess 51 anything which is not contained in the Scriptures. It is to be noted

1 that Christianity cannot stand without Christ, Mohammedanism
2 without Mohammed, and Buddhism without Buddha, but Hinduism
3 stands independent of any man, and for the purpose of estimating 4 the philosophical truth contained in any Purana, we need not 5 consider the question whether the personages treated of therein
6 were really material men or were fictitious characters. The object 7 of the Puranas was the education of mankind, and the sages who 8 constructed them contrived to find some historical personages and 9 to superimpose upon them all the best or worst qualities just as 10 they wanted to, and laid down the rules of morals for the conduct of 11 mankind. Is it necessary that a demon with ten heads 12 (Dashamukha) should have actually lived as stated in the 13 Ramayana? It is the representation of some truth which deserves to 14 be studied, apart from the question whether Dashamukha was a 15 real or fictitious character. You can now depict Krishna in a still 16 more attractive manner, and the description depends upon the 17 sublimity of your ideal, but there stands the grand philosophy
18 contained in the Puranas.

19 Q.--Is it possible for a man, if he were an adept, to remember 20 the events connected with his past incarnations? The physiological 21 brain, which he owned in his previous incarnation, and in which the 22 impressions of his experience were stored, is no longer present. In 23 this birth he is endowed with a new physiological brain, and while 24 that is so, how is it possible for the present brain to get at the 25 impressions received by another apparatus which is not existence 26 at present?

27 Swami--What do you mean by an adept?

28 Correspondent--One that has developed the hidden powers of 29 his nature.

30 Swami--I cannot understand how the hidden powers can be 31 developed. I know what you mean, but I should always desire that 32 the expressions used are precise and accurate. You may say that 33 the powers hidden are uncovered. It is possible for those that have 34 uncovered the hidden powers of their nature to remember the 35 incidents connected with their past incarnations, for their present 36 brain had its Bija (seed) in the Sukshma man after death.

37 Q.--Does the spirit of Hinduism permit the proselytism of 38 strangers into it? And can a Brahmin listen to the exposition of 39 philosophy made by a Chandala?

40 A.--Proselytism is tolerated by Hinduism. Any man, whether 41 he be a Shudra or Chandala, can expound philosophy even to a 42 Brahmin. The truth can be learnt from the lowest individual, no 43 matter to what caste or creed he belongs.

44 Here the Swami quoted Sanskrit verses of high authority in 45 support of his position.

46 The discourse ended, as the time appointed in the 47 programme for his visiting the Temple had already arrived. He 48 accordingly took leave of the gentlemen present and proceeded to 49 visit the Temple.

THE ABROAD AND THE PROBLEMS AT HOME

(The Hindu, Madras, February, 1897)

Our representative met the Swami Vivekananda in the train at the Chingleput Station and travelled with him to Madras. The following is the report of the interview:

"What made you go to America, Swamiji?"

"Rather a serious question to answer in brief. I can only answer it partly now. Because I travelled all over India, I wanted to go over to other countries. I went to America by the Far East."

"What did you see in Japan, and is there any chance of India following in the progressive steps of Japan?"

"None whatever, until all the three hundred millions of India combine together as a whole nation. The world has never seen such a patriotic and artistic race as the Japanese, and one special feature about them is this that while in Europe and elsewhere Art generally goes with dirt, Japanese Art is Art plus absolute cleanliness. I would wish that every one of our young men could visit Japan once at least in his lifetime. It is very easy to go there. The Japanese think that everything Hindu is great and believe that India is a holy land. Japanese Buddhism is entirely different from what you see in Ceylon. It is the same as Vedanta. It is positive and theistic Buddhism, not the negative atheistic Buddhism of Ceylon."

"What is the key to Japan's sudden greatness?"

"The faith of the Japanese in themselves, and their love for their country. When you have men who are ready to sacrifice their everything for their country, sincere to the backbone--when such men arise, India will become great in every respect. It is the men that make the country! What is there in the country? If you catch the social morality and the political morality of the Japanese, you will be as great as they are. The Japanese are ready to sacrifice everything for their country, and they have become a great people. But you are not; you cannot be, you sacrifice everything only for your own families and possessions."

"Is it your wish that India should become like Japan?"

"Decidedly not. India should continue to be what she is. How could India ever become like Japan, or any nation for the matter of that? In each nation, as in music, there is a main note, a central theme, upon which all others turn. Each nation has a theme: everything else is secondary. India's theme is religion. Social reform and everything else are secondary. Therefore India cannot be like Japan. It is said that when 'the heart breaks', then the flow of thought comes. India's heart must break, and the flow of spirituality will come out. India is India. We are not like the Japanese, we are Hindus. India's very atmosphere is soothing. I have been working incessantly here, and amidst this work I am getting rest. It is only from spiritual work that we can get rest in India. If your work is 1 material here, you die of--diabetes!"

2 "So much for Japan. What was your first experience of 3 America, Swamiji?"

4 "From first to last it was very good. With the exception of the 5 missionaries and 'Church-women' the Americans are most 6 hospitable, kind-hearted, generous, and good-natured."

7 "Who are these 'Church-women' that you speak of, Swamiji?"

8 "When a woman tries her best to find a husband, she goes to 9 all the fashionable seaside resorts and tries all sorts of tricks to 10 catch a man. When she fails in her attempts, she becomes, what 11 they call in America, an 'old maid', and joins the Church. Some of 12 them become very 'Churchy'. These 'Church-women' are awful 13 fanatics. They are under the thumb of the priests there. Between 14 them and the priests they make hell of earth and make a mess of 15 religion. With the exception of these, the Americans are a very good 16 people. They loved me, and I love them a great deal. I felt as if I 17 was one of them."

18 "What is your idea about the results of the Parliament of 19 Religions?"

20 "The Parliament of Religions, as it seems to me, was intended 21 for a 'heathen show' before the world: but it turned out that the 22 heathens had the upper hand and made it a Christian show all 23 around. So the Parliament of Religions was a failure from the 24 Christian standpoint, seeing that the Roman Catholics, who were 25 the organisers of that Parliament, are, when there is talk of another 26 Parliament at Paris, now steadily opposing it. But the Chicago 27 Parliament was a tremendous success for India and Indian thought.
28 It helped on the tide of Vedanta, which is flooding the world. The 29 American people--of course, minus the fanatical priests and 30 Church-women--are very glad of the results of the Parliament."

31 "What prospects have you, Swamiji, for the spread of your 32 mission in England?"

33 "There is every prospect. Before many years elapse a vast 34 majority of the English people will be Vedantins. There is a greater 35 prospect of this in England than there is in America. You see, 36 Americans make a fanfaronade of everything, which is not the case 37 with Englishmen. Even Christians cannot understand their New 38 Testament, without understanding the Vedanta. The Vedanta is the 39 rationale of all religions. Without the Vedanta every religion is 40 superstition; with it everything becomes religion."

41 "What is the special trait you noticed in the English 42 character?"

43 "The Englishman goes to practical work as soon as he 44 believes in something. He has tremendous energy for practical 45 work. There is in the whole world no human being superior to the 46 English gentleman or lady. That is really the reason of my faith in 47 them. John Bull is rather a thick-headed gentleman to deal with.
48 You must push and push an idea till it reaches his brain, but once 49 there, it does not get out. In England, there was not one missionary 1 or anybody who said anything against me; not one who tried to 2 make a scandal about me. To my astonishment, many of my friends

3 belong to the Church of England. I learn, these missionaries do not 4 come from the higher classes in England. Caste is as rigorous there 5 as it is here, and the English churchmen belong to the class of 6 gentlemen. They may differ in opinion from you, but that is no bar 7 to their being friends with you; therefore, I would give a word of 8 advice to my countrymen, which is, not to take notice of the 9 vituperative missionaries, now that I have known that they are. We 10 have 'sized' them, as the Americans say. Non-recognition is the only 11 attitude to assume towards them."

12 "Will you kindly enlighten me, Swamiji, on the Social Reform 13 movements in America and England?"

14 "Yes. All the social upheavalists, at least the leaders of them, 15 are trying to find that all their communistic or equalising theories 16 must have a spiritual basis, and that spiritual basis is in the Vedanta 17 only. I have been told by several leaders, who used to attend my 18 lectures, that they required the Vedanta as the basis of the new 19 order of things."

20 "What are your views with regard to the Indian masses?"

21 "Oh, we are awfully poor, and our masses are very ignorant 22 about secular things. Our masses are very good because poverty 23 here is not a crime. Our masses are not violent. Many times I was 24 near being mobbed in America and England, only on account of my 25 dress. But I never heard of such a thing in India as a man being 26 mobbed because of peculiar dress. In every other respect, our 27 masses are much more civilised than the European masses."

28 "What will you propose for the improvement of our masses?"

29 "We have to give them secular education. We have to follow 30 the plan laid down by our ancestors, that is, to bring all the ideals 31 slowly down among the masses. Raise them slowly up, raise them to 32 equality. Impart even secular knowledge through religion."

33 "But do you think, Swamiji, it is a task that can be easily 34 accomplished?"

35 "It will, of course, have gradually to be worked out. But if 36 there are enough self-sacrificing young fellows, who, I hope, will 37 work with me, it can be done tomorrow. It all depends upon the zeal 38 and the self-sacrifice brought to the task."

39 "But if the present degraded condition is due to their past 40 Karma, Swamiji, how do you think they could get out of it easily, 41 and how do you propose to help them?"

42 The Swamiji readily answered: "Karma is the eternal 43 assertion of human freedom. If we can bring ourselves down by our 44 Karma, surely it is in our power to raise ourselves by it. The 45 masses, besides, have not brought themselves down altogether by 46 their own Karma. So we should give them better environments to 47 work in. I do not propose any levelling of castes. Caste is a very 48 good thing. Caste is the plan we want to follow. What caste really is, 49 not one in a million understands. There is no country in the world

1 without caste. In India, from caste we reach to the point where 2 there is no caste. Caste is based throughout on that principle. The 3 plan in India is to make everybody a Brahmin, the Brahmin being 4 the ideal of humanity. If you read the history of India you will find 5 that attempts have always been made to raise the lower classes.
6 Many are the classes that have been raised. Many more will follow
7 till the whole will become Brahmin. That is the plan. We have only 8 to raise them without bringing down anybody. And this has mostly 9 to be done by the Brahmins themselves, because it is the duty of 10 every aristocracy to dig its own grave; and the sooner it does so, 11 the better for all. No time should be lost. Indian caste is better than 12 the caste which prevails in Europe or America. I do not say it is 13 absolutely good. Where would you be if there were no caste? Where 14 would be your learning and other things, if there were no caste?
15 There would be nothing left for the Europeans to study if caste had 16 never existed! The Mohammedans would have smashed everything 17 to pieces. Where do you find the Indian society standing still? It is 18 always on the move. Sometimes, as in the times of foreign 19 invasions, the movement has been slow, at other times quicker. This 20 is what I say to my countrymen. I do not condemn them. I look into 21 their past. I find that under the circumstances no nation could do 22 more glorious work. I tell them that they have done well. I only ask 23 them to do better.

24 "What are your views, Swamiji, in regard to the relation of 25 caste to rituals?"

26 "Caste is continually changing, rituals are continually 27 changing, so are forms. It is the substance, the principle, that does 28 not change. It is in the Vedas that we have to study our religion.
29 With the exception of the Vedas every book must change. The 30 authority of the Vedas is for all time to come; the authority of every 31 one of our other books is for the time being. For instance, one 32 Smriti is powerful for one age, another for another age. Great 33 prophets are always coming and pointing the way to work. Some 34 prophets worked for the lower classes, others like Madhva gave to 35 women the right to study the Vedas. Caste should not go; but should 36 only be readjusted occasionally. Within the old structure is to be 37 found life enough for the building of two hundred thousand new 38 ones. It is sheer nonsense to desire the abolition of caste. The new 39 method is--evolution of the old."

40 "Do not Hindus stand in need of social reform?"

41 "We do stand in need of social reform At times great men 42 would evolve new ideas of progress, and kings would give them the 43 sanction of law. Thus social improvements had been in the past 44 made in India, and in modern times to effect such progressive 45 reforms, we will have first to build up such an authoritative power.
46 Kings having gone, the power is the people's. We have, therefore, to 47 wait till the people are educated, till they understand their needs 48 and are ready and able to solve their problems. The tyranny of the 49 minority is the worst tyranny in the world. Therefore, instead of 50 frittering away our energies on ideal reforms, which will never 51 become practical, we had better go to the root of the evil and make 52 a legislative body, that is to say, educate our people, so that they

1 may be able to solve their own problems. Until that is done all these 2 ideal reforms will remain ideals only. The new order of things is the 3 salvation of the people by the people, and it takes time to make it 4 workable, especially in India, which has always in the past been 5 governed by kings."

6 "Do you think Hindu society can successfully adopt European 7 social laws?"

8 "No, not wholly. I would say, the combination of the Greek 9 mind represented by the external European energy added to the 10 Hindu spirituality would be an ideal society for India. For instance, 11 it is absolutely necessary for you, instead of frittering away your 12 energy and often talking of idle nonsense, to learn from the 13 Englishman the idea of prompt obedience to leaders, the absence of 14 jealousy, the indomitable perseverance and the undying faith in 15 himself. As soon as he selects a leader for a work, the Englishman 16 sticks to him through thick and thin and obeys him. Here in India, 17 everybody wants to become a leader, and there is nobody to obey.
18 Everyone should learn to obey before he can command. There is no
19 end to our jealousies; and the more important the Hindu, the more 20 jealous he is. Until this absence of jealousy and obedience to 21 leaders are learnt by the Hindu, there will be no power or 22 organisation. We shall have to remain the hopelessly confused mob 23 that we are now, hoping and doing nothing. India has to learn from 24 Europe the conquest of external nature, and Europe has to learn 25 from India the conquest of internal nature. Then there will be 26 neither Hindus nor Europeans--there will be the ideal humanity 27 which has conquered both the natures, the external and the 28 internal. We have developed one phase of humanity, and they 29 another. It is the union of the two that is wanted. The word freedom 30 which is the watchword of our religion really means freedom 31 physically, mentally, and spiritually."

32 "What relation, Swamiji, does ritual bear to religion?"

33 "Rituals are the kindergarten of religion. They are absolutely 34 necessary for the world as it is now; only we shall have to give 35 people newer and fresher rituals. A party of thinkers must 36 undertake to do this. Old rituals must be rejected and new ones 37 substituted."

38 "Then you advocate the abolition of rituals, don't you?"

39 "No, my watchword is construction, not destruction. Out of 40 the existing rituals, new ones will have to be evolved. There is 41 infinite power of development in everything; that is my belief. One 42 atom has the power of the whole universe at its back. All along, in 43 the history of the Hindu race, there never was any attempt at 44 destruction, only construction. One sect wanted to destroy, and they 45 were thrown out of India: They were the Buddhists. We have had a 46 host of reformers--Shankara, Ramanuja, Madhva, and Chaitanya.
47 These were great reformers, who always were constructive and 48 built according to the circumstances of their time. This is our 49 peculiar method of work. All the modern reformers take to 50 European destructive reformation, which will never do good to 51 anyone and never did. Only once was a modern reformer mostly

1 constructive, and that one was Raja Ram Mohan Ray. The progress
2 of the Hindu race has been towards the realisation of the Vedantic 3 ideals. All history of Indian life is the struggle for the realisation of 4 the ideal of the Vedanta through good or bad fortune. Whenever 5 there was any reforming sect or religion which rejected the 6 Vedantic ideal, it was smashed into nothing."

7 "What is your programme of work here?"

8 "I want to start two institutions, one in Madras and one in 9 Calcutta, to carry out my plan; and that plan briefly is to bring the 10 Vedantic ideals into the everyday practical life of the saint or the 11 sinner, of the sage or the ignoramus, of the Brahmin or the Pariah."

12 Our representative here put to him a few questions relative to 13 Indian politics; but before the Swami could attempt anything like an 14 answer, the train steamed up to the Egmore platform, and the only 15 hurried remark that fell from the Swami was that he was dead 16 against all political entanglements of Indian and European 17 problems. The interview then terminated.

18 19 THE MISSIONARY WORK OF THE FIRST HINDU SANNYASIN TO THE 20 WEST AND HIS PLAN OF REGENERATION OF INDIA

21 (Madras Times, February, 1897)

22 For the past few weeks, the Hindu public of Madras have 23 been most eagerly expecting the arrival of Swami Vivekananda, the 24 great Hindu monk of world-wide fame. At the present moment his 25 name is on everybody's lips. In the school, in the college, in the 26 High Court, on the marina, and in the streets and bazaars of 27 Madras, hundreds of inquisitive spirits may be seen asking when 28 the Swami will be coming. Large numbers of students from the 29 mofussil, who have come up for the University examinations are 30 staying here, awaiting the Swami, and increasing their hostelry 31 bills, despite the urgent call of their parents to return home 32 immediately. In a few days the Swami will be in our midst. From the 33 nature of the receptions received elsewhere in this Presidency, from 34 the preparations being made here, from the triumphal arches 35 erected at Castle Kernan, where the "Prophet" is to be lodged at 36 the cost of the Hindu public, and from the interest taken in the 37 movement by the leading Hindu gentlemen of this city, like the 38 Hon'ble Mr. Justice Subramaniya Iyer, there is no doubt that the 39 Swami will have a grand reception. It was Madras that first 40 recognised the superior merits of the Swami and equipped him for 41 Chicago. Madras will now have again the honour of welcoming the 42 undoubtedly great man who has done so much to raise the prestige 43 of his motherland. Four years ago, when the Swami arrived here, he 44 was practically an obscure individual. In an unknown bungalow at 45 St. Thome he spent nearly two months, all along holding 46 conversations of religious topics and teaching and instructing all 47 comers who cared to listen to him. Even then a few educated young 48 men with "a keener eye" predicted that there was something in the 49 man, "a power", that would lift him above all others, that would pre-50 eminently enable him to be the leader of men. These young men,

1 who were then despised as "misguided enthusiasts", "dreamy 2 revivalists", have now the supreme satisfaction of seeing their 3 Swami, as they love to call him, return to them with a great 4 European and American fame. The mission of the Swami is 5 essentially spiritual. He firmly believes that India, the motherland 6 of spirituality, has a great future before her. He is sanguine that the 7 West will more and more come to appreciate what he regards as 8 the sublime truths of Vedanta. His great motto is "Help, and not 9 Fight", "Assimilation, and not Destruction", "Harmony and Peace, 10 and not Dissension". Whatever difference of opinion followers of 11 other creeds may have with him, few will venture to deny that the 12 Swami has done yeoman's service to his country in opening the 13 eyes of the Western world to "the good in the Hindu". He will 14 always be remembered as the first Hindu Sannyasin who dared to 15 cross the sea to carry to the West the message of what he believes 16 in as a religious peace.

17 A representative of our paper interviewed the Swami 18 Vivekananda, with a view to eliciting from him an account of the 19 success of his mission in the West. The Swami very courteously 20 received our representative and motioned him to a chair by his side.
21 The Swami was dressed in yellow robes, was calm, serene, and 22 dignified, and appeared inclined to answer any questions that might 23 be put to him. We have given the Swami's words as taken down in 24 shorthand by our representative.

25 "May I know a few particulars about your early life?" asked 26 our representative.

27 The Swami said: "Even while I was a student at Calcutta, I 28 was of a religious temperament. I was critical even at that time of 29 my life, mere words would not satisfy me. Subsequently I met 30 Ramakrishna Paramahansa, with whom I lived for a long time and 31 under whom I studied. After the death of my father I gave myself up 32 to travelling in India and started a little monastery in Calcutta.
33 During my travels, I came to Madras, where I received help from 34 the Maharaja of Mysore and the Raja of Ramnad."

35 "What made Your Holiness carry the mission of Hinduism to 36 Western countries?"

37 "I wanted to get experience. My idea as to the keynote of our 38 national downfall is that we do not mix with other nations--that is 39 the one and the sole cause. We never had opportunity to compare 40 notes. We were Kupa-Mandukas (frogs in a well)."

41 "You have done a good deal of travelling in the West?"

42 "I have visited a good deal of Europe, including Germany and 43 France, but England and America were the chief centres of my 44 work. At first I found myself in a critical position, owing to the 45 hostile attitude assumed against the people of this country by those 46 who went there from India. I believe the Indian nation is by far the 47 most moral and religious nation in the whole world, and it would be 48 a blasphemy to compare the Hindus with any other nation. At first, 49 many fell foul of me, manufactured huge lies against me by saying 50 that I was a fraud, that I had a harem of wives and half a regiment

1 of children. But my experience of these missionaries opened my 2 eyes as to what they are capable of doing in the name of religion.
3 Missionaries were nowhere in England. None came to fight me. Mr.
4 Lund went over to America to abuse me behind my back, but people
5 would not listen to him. I was very popular with them. When I came 6 back to England, I thought this missionary would be at me, but the 7 Truth silenced him. In England the social status is stricter than 8 caste is in India. The English Church people are all gentlemen born, 9 which many of the missionaries are not. They greatly sympathised
10 with me. I think that about thirty English Church clergymen agree 11 entirely with me on all points of religious discussion. I was 12 agreeably surprised to find that the English clergymen, though they 13 differed from me, did not abuse me behind my back and stab me in 14 the dark. There is the benefit of caste and hereditary culture."

15 "What has been the measure of your success in the West?"

16 "A great number of people sympathised with me in America-- 17 much more than in England. Vituperation by the low-caste 18 missionaries made my cause succeed better. I had no money, the 19 people of India having given me my bare passage-money, which was 20 spent in a very short time. I had to live just as here on the charity of 21 individuals. The Americans are very hospitable people. In America 22 one-third of the people are Christians, but the rest have no religion, 23 that is they do not belong to any of the sects, but amongst them are 24 to be found the most spiritual persons. I think the work in England 25 is sound. If I die tomorrow and cannot send any more Sannyasins, 26 still the English work will go on. The Englishman is a very good 27 man. He is taught from his childhood to suppress all his feelings.
28 He is thick-headed, and is not so quick as the Frenchman or the 29 American. He is immensely practical. The American people are too 30 young to understand renunciation.

31 England has enjoyed wealth and luxury for ages. Many 32 people there are ready for renunciation. When I first lectured in 33 England I had a little class of twenty or thirty, which was kept going 34 when I left, and when I went back from America I could get an 35 audience of one thousand. In America I could get a much bigger 36 one, as I spent three years in America and only one year in 37 England. I have two Sannyasins--one in England and one in 38 America, and I intend sending Sannyasins to other countries.

39 "English people are tremendous workers. Give them an idea, 40 and you may be sure that that idea is not going to be lost, provided 41 they catch it. People here have given up the Vedas, and all your 42 philosophy is in the kitchen. The religion of India at present is 43 'Don't-touchism'--that is a religion which the English people will 44 never accept. The thoughts of our forefathers and the wonderful 45 life-giving principles that they discovered, every nation will take.
46 The biggest guns of the English Church told me that I was putting 47 Vedantism into the Bible. The present Hinduism is a degradation.
48 There is no book on philosophy, written today, in which something 49 of our Vedantism is not touched upon--even the works of Herbert 50 Spencer contain it. The philosophy of the age is Advaitism, 51 everybody talks of it; only in Europe, they try to be original. They 52 talk of Hindus with contempt, but at the same time swallow the

1 truths given out by the Hindus. Professor Max Muller is a perfect 2 Vedantist, and has done splendid work in Vedantism. He believes in 3 re-incarnation."

4 "What do you intend doing for the regeneration of India?"

5 "I consider that the great national sin is the neglect of the 6 masses, and that is one of the causes of our downfall. No amount of 7 politics would be of any avail until the masses in India are once 8 more well educated, well fed, and well cared for. They pay for our 9 education, they build our temples, but in return they get kicks. They 10 are practically our slaves. If we want to regenerate India, we must 11 work for them. I want to start two central institutions at first--one at 12 Madras and the other at Calcutta--for training young men as 13 preachers. I have funds for starting the Calcutta one. English 14 people will find funds for my purpose.

15 "My faith is in the younger generation, the modern 16 generation, out of them will come my workers. They will work out 17 the whole problem, like lions. I have formulated the idea and have 18 given my life to it. If I do not achieve success, some better one will 19 come after me to work it out, and I shall be content to struggle. The 20 one problem you have is to give to the masses their rights. You have 21 the greatest religion which the world ever saw, and you feed the 22 masses with stuff and nonsense. You have the perennial fountain 23 flowing, and you give them ditch-water. Your Madras graduate 24 would not touch a low-caste man, but is ready to get out of him the 25 money for his education. I want to start at first these two 26 institutions for educating missionaries to be both spiritual and 27 secular instructors to our masses. They will spread from centre to 28 centre, until we have covered the whole of India. The great thing is 29 to have faith in oneself, even before faith in God; but the difficulty 30 seems to be that we are losing faith in ourselves day by day. That is 31 my objection against the reformers. The orthodox have more faith 32 and more strength in themselves, in spite of their crudeness; but 33 the reformers simply play into the hands of Europeans and pander 34 to their vanity. Our masses are gods as compared with those of 35 other countries. This is the only country where poverty is not a 36 crime. They are mentally and physically handsome; but we hated 37 and hated them till they have lost faith in themselves. They think 38 they are born slaves. Give them their rights, and let them stand on 39 their rights. This is the glory of the American civilisation. Compare 40 the Irishman with knees bent, half-starved, with a little stick and 41 bundle of clothes, just arrived from the ship, with what he is, after a 42 few months' stay in America. He walks boldly and bravely. He has 43 come from a country where he was a slave to a country where he is 44 a brother.

45 "Believe that the soul is immortal, infinite and all-powerful.
46 My idea of education is personal contact with the teacher-- 47 Gurugriha-Vasa. Without the personal life of a teacher there would 48 be no education. Take your Universities. What have they done
49 during the fifty years of their existence? They have not produced 50 one original man. They are merely an examining body. The idea of 51 the sacrifice for the common weal is not yet developed in our 52 nation."

1 "What do you think of Mrs. Besant and Theosophy?"

2 "Mrs. Besant is a very good woman. I lectured at her Lodge
3 in London. I do not know personally much about her. Her 4 knowledge of our religion is very limited; she picks up scraps here
5 and there; she never had time to study it thoroughly. That she is one 6 of the most sincere of women, her greatest enemy will concede. She 7 is considered the best speaker in England. She is a Sannyasini. But 8 I do not believe in Mahatmas and Kuthumis. Let her give up her 9 connection with the Theosophical Society, stand on her own footing, 10 and preach what she thinks right."

11 Speaking of social reforms, the Swami expressed himself
12 about widow-marriage thus: "I have yet to see a nation whose fate 13 is determined by the number of husbands their widows get."

14 Knowing as he did that several persons were waiting 15 downstairs to have an interview with the Swami, our representative 16 withdrew, thanking the Swami for the kindness with which he had 17 consented to the journalistic torture.

18 The Swami, it may be remarked, is accompanied by Mr. and 19 Mrs. J. H. Sevier, Mr. T. G. Harrison, a Buddhist gentleman of 20 Colombo, and Mr. J. J. Goodwin. It appears that Mr. and Mrs. Sevier
21 accompany the Swami with a view to settling in the Himalayas, 22 where they intend building a residence for the Western disciples of 23 the Swami, who may have an inclination to reside in India. For 24 twenty years, Mr. and Mrs. Sevier had followed no particular 25 religion, finding satisfaction in none of those that were preached; 26 but on listening to a course of lectures by the Swami, they 27 professed to have found a religion that satisfied their heart and 28 intellect. Since then they have accompanied the Swami through 29 Switzerland, Germany, and Italy, and now to India. Mr. Goodwin, a 30 journalist in England, became a disciple of the Swami fourteen 31 months ago, when he first met him at New York. He gave up his 32 journalism and devotes himself to attending the Swami and taking 33 down his lectures in shorthand. He is in every sense a true 34 "disciple", saying that he hopes to be with the Swami till his death.

38 REAWAKENING OF HINDUISM ON A 39 NATIONAL BASIS

40 (Prabuddha Bharata, September, 1898)

41 In an interview which a representative of Prabuddha Bharata
42 had recently with the Swami Vivekananda, that great Teacher was 43 asked: "What do you consider the distinguishing feature of your 44 movement, Swamiji?"

1 "Aggression," said the Swami promptly, "aggression in a 2 religious sense only. Other sects and parties have carried 3 spirituality all over India, but since the days of Buddha we have 4 been the first to break bounds and try to flood the world with 5 missionary zeal."

6 And what do you consider to be the function of your 7 movement as regards India?"

8 "To find the common bases of Hinduism and awaken the 9 national consciousness to them. At present there are three parties 10 in India included under the term 'Hindu'--the orthodox, the 11 reforming sects of the Mohammedan period, and the reforming 12 sects of the present time. Hindus from North to South are only 13 agreed on one point, viz. on not eating beef."

14 "Not a common love for the Vedas?"

15 "Certainly not. That is just what we want to re-awaken. India 16 has not yet assimilated the work of Buddha. She is hypnotised by 17 his voice, not made alive by it."

18 "In what way do you see this importance of Buddhism in India 19 today?"

20 "It is obvious and overwhelming. You see India never loses 21 anything; only she takes time to turn everything into bone and 22 muscle. Buddha dealt a blow at animal sacrifice from which India 23 has never recovered; and Buddha said, 'Kill no cows', and cow-24 killing is an impossibility with us."

25 "With which of the three parties you name do you identify 26 yourself, Swamiji?"

27 "With all of them. We are orthodox Hindus," said the Swami, 28 "but", he added suddenly with great earnestness and emphasis, "we 29 refuse entirely to identify ourselves with 'Don't-touchism'. That is 30 not Hinduism: it is in none of our books; it is an unorthodox 31 superstition which has interfered with national efficiency all along 32 the line."

33 "Then what you really desire is national efficiency?"

34 "Certainly. Can you adduce any reason why India should lie in 35 the ebb-tide of the Aryan nations? Is she inferior in intellect? Is she 36 inferior in dexterity? Can you look at her art, at her mathematics, at 37 her philosophy, and answer 'yes'? All that is needed is that she 38 should de-hypnotise herself and wake up from her age-long sleep to 39 take her true rank in the hierarchy of nations."

40 "But India has always had her deep inner life. Are you not 41 afraid, Swamiji, that in attempting to make her active you may take 42 from her, her one great treasure?"

1 "Not at all. The history of the past has gone to develop the 2 inner life of India and the activity (i.e. the outer life) of the West.
3 Hitherto these have been divergent. The time has now come for 4 them to unite. Ramakrishna Paramahansa was alive to the depths 5 of being, yet on the outer plane who was more active? This is the 6 secret. Let your life be as deep as the ocean, but let it also be as 7 wide as the sky.

8 "It is a curious thing", continued the Swami, "that the inner 9 life is often most profoundly developed where the outer conditions 10 are most cramping and limiting. But this is an accidental--not an 11 essential--association, and if we set ourselves right here in India, 12 the world will be 'rightened'. For are we not all one?"

13 "Your last remarks, Swamiji, raise another question. In what 14 sense is Shri Ramakrishna a part of this awakened Hinduism?"

15 "That is not for me to determine", said the Swami. "I have 16 never preached personalities. My own life is guided by the 17 enthusiasm of this great soul; but others will decide for themselves 18 how far they share in this attitude. Inspiration is not filtered out to 19 the world through one channel, however great. Each generation 20 should be inspired afresh. Are we not all God?"

21 "Thank you. I have only one question more to ask you. You 22 have defined the attitude and function of your movement with 23 regard to your own people. Could you in the same way characterise 24 your methods of action as a whole?"

25 "Our method", said the Swami, "is very easily described. It 26 simply consists in reasserting the national life. Buddha preached 27 renunciation. India heard, and yet in six centuries she reached her 28 greatest height. The secret lies there. The national ideals of India
29 are RENUNCIATION and SERVICE. Intensify her in those channels, 30 and the rest will take care of itself. The banner of the spiritual 31 cannot be raised too high in this country. In it alone is salvation.

32
33
34 ON INDIAN WOMEN--THEIR PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE

35 (Prabuddha Bharata, December, 1898)

36 It was early one Sunday morning, writes our representative, 37 in a beautiful Himalayan valley, that I was at last able to carry out 38 the order of the Editor, and call on the Swami Vivekananda, to 39 ascertain something of his views on the position and prospects of 40 Indian women.

41 "Let us go for a walk", said the Swami, when I had announced 42 my errand, and we set out at once amongst some of the most lovely 43 scenery in the world.

44 By sunny and shady ways we went, through quiet villages, 45 amongst playing children and across the golden cornfields. Here 46 the tall trees seemed to pierce the blue above, and there a group of 47 peasant girls stooped, sickle in hand, to cut and carry off the plume-48 tipped stalks of maize-straw for the winter stores. Now the road led

1 into an apple orchard, where great heaps of crimson fruit lay under 2 the trees for sorting, and again we were out in the open, facing the 3 snows that rose in august beauty above the white clouds against 4 the sky.

5 At last my companion broke the silence. "The Aryan and 6 Semitic ideal of woman", he said, "have always been diametrically 7 opposed. Amongst the Semites the presence of woman is 8 considered dangerous to devotion, and she may not perform any 9 religious function, even such as the killing of a bird for food:
10 according to the Aryan a man cannot perform a religious action 11 without a wife."

12 "But Swamiji!" said I--startled at an assertion so sweeping
13 and so unexpected--"is Hinduism not an Aryan faith?"

14 "Modern Hinduism", said the Swami quietly, "is largely 15 Pauranika, that is, post-Buddhistic in origin. Dayananda Saraswati 16 pointed out that though a wife is absolutely necessary in the 17 Sacrifice of the domestic fire, which is a Vedic rite, she may not 18 touch the Shalagrama Shila, or the household idol, because that 19 dates from the later period of the Puranas."

20 "And so you consider the inequality of woman amongst us as 21 entirely due to the influence of Buddhism?"

22 "Where it exists, certainly," said the Swami, "but we should 23 not allow the sudden influx of European criticism and our 24 consequent sense of contrast to make us acquiesce too readily in 25 this notion of the inequality of our women. Circumstances have 26 forced upon us, for many centuries, the woman's need of 27 protection. This, and not her inferiority, is the true reading of our 28 customs."

29 "Are you then entirely satisfied with the position of women 30 amongst us, Swamiji?"

31 "By no means," said the Swami, but our right of interference
32 is limited entirely to giving education. Women must be put in a 33 position to solve their own problems in their own way. No one can 34 or ought to do this for them. And our Indian women are as capable 35 of doing it as any in the world."

36 "How do you account for the evil influence which you 37 attribute to Buddhism?"

38 "It came only with the decay of the faith", said the Swami.
39 "Every movement triumphs by dint of some unusual characteristic, 40 and when it falls, that point of pride becomes its chief element of 41 weakness. The Lord Buddha--greatest of men--was a marvellous 42 organiser and carried the world by this means. But his religion was 43 the religion of a monastic order. It had, therefore, the evil effect of 44 making the very robe of the monk honoured. He also introduced for 45 the first time the community life of religious houses and thereby 46 necessarily made women inferior to men, since the great abbesses
47 could take no important step without the advice of certain abbots. It 48 ensured its immediate object, the solidarity of the faith, you see, 49 only its far-reaching effects are to be deplored."

1 "But Sannyasa is recognised in the Vedas!"

2 "Of course it is, but without making any distinction between 3 men and women. Do you remember how Yajnavalkya was 4 questioned at the Court of King Janaka? His principal examiner was 5 Vachaknavi, the maiden orator--Brahmavadini, as the word of the 6 day was. 'Like two shining arrows in the hand of the skilled archer', 7 she says, 'are my questions.' Her sex is not even commented upon.
8 Again, could anything be more complete than the equality of boys
9 and girls in our old forest universities? Read our Sanskrit dramas-- 10 read the story of Shakuntala, and see if Tennyson's 'Princess' has 11 anything to teach us!"

12 "You have a wonderful way of revealing the glories of our 13 past, Swamiji!"

14 "Perhaps, because I have seen both sides of the world," said
15 the Swami gently, "and I know that the race that produced Sita-- 16 even if it only dreamt of her--has a reverence for woman that is 17 unmatched on the earth. There is many a burden bound with legal 18 tightness on the shoulders of Western women that is utterly 19 unknown to ours. We have our wrongs and our exceptions certainly, 20 but so have they. We must never forget that all over the globe the 21 general effort is to express love and tenderness and uprightness, 22 and that national customs are only the nearest vehicles of this 23 expression. With regard to the domestic virtues I have no hesitation 24 in saying that our Indian methods have in many ways the advantage 25 over all others."

26 "Then have our women any problems at all, Swamiji?"

27 "Of course, they have many and grave problems, but none
28 that are not to be solved by that magic word 'education'. The true 29 education, however, is not yet conceived of amongst us."

30 "And how would you define that?"

31 "I never define anything", said the Swami, smiling. "Still, it 32 may be described as a development of faculty, not an accumulation 33 of words, or as a training of individuals to will rightly and efficiently.
34 So shall we bring to the need of India great fearless women--women 35 worthy to continue the traditions of Sanghamitta, Lila, Ahalya Bai, 36 and Mira Bai--women fit to be mothers of heroes, because they are 37 pure and selfless, strong with the strength that comes of touching 38 the feet of God."

39 "So you consider that there should be a religious element in 40 education, Swamiji?"

41 "I look upon religion as the innermost core of education", said 42 the Swami solemnly. "Mind, I do not mean my own, or any one 43 else's opinion about religion. I think the teacher should take the 44 pupil's starting-point in this, as in other respects, and enable her to 45 develop along her own line of least resistance."

46 "But surely the religious exaltation of Brahmacharya, by 47 taking the highest place from the mother and wife and giving it to 48 those who evade those relations, is a direct blow dealt at woman?"

49 "You should remember," said the Swami, "that if religion

1 exalts Brahmacharya for woman, it does exactly the same for man.
2 Moreover, your question shows a certain confusion in your own
3 mind. Hinduism indicates one duty, only one, for the human soul. It 4 is to seek to realise the permanent amidst the evanescent. No one 5 presumes to point out any one way in which this may be done.
6 Marriage or non-marriage, good or evil, learning or ignorance, any 7 of these is justified, if it leads to the goal. In this respect lies the 8 great contrast between it and Buddhism, for the latter's 9 outstanding direction is to realise the impermanence of the 10 external, which, broadly speaking, can only be done in one way. Do 11 you recall the story of the young Yogi in the Mahabharata who 12 prided himself on his psychic powers by burning the bodies of a 13 crow and crane by his intense will, produced by anger? Do you 14 remember that the young saint went into the town and found first a 15 wife nursing her sick husband and then the butcher Dharma-16 Vyadha, both of whom had obtained enlightenment in the path of 17 common faithfulness and duty?"

18 "And so what would you say, Swamiji, to the women of this 19 country?"

20 "Why, to the women of this country," said the Swami, "I would 21 say exactly what I say to the men. Believe in India and in our Indian 22 faith. Be strong and hopeful and unashamed, and remember that 23 with something to take, Hindus have immeasurably more to give 24 than any other people in the world."

25 26 27 ON THE BOUNDS OF HINDUISM

28 (Prabuddha Bharata, April, 1899)

29 Having been directed by the Editor, writes our 30 representative, to interview Swami Vivekananda on the question of 31 converts to Hinduism, I found an opportunity one evening on the 32 roof of a Ganga houseboat. It was after nightfall, and we had 33 stopped at the embankment of the Ramakrishna Math, and there
34 the Swami came down to speak with me.

35 Time and place were alike delightful. Overhead the stars, and 36 around--the rolling Ganga; and on one side stood the dimly lighted 37 building, with its background of palms and lofty shade-trees.

38 "I want to see you, Swami", I began, "on this matter of 39 receiving back into Hinduism those who have been perverted from 40 it. Is it your opinion that they should be received?"

41 "Certainly," said the Swami, "they can and ought to be taken."

42 He sat gravely for a moment, thinking, and then resumed.
43 "Besides," he said, "we shall otherwise decrease in numbers. When 44 the Mohammedans first came, we are said--I think on the authority 45 of Ferishta, the oldest Mohammedan historian--to have been six 46 hundred millions of Hindus. Now we are about two hundred 47 millions. And then every man going out of the Hindu pale is not only 48 a man less, but an enemy the more.

1 "Again, the vast majority of Hindu perverts to Islam and 2 Christianity are perverts by the sword, or the descendants of these.
3 It would be obviously unfair to subject these to disabilities of any 4 kind. As to the case of born aliens, did you say? Why, born aliens 5 have been converted in the past by crowds, and the process is still 6 going on.

7 "In my own opinion, this statement not only applies to 8 aboriginal tribes, to outlying nations, and to almost all our 9 conquerors before the Mohammedan conquest, but also to all those 10 castes who find a special origin in the Puranas. I hold that they 11 have been aliens thus adopted.

12 "Ceremonies of expiation are no doubt suitable in the case of 13 willing converts, returning to the Mother-Church, as it were; but on 14 those who were alienated by conquest--as in Kashmir and Nepal--or 15 on strangers wishing to join us, no penance should be imposed."

16 "But of what caste would these people be, Swamiji?" I 17 ventured to ask. "They must have some, or they can never be 18 assimilated into the great body of Hindus. Where shall we look for 19 their rightful place?"

20 "Returning converts", said the Swami quietly, "will gain their 21 own castes, of course. And new people will make theirs. You will 22 remember," he added, "that this has already been done in the case 23 of Vaishnavism. Converts from different castes and aliens were all 24 able to combine under that flag and form a caste by themselves-- 25 and a very respectable one too. From Ramanuja down to Chaitanya 26 of Bengal, all great Vaishnava Teachers have done the same."

27 "And where should these new people expect to marry?"

28 "Amongst themselves, as they do now", said the Swami 29 quietly."

30 "Then as to names," I enquired, "I suppose aliens and 31 perverts who have adopted non-Hindu names should be named 32 newly. Would you give them caste-names, or what?"

33 "Certainly," said the Swami, thoughtfully, "there is a great 34 deal in a name!" and on this question he would say no more.

35 But my next enquiry drew blood. "Would you leave these new-36 comers, Swamiji, to choose their own form of religious belief out of 37 many-visaged Hinduism, or would you chalk out a religion for 38 them?"

39 "Can you ask that?" he said. "They will choose for themselves.
40 For unless a man chooses for himself, the very spirit of Hinduism is 41 destroyed. The essence of our Faith consists simply in this freedom 42 of the Ishta."

43 I thought the utterance a weighty one, for the man before me
44 has spent more years than any one else living, I fancy, in studying 45 the common bases of Hinduism in a scientific and sympathetic 46 spirit--and the freedom of the Ishta is obviously a principle big 47 enough to accommodate the world.

48 But the talk passed to other matters, and then with a cordial

1 good night this great teacher of religion lifted his lantern and went 2 back into the monastery, while I, by the pathless paths of the 3 Ganga, in and out amongst her crafts of many sizes, made the best 4 of my way back to my Calcutta home.

NOTES FROM LECTURES AND DISCOURSES

ON KARMA-YOGA

Isolation of the soul from all objects, mental and physical, is the goal; when that is attained, the soul will find that it was alone all the time, and it required no one to make it happy. As long as we require someone else to make us happy, we are slaves. When the Purusha finds that It is free, and does not require anything to complete Itself, that this nature is quite unnecessary, then freedom (Kaivalya) is attained.

Men run after a few dollars and do not think anything of cheating a fellow-being to get those dollars; but if they would restrain themselves, in a few years they would develop such characters as would bring them millions of dollars--if they wanted them. Then their will would govern the universe. But we are all such fools!

What is the use of talking of one's mistakes to the world? They cannot thereby be undone. For what one has done one must suffer; one must try and do better. The world sympathises only with the strong and the powerful.

It is only work that is done as a free-will offering to humanity and to nature that does not bring with it any binding attachment.

Duty of any kind is not to be slighted. A man who does the lower work is not, for that reason only, a lower man than he who does the higher work; a man should not be judged by the nature of his duties, but by the manner in which he does them. His manner of doing them and his power to do them are indeed the test of a man. A shoemaker who can turn out a strong, nice pair of shoes in the shortest possible time is a better man, according to his profession and his work, than a professor who talks nonsense every day of his life.

Every duty is holy, and devotion to duty is the highest form of the worship of God; it is certainly a source of great help in enlightening and emancipating the deluded and ignorance-encumbered souls of the Baddhas--the bound ones.

By doing well the duty which is nearest to us, the duty which is in our hands now, we make ourselves stronger; and improving our strength in this manner step by step, we may even reach a state in which it shall be our privilege to do the most coveted and honoured duties in life and in society.

Nature's justice is uniformly stern and unrelenting.

The most practical man would call life neither good nor evil.

Every successful man must have behind him somewhere tremendous integrity, tremendous sincerity, and that is the cause of his signal success in life. He may not have been perfectly unselfish;

1 yet he was tending towards it. If he had been perfectly unselfish, 2 his would have been as great a success as that of the Buddha or of 3 the Christ. The degree of unselfishness marks the degree of success 4 everywhere.

5 The great leaders of mankind belong to higher fields than the 6 field of platform work.

7 However we may try, there cannot be any action which is 8 perfectly pure or any which is perfectly impure, taking purity or 9 impurity in the sense of injury or non-injury. We cannot breathe or 10 live without injuring others, and every morsel of food we eat is 11 taken from another's mouth; our very lives are crowding out some 12 other lives. It may be those of men, or animals, or small fungi, but 13 someone somewhere we have to crowd out. That being the case, it 14 naturally follows that perfection can never be attained by work. We 15 may work through all eternity, but there will be no way out of this 16 intricate maze: we may work on and on and on, but there will be no 17 end.

18 The man who works through freedom and love cares nothing 19 for results. But the slave wants his whipping; the servant wants his 20 pay. So with all life; take for instance the public life. The public 21 speaker wants a little applause or a little hissing and hooting. If you 22 keep him in a corner without it, you kill him, for he requires it. This 23 is working through slavery. To expect something in return, under 24 such conditions, becomes second nature. Next comes the work of 25 the servant, who requires some pay; I give this, and you give me
26 that. Nothing is easier to say, "I work for work's sake", but nothing 27 is so difficult to attain. I would go twenty miles on my hands and 28 knees to look on the face of the man who can work for work's sake.
29 There is a motive somewhere. If it is not money, it is power. If it is 30 not power, it is gain. Somehow, somewhere, there is a motive 31 power. You are my friend, and I want to work for you and with you.
32 This is all very well, and every moment I may make protestation of 33 my sincerity. But take care, you must be sure to agree with me! If 34 you do not, I shall no longer take care of you or live for you! This 35 kind of work for a motive brings misery. That work alone brings 36 unattachment and bliss, wherein we work as masters of our own 37 minds.

38 The great lesson to learn is that I am not the standard by 39 which the whole universe is to be judged; each man is to be judged 40 by his own idea, each race by its own standard and ideal, each 41 custom of each country by its own reasoning and conditions.
42 American customs are the result of the environment in which the 43 Americans live, and Indian customs are the result of the 44 environment in which the Indians are; and so of China, Japan, 45 England, and every other country.

46 We all find ourselves in the position for which we are fit, each 47 ball finds its own hole; and if one has some capacity above another, 48 the world will find that out too, in this universal adjusting that goes 49 on. So it is no use to grumble. There may be a rich man who is 50 wicked, yet there must be in that man certain qualities that made 51 him rich; and if any other man has the same qualities, he will also

1 become rich. What is the use of fighting and complaining? That will 2 not help us to better things. He who grumbles at the little thing that 3 has fallen to his lot to do will grumble at everything. Always 4 grumbling, he will lead a miserable life, and everything will be a 5 failure. But that man who does his duty as he goes, putting his 6 shoulder to the wheel, will see the light, and higher and higher 7 duties will fall to his share.

11 ON FANATICISM

13 There are fanatics of various kinds. Some people are wine
14 fanatics and cigar fanatics. Some think that if men gave up smoking 15 cigars, the world would arrive at the millennium. Women are 16 generally amongst these fanatics. There was a young lady here one 17 day, in this class. She was one of a number of ladies in Chicago who 18 have built a house where they take in the working people and give 19 them music and gymnastics. One day this young lady was talking 20 about the evils of the world and said she knew the remedy. I asked, 21 "How do you know?" and she answered, "Have you seen Hull 22 House?" In her opinion, this Hull House is the one panacea for all 23 the evils that flesh is heir to. This will grow upon her. I am sorry for 24 her. There are some fanatics in India who think that if a woman 25 could marry again when her husband died, it would cure all evil.
26 This is fanaticism.

27 When I was a boy I thought that fanaticism was a great 28 element in work, but now, as I grow older, I find out that it is not.

29 There may be a woman who would steal and make no 30 objection to taking someone else's bag and going away with it. But 31 perhaps that woman does not smoke. She becomes a smoke fanatic, 32 and as soon as she finds a man smoking, she strongly disapproves 33 of him, because he smokes a cigar. There may be a man who goes 34 about cheating people; there is no trusting him; no woman is safe 35 with him. But perhaps this scoundrel does not drink wine. If so, he 36 sees nothing good in anyone who drinks wine. All these wicked 37 things that he himself does are of no consideration. This is only 38 natural human selfishness and one-sidedness.

39 You must also remember that the world has God to govern it, 40 and He has not left it to our charity. The Lord God is its Governor 41 and Maintainer, and in spite of these wine fanatics and cigar
42 fanatics, and all sorts of marriage fanatics, it would go on. If all 43 these persons were to die, it would go on none the worse.

44 Do you not remember in your own history how the 45 "Mayflower" people came out here, and began to call themselves 46 Puritans? They were very pure and good as far as they went, until 47 they began to persecute other people; and throughout the history of 48 mankind it has been the same. Even those that run away from 49 persecution indulge in persecuting others as soon as a favourable

1 opportunity to do so occurs.

2 In ninety cases out of a hundred, fanatics must have bad 3 livers, or they are dyspeptics, or are in some way diseased. By 4 degrees even physicians will find out that fanaticism is a kind of 5 disease. I have seen plenty of it. The Lord save me from it!

6 My experience comes to this, that it is rather wise to avoid all 7 sorts of fanatical reforms. This world is slowly going on; let it go 8 slowly. Why are you in a hurry?

9 Sleep well and keep your nerves in good order; eat right food, 10 and have sympathy with the world. Fanatics only make hatred. Do 11 you mean to say that the temperance fanatic loves these poor 12 people who become drunkards? A fanatic is a fanatic simply 13 because he expects to get something for himself in return. As soon 14 as the battle is over, he goes for the spoil. When you come out of 15 the company of fanatics you may learn how really to love and 16 sympathise. And the more you attain of love and sympathy, the less 17 will be your power to condemn these poor creatures; rather you will 18 sympathise with their faults. It will become possible for you to 19 sympathise with the drunkard and to know that he is also a man 20 like yourself. You will then try to understand the many 21 circumstances that are dragging him down, and feel that if you had 22 been in his place you would perhaps have committed suicide. I 23 remember a woman whose husband was a great drunkard, and she 24 complained to me of his becoming so. I replied, "Madam, if there 25 were twenty millions of wives like yourself, all husbands would 26 become drunkards." I am convinced that a large number of 27 drunkards are manufactured by their wives. My business is to tell 28 the truth and not to flatter anyone. These unruly women from 29 whose minds the words bear and forbear are gone for ever, and 30 whose false ideas of independence lead them to think that men 31 should be at their feet, and who begin to howl as soon as men dare 32 to say anything to them which they do not like--such women are 33 becoming the bane of the world, and it is a wonder that they do not 34 drive half the men in it to commit suicide. In this way things should 35 not go on. Life is not so easy as they believe it to be; it is a more 36 serious business!

37 A man must not only have faith but intellectual faith too. To 38 make a man take up everything and believe it, would be to make 39 him a lunatic. I once had a book sent me, which said I must believe 40 everything told in it. It said there was no soul, but that there were 41 gods and goddesses in heaven, and a thread of light going from 42 each of our heads to heaven! How did the writer know all these 43 things? She had been inspired, and wanted me to believe it too; and 44 because I refused, she said, "You must be a very bad man; there is 45 no hope for you!" This is fanaticism.

WORK IS WORSHIP

The highest man cannot work, for there is no binding element, no attachment, no ignorance in him. A ship is said to have passed over a mountain of magnet ore, and all the bolts and bars were drawn out, and it went to pieces. It is in ignorance that struggle remains, because we are all really atheists. Real theists cannot work. We are atheists more or less. We do not see God or believe in Him. He is G-O-D to us, and nothing more. There are moments when we think He is near, but then we fall down again. When you see Him, who struggles for whom? Help the Lord! There is a proverb in our language, "Shall we teach the Architect of the universe how to build?" So those are the highest of mankind who do not work. The next time you see these silly phrases about the world and how we must all help God and do this or that for Him, remember this. Do not think such thoughts; they are too selfish. All the work you do is subjective, is done for your own benefit. God has not fallen into a ditch for you and me to help Him out by building a hospital or something of that sort. He allows you to work. He allows you to exercise your muscles in this great gymnasium, not in order to help Him but that you may help yourself. Do you think even an ant will die for want of your help? Most arrant blasphemy! The world does not need you at all. The world goes on, you are like a drop in the ocean. A leaf does not move, the wind does not blow without Him. Blessed are we that we are given the privilege of working for Him, not of helping Him. Cut out this word "help" from your mind. You cannot help; it is blaspheming. You are here yourself at His pleasure. Do you mean to say, you help Him? You worship. When you give a morsel of food to the dog, you worship the dog as God. God is in that dog. He is the dog. He is all and in all. We are allowed to worship Him. Stand in that reverent attitude to the whole universe, and then will come perfect non-attachment. This should be your duty. This is the proper attitude of work. This is the secret taught by Karma-Yoga.

WORK WITHOUT MOTIVE

At the forty-second meeting of the Ramakrishna Mission held at the premises No. 57 Ramkanta Bose Street, Baghbazar, Calcutta, on the 20th March, 1898, Swami Vivekananda gave an address on "Work without Motive", and spoke to the following effect:

When the Gita was first preached, there was then going on a great controversy between two sects. One party considered the Vedic Yajnas and animal sacrifices and such like Karmas to constitute the whole of religion. The other preached that the killing of numberless horses and cattle cannot be called religion. The people belonging to the latter party were mostly Sannyasins and

1 followers of Jnana. They believed that the giving up of all work and 2 the gaining of the knowledge of the Self was the only path to 3 Moksha. By the preaching of His great doctrine of work without 4 motive, the Author of the Gita set at rest the disputes of these two 5 antagonistic sects.

6 Many are of opinion that the Gita was not written at the time
7 of the Mahabharata, but was subsequently added to it. This is not 8 correct. The special teachings of the Gita are to be found in every 9 part of the Mahabharata, and if the Gita is to be expunged, as 10 forming no part of it, every other portion of it which embodies the 11 same teachings should be similarly treated.

12 Now, what is the meaning of working without motive?
13 Nowadays many understand it in the sense that one is to work in 14 such a way that neither pleasure nor pain touches his mind. If this 15 be its real meaning, then the animals might be said to work without 16 motive. Some animals devour their own offspring, and they do not 17 feel any pangs at all in doing so. Robbers ruin other people by 18 robbing them of their possessions; but if they feel quite callous to 19 pleasure or pain, then they also would be working without motive.
20 If the meaning of it be such, then one who has a stony heart, the 21 worst of criminals, might be considered to be working without 22 motive. The walls have no feelings of pleasure or pain, neither has a 23 stone, and it cannot be said that they are working without motive.
24 In the above sense the doctrine is a potent instrument in the hands 25 of the wicked. They would go on doing wicked deeds, and would 26 pronounce themselves as working without a motive. If such be the 27 significance of working without a motive, then a fearful doctrine 28 has been put forth by the preaching of the Gita. Certainly this is not 29 the meaning. Furthermore, if we look into the lives of those who 30 were connected with the preaching of the Gita, we should find them 31 living quite a different life. Arjuna killed Bhishma and Drona in 32 battle, but withal, he sacrificed all his self-interest and desires and 33 his lower self millions of times.

34 Gita teaches Karma-Yoga. We should work through Yoga
35 (concentration). In such concentration in action (Karma-Yoga), there 36 is no consciousness of the lower ego present. The consciousness
37 that I am doing this and that is never present when one works
38 through Yoga. The Western people do not understand this. They say 39 that if there be no consciousness of ego, if this ego is gone, how 40 then can a man work? But when one works with concentration, 41 losing all consciousness of oneself the work that is done will be 42 infinitely better, and this every one may have experienced in his 43 own life. We perform many works subconsciously, such as the 44 digestion of food etc., many others consciously, and others again by 45 becoming immersed in Samadhi as it were, when there is no 46 consciousness of the smaller ego. If the painter, losing the 47 consciousness of his ego, becomes completely immersed in his 48 painting, he will be able to produce masterpieces. The good cook 49 concentrates his whole self on the food-material he handles; he 50 loses all other consciousness for the time being. But they are only 51 able to do perfectly a single work in this way, to which they are 52 habituated. The Gita teaches that all works should be done thus. He

1 who is one with the Lord through Yoga performs all his works by 2 becoming immersed in concentration, and does not seek any 3 personal benefit. Such a performance of work brings only good to 4 the world, no evil can come out of it. Those who work thus never do 5 anything for themselves.

6 The result of every work is mixed with good and evil. There is 7 no good work that has not a touch of evil in it. Like smoke round the 8 fire, some evil always clings to work. We should engage in such 9 works as bring the largest amount of good and the smallest 10 measure of evil. Arjuna killed Bhishma and Drona; if this had not 11 been done Duryodhana could not have been conquered, the force of 12 evil would have triumphed over the force of good, and thus a great 13 calamity would have fallen on the country. The government of the 14 country would have been usurped by a body of proud unrighteous
15 kings, to the great misfortune of the people. Similarly, Shri Krishna 16 killed Kamsa, Jarasandha, and others who were tyrants, but not a 17 single one of his deeds was done for himself. Every one of them was 18 for the good of others. We are reading the Gita by candle-light, but 19 numbers of insects are being burnt to death. Thus it is seen that 20 some evil clings to work. Those who work without any 21 consciousness of their lower ego are not affected with evil, for they 22 work for the good of the world. To work without motive, to work 23 unattached, brings the highest bliss and freedom. This secret of 24 Karma-Yoga is taught by the Lord Shri Krishna in the Gita.

25 26 27 28 SADHANAS OR PREPARATIONS FOR HIGHER 29 LIFE

30
31 If atavism gains, you go down; if evolution gains, you go on.
32 Therefore, we must not allow atavism to take place. Here, in my 33 own body, is the first work of the study. We are too busy trying to 34 mend the ways of our neighbours, that is the difficulty. We must 35 begin with our own bodies. The heart, the liver, etc., are all 36 atavistic; bring them back into consciousness, control them, so that 37 they will obey your commands and act up to your wishes. There was 38 a time when we had control of the liver; we could shake the whole 39 skin, as can the cow. I have seen many people bring the control 40 back by sheer hard practice. Once an impress is made, it is there.
41 Bring back all the submerged activities--the vast ocean of action.
42 This is the first part of the great study, and it is absolutely 43 necessary for our social well-being. On the other hand, only the 44 consciousness need not be studied all the time.

45 Then there is the other part of the study, not so necessary in 46 our social life, which tends to liberation. Its direct action is to free 47 the soul, to take the torch into the gloom, to clean out what is 48 behind, to shake it up or even defy it, and to make us march onward 49 piercing the gloom. That is the goal--the superconscious. Then

1 when that state is reached, this very man becomes divine, becomes 2 free. And to the mind thus trained to transcend all, gradually this 3 universe will begin to give up its secrets; the book of nature will be 4 read chapter after chapter, till the goal is attained, and we pass 5 from this valley of life and death to that One, where death and life 6 do not exist, and we know the Real and become the Real.

7 The first thing necessary is a quiet and peaceable life. If I 8 have to go about the world the whole day to make a living, it is hard 9 for me to attain to anything very high in this life. Perhaps in another 10 life I shall be born under more propitious circumstances. But if I am 11 earnest enough, these very circumstances will change even in this 12 birth. Was there anything you did not get which you really wanted?
13 It could not be. For it is the want that creates the body. It is the 14 light that has bored the holes, as it were, in your head, called the 15 eyes. If the light had not existed, you would have had no eyes. It is 16 sound that had made the ears. The object of perception existed
17 first, before you make the organ. In a few hundred thousand years 18 or earlier, we may have other organs to perceive electricity and 19 other things. There is no desire for a peaceful mind. Desire will not 20 come unless there is something outside to fulfill it. The outside 21 something just bores a hole in the body, as it were, and tries to get 22 into the mind. So, when the desire will arise to have a peaceful, 23 quiet life, that shall come where everything shall be propitious for 24 the development of the mind--you may take that as my experience.
25 It may come after thousands of lives, but it must come. Hold on to 26 that, the desire. You cannot have the strong desire if its object was 27 not outside for you already. Of course, you must understand, there 28 is a difference between desire and desire. The master said, "My 29 child, if you desire after God, God shall come to you." The disciple 30 did not understand his master fully. One day both went to bathe in a 31 river, and the master said, "Plunge in", and the boy did so. In a 32 moment the master was upon him, holding him down. He would not 33 let the boy come up. When the boy struggled and was exhausted, he 34 let him go. "Yes, my child, how did you feel there?" "Oh, the desire 35 for a breath of air!" "Do you have that kind of desire for God?" "No, 36 sir." "Have that kind of desire for God, and you shall have God."

37 That, without which we cannot live, must come to us. If it did 38 not come to us, life could not go on.

39 If you want to be a Yogi, you must be free and place yourself 40 in circumstances where you are alone and free from all anxiety. He 41 who desires for a comfortable and nice life and at the same time 42 wants to realise the Self is like the fool who, wanting to cross the 43 river, caught hold of a crocodile mistaking it for a log of wood.
44 "Seek you first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all 45 these things shall be added unto you." Unto him comes everything 46 who does not care for anything. Fortune is like a flirt; she cares not 47 for him who wants her, but she is at the feet of him who does not 48 care for her. Money comes and showers itself upon one who does 49 not care for it; so does fame come in abundance until it is a trouble 50 and a burden. They always come to the Master. The slave never 51 gets anything. The Master is he who can live in spite of them, 52 whose life does not depend upon the little, foolish things of the 1 world. Live for an ideal, and that one ideal alone. Let it be so great, 2 so strong, that there may be nothing else left in the mind; no place

3 for anything else, no time for anything else.

4 How some people give all their energies, time, brain, body,
5 and everything, to become rich! They have no time for breakfast!
6 Early in the morning they are out and at work! They die in the 7 attempt--ninety per cent of them--and the rest when they make 8 money, cannot enjoy it. That is grand! I do not say it is bad to try to 9 be rich. It is marvellous, wonderful. Why, what does it show? It 10 shows that one can have the same amount of energy and struggle 11 for freedom as one has for money. We know we have to give up 12 money and all other things when we die, and yet, see the amount of 13 energy we can put forth for them. But we, the same human beings, 14 should we not put forth a thousandfold more strength and energy to 15 acquire that which never fades, but which remains to us for ever?
16 For this is the one great friend, our own good deeds, our own
17 spiritual excellence, that follows us beyond the grave. Everything 18 else is left behind here with the body.

19 That is the one great first step--the real desire for the ideal.
20 Everything comes easy after that. That the Indian mind found out; 21 there, in India, men go to any length to find truth. But here, in the 22 West, the difficulty is that everything is made so easy. It is not truth, 23 but development, that is the great aim. The struggle is the great 24 lesson. Mind you, the great benefit in this life is struggle. It is 25 through that we pass. If there is any road to Heaven, it is through 26 Hell. Through Hell to Heaven is always the way. When the soul has 27 wrestled with circumstance and has met death, a thousand times 28 death on the way, but nothing daunted has struggled forward again 29 and again and yet again--then the soul comes out as a giant and 30 laughs at the ideal he has been struggling for, because he finds how 31 much greater is he than the ideal. I am the end, my own Self, and 32 nothing else, for what is there to compare to my own Self? Can a 33 bag of gold be the ideal of my Soul? Certainly not! My Soul is the 34 highest ideal that I can have. Realising my own real nature is the 35 one goal of my life.

36 There is nothing that is absolutely evil. The devil has a place
37 here as well as God, else he would not be here. Just as I told you, it 38 is through Hell that we pass to Heaven. Our mistakes have places 39 here. Go on! Do not look back if you think you have done something 40 that is not right. Now, do you believe you could be what you are 41 today, had you not made those mistakes before? Bless your 42 mistakes, then. They have been angels unawares. Blessed be 43 torture! Blessed be happiness! Do not care what be your lot. Hold 44 on to the ideal. March on! Do not look back upon little mistakes and 45 things. In this battlefield of ours, the dust of mistakes must be 46 raised. Those who are so thin-skinned that they cannot bear the 47 dust, let them get out of the ranks.

48 So, then, this tremendous determination to struggle, a 49 hundredfold more determination than that which you put forth to 50 gain anything which belongs to this life, is the first great 51 preparation.

1 And then along with it, there must be meditation. Meditation
2 is the one thing. Meditate! The greatest thing is meditation. It is the 3 nearest approach to spiritual life--the mind meditating. It is the one 4 moment in our daily life that we are not at all material--the Soul 5 thinking of Itself, free from all matter--this marvellous touch of the 6 Soul!

7 The body is our enemy, and yet is our friend. Which of you 8 can bear the sight of misery? And which of you cannot do so when 9 you see it only as a painting? Because it is unreal, we do not 10 identify ourselves with it; we know it is only a painting; it cannot 11 bless us, it cannot hurt us. The most terrible misery painted upon a 12 piece of canvas, we may even enjoy; we praise the technique of the 13 artist, we wonder at his marvellous genius, even though the scene 14 he paints is most horrible. That is the secret; that non-attachment.
15 Be the Witness.

16 No breathing, no physical training of Yoga, nothing is of any 17 use until you reach to the idea, "I am the Witness." Say, when the 18 tyrant hand is on your neck, "I am the Witness! I am the Witness!"
19 Say, "I am the Spirit! Nothing external can touch me." When evil 20 thoughts arise, repeat that, give that sledge-hammer blow on their 21 heads, "I am the Spirit! I am the Witness, the Ever-Blessed! I have 22 no reason to do, no reason to suffer, I have finished with everything, 23 I am the Witness. I am in my picture gallery--this universe is my 24 museum, I am looking at these successive paintings. They are all 25 beautiful. Whether good or evil. I see the marvellous skill, but it is 26 all one. Infinite flames of the Great Painter!" Really speaking, there 27 is naught--neither volition, nor desire. He is all. He--She--the 28 Mother, is playing, and we are like dolls, Her helpers in this play.
29 Here, She puts one now in the garb of a beggar, another moment in 30 the garb of a king, the next moment in the garb of a saint, and 31 again in the garb of a devil. We are putting on different garbs to 32 help the Mother Spirit in Her play.

33 When the baby is at play, she will not come even if called by 34 her mother. But when she finishes her play, she will rush to her 35 mother, and will have no play. So there come moments in our life, 36 when we feel our play is finished, and we want to rush to the 37 Mother. Then all our toil here will be of no value; men, women, and 38 children--wealth, name, and fame, joys and glories of life-- 39 punishments and successes--will be no more, and the whole life will 40 seem like a show. We shall see only the infinite rhythm going on, 41 endless and purposeless, going we do not know where. Only this 42 much shall we say; our play is done.

43 44 45 46 THE COSMOS AND THE SELF

47
48 Everything in nature rises from some fine seed-forms, 49 becomes grosser and grosser, exists for a certain time, and again

1 goes back to the original fine form. Our earth, for instance, has 2 come out of a nebulous form which, becoming colder and colder, 3 turned into this crystallised planet upon which we live, and in the 4 future it will again go to pieces and return to its rudimentary 5 nebulous form. This is happening in the universe, and has been 6 through time immemorial. This is the whole history of man, the 7 whole history of nature, the whole history of life.

8 Every evolution is preceded by an involution. The whole of 9 the tree is present in the seed, its cause. The whole of the human 10 being is present in that one protoplasm. The whole of this universe 11 is present in the cosmic fine universe. Everything is present in its 12 cause, in its fine form. This evolution, or gradual unfolding of 13 grosser and grosser forms, is true, but each case has been 14 preceded by an involution. The whole of this universe must have 15 been involute before it came out, and has unfolded itself in all these 16 various forms to be involved again once more. Take, for instance, 17 the life of a little plant. We find two things that make the plant a 18 unity by itself-its growth and development, its decay and death.
19 These make one unity the plant life. So, taking that plant life as only 20 one link in the chain of life, we may take the whole series as one 21 life, beginning in the protoplasm and ending in the most perfect 22 man. Man is one link, and the various beasts, the lower animals, 23 and plants are other links. Now go back to the source, the finest 24 particles from which they started, and take the whole series as but 25 one life, and you will find that every evolution here is the evolution 26 of something which existed previously.

27 Where it begins, there it ends. What is the end of this 28 universe? Intelligence, is it not? The last to come in the order of 29 creation, according to the evolutionists, was intelligence. That 30 being so, it must be the cause, the beginning of creation also. At the 31 beginning that intelligence remains involved, and in the end it gets 32 evolved. The sum total of the intelligence displayed in the universe 33 must therefore be the involved universal intelligence unfolding 34 itself, and this universal intelligence is what we call God, from 35 whom we come and to whom we return, as the scriptures say. Call it 36 by any other name, you cannot deny that in the beginning there is 37 that infinite cosmic intelligence.

38 What makes a compound? A compound is that in which the 39 causes have combined and become the effect. So these compound 40 things can be only within the circle of the law of causation; so far as 41 the rules of cause and effect go, so far can we have compounds and 42 combinations. Beyond that it is impossible to talk of combinations, 43 because no law holds good therein. Law holds good only in that 44 universe which we see, feel, hear, imagine, dream, and beyond that 45 we cannot place any idea of law. That is our universe which we 46 sense or imagine, and we sense what is within our direct 47 perception, and we imagine what is in our mind. What is beyond the 48 body is beyond the senses, and what is beyond the mind is beyond 49 the imagination, and therefore is beyond our universe, and 50 therefore beyond the law of causation. The Self of man being 51 beyond the law of causation is not a compound, is not the effect of 52 any cause, and therefore is ever free and is the ruler of everything

1 that is within law. Not being a compound, it will never die, because 2 death means going back to the component parts, destruction means 3 going back to the cause. Because it cannot die, it cannot live; for 4 both life and death are modes of manifestation of the same thing.
5 So the Soul is beyond life and death. You were never born, and you 6 will never die. Birth and death belong to the body only.

7 The doctrine of monism holds that this universe is all that 8 exists; gross or fine, it is all here; the effect and the cause are both 9 here; the explanation is here. What is known as the particular is 10 simply repetition in a minute form of the universal. We get our idea 11 of the universe from the study of our own Souls, and what is true 12 there also holds good in the outside universe. The ideas of heaven 13 and all these various places, even if they be true, are in the 14 universe. They altogether make this Unity. The first idea, therefore, 15 is that of a Whole, a Unit, composed of various minute particles, 16 and each one of us is a part, as it were, of this Unit. As manifested 17 beings we appear separate, but as a reality we are one. The more 18 we think ourselves separate from this Whole, the more miserable 19 we become. So, Advaita is the basis of ethics.

20 21 22 23 WHO IS A REAL GURU? 24

25 A real Guru is one who is born from time to time as a 26 repository of spiritual force which he transmits to future
27 generations through successive links of Guru and Shishya 28 (disciple). The current of this spirit-force changes its course from 29 time to time, just as a mighty stream of water opens up a new 30 channel and leaves the old one for good. Thus it is seen that old 31 sects of religion grow lifeless in the course of time, and new sects 32 arise with the fire of life in them. Men who are truly wise commit 33 themselves to the mercy of that particular sect through which the 34 current of life flows. Old forms of religion are like the skeletons of 35 once mighty animals, preserved in museums. They should be 36 regarded with due honour. They cannot satisfy the true cravings of 37 the soul for the Highest, just as a dead mango-tree cannot satisfy 38 the cravings of a man for luscious mangoes.

39 The one thing necessary is to be stripped of our vanities--the 40 sense that we possess any spiritual wisdom--and to surrender
41 ourselves completely to the guidance of our Guru. The Guru only 42 knows what will lead us towards perfection. We are quite blind to it.
43 We do not know anything. This sort of humility will open the door of 44 our heart for spiritual truths. Truth will never come into our minds 45 so long as there will remain the faintest shadow of Ahamkara 46 (egotism). All of you should try to root out this devil from your 47 heart. Complete self-surrender is the only way to spiritual 48 illumination.

ON ART

The secret of Greek Art is its imitation of nature even to the minutest details; whereas the secret of Indian Art is to represent the ideal. The energy of the Greek painter is spent in perhaps painting a piece of flesh, and he is so successful that a dog is deluded into taking it to be a real bit of meat and so goes to bite it. Now, what glory is there in merely imitating nature? Why not place an actual bit of flesh before the dog?

The Indian tendency, on the other hand, to represent the ideal, the supersensual, has become degraded into painting grotesque images. Now, true Art can be compared to a lily which springs from the ground, takes its nourishment from the ground, is in touch with the ground, and yet is quite high above it. So Art must be in touch with nature--and wherever that touch is gone, Art degenerates--yet it must be above nature.

Art is--representing the beautiful. There must be Art in everything.

The difference between architecture and building is that the former expresses an idea, while the latter is merely a structure built on economical principles. The value of matter depends solely on its capacities of expressing ideas.

The artistic faculty was highly developed in our Lord, Shri Ramakrishna, and he used to say that without this faculty none can be truly spiritual.

ON LANGUAGE

Simplicity is the secret. My ideal of language is my Master's language, most colloquial and yet most expressive. It must express the thought which is intended to be conveyed.

The attempt to make the Bengali language perfect in so short a time will make it cut and dried. Properly speaking, it has no verbs. Michael Madhusudan Dutt attempted to remedy this in poetry. The greatest poet in Bengal was Kavikankana. The best prose in Sanskrit is Patanjali's Mahabhashya. There the language is vigorous. The language of Hitopadesha is not bad, but the language of Kadambari is an example of degradation.

The Bengali language must be modelled not after the Sanskrit, but rather after the Pali, which has a strong resemblance to it. In coining or translating technical terms in Bengali, one must, however, use all Sanskrit words for them, and an attempt should be

1 made to coin new words. For this purpose, if a collection is made 2 from a Sanskrit dictionary of all those technical terms, then it will 3 help greatly the constitution of the Bengali language.

7 THE SANNYASIN

9 In explanation of the term Sannyasin, the Swami in the 10 course of one of his lectures in Boston said:

11 When a man has fulfilled the duties and obligations of that 12 stage of life in which he is born, and his aspirations lead him to 13 seek a spiritual life and to abandon altogether the worldly pursuits 14 of possession, fame, or power, when, by the growth of insight into 15 the nature of the world, he sees its impermanence, its strife, its 16 misery, and the paltry nature of its prizes, and turns away from all 17 these--then he seeks the True, the Eternal Love, the Refuge. He 18 makes complete renunciation (Sannyasa) of all worldly position, 19 property, and name, and wanders forth into the world to live a life 20 of self-sacrifice and to persistently seek spiritual knowledge, 21 striving to excel in love and compassion and to acquire lasting 22 insight. Gaining these pearls of wisdom by years of meditation, 23 discipline, and inquiry, he in his turn becomes a teacher and hands 24 on to disciples, lay or professed, who may seek them from him, all 25 that he can of wisdom and beneficence.

26 A Sannyasin cannot belong to any religion, for his is a life of 27 independent thought, which draws from all religions; his is a life of 28 realisation, not merely of theory or belief, much less of dogma.

32 THE SANNYASIN AND THE HOUSEHOLDER

34 The men of the world should have no voice in the affairs of 35 the Sannyasins. The Sannyasin should have nothing to do with the 36 rich, his duty is with the poor. He should treat the poor with loving 37 care and serve them joyfully with all his might. To pay respects to 38 the rich and hang on them for support has been the bane of all the 39 Sannyasin communities of our country. A true Sannyasin should 40 scrupulously avoid that. Such conduct becomes a public woman 41 rather than one who professes to have renounced the world. How 42 should a man immersed in Kama-Kanchana (lust and greed) become 43 a devotee of one whose central ideal is the renunciation of Kama-
44 Kanchana? Shri Ramakrishna wept and prayed to the Divine 45 Mother to send him such a one to talk with as would not have in 46 him the slightest tinge of Kama-Kanchana; for he would say, "My 47 lips burn when I talk with the worldly-minded." He also used to say

1 that he could not even bear the touch of the worldly-minded and the 2 impure. That King of Sannyasins (Shri Ramakrishna) can never be 3 preached by men of the world. The latter can never be perfectly 4 sincere; for he cannot but have some selfish motives to serve. If 5 Bhagavan (God) incarnates Himself as a householder, I can never 6 believe Him to be sincere. When a householder takes the position of 7 the leader of a religious sect, he begins to serve his own interests in 8 the name of principle, hiding the former in the garb of the latter, 9 and the result is the sect becomes rotten to the core. All religious 10 movements headed by householders have shared the same fate.
11 Without renunciation religion can never stand.

12 Here Swamiji was asked--What are we Sannyasins to 13 understand by renunciation of Kanchana (wealth)? He answered as 14 follows:

15 With a view to certain ends we have to adopt certain means.
16 These means vary according to the conditions of time, place, 17 individual, etc.; but the end always remains unaltered. In the case 18 of the Sannyasin, the end is the liberation of the Self and doing 19 good to humanity--{Sanskrit}; and of the ways to attain it, the 20 renunciation of Kama-Kanchana is the most important. Remember, 21 renunciation consists in the total absence of all selfish motives and 22 not in mere abstinence from external contact, such as avoiding to 23 touch one's money kept with another but at the same time enjoying 24 all its benefits. Would that be renunciation? For accomplishing the 25 two above-mentioned ends, the begging excursion would be a great 26 help to a Sannyasin at a time when the householders strictly obeyed 27 the injunctions of Manu and other law-givers, by setting apart every 28 day a portion of their meal for ascetic guests. Nowadays things 29 have changed considerably, especially, as in Bengal, where no 30 Madhukari⁸⁹ system prevails. Here it would be mere waste of 31 energy to try to live on Madhukari, and you would profit nothing by 32 it. The injunction of Bhiksha (begging) is a means to serve the 33 above two ends, which will not be served by that way now. It does 34 not, therefore, go against the principle of renunciation under such 35 circumstances if a Sannyasin provides for mere necessities of life 36 and devotes all his energy to the accomplishment of his ends for 37 which he took Sannyasa. Attaching too much importance ignorantly 38 to the means brings confusion. The end should never be lost sight 39 of.

43 THE EVILS OF ADHIKARIVADA

44 In one of his question classes the talk drifted on to the

1 ⁸⁹ Literally, 'bee-like'. The system of begging one's food 2 piecemeal from several houses, so as not to tax the householder, as 3 a bee gathers honey from different flowers.
4

1 Adhikarivada, or the doctrine of special rights and privileges, and 2 Swamiji in pointing out vehemently the evils that have resulted 3 from it spoke to the following effect:

4 With all my respects for the Rishis of yore, I cannot but 5 denounce their method in instructing the people. They always 6 enjoined upon them to do certain things but took care never to 7 explain to them the reason for it. This method was pernicious to the 8 very core; and instead of enabling men to attain the end, it laid 9 upon their shoulders a mass of meaningless nonsense. Their excuse 10 for keeping the end hidden from view was that the people could not 11 have understood their real meaning even if they had presented it to 12 them, not being worthy recipients. The Adhikarivada is the outcome 13 of pure selfishness. They knew that by this enlightenment on their 14 special subject they would lose their superior position of instructors 15 to the people. Hence their endeavour to support this theory. If you 16 consider a man too weak to receive these lessons, you should try 17 the more to teach and educate him; you should give him the 18 advantage of more teaching, instead of less, to train up his intellect, 19 so as to enable him to comprehend the more subtle problems.
20 These advocates of Adhikarivada ignored the tremendous fact of 21 the infinite possibilities of the human soul. Their contention is that 22 the knowledge of the highest spiritual truths will bring about 23 confusion in the understanding of the weak-minded men, and so the 24 Shloka goes:

25 "{Sanskrit}"

26 --"One should not unsettle the understanding of the ignorant, 27 attached to action (by teaching them Jnana): the wise man, himself 28 steadily acting, should engage the ignorant in all work" (Gita, III.
29 26).

30 I cannot believe in the self-contradictory statement that light 31 brings greater darkness. It is like losing life in the ocean of 32 Sachchidananda, in the ocean of Absolute Existence and 33 Immortality. How absurd! Knowledge means freedom from the 34 errors which ignorance leads to. Knowledge paving the way to 35 error! Enlightenment leading to confusion! Is it possible? men are 36 not bold enough to speak out broad truths, for fear of losing the 37 respect of the people. They try to make a compromise between the 38 real, eternal truths and the nonsensical prejudices of the people, 39 and thus set up the doctrine that Lokacharas (customs of the 40 people) and Deshacharas (customs of the country) must be adhered 41 to. No compromise! No whitewashing! No covering of corpses 42 beneath flowers! Throw away such texts as, "{Sanskrit}"--Yet the 43 customs of the people have to be followed." Nonsense! The result of 44 this sort of compromise is that the grand truths are soon buried 45 under heaps of rubbish, and the latter are eagerly held as real 46 truths. Even the grand truths of the Gita, so boldly preached by Shri 47 Krishna, received the gloss of compromise in the hands of future 48 generations of disciples, and the result is that the grandest 49 scripture of the world is now made to yield many things which lead 50 men astray.

51 This attempt at compromise proceeds from arrant downright

1 cowardice. Be bold! My children should be brave, above all. Not the 2 least compromise on any account. Preach the highest truths
3 broadcast. Do not fear losing your respect or causing unhappy
4 friction. Rest assured that if you serve truth in spite of temptations 5 to forsake it, you will attain a heavenly strength in the face of which 6 men will quail to speak before you things which you do not believe 7 to be true. People will be convinced of what you will say to them if 8 you can strictly serve truth for fourteen years continually, without 9 swerving from it. Thus you will confer the greatest blessing on the 10 masses, unshackle their bondages, and uplift the whole nation.

11 12 13 14 ON BHAKTI-YOGA

15
16 The dualist thinks you cannot be moral unless you have a God
17 with a rod in His hand, ready to punish you. How is that? Suppose a 18 horse had to give us a lecture on morality, one of those very 19 wretched cab-horses who move only with the whip, to which he has 20 become accustomed. He begins to speak about human beings and 21 says that they must be very immoral. Why? "Because I know they 22 are not whipped regularly." The fear of the whip only makes one 23 more immoral.

24 You all say there is a God and that He is an omnipresent 25 Being. Close your eyes and think what He is. What do you find?
26 Either you are thinking, in bringing the idea of omnipresence in 27 your mind, of the sea, or the blue sky, or an expanse of meadow, or 28 such things as you have seen in your life. If that is so, you do not 29 mean anything by omnipresent God; it has no meaning at all to you.
30 So with every other attribute of God. What idea have we of 31 omnipotence or omniscience? We have none. Religion is realising, 32 and I shall call you a worshipper of God when you have become 33 able to realise the Idea. Before that it is the spelling of words and 34 no more. It is this power of realisation that makes religion; no 35 amount of doctrines or philosophies, or ethical books, that you may 36 have stuffed into your brain, will matter much--only what you are 37 and what you have realised.

38 The Personal God is the same Absolute looked at through the 39 haze of Maya. When we approach Him with the five senses, we can 40 see Him only as the Personal God. The idea is that the Self cannot 41 be objectified. How can the Knower know Itself? But It can cast a 42 shadow, as it were, if that can be called objectification. So the 43 highest form of that shadow, that attempt at objectifying Itself, is 44 the Personal God. The Self is the eternal subject, and we are 45 struggling all the time to objectify that Self. And out of that struggle 46 has come this phenomenal universe and what we call matter, and so 47 on. But these are very weak attempts, and the highest 48 objectification of the Self possible to us is the Personal God. This 49 objectification is an attempt to reveal our own nature. According to 50 the Sankhya, nature is showing all these experiences to the soul,

1 and when it has got real experience it will know its own nature.
2 According to the Advaita Vedantist, the soul is struggling to reveal 3 itself. After long struggle, it finds that the subject must always 4 remain the subject; and then begins non-attachment, and it 5 becomes free.

6 When a man has reached that perfect state, he is of the same
7 nature as the Personal God. "I and my Father are one." He knows 8 that he is one with Brahman, the Absolute, and projects himself as 9 the Personal God does. He plays--as even the mightiest of kings may 10 sometimes play with dolls.

11 Some imaginations help to break the bondage of the rest. The 12 whole universe is imagination, but one set of imaginations will cure 13 another set. Those that tell us that there is sin and sorrow and 14 death in the world are terrible. But the other set--thou art holy, 15 there is God, there is no pain--these are good, and help to break the 16 bondage of the others. The highest imagination that can break all 17 the links of the chain is that of the Personal God.

18 To go and say, "Lord, take care of this thing and give me that;
19 Lord, I give you my little prayer and you give me this thing of daily 20 necessity; Lord, cure my headache", and all that--these are not 21 Bhakti. They are the lowest states of religion. They are the lowest 22 form of Karma. If a man uses all his mental energy in seeking to 23 satisfy his body and its wants, show me the difference between him 24 and an animal. Bhakti is a higher thing, higher than even desiring 25 heaven. The idea of heaven is of a place of intensified enjoyment.
26 How can that be God?

27 Only the fools rush after sense-enjoyments. It is easy to live in 28 the senses. It is easier to run in the old groove, eating and drinking; 29 but what these modern philosophers want to tell you is to take 30 these comfortable ideas and put the stamp of religion on them.
31 Such a doctrine is dangerous. Death lies in the senses. Life on the 32 plane of the Spirit is the only life, life on any other plane is mere 33 death; the whole of this life can be only described as a gymnasium.
34 We must go beyond it to enjoy real life.

35 As long as touch-me-not-ism is your creed and the kitchen-
36 pot your deity, you cannot rise spiritually. All the petty differences 37 between religion and religion are mere word-struggles, nonsense.
38 Everyone thinks, "This is my original idea", and wants to have 39 things his own way. That is how struggles come.

40 In criticising another, we always foolishly take one especially 41 brilliant point as the whole of our life and compare that with the 42 dark ones in the life of another. Thus we make mistakes in judging 43 individuals.

44 Through fanaticism and bigotry a religion can be propagated 45 very quickly, no doubt, but the preaching of that religion is firm-46 based on solid ground, which gives everyone liberty to his opinions 47 and thus uplifts him to a higher path, though this process is slow.

48 First deluge the land (India) with spiritual ideas, then other 49 ideas will follow. The gift of spirituality and spiritual knowledge is 50 the highest, for it saves from many and many a birth; the next gift is

1 secular knowledge, as it opens the eyes of human beings towards 2 that spiritual knowledge; the next is the saving of life; and the 3 fourth is the gift of food.

4 Even if the body goes in practicing Sadhanas (austerities for 5 realisation), let it go; what of that? Realisation will come in the 6 fullness of time, by living constantly in the company of Sadhus (holy 7 men). A time comes when one understands that to serve a man
8 even by preparing a Chhilam (earthen pipe) of tobacco is far 9 greater than millions of meditations. He who can properly prepare 10 a Chhilam of tobacco can also properly meditate.

11 Gods are nothing but highly developed dead men. We can get 12 help from them.

13 Anyone and everyone cannot be an Acharya (teacher of 14 mankind); but many may become Mukta (liberated). The whole 15 world seems like a dream to the liberated, but the Acharya has to 16 take up his stand between the two states. He must have the 17 knowledge that the world is true, or else why should he teach?
18 Again, if he has not realised the world as a dream, then he is no
19 better than an ordinary man, and what could he teach? The Guru 20 has to bear the disciple's burden of sin; and that is the reason why 21 diseases and other ailments appear even in the bodies of powerful 22 Acharyas. But if he be imperfect, they attack his mind also, and he 23 falls. So it is a difficult thing to be an Acharya.

24 It is easier to become a Jivanmukta (free in this very life) than 25 to be an Acharya. For the former knows the world as a dream and 26 has no concern with it; but an Acharya knows it as a dream and yet 27 has to remain in it and work. It is not possible for everyone to be an 28 Acharya. He is an Acharya through whom the divine power acts.
29 The body in which one becomes an Acharya is very different from 30 that of any other man. There is a science for keeping that body in a 31 perfect state. His is the most delicate organism, very susceptible, 32 capable of feeling intense joy and intense suffering. He is abnormal.

33 In every sphere of life we find that it is the person within that 34 triumphs, and that personality is the secret of all success.

35 Nowhere is seen such sublime unfoldment of feeling as in 36 Bhagavan Shri Krishna Chaitanya, the Prophet of Nadia.

37 Shri Ramakrishna is a force. You should not think that his 38 doctrine is this or that. But he is a power, living even now in his 39 disciples and working in the world. I saw him growing in his ideas.
40 He is still growing. Shri Ramakrishna was both a Jivanmukta and an 41 Acharya.

45 ISHVARA AND BRAHMAN

46
47 In reply to a question as to the exact position of Ishvara in 48 Vedantic Philosophy, the Swami Vivekananda, while in Europe, gave the following definition:

"Ishvara is the sum total of individuals, yet He is an Individual, as the human body is a unit, of which each cell is an individual. Samashti or collected equals God; Vyashti or analysed equals the Jiva. The existence of Ishvara, therefore, depends on that of Jiva, as the body on the cell, and vice versa. Thus, Jiva and Ishvara are coexistent beings; when one exists, the other must. Also, because, except on our earth, in all the higher spheres, the amount of good being vastly in excess of the amount of evil, the sum total (Ishvara) may be said to be all-good. Omnipotence and omniscience are obvious qualities and need no argument to prove from the very fact of totality. Brahman is beyond both these and is not a conditioned state; it is the only Unit not composed of many units, the principle which runs through all from a cell to God, without which nothing can exist; and whatever is real is that principle, or Brahman. When I think I am Brahman, I alone exist; so with others. Therefore, each one is the whole of that principle."

ON JNANA-YOGA

All souls are playing, some consciously, some unconsciously. Religion is learning to play consciously.

The same law which holds good in our worldly life also holds good in our religious life and in the life of the cosmos. It is one, it is universal. It is not that religion is guided by one law and the world by another. The flesh and the devil are but degrees of difference from God Himself.

Theologians, philosophers, and scientists in the West are ransacking everything to get a proof that they live afterwards! What a storm in a tea-cup! There are much higher things to think of. What silly superstition is this, that you ever die! It requires no priests or spirits or ghosts to tell us that we shall not die. It is the most self-evident of all truths. No man can imagine his own annihilation. The idea of immortality is inherent in man.

Wherever there is life, with it there is death. Life is the shadow of death, and death, the shadow of life. The line of demarcation is too fine to determine, too difficult to grasp, and most difficult to hold on to.

I do not believe in eternal progress, that we are growing on ever and ever in a straight line. It is too nonsensical to believe. There is no motion in a straight line. A straight line infinitely projected becomes a circle. The force sent out will complete the circle and return to its starting place.

There is no progress in a straight line. Every soul moves in a circle, as it were, and will have to complete it; and no soul can go so low but that there will come a time when it will have to go upwards.

1 It may start straight down, but it has to take the upward curve to 2 complete the circuit. We are all projected from a common centre, 3 which is God, and will come back after completing the circuit to the 4 centre from which we started.

5 Each soul is a circle. The centre is where the body is, and the 6 activity is manifested there. You are omnipresent, though you have 7 the consciousness of being concentrated in only one point. That 8 point has taken up particles of matter and formed them into a 9 machine to express itself. That through which it expresses itself is 10 called the body. You are everywhere. When one body or machine 11 fails you, the centre moves on and takes up other particles of 12 matter, finer or grosser, and works through them. Here is man. And 13 what is God? God is a circle with circumference nowhere and 14 centre everywhere. Every point in that circle is living, conscious, 15 active, and equally working. With our limited souls only one point is 16 conscious, and that point moves forward and backward.

17 The soul is a circle whose circumference is nowhere
18 (limitless), but whose centre is in some body. Death is but a change 19 of centre. God is a circle whose circumference is nowhere, and 20 whose centre is everywhere. When we can get out of the limited 21 centre of body, we shall realise God, our true Self.

22 A tremendous stream is flowing towards the ocean, carrying 23 little bits of paper and straw hither and thither on it. They may 24 struggle to go back, but in the long run they must flow down to the 25 ocean. So you and I and all nature are like these little straws 26 carried in mad currents towards that ocean of Life, Perfection, and 27 God. We may struggle to go back, or float against the current and 28 play all sorts of pranks, but in the long run we must go and join this 29 great ocean of Life and Bliss.

30 Jnana (knowledge) is "creedlessness"; but that does not mean 31 that it despises creeds. It only means that a stage above and 32 beyond creeds has been gained. The Jnani (true philosopher) strives 33 to destroy nothing but to help all. All rivers roll their waters into the 34 sea and become one. So all creeds should lead to Jnana and become 35 one. Jnana teaches that the world should be renounced but not on 36 that account abandoned. To live in the world and not to be of it is 37 the true test of renunciation.

38 I cannot see how it can be otherwise than that all knowledge 39 is stored up in us from the beginning. If you and I are little waves in 40 the ocean, then that ocean is the background.

41 There is really no difference between matter, mind, and 42 Spirit. They are only different phases of experiencing the One. This 43 very world is seen by the five senses as matter, by the very wicked
44 as hell, by the good as heaven, and by the perfect as God.

45 We cannot bring it to sense demonstration that Brahman is 46 the only real thing; but we can point out that this is the only 47 conclusion that one can come to. For instance, there must be this 48 oneness in everything, even in common things. There is the human 49 generalisation, for example. We say that all the variety is created by 50 name and form; yet when we want to grasp and separate it, it is

1 nowhere. We can never see name or form or causes standing by 2 themselves. So this phenomenon is Maya--something which 3 depends on the noumenon and apart from it has no existence. Take 4 a wave in the ocean. That wave exists so long as that quantity of 5 water remains in a wave form; but as soon as it goes down and 6 becomes the ocean, the wave ceases to exist. But the whole mass of 7 water does not depend so much on its form. The ocean remains, 8 while the wave form becomes absolute zero.

9 The real is one. It is the mind which makes it appear as many.
10 When we perceive the diversity, the unity has gone; and as soon as 11 we perceive the unity, the diversity has vanished. Just as in 12 everyday life, when you perceive the unity, you do not perceive the 13 diversity. At the beginning you start with unity. It is a curious fact 14 that a Chinaman will not know the difference in appearance 15 between one American and another; and you will not know the 16 difference between different Chinamen.

17 It can be shown that it is the mind which makes things 18 knowable. It is only things which have certain peculiarities that 19 bring themselves within the range of the known and knowable. That 20 which has no qualities is unknowable. For instance, there is some 21 external world, X, unknown and unknowable. When I look at it, it is 22 X plus mind. When I want to know the world, my mind contributes 23 three quarters of it. The internal world is Y plus mind, and the 24 external world X plus mind. All differentiation in either the external 25 or internal world is created by the mind, and that which exists is 26 unknown and unknowable. It is beyond the range of knowledge, and 27 that which is beyond the range of knowledge can have no
28 differentiation. Therefore this X outside is the same as the Y inside, 29 and therefore the real is one.

30 God does not reason. Why should you reason if you know? It 31 is a sign of weakness that we have to go on crawling like worms to 32 get a few facts, and then the whole thing tumbles down again. The 33 Spirit is reflected in mind and in everything. It is the light of the 34 Spirit that makes the mind sentient. Everything is an expression of 35 the Spirit; the minds are so many mirrors. What you call love, fear, 36 hatred, virtue, and vice are all reflections of the Spirit. When the 37 reflector is base, the reflection is bad.

38 The real Existence is without manifestation. We cannot 39 conceive It, because we should have to conceive through the mind, 40 which is itself a manifestation. Its glory is that It is inconceivable.
41 We must remember that in life the lowest and highest vibrations of 42 light we do not see, but they are the opposite poles of existence.
43 There are certain things which we do not know now, but which we 44 can know. It is due to our ignorance that we do not know them.
45 There are certain things which we can never know, because they 46 are much higher than the highest vibrations of knowledge. But we 47 are the Eternal all the time, although we cannot know it. Knowledge 48 will be impossible there. The very fact of the limitations of the 49 conception is the basis for its existence. For instance, there is 50 nothing so certain in me as my Self; and yet I can only conceive of it 51 as a body and mind, as happy or unhappy, as a man or a woman. At 52 the same time, I try to conceive of it as it really is and find that

1 there is no other way of doing it but by dragging it down; yet I am 2 sure of that reality. "No one, O beloved, loves the husband for the 3 husband's sake, but because the Self is there. It is in and through 4 the Self that she loves the husband. No one, O beloved, loves the 5 wife for the wife's sake, but in and through the Self." And that 6 Reality is the only thing we know, because in and through It we 7 know everything else; and yet we cannot conceive of It. How can 8 we know the knower? If we knew It, It would not be the knower, but 9 the known; It would be objectified.

10 The man of highest realisation exclaims, "I am the King of 11 kings; there is no king higher than I, I am the God of gods; there is 12 no God higher than I! I alone exist, One without a second." This 13 monistic idea of the Vedanta seems to many, of course, very 14 terrible, but that is on account of superstition.

15 We are the Self, eternally at rest and at peace. We must not 16 weep; there is no weeping for the Soul. We in our imagination think 17 that God is weeping on His throne out of sympathy. Such a God
18 would not be worth attaining. Why should God weep at all? To weep 19 is a sign of weakness, of bondage.

20 Seek the Highest, always the Highest, for in the Highest is 21 eternal bliss. If I am to hunt, I will hunt the lion. If I am to rob, I will 22 rob the treasury of the king. Seek the Highest.

23 Oh, One that cannot be confined or described! One that can 24 be perceived in our heart of hearts! One beyond all compare, 25 beyond limit, unchangeable like the blue sky! Oh, learn the All, holy 26 one! Seek for nothing else!

27 Where changes of nature cannot reach, thought beyond all 28 thought, Unchangeable, Immovable; whom all books declare, all 29 sages worship; Oh, holy one, seek for nothing else!

30 Beyond compare, Infinite Oneness! No comparison is 31 possible. Water above, water below, water on the right, water on 32 the left; no wave on that water, no ripple, all silence; all eternal 33 bliss. Such will come to thy heart. Seek for nothing else!

34 Why weepest thou, brother? There is neither death nor 35 disease for thee. Why weepest thou, brother? There is neither 36 misery nor misfortune for thee. Why weepest thou, brother?
37 Neither change nor death was predicated of thee. Thou art 38 Existence Absolute.

39 I know what God is--I cannot speak Him to you. I know not 40 what God is--how can I speak Him to you? But seest thou not, my 41 brother, that thou art He, thou art He? Why go seeking God here 42 and there? Seek not, and that is God. Be your own Self.

43 Thou art our Father, our Mother, our dear Friend. Thou 44 bearest the burden of the world. Help us to bear the burden of our 45 lives. Thou art our Friend, our Lover, our Husband, Thou art 46 ourselves!

THE CAUSE OF ILLUSION

The question--what is the cause of Maya (illusion)?--has been asked for the last three thousand years; and the only answer is: when the world is able to formulate a logical question, we shall answer it. The question is contradictory. Our position is that the Absolute has become this relative only apparently, that the Unconditioned has become the conditioned only in Maya. By the very admission of the Unconditioned, we admit that the Absolute cannot be acted upon by anything else. It is uncaused, which means that nothing outside Itself can act upon It. First of all, if It is unconditioned, It cannot have been acted upon by anything else. In the Unconditioned there cannot be time, space, or causation. That granted your question will be: "What caused that which cannot be caused by anything to be changed into this?" Your question is only possible in the conditioned. But you take it out of the conditioned, and want to ask it in the Unconditioned. Only when the Unconditioned becomes conditioned, and space, time, and causation come in, can the question be asked. We can only say ignorance makes the illusion. The question is impossible. Nothing can have worked on the Absolute. There was no cause. Not that we do not know, or that we are ignorant; but It is above knowledge, and cannot be brought down to the plane of knowledge. We can use the words, "I do not know" in two senses. In one way, they mean that we are lower than knowledge, and in the other way, that the thing is above knowledge. The X-rays have become known now. The very causes of these are disputed, but we are sure that we shall know them. Here we can say we do not know about the X-rays. But about the Absolute we cannot know. In the case of the X-rays we do not know, although they are within the range of knowledge; only we do not know them yet. But, in the other case, It is so much beyond knowledge that It ceases to be a matter of knowing. "By what means can the Knower be known?" You are always yourself and cannot objectify yourself. This was one of the arguments used by our philosophers to prove immortality. If I try to think I am lying dead, what have I to imagine? That I am standing and looking down at myself, at some dead body. So that I cannot objectify myself.

EVOLUTION

In the matter of the projection of Akasha and Prana into manifested form and the return to fine state, there is a good deal of similarity between Indian thought and modern science. The moderns have their evolution, and so have the Yogis. But I think that the Yogis' explanation of evolution is the better one. "The change of one species into another is attained by the infilling of nature." The basic idea is that we are changing from one species to 1 another, and that man is the highest species. Patanjali explains this 2 "infilling of nature" by the simile of peasants irrigating fields. Our 3 education and progression simply mean taking away the obstacles, 4 and by its own nature the divinity will manifest itself. This does 5 away with all the struggle for existence. The miserable experiences 6 of life are simply in the way, and can be eliminated entirely. They 7 are not necessary for evolution. Even if they did not exist, we 8 should progress. It is in the very nature of things to manifest 9 themselves. The momentum is not from outside, but comes from 10 inside. Each soul is the sum total of the universal experiences 11 already coiled up there; and of all these experiences, only those will 12 come out which find suitable circumstances.

13 So the external things can only give us the environments.
14 These competitions and struggles and evils that we see are not the 15 effect of the involution or the cause, but they are in the way. If they 16 did not exist, still man would go on and evolve as God, because it is 17 the very nature of that God to come out and manifest Himself. To 18 my mind this seems very hopeful, instead of that horrible idea of 19 competition. The more I study history, the more I find that idea to 20 be wrong. Some say that if man did not fight with man, he would 21 not progress. I also used to think so; but I find now that every war 22 has thrown back human progress by fifty years instead of hurrying 23 it forwards. The day will come when men will study history from a 24 different light and find that competition is neither the cause nor the 25 effect, simply a thing on the way, not necessary to evolution at all.

26 The theory of Patanjali is the only theory I think a rational 27 man can accept. How much evil the modern system causes! Every 28 wicked man has a license to be wicked under it. I have seen in this 29 country (America) physicists who say that all criminals ought to be 30 exterminated and that that is the only way in which criminality can 31 be eliminated from society. These environments can hinder, but they 32 are not necessary to progress. The most horrible thing about 33 competition is that one may conquer the environments, but that 34 where one may conquer, thousands are crowded out. So it is evil at 35 best. That cannot be good which helps only one and hinders the 36 majority. Patanjali says that these struggles remain only through 37 our ignorance, and are not necessary, and are not part of the 38 evolution of man. It is just our impatience which creates them. We 39 have not the patience to go and work our way out. For instance, 40 there is a fire in a theatre, and only a few escape. The rest in trying 41 to rush out crush one another down. That crush was not necessary 42 for the salvation of the building nor of the two or three who 43 escaped. If all had gone out slowly, not one would have been hurt.
44 That is the case in life. The doors are open for us, and we can all 45 get out without the competition and struggle; and yet we struggle.
46 The struggle we create through our own ignorance, through 47 impatience; we are in too great a hurry. The highest manifestation 48 of strength is to keep ourselves calm and on our own feet.

1 BUDDHISM AND VEDANTA

2
3 The Vedanta philosophy is the foundation of Buddhism and 4 everything else in India; but what we call the Advaita philosophy of 5 the modern school has a great many conclusions of the Buddhists.
6 Of course, the Hindus will not admit that--that is the orthodox 7 Hindus, because to them the Buddhists are heretics. But there is a 8 conscious attempt to stretch out the whole doctrine to include the 9 heretics also.

10 The Vedanta has no quarrel with Buddhism. The idea of the 11 Vedanta is to harmonise all. With the Northern Buddhists we have 12 no quarrel at all. But the Burmese and Siamese and all the 13 Southern Buddhists say that there is a phenomenal world, and ask 14 what right we have to create a noumenal world behind this. The 15 answer of the Vedanta is that this is a false statement. The Vedanta 16 never contended that there was a noumenal and a phenomenal 17 world. There is one. Seen through the senses it is phenomenal, but 18 it is really the noumenal all the time. The man who sees the rope 19 does not see the snake. It is either the rope or the snake, but never 20 the two. So the Buddhistic statement of our position, that we 21 believe there are two worlds, is entirely false. They have the right 22 to say it is the phenomenal if they like, but no right to contend that 23 other men have not the right to say it is the noumenal.

24 Buddhism does not want to have anything except phenomena.
25 In phenomena alone is desire. It is desire that is creating all this.
26 Modern Vedantists do not hold this at all. We say there is something 27 which has become the will. Will is a manufactured something, a 28 compound, not a "simple". There cannot be any will without 29 external object. We see that the very position that will created this 30 universe is impossible. How could it? Have you ever known will 31 without an external stimulus? Desire cannot arise without stimulus, 32 or in modern philosophic language, of nerve stimulus. Will is a sort 33 of reaction of the brain, what the Sankhya philosophers call Buddhi.
34 This reaction must be preceded by action, and action presupposes
35 an external universe. When there is no external universe, naturally 36 there will be no will; and yet, according to your theory, it is will that 37 created the universe. Who creates the will? Will is coexistent with 38 the universe. Will is one phenomenon caused by the same impulse 39 which created the universe. But philosophy must not stop there.
40 Will is entirely personal; therefore we cannot go with Schopenhauer 41 at all. Will is a compound--a mixture of the internal and the 42 external. Suppose a man were born without any senses, he would 43 have no will at all. Will requires something from outside, and the 44 brain will get some energy from inside; therefore will is a 45 compound, as much a compound as the wall or anything else. We do 46 not agree with the will-theory of these German philosophers at all.
47 Will itself is phenomenal and cannot be the Absolute. It is one of the 48 many projections. There is something which is not will, but is 49 manifesting itself as will. That I can understand.

50 But that will is manifesting itself as everything else, I do not 51 understand, seeing that we cannot have any conception of will, as

1 separate from the universe. When that something which is freedom
2 becomes will, it is caused by time, space, and causation. Take 3 Kant's analysis. Will is within time, space, and causation. Then how 4 can it be the Absolute? One cannot will without willing in time.

5 If we can stop all thought, then we know that we are beyond 6 thought. We come to this by negation. When every phenomenon has 7 been negated, whatever remains, that is It. That cannot be 8 expressed, cannot be manifested, because the manifestation will be, 9 again, will.

10 11 12 13 ON THE VEDANTA PHILOSOPHY

14
15 The Vedantist says that a man is neither born nor dies nor 16 goes to heaven, and that reincarnation is really a myth with regard 17 to the soul. The example is given of a book being turned over. It is 18 the book that evolves, not the man. Every soul is omnipresent, so 19 where can it come or go? These births and deaths are changes in 20 nature which we are mistaking for changes in us.

21 Reincarnation is the evolution of nature and the 22 manifestation of the God within.

23 The Vedanta says that each life is built upon the past, and 24 that when we can look back over the whole past we are free. The 25 desire to be free will take the form of a religious disposition from 26 childhood. A few years will, as it were, make all truth clear to one.
27 After leaving this life, and while waiting for the next, a man is still 28 in the phenomenal.

29 We would describe the soul in these words: This soul the 30 sword cannot cut, nor the spear pierce; the fire cannot burn nor 31 water melt it; indestructible, omnipresent is this soul. Therefore 32 weep not for it.

33 If it has been very bad, we believe that it will become good in 34 the time to come. The fundamental principle is that there is eternal 35 freedom for every one. Every one must come to it. We have to 36 struggle, impelled by our desire to be free. Every other desire but 37 that to be free is illusive. Every good action, the Vedantist says, is a 38 manifestation of that freedom.

39 I do not believe that there will come a time when all the evil 40 in the world will vanish. How could that be? This stream goes on.
41 Masses of water go out at one end, but masses are coming in at the 42 other end.

43 The Vedanta says that you are pure and perfect, and that 44 there is a state beyond good and evil, and that is your own nature.
45 It is higher even than good. Good is only a lesser differentiation 46 than evil.

47 We have no theory of evil. We call it ignorance.

1 So far as it goes, all dealing with other people, all ethics, is in 2 the phenomenal world. As a most complete statement of truth, we 3 would not think of applying such things as ignorance to God. Of 4 Him we say that He is Existence, Knowledge, and Bliss Absolute.
5 Every effort of thought and speech will make the Absolute
6 phenomenal and break Its character.

7 There is one thing to be remembered: that the assertion--I am 8 God--cannot be made with regard to the sense-world. If you say in 9 the sense-world that you are God, what is to prevent your doing 10 wrong? So the affirmation of your divinity applies only to the 11 noumenal. If I am God, I am beyond the tendencies of the senses 12 and will not do evil. Morality of course is not the goal of man, but 13 the means through which this freedom is attained. The Vedanta 14 says that Yoga is one way that makes men realise this divinity. The 15 Vedanta says this is done by the realisation of the freedom within 16 and that everything will give way to that. Morality and ethics will all 17 range themselves in their proper places.

18 All the criticism against the Advaita philosophy can be 19 summed up in this, that it does not conduce to sense-enjoyment; 20 and we are glad to admit that.

21 The Vedanta system begins with tremendous pessimism, and 22 ends with real optimism. We deny the sense-optimism but assert the 23 real optimism of the Supersensuous. That real happiness is not in 24 the senses but above the senses; and it is in every man. The sort of 25 optimism which we see in the world is what will lead to ruin 26 through the senses.

27 Abnegation has the greatest importance in our philosophy.
28 Negation implies affirmation of the Real Self. The Vedanta is 29 pessimistic so far as it negatives the world of the senses, but it is 30 optimistic in its assertion of the real world.

31 The Vedanta recognises the reasoning power of man a good 32 deal, although it says there is something higher than intellect; but 33 the road lies through intellect.

34 We need reason to drive out all the old superstitions; and 35 what remains is Vedantism. There is a beautiful Sanskrit poem in 36 which the sage says to himself: "Why weepest thou, my friend?
37 There is no fear nor death for thee. Why weepest thou? There is no 38 misery for thee, for thou art like the infinite blue sky, unchangeable 39 in thy nature. Clouds of all colours come before it, play for a 40 moment, and pass away; it is the same sky. Thou hast only to drive 41 away the clouds."

42 We have to open the gates and clear the way. The water will 43 rush in and fill in by its own nature, because it is there already.

44 Man is a good deal conscious, partly unconscious, and there 45 is a possibility of getting beyond consciousness. It is only when we 46 become men that we can go beyond all reason. The words higher 47 or lower can be used only in the phenomenal world. To say them of 48 the noumenal world is simply contradictory, because there is no 49 differentiation there. Man-manifestation is the highest in the 50 phenomenal world. The Vedantist says he is higher than the Devas.

1 The gods will all have to die and will become men again, and in the 2 man-body alone they will become perfect.

3 It is true that we create a system, but we have to admit that it 4 is not perfect, because the reality must be beyond all systems. We 5 are ready to compare it with other systems and are ready to show 6 that this is the only rational system that can be; but it is not perfect, 7 because reason is not perfect. It is, however, the only possible 8 rational system that the human mind can conceive.

9 It is true to a certain extent that a system must disseminate 10 itself to be strong. No system has disseminated itself so much as 11 the Vedanta. It is the personal contact that teaches even now. A 12 mass of reading does not make men; those who were real men were 13 made so by personal contact. It is true that there are very few of 14 these real men, but they will increase. Yet you cannot believe that 15 there will come a day when we shall all be philosophers. We do not 16 believe that there will come a time when there will be all happiness 17 and no unhappiness.

18 Now and then we know a moment of supreme bliss, when we 19 ask nothing, give nothing, know nothing but bliss. Then it passes, 20 and we again see the panorama of the universe moving before us; 21 and we know that it is but a mosaic work set upon God, who is the 22 background of all things.

23 The Vedanta teaches that Nirvana can be attained here and 24 now, that we do not have to wait for death to reach it. Nirvana is 25 the realisation of the Self; and after having once known that, if only 26 for an instant, never again can one be deluded by the mirage of 27 personality. Having eyes, we must see the apparent, but all the time 28 we know what it is; we have found out its true nature. It is the 29 screen that hides the Self, which is unchanging.

30 The screen opens, and we find the Self behind it. All change 31 is in the screen. In the saint the screen is thin, and the reality can 32 almost shine through. In the sinner the screen is thick, and we are 33 liable to lose sight of the truth that the Atman is there, as well as 34 behind the saint's screen. When the screen is wholly removed, we 35 find it really never existed--that we were the Atman and nothing 36 else, even the screen is forgotten.

37 The two phases of this distinction in life are--first, that the 38 man who knows the real Self, will not be affected by anything;
39 secondly, that that man alone can do good to the world. That man 40 alone will have seen the real motive of doing good to others, 41 because there is only one, it cannot be called egoistic, because that 42 would be differentiation. It is the only selflessness. It is the 43 perception of the universal, not of the individual. Every case of love 44 and sympathy is an assertion of this universal. "Not I, but thou."
45 Help another because you are in him and he is in you, is the 46 philosophical way of putting it. The real Vedantist alone will give up 47 his life for a fellow-man without any compunction, because he 48 knows he will not die. As long as there is one insect left in the 49 world, he is living; as long as one mouth eats, he eats. So he goes 50 on doing good to others; and is never hindered by the modern ideas 51 of caring for the body. When a man reaches this point of 1 abnegation, he goes beyond the moral struggle, beyond everything.

2 He sees in the most learned priest, in the cow, in the dog, in the 3 most miserable places, neither the learned man, nor the cow, nor 4 the dog, nor the miserable place, but the same divinity manifesting 5 itself in them all. He alone is the happy man; and the man who has 6 acquired that sameness has, even in this life, conquered all 7 existence. God is pure; therefore such a man is said to be living in 8 God. Jesus says, "Before Abraham was, I am." That means that 9 Jesus and others like him are free spirits; and Jesus of Nazareth 10 took human form, not by the compulsion of his past actions, but just 11 to do good to mankind. It is not that when a man becomes free, he 12 will stop and become a dead lump; but he will be more active than 13 any other being, because every other being acts only under 14 compulsion, he alone through freedom.

15 If we are inseparable from God, have we no individuality? Oh, 16 yes: that is God. Our individuality is God. This is not the 17 individuality you have now; you are coming towards that.
18 Individuality means what cannot be divided. How can you call this 19 individuality? One hour you are thinking one way, and the next hour 20 another way, and two hours after, another way. Individuality is that 21 which changes not--is beyond all things, changeless. It would be 22 tremendously dangerous for this state to remain in eternity, 23 because then the thief would always remain a thief and the 24 blackguard a blackguard. If a baby died, he would have to remain a 25 baby. The real individuality is that which never changes and will 26 never change; and that is the God within us.

27 Vedantism is an expansive ocean on the surface of which a 28 man-of-war could be near a catamaran. So in the Vedantic ocean a 29 real Yogi can be by the side of an idolater or even an atheist. What 30 is more, in the Vedantic ocean, the Hindu, Mohammedan, Christian, 31 and Parsee are all one, all children of the Almighty God.

32 33 34 LAW AND FREEDOM

35
36 The struggle never had meaning for the man who is free. But 37 for us it has a meaning, because it is name-and-form that creates 38 the world.

39 We have a place for struggle in the Vedanta, but not for fear.
40 All fears will vanish when you begin to assert your own nature. If 41 you think that you are bound, bound you will remain. If you think 42 you are free, free you will be.

43 That sort of freedom which we can feel when we are yet in 44 the phenomenal is a glimpse of the real but not yet the real.

45 I disagree with the idea that freedom is obedience to the laws 46 of nature. I do not understand what it means. According to the 47 history of human progress, it is disobedience to nature that has 48 constituted that progress. It may be said that the conquest of lower 49 laws was through the higher. But even there, the conquering mind

1 was only trying to be free; and as soon as it found that the struggle
2 was also through law, it wanted to conquer that also. So the ideal 3 was freedom in every case. The trees never disobey law. I never 4 saw a cow steal. An oyster never told a lie. Yet they are not greater 5 than man. This life is a tremendous assertion of freedom; and this 6 obedience to law, carried far enough, would make us simply 7 matter--either in society, or in politics, or in religion. Too many laws 8 are a sure sign of death. Wherever in any society there are too
9 many laws, it is a sure sign that that society will soon die. If you 10 study the characteristics of India, you will find that no nation 11 possesses so many laws as the Hindus, and national death is the 12 result. But the Hindus had one peculiar idea--they never made any 13 doctrines or dogmas in religion; and the latter has had the greatest 14 growth. Eternal law cannot be freedom, because to say that the 15 eternal is inside law is to limit it.

16 There is no purpose in view with God, because if there were 17 some purpose, He would be nothing better than a man. Why should 18 He need any purpose? If He had any, He would be bound by it.
19 There would be something besides Him which was greater. For 20 instance, the carpet-weaver makes a piece of carpet. The idea was 21 outside of him, something greater. Now where is the idea to which 22 God would adjust Himself? Just as the greatest emperors 23 sometimes play with dolls, so He is playing with this nature; and 24 what we call law is this. We call it law, because we can see only 25 little bits which run smoothly. All our ideas of law are within the 26 little bit. It is nonsense to say that law is infinite, that throughout all 27 time stones will fall. If all reason be based upon experience, who 28 was there to see if stones fell five millions of years ago? So law is 29 not constitutional in man. It is a scientific assertion as to man that 30 where we begin, there we end. As a matter of fact, we get gradually 31 outside of law, until we get out altogether, but with the added 32 experience of a whole life. In God and freedom we began, and 33 freedom and God will be the end. These laws are in the middle state 34 through which we have to pass. Our Vedanta is the assertion of 35 freedom always. The very idea of law will frighten the Vedantist; 36 and eternal law is a very dreadful thing for him, because there 37 would be no escape. If there is to be an eternal law binding him all 38 the time, where is the difference between him and a blade of grass?
39 We do not believe in that abstract idea of law.

40 We say that it is freedom that we are to seek, and that that 41 freedom is God. It is the same happiness as in everything else; but 42 when man seeks it in something which is finite, he gets only a spark 43 of it. The thief when he steals gets the same happiness as the man 44 who finds it in God; but the thief gets only a little spark with a mass 45 of misery. The real happiness is God. Love is God, freedom is God; 46 and everything that is bondage is not God.

47 Man has freedom already, but he will have to discover it. He 48 has it, but every moment forgets it. That discovering, consciously or 49 unconsciously, is the whole life of every one. But the difference 50 between the sage and the ignorant man is that one does it 51 consciously and the other unconsciously. Every one is struggling for 52 freedom--from the atom to the star. The ignorant man is satisfied if

1 he can get freedom within a certain limit--if he can get rid of the 2 bondage of hunger or of being thirsty. But that sage feels that there 3 is a stronger bondage which has to be thrown off. He would not 4 consider the freedom of the Red Indian as freedom at all.

5 According to our philosophers, freedom is the goal.
6 Knowledge cannot be the goal, because knowledge is a compound.
7 It is a compound of power and freedom, and it is freedom alone that 8 is desirable. That is what men struggle after. Simply the possession 9 of power would not be knowledge. For instance, a scientist can 10 send an electric shock to a distance of some miles; but nature can 11 send it to an unlimited distance. Why do we not build statues to 12 nature then? It is not law that we want but ability to break law. We 13 want to be outlaws. If you are bound by laws, you will be a lump of 14 clay. Whether you are beyond law or not is not the question; but the 15 thought that we are beyond law--upon that is based the whole 16 history of humanity. For instance, a man lives in a forest, and never 17 has had any education or knowledge. He sees a stone falling down-- 18 a natural phenomenon happening--and he thinks it is freedom. He 19 thinks it has a soul, and the central idea in that is freedom. But as 20 soon as he knows that it must fall, he calls it nature--dead, 21 mechanical action. I may or may not go into the street. In that is my 22 glory as a man. If I am sure that I must go there, I give myself up 23 and become a machine. Nature with its infinite power is only a 24 machine; freedom alone constitutes sentient life.

25 The Vedanta says that the idea of the man in the forest is the 26 right one; his glimpse is right, but the explanation is wrong. He 27 holds to this nature as freedom and not as governed by law. Only 28 after all this human experience we will come back to think the 29 same, but in a more philosophical sense. For instance, I want to go 30 out into the street. I get the impulse of my will, and then I stop; and 31 in the time that intervenes between the will and going into the 32 street, I am working uniformly. Uniformity of action is what we call 33 law. This uniformity of my actions, I find, is broken into very short 34 periods, and so I do not call my actions under law. I work through 35 freedom. I walk for five minutes; but before those five minutes of 36 walking, which are uniform, there was the action of the will, which 37 gave the impulse to walk. Therefore man says he is free, because all 38 his actions can be cut up into small periods; and although there is 39 sameness in the small periods, beyond the period there is not the 40 same sameness. In this perception of non-uniformity is the idea of 41 freedom. In nature we see only very large periods of uniformity; but 42 the beginning and end must be free impulses. The impulse of 43 freedom was given just at the beginning, and that has rolled on; but 44 this, compared with our periods, is much longer. We find by analysis 45 on philosophic grounds that we are not free. But there will remain 46 this factor, this consciousness that I am free. What we have to 47 explain is, how that comes. We will find that we have these two 48 impulses in us. Our reason tells us that all our actions are caused, 49 and at the same time, with every impulse we are asserting our 50 freedom. The solution of the Vedanta is that there is freedom 51 inside--that the soul is really free--but that that soul's actions are 52 percolating through body and mind, which are not free.

1 As soon as we react, we become slaves. A man blames me,
2 and I immediately react in the form of anger. A little vibration which 3 he created made me a slave. So we have to demonstrate our 4 freedom. They alone are the sages who see in the highest, most 5 learned man, or the lowest animal, or the worst and most wicked of 6 mankind, neither a man nor a sage nor an animal, but the same God 7 in all of them. Even in this life they have conquered relativity, and 8 have taken a firm stand upon this equality. God is pure, the same to 9 all. Therefore such a sage would be a living God. This is the goal 10 towards which we are going; and every form of worship, every 11 action of mankind, is a method of attaining to it. The man who 12 wants money is striving for freedom--to get rid of the bondage of 13 poverty. Every action of man is worship, because the idea is to 14 attain to freedom, and all action, directly or indirectly, tends to that.
15 Only, those actions that deter are to be avoided. The whole universe 16 is worshipping, consciously or unconsciously; only it does not know 17 that even while it is cursing, it is in another form worshipping the 18 same God it is cursing, because those who are cursing are also 19 struggling for freedom. They never think that in reacting from a 20 thing they are making themselves slaves to it. It is hard to kick 21 against the pricks.

22 If we could get rid of the belief in our limitations, it would be 23 possible for us to do everything just now. It is only a question of 24 time. If that is so, add power, and so diminish time. Remember the 25 case of the professor who learnt the secret of the development of 26 marble and who made marble in twelve years, while it took nature 27 centuries.

28 29 30 THE GOAL AND METHODS OF REALISATION

31
32 The greatest misfortune to befall the world would be if all 33 mankind were to recognise and accept but one religion, one 34 universal form of worship, one standard of morality. This would be 35 the death-blow to all religious and spiritual progress. Instead of 36 trying to hasten this disastrous event by inducing persons, through 37 good or evil methods, to conform to our own highest ideal of truth, 38 we ought rather to endeavour to remove all obstacles which 39 prevent men from developing in accordance with their own highest 40 ideals, and thus make their attempt vain to establish one universal 41 religion.

42 The ultimate goal of all mankind, the aim and end of all 43 religions, is but one--re-union with God, or, what amounts to the 44 same, with the divinity which is every man's true nature. But while 45 the aim is one, the method of attaining may vary with the different 46 temperaments of men.

47 Both the goal and the methods employed for reaching it are 48 called Yoga, a word derived from the same Sanskrit root as the 49 English "yoke", meaning "to join", to join us to our reality, God.
50 There are various such Yogas, or methods of union--but the chief ones are--Karma-Yoga, Bhakti-Yoga, Raja-Yoga, and Jnana-Yoga.

Every man must develop according to his own nature. As every science has its methods, so has every religion. The methods of attaining the end of religion are called Yoga by us, and the different forms of Yoga that we teach, are adapted to the different natures and temperaments of men. We classify them in the following way, under four heads:

(1) Karma-Yoga--The manner in which a man realises his own divinity through works and duty.

(2) Bhakti-Yoga--The realisation of the divinity through devotion to, and love of, a Personal God.

(3) Raja-Yoga--The realisation of the divinity through the control of mind.

(4) Jnana-Yoga--The realisation of a man's own divinity through knowledge.

These are all different roads leading to the same centre--God. Indeed, the varieties of religious belief are an advantage, since all faiths are good, so far as they encourage man to lead a religious life. The more sects there are, the more opportunities there are for making successful appeals to the divine instinct in all men.

WORLD-WIDE UNITY

Speaking of the world-wide unity, before the Oak Beach Christian Unity, Swami Vivekananda said:

All religions are, at the bottom, alike. This is so, although the Christian Church, like the Pharisee in the parable, thanks God that it alone is right and thinks that all other religions are wrong and in need of Christian light. Christianity must become tolerant before the world will be willing to unite with the Christian Church in a common charity. God has not left Himself without a witness in any heart, and men, especially men who follow Jesus Christ, should be willing to admit this. In fact, Jesus Christ was willing to admit every good man to the family of God. It is not the man who believes a certain something, but the man who does the will of the Father in heaven, who is right. On this basis--being right and doing right--the whole world can unite.

THE AIM OF RAJA-YOGA

Yoga has essentially to do with the meditative side of religion, rather than the ethical side, though, of necessity, a little of the

1 latter has to be considered. Men and women are growing to desire
2 more than mere revelation, so called. They want facts in their own 3 consciousness. Only through experience can there be any reality in 4 religion. Spiritual facts are to be gathered mostly from the 5 superconscious state of mind. Let us put ourselves into the same 6 condition as did those who claim to have had special experiences; 7 then if we have similar experiences, they become facts for us. We 8 can see all that another has seen; a thing that happened once can 9 happen again, nay, must, under the same circumstances. Raja-Yoga 10 teaches us how to reach the superconscious state. All the great 11 religions recognise this state in some form; but in India, special 12 attention is paid to this side of religion. In the beginning, some 13 mechanical means may help us to acquire this state; but mechanical 14 means alone can never accomplish much. Certain positions, certain 15 modes of breathing, help to harmonise and concentrate the mind, 16 but with these must go purity and strong desire for God, or 17 realisation. The attempt to sit down and fix the mind on one idea 18 and hold it there will prove to most people that there is some need 19 for help to enable them to do this successfully. The mind has to be 20 gradually and systematically brought under control. The will has to 21 be strengthened by slow, continuous, and persevering drill. This is 22 no child's play, no fad to be tried one day and discarded the next. It 23 is a life's work; and the end to be attained is well worth all that it 24 can cost us to reach it; being nothing less than the realisation of our 25 absolute oneness with the Divine. Surely, with this end in view, and 26 with the knowledge that we can certainly succeed, no price can be 27 too great to pay.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

A DISCUSSION⁹⁰

Q.--I should like to know something about the present activity of philosophic thought in India. To what extent are these questions discussed?

A.--As I have said, the majority of the Indian people are practically dualists, and the minority are monists. The main subject of discussion is Maya and Jiva. When I came to this country, I found that the labourers were informed of the present condition of politics; but when I asked them, "What is religion, and what are the doctrines of this and that particular sect?" they said, "We do not know; we go to church." In India if I go to a peasant and ask him, "Who governs you?" he says, "I do not know; I pay my taxes." But if I ask him what is his religion, he says, "I am a dualist", and is ready to give you the details about Maya and Jiva. He cannot read or write, but he has learned all this from the monks and is very fond of discussing it. After the day's work, the peasants sit under a tree and discuss these questions.

Q.--What does orthodoxy mean with the Hindus?

A.--In modern times it simply means obeying certain caste laws as to eating, drinking, and marriage. After that the Hindu can believe in any system he likes. There was never an organised church in India; so there was never a body of men to formulate doctrines of orthodoxy. In a general way, we say that those who believe in the Vedas are orthodox; but in reality we find that many of the dualistic sects believe more in the Puranas than in the Vedas alone.

Q.--What influence had your Hindu philosophy on the Stoic philosophy of the Greeks?

A.--It is very probable that it had some influence on it through the Alexandrians. There is some suspicion of Pythagoras' being influenced by the Sankhya thought. Anyway, we think the Sankhya philosophy is the first attempt to harmonise the philosophy of the Vedas through reason. We find Kapila mentioned even in the Vedas: "{Sanskrit}--He who (supports through knowledge) the first-born sage Kapila."

Q.--What is the antagonism of this thought with Western science?

A.--No antagonism at all. We are in harmony with it. Our theory of ⁹⁰ ?This discussion followed the lecture on the Vedanta Philosophy delivered by the Swami at the Graduate Philosophical Society of Harvard University, U.S.A., on March 25, 1896. (Vol. I, pp. 357 ff.).

1 evolution and of Akasha and Prana is exactly what your modern 2 philosophies have. Your belief in evolution is among our Yogis and 3 in the Sankhya philosophy. For instance, Patanjali speaks of one 4 species being changed into another by the infilling of 5 nature--"{Sanskrit}"; only he differs from you in the explanation.
6 His explanation of this evolution is spiritual. He says that just as 7 when a farmer wants to water his field from the canals that pass 8 near, he has only to lift up his gate--"{Sanskrit}"--so each man is the 9 Infinite already, only these bars and bolts and different 10 circumstances shut him in; but as soon as they are removed, he 11 rushes out and expresses himself. In the animal, the man was held 12 in abeyance; but as soon as good circumstances came, he was 13 manifested as man. And again, as soon as fitting circumstances 14 came, the God in man manifested itself. So we have very little to 15 quarrel with in the new theories. For instance, the theory of the 16 Sankhya as to perception is very little different from modern 17 physiology.

18 Q.--But your method is different?

19 A.--Yes. We claim that concentrating the powers of the mind is the 20 only way to knowledge. In external science, concentration of mind 21 is--putting it on something external; and in internal science, it is-- 22 drawing towards one's Self. We call this concentration of mind
23 Yoga.

24 Q.--In the state of concentration does the truth of these principles 25 become evident?

26 A.--The Yogis claim a good deal. They claim that by concentration of 27 the mind every truth in the universe becomes evident to the mind, 28 both external and internal truth.

29 Q.--What does the Advaitist think of cosmology?

30 A.--The Advaitist would say that all this cosmology and everything 31 else are only in Maya, in the phenomenal world. In truth they do not 32 exist. But as long as we are bound, we have to see these visions.
33 Within these visions things come in a certain regular order. Beyond 34 them there is no law and order, but freedom.

35 Q.--Is the Advaita antagonistic to dualism?

36 A.--The Upanishads not being in a systematised form, it was easy 37 for philosophers to take up texts when they liked to form a system.
38 The Upanishads had always to be taken, else there would be no 39 basis. Yet we find all the different schools of thought in the 40 Upanishads. Our solution is that the Advaita is not antagonistic to 41 the Dvaita (dualism). We say the latter is only one of three steps.
42 Religion always takes three steps. The first is dualism. Then man 43 gets to a higher state, partial non-dualism. And at last he finds he is 44 one with the universe. Therefore the three do not contradict but 45 fulfil.

46 Q.--Why does Maya or ignorance exist?

47 A.--"Why" cannot be asked beyond the limit of causation. It can only 48 be asked within Maya. We say we will answer the question when it 49 is logically formulated. Before that we have no right to answer.

1 Q.--Does the Personal God belong to Maya?

2 A.--Yes; but the Personal God is the same Absolute seen through 3 Maya. That Absolute under the control of nature is what is called 4 the human soul; and that which is controlling nature is Ishvara, or 5 the Personal God. If a man starts from here to see the sun, he will 6 see at first a little sun; but as he proceeds he will see it bigger and 7 bigger, until he reaches the real one. At each stage of his progress 8 he was seeing apparently a different sun; yet we are sure it was the 9 same sun he was seeing. So all these things are but visions of the 10 Absolute, and as such they are true. Not one is a false vision, but 11 we can only say they were lower stages.

12 Q.--What is the special process by which one will come to know the 13 Absolute?

14 A.--We say there are two processes. One is the positive, and the 15 other, the negative. The positive is that through which the whole 16 universe is going--that of love. If this circle of love is increased 17 indefinitely, we reach the one universal love. The other is the "Neti", 18 "Neti"--"not this", "not this"--stopping every wave in the mind which 19 tries to draw it out; and at last the mind dies, as it were, and the 20 Real discloses Itself. We call that Samadhi, or superconsciousness.

21 Q.--That would be, then, merging the subject in the object!

22 A.--Merging the object in the subject, not merging the subject in the 23 object. Really this world dies, and I remain. I am the only one that 24 remains.

25 Q.--Some of our philosophers in Germany have thought that the 26 whole doctrine of Bhakti (Love for the Divine) in India was very 27 likely the result of occidental influence.

28 A.--I do not take any stock in that--the assumption was ephemeral.
29 The Bhakti of India is not like the Western Bhakti. The central idea 30 of ours is that there is no thought of fear. It is always, love God.
31 There is no worship through fear, but always through love, from 32 beginning to end. In the second place, the assumption is quite 33 unnecessary. Bhakti is spoken of in the oldest of the Upanishads, 34 which is much older than the Christian Bible. The germs of Bhakti 35 are even in the Samhita (the Vedic hymns). The word Bhakti is not a 36 Western word. It was suggested by the word Shraddha.

37 Q.--What is the Indian idea of the Christian faith?

38 A.--That is very good. The Vedanta will take in every one. We have a 39 peculiar idea in India. Suppose I had a child. I should not teach him 40 any religion; I should teach him breathings--the practice of 41 concentrating the mind, and just one line of prayer--not prayer in 42 your sense, but simply something like this, "I meditate on Him who 43 is the Creator of this universe: may He enlighten my mind!" That 44 way he would be educated, and then go about hearing different 45 philosophers and teachers. He would select one who, he thought, 46 would suit him best; and this man would become his Guru or 47 teacher, and he would become a Shishya or disciple. He would say 48 to that man, "This form of philosophy which you preach is the best; 49 so teach me." Our fundamental idea is that your doctrine cannot be

1 mine, or mine yours. Each one must have his own way. My daughter
2 may have one method, and my son another, and I again another. So
3 each one has an Ishta or chosen way, and we keep it to ourselves. It 4 is between me and my teacher, because we do not want to create a 5 fight. It will not help any one to tell it to others, because each one 6 will have to find his own way. So only general philosophy and 7 general methods can be taught universally. For instance, giving a 8 ludicrous example, it may help me to stand on one leg. It would be 9 ludicrous to you if I said every one must do that, but it may suit me.
10 It is quite possible for me to be a dualist and for my wife to be a 11 monist, and so on. One of my sons may worship Christ or Buddha or 12 Mohammed, so long as he obeys the caste laws. That is his own 13 Ishta.

14 Q.--Do all Hindus believe in caste?

15 A.--They are forced to. They may not believe, but they have to obey.

16 Q.--Are these exercises in breathing and concentration universally 17 practised?

18 A.--Yes; only some practise only a little, just to satisfy the 19 requirements of their religion. The temples in India are not like the 20 churches here. They may all vanish tomorrow, and will not be 21 missed. A temple is built by a man who wants to go to heaven, or to 22 get a son, or something of that sort. So he builds a large temple and 23 employs a few priests to hold services there. I need not go there at 24 all, because all my worship is in the home. In every house is a 25 special room set apart, which is called the chapel. The first duty of 26 the child, after his initiation, is to take a bath, and then to worship; 27 and his worship consists of this breathing and meditating and 28 repeating of a certain name. And another thing is to hold the body 29 straight. We believe that the mind has every power over the body to 30 keep it healthy. After one has done this, then another comes and 31 takes his seat, and each one does it in silence. Sometimes there are 32 three or four in the same room, but each one may have a different 33 method. This worship is repeated at least twice a day.

34 Q.--This state of oneness that you speak of, is it an ideal or 35 something actually attained?

36 A.--We say it is within actuality; we say we realise that state. If it 37 were only in talk, it would be nothing. The Vedas teach three things: 38 this Self is first to be heard, then to be reasoned, and then to be 39 meditated upon. When a man first hears it, he must reason on it, so 40 that he does not believe it ignorantly, but knowingly; and after 41 reasoning what it is, he must meditate upon it, and then realise it.
42 And that is religion. Belief is no part of religion. We say religion is a 43 superconscious state.

44 Q.--If you ever reach that state of superconsciousness, can you ever 45 tell about it?

46 A.--No; but we know it by its fruits. An idiot, when he goes to sleep, 47 comes out of sleep an idiot or even worse. But another man goes 48 into the state of meditation, and when he comes out he is a 49 philosopher, a sage, a great man. That shows the difference 50 between these two states.

1 Q.--I should like to ask, in continuation of Professor __'s question, 2 whether you know of any people who have made any study of the 3 principles of self-hypnotism, which they undoubtedly practised to a 4 great extent in ancient India, and what has been recently stated 5 and practised in that thing. Of course you do not have it so much in 6 modern India.

7 A.--What you call hypnotism in the West is only a part of the real 8 thing. The Hindus call it self-hypnotisation. They say you are 9 hypnotised already, and that you should get out of it and de-10 hypnotise yourself. "There the sun cannot illumine, nor the moon, nor 11 the stars; the flash of lightning cannot illumine that; what to speak of 12 this mortal fire! That shining, everything else shines" (Katha 13 Upanishad, II.ii.15). That is not hypnotisation, but de-hypnotisation.
14 We say that every other religion that preaches these things as real 15 is practising a form of hypnotism. It is the Advaitist alone that does 16 not care to be hypnotised. His is the only system that more or less 17 understands that hypnotism comes with every form of dualism. But 18 the Advaitist says, throw away even the Vedas, throw away even the 19 Personal God, throw away even the universe, throw away even your 20 own body and mind, and let nothing remain, in order to get rid of 21 hypnotism perfectly. "From where the mind comes back with 22 speech, being unable to reach, knowing the Bliss of Brahman, no 23 more is fear." That is de-hypnotisation. "I have neither vice nor 24 virtue, nor misery nor happiness; I care neither for the Vedas nor 25 sacrifices nor ceremonies; I am neither food nor eating nor eater, 26 for I am Existence Absolute, Knowledge Absolute, Bliss Absolute; I 27 am He, I am He." We know all about hypnotism. We have a 28 psychology which the West is just beginning to know, but not yet 29 adequately, I am sorry to say.

30 Q.--What do you call the astral body?

31 A.--The astral body is what we call the Linga Sharira. When this 32 body dies, how can it come to take another body? Force cannot 33 remain without matter. So a little part of the fine matter remains, 34 through which the internal organs make another body--for each one 35 is making his own body; it is the mind that makes the body. If I 36 become a sage, my brain gets changed into a sage's brain; and the 37 Yogis say that even in this life a Yogi can change his body into a 38 god-body.

39 The Yogis show many wonderful things. One ounce of practice is 40 worth a thousand pounds of theory. So I have no right to say that 41 because I have not seen this or that thing done, it is false. Their 42 books say that with practice you can get all sorts of results that are 43 most wonderful. Small results can be obtained in a short time by 44 regular practice, so that one may know that there is no humbug 45 about it, no charlatanism. And these Yogis explain the very 46 wonderful things mentioned in all scriptures in a scientific way. The 47 question is, how these records of miracles entered into every 48 nation. The man, who says that they are all false and need no 49 explanation, is not rational. You have no right to deny them until 50 you can prove them false. You must prove that they are without any 51 foundation, and only then have you the right to stand up and deny 52 them. But you have not done that. On the other hand, the Yogis say

1 they are not miracles, and they claim that they can do them even 2 today. Many wonderful things are done in India today. But none of 3 them are done by miracles. There are many books on the subject.
4 Again, if nothing else has been done in that line except a scientific 5 approach towards psychology, that credit must be given to the 6 Yogis.

7 Q.--Can you say in the concrete what the manifestations are which 8 the Yogi can show?

9 A.--The Yogi wants no faith or belief in his science but that which is 10 given to any other science, just enough gentlemanly faith to come 11 and make the experiment. The ideal of the Yogi is tremendous. I 12 have seen the lower things that can be done by the power of the 13 mind, and therefore, I have no right to disbelieve that the highest 14 things can be done. The ideal of the Yogi is eternal peace and love 15 through omniscience and omnipotence. I know a Yogi who was 16 bitten by a cobra, and who fell down on the ground. In the evening 17 he revived again, and when asked what happened, he said: "A 18 messenger came from my Beloved." All hatred and anger and 19 jealousy have been burnt out of this man. Nothing can make him 20 react; he is infinite love all the time, and he is omnipotent in his 21 power of love. That is the real Yogi. And this manifesting different 22 things is accidental on the way. That is not what he wants to attain.
23 The Yogi says, every man is a slave except the Yogi. He is a slave of 24 food, to air, to his wife, to his children, to a dollar, slave to a nation, 25 slave to name and fame, and to a thousand things in this world. The 26 man who is not controlled by any one of these bondages is alone a 27 real man, a real Yogi. "They have conquered relative existence in 28 this life who are firm-fixed in sameness. God is pure and the same 29 to all. Therefore such are said to be living in God" (Gita, V.19).

30 Q.--Do the Yogis attach any importance to caste?

31 A.--No; caste is only the training school for undeveloped minds.

32 Q.--Is there no connection between this idea of superconsciousness 33 and the heat of India?

34 A.--I do not think so; because all this philosophy was thought out 35 fifteen thousand feet above the level of the sea, among the 36 Himalayas, in an almost Arctic temperature.

37 Q.--Is it practicable to attain success in a cold climate?

38 A.--It is practicable, and the only thing that is practicable in this 39 world. We say you are a born Vedantist, each one of you. You are 40 declaring your oneness with everything each moment you live.
41 Every time that your heart goes out towards the world, you are a 42 true Vedantist, only you do not know it. You are moral without 43 knowing why; and the Vedanta is the philosophy which analysed 44 and taught man to be moral consciously. It is the essence of all 45 religions.

46 Q.--Should you say that there is an unsocial principle in our Western 47 people, which makes us so pluralistic, and that Eastern people are 48 more sympathetic than we are?

49 A.--I think the Western people are more cruel, and the Eastern

1 people have more mercy towards all beings. But that is simply 2 because your civilisation is very much more recent. It takes time to 3 make a thing come under the influence of mercy. You have a great 4 deal of power, and the power of control of the mind has especially 5 been very little practised. It will take time to make you gentle and 6 good. This feeling tingles in every drop of blood in India. If I go to 7 the villages to teach the people politics, they will not understand; 8 but if I go to teach them Vedanta, they will say, "Now, Swami, you 9 are all right". That Vairagya, non-attachment, is everywhere in 10 India, even today. We are very much degenerated now; but kings 11 will give up their thrones and go about the country without 12 anything.

13 In some places the common village-girl with her spinning-wheel 14 says, "Do not talk to me of dualism; my spinning-wheel says 'Soham, 15 Soham'--'I am He, I am He.'" Go and talk to these people, and ask 16 them why it is that they speak so and yet kneel before that stone.
17 They will say that with you religion means dogma, but with them 18 realisation. "I will be a Vedantist", one of them will say, "only when 19 all this has vanished, and I have seen the reality. Until then there is 20 no difference between me and the ignorant. So I am using these 21 stones and am going to temples, and so on, to come to realisation. I 22 have heard, but I want to see and realise." "Different methods of 23 speech, different manners of explaining the meaning of the 24 scriptures--these are only for the enjoyment of the learned, not for 25 freedom" (Shankara). It is realisation which leads us to that 26 freedom.

27 Q.--Is this spiritual freedom among the people consistent with 28 attention to caste?

29 A.--Certainly not. They say there should be no caste. Even those 30 who are in caste say it is not a very perfect institution. But they say, 31 when you find us another and a better one, we will give it up. They 32 say, what will you give us instead? Where is there no caste? In your 33 nation you are struggling all the time to make a caste. As soon as a 34 man gets a bag of dollars, he says, "I am one of the Four Hundred."
35 We alone have succeeded in making a permanent caste. Other 36 nations are struggling and do not succeed. We have superstitions 37 and evils enough. Would taking the superstitions and evils from 38 your country mend matters? It is owing to caste that three hundred 39 millions of people can find a piece of bread to eat yet. It is an 40 imperfect institution, no doubt. But if it had not been for caste, you 41 would have had no Sanskrit books to study. This caste made walls, 42 around which all sorts of invasions rolled and surged, but found it 43 impossible to break through. That necessity has not gone yet; so 44 caste remains. The caste we have now is not that of seven hundred 45 years ago. Every blow has riveted it. Do you realise that India is the 46 only country that never went outside of itself to conquer? The great 47 emperor Asoka insisted that none of his descendants should go to 48 conquer. If people want to send us teachers, let them help, but not 49 injure. Why should all these people come to conquer the Hindus?
50 Did they do any injury to any nation? What little good they could do, 51 they did for the world. They taught it science, philosophy, religion, 52 and civilised the savage hordes of the earth. And this is the return--

1 only murder and tyranny, and calling them heathen rascals. Look at 2 the books written on India by Western people and at the stories of 3 many travellers who go there; in retaliation for what injuries are 4 these hurled at them?

5 Q.--What is the Vedantic idea of civilisation?

6 A.--You are philosophers, and you do not think that a bag of gold 7 makes the difference between man and man. What is the value of 8 all these machines and sciences? They have only one result: they 9 spread knowledge. You have not solved the problem of want, but 10 only made it keener. Machines do not solve the poverty question; 11 they simply make men struggle the more. Competition gets keener.
12 What value has nature in itself? Why do you go and build a 13 monument to a man who sends electricity through a wire? Does not 14 nature do that millions of times over? Is not everything already 15 existing in nature? What is the value of your getting it? It is already 16 there. The only value is that it makes this development. This 17 universe is simply a gymnasium in which the soul is taking exercise; 18 and after these exercises we become gods. So the value of 19 everything is to be decided by how far it is a manifestation of God.
20 Civilisation is the manifestation of that divinity in man.

21 Q.--Have the Buddhists any caste laws?

22 A.--The Buddhists never had much caste, and there are very few 23 Buddhists in India. Buddha was a social reformer. Yet in Buddhistic 24 countries I find that there have been strong attempts to 25 manufacture caste, only they have failed. The Buddhists' caste is 26 practically nothing, but they take pride in it in their own minds.

27 Buddha was one of the Sannyasins of the Vedanta. He started a new 28 sect, just as others are started even today. The ideas which now are 29 called Buddhism were not his. They were much more ancient. He 30 was a great man who gave the ideas power. The unique element in 31 Buddhism was its social element. Brahmins and Kshatriyas have 32 always been our teachers, and most of the Upanishads were written 33 by Kshatriyas, while the ritualistic portions of the Vedas came from 34 the Brahmins. Most of our great teachers throughout India have 35 been Kshatriyas, and were always universal in their teachings; 36 whilst the Brahmana prophets with two exceptions were very 37 exclusive. Rama, Krishna, and Buddha--worshipped as Incarnations 38 of God--were Kshatriyas.

39 Q.--Are sects, ceremonies, and scriptures helps to realisation?

40 A.--When a man realises, he gives up everything. The various sects 41 and ceremonies and books, so far as they are the means of arriving 42 at that point, are all right. But when they fail in that, we must 43 change them. "The knowing one must not despise the condition of 44 those who are ignorant, nor should the knowing one destroy the 45 faith of the ignorant in their own particular method, but by proper 46 action lead them and show them the path to come to where he 47 stands" (Gita, III.26).

48 Q.--How does the Vedanta explain individuality and ethics?

49 A.--The real individual is the Absolute; this personalisation is 1 through Maya. It is only apparent; in reality it is always the 2 Absolute. In reality there is one, but in Maya it is appearing as 3 many. In Maya there is this variation. Yet even in this Maya there is 4 always the tendency to get back to the One, as expressed in all 5 ethics and all morality of every nation, because it is the 6 constitutional necessity of the soul. It is finding its oneness; and this 7 struggle to find this oneness is what we call ethics and morality.

8 Therefore we must always practise them.

9 Q.--Is not the greater part of ethics taken up with the relation 10 between individuals?

11 A.--That is all it is. The Absolute does not come within Maya.

12 Q.--You say the individual is the Absolute, and I was going to ask you 13 whether the individual has knowledge.

14 A.--The state of manifestation is individuality, and the light in that 15 state is what we call knowledge. To use, therefore, this term 16 knowledge for the light of the Absolute is not precise, as the 17 absolute state transcends relative knowledge.

18 Q.--Does it include it?

19 A.--Yes, in this sense. Just as a piece of gold can be changed into all 20 sorts of coins, so with this. The state can be broken up into all sorts 21 of knowledge. It is the state of superconsciousness, and includes 22 both consciousness and unconsciousness. The man who attains that 23 state has all that we call knowledge. When he wants to realise that 24 consciousness of knowledge, he has to go a step lower. Knowledge 25 is a lower state; it is only in Maya that we can have knowledge.

30 Q.--Did Vedanta exert any influence over Mohammedanism?

31 A.--This Vedantic spirit of religious liberality has very much affected 32 Mohammedanism. Mohammedanism in India is quite a different 33 thing from that in any other country. It is only when Mohammedans 34 come from other countries and preach to their co-religionists in 35 India about living with men who are not of their faith that a 36 Mohammedan mob is aroused and fights.

37 Q.--Does Vedanta recognise caste?

38 A.--The caste system is opposed to the religion of the Vedanta.
39 Caste is a social custom, and all our great preachers have tried to 40 break it down. From Buddhism downwards, every sect has 41 preached against caste, and every time it has only riveted the 42 chains. Caste is simply the outgrowth of the political institutions of 43 India; it is a hereditary trade guild. Trade competition with Europe 44 has broken caste more than any teaching.

45 Q.--What is the peculiarity of the Vedas?

46 A.--One peculiarity of the Vedas is that they are the only scriptures

1 that again and again declare that you must go beyond them. The 2 Vedas say that they were written just for the child mind; and when 3 you have grown, you must go beyond them.

4 Q.--Do you hold the individual soul to be eternally real?

5 A.--The individual soul consists of a man's thoughts, and they are 6 changing every moment. Therefore, it cannot be eternally real. It is 7 real only in the phenomenal. The individual soul consists of memory 8 and thought; how can that be real?

9 Q.--Why did Buddhism as a religion decline in India?

10 A.--Buddhism did not really decline in India; it was only a gigantic 11 social movement. Before Buddha great numbers of animals were 12 killed for sacrifice and other reasons, and people drank wine and 13 ate meat in large quantities. Since Buddha's teaching drunkenness 14 has almost disappeared, and the killing of animals has almost gone.

20 Q.--How can you reconcile your optimistic views with the existence 21 of evil, with the universal prevalence of sorrow and pain?

22 A.--I can only answer the question if the existence of evil be first 23 proved; but this the Vedantic religion does not admit. Eternal pain 24 unmixed with pleasure would be a positive evil; but temporal pain 25 and sorrow, if they have contributed an element of tenderness and 26 nobility tending towards eternal bliss, are not evils: on the contrary, 27 they may be supreme good. We cannot assert that anything is evil 28 until we have traced its sequence into the realm of eternity.

29 Devil worship is not a part of the Hindu religion. The human race is 30 in the process of development; all have not reached the same 31 altitude. Therefore some are nobler and purer in their earthly lives 32 than others. Every one has an opportunity within the limits of the 33 sphere of his present development of making himself better. We 34 cannot unmake ourselves; we cannot destroy or impair the vital 35 force within us, but we have the freedom to give it different 36 directions.

37 Q.--Is not the reality of cosmic matter simply the imagining of our 38 own minds?

39 A.--In my opinion the external world is certainly an entity and has 40 an existence outside of our mental conceptions. All creation is 41 moving onwards and upwards, obedient to the great law of spirit
42 evolution, which is different from the evolution of matter. The latter 43 is symbolical of, but does not explain, the process of the former. We 44 are not individuals now, in our present earthly environment. We 45 shall not have reached individuality until we shall have ascended to 46 the higher state, when the divine spirit within us will have a perfect 47 medium for the expression of its attributes.

1 Q.--What is your explanation of the problem presented to Christ, as 2 to whether it was the infant itself or its parents that had sinned, 3 that it was born blind?

4 A.--While the question of sin does not enter into the problem, I am 5 convinced that the blindness was due to some act on the part of the 6 spirit of the child in a previous incarnation. In my opinion such 7 problems are only explicable on the hypothesis of a prior earthly 8 existence.

9 Q.--Do our spirits pass at death into a state of happiness?

10 A.--Death is only a change of condition: time and space are in you, 11 you are not in time and space. It is enough to know that as we make 12 our lives purer and nobler, either in the seen or the unseen world, 13 the nearer we approach God, who is the centre of all spiritual 14 beauty and eternal joy.

15 Q.--What is the Hindu theory of the transmigration of souls?

16 A.--It is on the same basis as the theory of conservation is to the 17 scientist. This theory was first produced by a philosopher of my 18 country. The ancient sages did not believe in a creation. A creation 19 implies producing something out of nothing. That is impossible.
20 There was no beginning of creation as there was no beginning of 21 time. God and creation are as two lines without end, without 22 beginning, and parallel. Our theory of creation is--"It is, it was, and 23 is to be". All punishment is but reaction. People of the West should 24 learn one thing from India and that is toleration. All the religions 25 are good, since the essentials are the same.

26 Q.--Why are the women of India not much elevated?

27 A.--It is in a great degree owing to the barbarous invaders through 28 different ages; it is partly due to the people of India themselves.

29 When it was pointed out to Swamiji in America that Hinduism is not 30 a proselytising religion, he replied:

31 "I have a message to the West as Buddha had a message to the 32 East."

33 Q.--Do you intend to introduce the practices and rituals of the Hindu 34 religion into this country (America)?

35 A.--I am preaching simply philosophy.

36 Q.--Do you not think if the fear of future hell-fire were taken from 37 man there would be no controlling him?

38 A.--No! On the contrary, I think he is made far better through love 39 and hope than through fear.

43
44 Q.--Whom can we call a Guru?

45 A.--He who can tell your past and future is your Guru.

1 Q.--How can one have Bhakti?

2 A.--There is Bhakti within you, only a veil of lust-and-wealth covers 3 it, and as soon as that is removed Bhakti will manifest by itself.

4 Q.--What is the true meaning of the assertion that we should depend 5 on ourselves?

6 A.--Here self means the eternal Self. But even dependence on the 7 non-eternal self may lead gradually to the right goal, as the 8 individual self is really the eternal Self under delusion.

9 Q.--If unity is the only reality, how could duality which is perceived 10 by all every moment have arisen?

11 A.--Perception is never dual; it is only the representation of 12 perception that involves duality. If perception were dual, the known 13 could have existed independently of the knower, and vice versa.

14 Q.--How is harmonious development of character to be best 15 effected?

16 A.--By association with persons whose character has been so 17 developed.

18 Q.--What should be our attitude to the Vedas?

19 A.--The Vedas, i.e. only those portions of them which agree with 20 reason, are to be accepted as authority. Other Shastras, such as the 21 Puranas etc., are only to be accepted so far as they do not go 22 against the Vedas. All the religious thoughts that have come 23 subsequent to the Vedas, in the world, in whatever part of it, have 24 been derived from the Vedas.

25 Q.--Is the division of time into four Yugas astronomical or arbitrary 26 calculation?

27 A.--There is no mention of such divisions in the Vedas. They are 28 arbitrary assumptions of Pauranika times.

29 Q.--Is the relation between concepts and words necessary and 30 immutable, or accidental and conventional?

31 A.--The point is exceedingly debatable. It seems that there is a 32 necessary relation, but not absolutely so, as appears from the 33 diversity of language. There may be some subtle relation which we 34 are not yet able to detect.

35 Q.--What should be the principle to be followed in working within 36 India?

37 A.--First of all, men should be taught to be practical and physically 38 strong. A dozen of such lions will conquer the world, and not 39 millions of sheep can do so. Secondly, men should not be taught to 40 imitate a personal ideal, however great.

41 Then Swamiji went on to speak of the corruptions of some of the 42 Hindu symbols. He distinguished between the path of knowledge 43 and the path of devotion. The former belonged properly to the 44 Aryas, and therefore was so strict in the selection of Adhikaris 45 (qualified aspirants), and the latter coming from the South, or non-46 Aryan sources, made no such distinction.

1 Q.--What part will the Ramakrishna Mission take in the 2 regenerating work of India?

3 A.--From this Math will go out men of character who will deluge the 4 world with spirituality. This will be followed by revivals in other 5 lines. Thus Brahmins, Kshatriyas, and Vaishyas will be produced.
6 The Shudra caste will exist no longer--their work being done by 7 machinery. The present want of India is the Kshatriya force.

8 Q.--Is retrograde reincarnation from the human stage possible?

9 A.--Yes. Reincarnation depends on Karma. If a man accumulates
10 Karma akin to the beastly nature, he will be drawn thereto.

11 In one of the question-classes (1898) Swamiji traced image-worship 12 to Buddhistic sources. First, there was the Chaitya; second, the 13 Stupa; and then came the temple of Buddha. Along with it arose the 14 temples of the Hindu deities.

15 Q.--Does the Kundalini really exist in the physical body?

16 A.--Shri Ramakrishna used to say that the so-called lotuses of the 17 Yogi do not really exist in the human body, but that they are created 18 within oneself by Yoga powers.

19 Q.--Can a man attain Mukti by image-worship?

20 A.--Image-worship cannot directly give Mukti; it may be an indirect 21 cause, a help on the way. Image-worship should not be condemned, 22 for, with many, it prepares the mind for the realisation of the 23 Advaita which alone makes man perfect.

24 Q.--What should be our highest ideal of character?

25 A.--Renunciation.

26 Q.--How did Buddhism leave the legacy of corruption in India?

27 A.--The Bauddhas tried to make everyone in India a monk or a nun.
28 We cannot expect that from everyone. This led to gradual relaxation 29 among monks and nuns. It was also caused by their imitating 30 Tibetan and other barbarous customs in the name of religion. They 31 went to preach in those places and assimilated their corruptions, 32 and then introduced them into India.

33 Q.--Is Maya without beginning and end?

34 A.--Maya is eternal both ways, taken universally, as genus; but it is 35 non-eternal individually.

36 Q.--Brahman and Maya cannot be cognised simultaneously. How 37 could the absolute reality of either be proved as arising out of the 38 one or the other?

39 A.--It could be proved only by realisation. When one realises 40 Brahman, for him Maya exists no longer, just as once the identity of 41 the rope is found out, the illusion of the serpent comes no more.

42 Q.--What is Maya?

43 A.--There is only one thing, call it by any name--matter, or spirit. It is 44 difficult or rather impossible to think the one independent of the 45 other. This is Maya, or ignorance.

1 Q.--What is Mukti (liberation)?

2 A.--Mukti means entire freedom--freedom from the bondages of 3 good and evil. A golden chain is as much a chain as an iron one.
4 Shri Ramakrishna used to say that, to pick out one thorn which has 5 stuck into the foot, another thorn is requisitioned, and when the 6 thorn is taken out, both are thrown away. So the bad tendencies are 7 to be counteracted by the good ones, but after that, the good 8 tendencies have also to be conquered.

9 Q.--Can salvation (Mukti) be obtained without the grace of God?

10 A.--Salvation has nothing to do with God. Freedom already is.

11 Q.--What is the proof of the self in us not being the product of the 12 body etc.?

13 A.--The "ego" like its correlative "non-ego", is the product of the 14 body, mind etc. The only proof of the existence of the real Self is 15 realisation.

16 Q.--Who is a true Jnani, and who is a true Bhakta?

17 A.--The true Jnani is he who has the deepest love within his heart
18 and at the same time is a practical seer of Advaita in his outward 19 relations. And the true Bhakta (lover) is he who, realising his own 20 soul as identified with the universal Soul, and thus possessed of the 21 true Jnana within, feels for and loves everyone. Of Jnana and Bhakti 22 he who advocates one and denounces the other cannot be either a 23 Jnani or a Bhakta, but he is a thief and a cheat.

24 Q.--Why should a man serve Ishvara?

25 A.--If you once admit that there is such a thing as Ishvara (God), you 26 have numberless occasions to serve Him. Service of the Lord 27 means, according to all the scriptural authorities, remembrance 28 (Smarana). If you believe in the existence of God, you will be 29 reminded of Him at every step of your life.

30 Q.--Is Mayavada different from Advaitavada?

31 A.--No. They are identical. There is absolutely no other explanation 32 of Advaitavada except Mayavada.

33 Q.--How is it possible for God who is infinite to be limited in the 34 form of a man (as an Avatara)?

35 A.--It is true that God is infinite, but not in the sense in which you 36 comprehend it. You have confounded your idea of infinity with the 37 materialistic idea of vastness. When you say that God cannot take 38 the form of a man, you understand that a very, very large substance 39 or form (as if material in nature), cannot be compressed into a very, 40 very small compass. God's infinitude refers to the unlimitedness of 41 a purely spiritual entity, and as such, does not suffer in the least by 42 expressing itself in a human form.

43 Q.--Some say, "First of all become a Siddha (one who has realised 44 the Truth), and then you have the right to Karma, or work for 45 others", while others say that one should work for others even from 46 the beginning. How can both these views be reconciled?

47 A.--You are confusing one thing with the other. Karma means either

1 service to humanity or preaching. To real preaching, no doubt, none
2 has the right except the Siddha Purusha, i.e. one who has realised
3 the Truth. But to service every one has the right, and not only so, 4 but every one is under obligation to serve others, so long as he is 5 accepting service from others.

9 YOGA, VAIRAGYA, TAPASYA, LOVE

10
11 Q.--Does Yoga serve to keep the body in its full health and vitality?

12 A.--It does. It staves off disease. As objectification of one's own body 13 is difficult, it is very effective in regard to others. Fruit and milk are 14 the best food for Yogis.

15 Q.--Is the attainment of bliss synchronous with that of Vairagya?

16 A.--The first step in Vairagya is very painful. When perfected, it 17 yields supreme bliss.

18 Q.--What is Tapasya?

19 A.--Tapasya is threefold--of the body, of speech, and of mind. The 20 first is service of others; the second, truthfulness; and third, control 21 and concentration.

22 Q.--Why do we not see that the same consciousness pervades the 23 ant as well as the perfected sage?

24 A.--Realising the unity of this manifestation is a question of time 25 only.

26 Q.--Is preaching possible without gaining perfection?

27 A.--No. May the Lord grant that all the Sannyasin

1 disciples of my Master and of myself be perfected, so that they may 2 be fit for missionary work!

3 Q.--Is the divine majesty expressed in the Universal Form of Shri 4 Krishna in the Gita superior to the expression of love unattended 5 with other attributes, embodied in the form of Shri Krishna, for 6 instance, in His relation with the Gopis?

7 A.--The feeling of love, unattended with the idea of divinity, in 8 respect to the person loved, is assuredly inferior to the expression 9 of divine majesty. If it were not so, all lovers of the flesh would have 10 obtained freedom.

13 IN ANSWER TO NIVEDITA

14
15 Q.--I cannot remember what parts Prithvi Rai and Chand disguised 16 themselves to play, when they determined to attend the Svayamvara 17 at Kanauj.

18 A.--Both went as minstrels.

19 Q.--Also did Prithvi Rai determine to marry Samyukta partly 20 because she was the daughter of his rival and partly for the fame of 21 her great beauty? Did he then send a woman-servant to obtain the 22 post of her maid? And did this old nurse set herself to make the 23 princess fall in love with Prithvi Rai?

24 A.--They had fallen in love with each other, hearing deeds and 25 beauty and seeing portraits. Falling in love through portraits is an 26 old Indian game.

27 Q.--How did Krishna come to be brought up amongst the 28 shepherds?

29 A.--His father had to flee with the baby to save it from the tyrant 30 Kamsa, who ordered all the babes (male) from that year to be 31 killed, as (through prophecy)

1 he was afraid one of them would be Krishna and dethrone him. He 2 kept Krishna's father and mother in prison (who were his cousins)
3 for fear of that prophecy.

4 Q.--How did this part of his life terminate?

5 A.--He came with his brother Baladeva and Nanda, his foster-father, 6 invited by the tyrant to a festival. (The tyrant had plotted his 7 destruction.) He killed the tyrant and instead of taking the throne 8 placed the nearest heir on it. Himself he never took any fruit of 9 action.

10 Q.--Can you give me any dramatic incident of this period?

11 A.--This period is full of miracles. He as a baby was once naughty 12 and the cowherd-mother tried to tie him with her churning string 13 and found she could not bind him with all the strings she had. Then 14 her eyes opened and she saw that she was going to bind him who 15 had the whole universe in his body. She began to pray and tremble.
16 Immediately the Lord touched her with his Maya and she saw only 17 the child.

18 Brahma, the chief of gods, disbelieving that the Lord had become a 19 cowherd, stole one day all the cows and cowherd boys and put them 20 to sleep in a cave. When he came back, he found the same boys and 21 cows round Krishna. Again he stole the new lot and hid them away.
22 He came back and saw there the same again. Then his eyes opened 23 and began to see numerous worlds and heavens and Brahmas by 24 the thousands, one greater than the preceding, in the body of the 25 Lord.

26 He danced on the serpent Kaliya who had been poisoning the water 27 of the Yamuna, and he held up the mount Govardhana in defiance of 28 Indra whose worship he had forbidden and who in revenge wanted 29 to kill all the people of Vraja by deluge of rain. They were all 30 sheltered by Krishna under the hill Govardhana which he upheld 31 with a finger on their head.

32 He from his childhood was against snake-worship

1 and Indra-worship. Indra-worship is a Vedic ritual. Throughout the 2 Gita he is not favourable to Vedic ritual.

3 This is the period of his love to Gopis. He was eleven years of age.

6 GURU, AVATARA, YOGA, JAPA, SEVA
7

8 Q.--How can Vedanta be realised?

9 A.--By "hearing, reflection, and meditation". Hearing must take 10 place from a Sad-guru. Even if one is not a regular disciple, but is a 11 fit aspirant and hears the Sad-guru's words, he is liberated.

12 Q.--Who is a Sad-guru?

13 A.--A Sad-guru is one on whom the spiritual power has descended 14 by Guru-parampara, or an unbroken chain of discipleship. To play 15 the role of a spiritual teacher is a very difficult thing. One has to 16 take on oneself the sins of others. There is every chance of a fall in 17 less advanced men. If merely physical pain ensues, then he should 18 consider himself fortunate.

19 Q.--Cannot the spiritual teacher make the aspirant fit?

20 A.--An Avatara can. Not an ordinary Guru.

21 Q.--Is there no easy way to liberation?

22 A.--"There is no royal road to Geometry"--except for those who have 23 been fortunate enough to come in contact with an Avatara.
24 Paramahansa Deva used to say, "One who is having his last birth 25 shall somehow or other see me."

26 Q.--Is not Yoga an easy path to that?

27 A.--(Jokingly) You have said well, I see!--Yoga an easy path! If your 28 mind be not pure and you try to follow Yoga, you will perhaps attain 29 some supernatural power, but that will be a hindrance. Therefore 30 purity of mind is the first thing necessary.

31 Q.--How can this be attained?

32 A.--By good work. Good work is of two kinds, positive and negative.
33 "Do not steal"--that is a negative mandate, and "Do good to others"-- 34 is a positive one.

35 Q.--Should not doing good to others be performed in a higher stage, 36 for if performed in a lower stage, it may bind one to the world?

37 A.--It should be performed in the first stage. One who has any 38 desire at first gets deluded and becomes bound, but not others.
39 Gradually it will become very natural.

40 Q.--Sir, last night you said, "In you is everything." Now, if I want to 41 be like Vishnu, shall I have to meditate on the form also, or only on 42 the idea?

43 A.--According to capacity one may follow either way.

44 Q.--What is the means of realisation?

1 A.--The Guru is the means of realisation. "There is no knowledge 2 without a teacher."

3 Q.--Some say that there is no necessity of practising meditation in a 4 worship-room. How far is it true?

5 A.--Those who have already realised the Lord's presence may not 6 require it, but for others it is necessary. One, however, should go 7 beyond the form and meditate on the impersonal aspect of God, for 8 no form can grant liberation. You may get worldly prosperity from 9 the sight of the form. One who ministers to his mother succeeds in 10 this world; one who worships his father goes to heaven; but the 11 worshipper of a Sadhu (holy man) gets knowledge and devotion.

12 Q.--What is the meaning of "{Sanskrit}" etc.--"Even a moment's 13 association with the holy ones serves to take one beyond this 14 relative existence"?

15 A.--A fit person coming in contact with a true Sadhu attains to 16 liberation. True Sadhus are very rare, but their influence is such 17 that a great writer has said, "Hypocrisy is the tribute which vice 18 pays to virtue." But Avatars are Kapalamochanas, that is, they can 19 alter the doom of people. They can stir the whole world. The least 20 dangerous and best form of worship is worshipping man. One who 21 has got the idea of Brahman in a man has realised it in the whole 22 universe. Monasticism and the householder's life are both good, 23 according to different circumstances. Knowledge is the only thing 24 necessary.

25 Q.--Where should one meditate--inside the body or outside it?
26 Should the mind be withdrawn inside or held outside?

27 A.--We should try to meditate inside. As for the mind being here or 28 there, it will take a long time before we reach the mental plane.
29 Now our struggle is with the body. When one acquires a perfect 30 steadiness in posture, then and then alone one begins to struggle 31 with the mind. Asana (posture) being conquered, one's limbs 32 remain motionless, and one can sit as long as one pleases.

33 Q.--Sometimes one gets tired of Japa (repetition of the Mantra).
34 Should one continue it or read some good book instead?

35 A.--One gets tired of Japa for two reasons. Sometimes one's brain is 36 fatigued, sometimes it is the result of idleness. If the former, then 37 one should give up Japa for the time being, for persistence in it at 38 the time results in seeing hallucinations, or in lunacy etc. But if the 39 latter, the mind should be forced to continue Japa.

40 Q.--Sometimes sitting at Japa one gets joy at first, but then one 41 seems to be disinclined to continue the Japa owing to that joy.
42 Should it be continued then?

43 A.--Yes, that joy is a hindrance to spiritual practice, its name being 44 Rasasvadana (tasting of the sweetness). One must rise above that.

45 Q.--Is it good to practise Japa for a long time, though the mind may 46 be wandering?

47 A.--Yes. As some people break a wild horse by always keeping his 48 seat on his back.

1 Q.--You have written in your Bhakti-Yoga that if a weak-bodied man 2 tries to practise Yoga, a tremendous reaction comes. Then what to 3 do?

4 A.--What fear if you die in the attempt to realise the Self! Man is not 5 afraid of dying for the sake of learning and many other things, and 6 why should you fear to die for religion?

7 Q.--Can Jiva-seva (service to beings) alone give Mukti?

8 A.--Jiva-seva can give Mukti not directly but indirectly, through the 9 purification of the mind. But if you wish to do a thing properly, you 10 must, for the time being, think that that is all-sufficient. The danger 11 in any sect is want of zeal. There must be constancy (Nishtha), or 12 there will be no growth. At present it has become necessary to lay 13 stress on Karma.

14 Q.--What should be our motive in work--compassion, or any other 15 motive?

16 A.--Doing good to others out of compassion is good, but the Seva 17 (service) of all beings in the spirit of the Lord is better.

18 Q.--What is the efficacy of prayer?

19 A.--By prayer one's subtle powers are easily roused, and if 20 consciously done, all desires may be fulfilled by it; but done 21 unconsciously, one perhaps in ten is fulfilled. Such prayer, however, 22 is selfish and should therefore be discarded.

23 Q.--How to recognise God when He has assumed a human form?

24 A.--One who can alter the doom of people is the Lord. No Sadhu, 25 however advanced, can claim this unique position. I do not see 26 anyone who realises Ramakrishna as God. We sometimes feel it 27 hazily, that is all. To realise Him as God and yet be attached to the 28 world is inconsistent.

CONVERSATIONS AND DIALOGUES

[Shri Surendra Nath Das Gupta]

One day, with some of my young friends belonging to different colleges, I went to the Belur Math to see Swamiji. We sat round him; talks on various subjects were going on. No sooner was any question put to him than he gave the most conclusive answer to it. Suddenly he exclaimed, pointing to us, "You are all studying different schools of European philosophy and metaphysics and learning new facts about nationalities and countries; can you tell me what is the grandest of all the truths in life?"

We began to think, but could not make out what he wanted us to say. As none put forth any reply, he exclaimed in his inspiring language:

"Look here--we shall all die! Bear this in mind always, and then the spirit within will wake up. Then only, meanness will vanish from you, practicality in work will come, you will get new vigour in mind and body, and those who come in contact with you will also feel that they have really got something uplifting from you."

Then the following conversation took place between him and myself:

Myself: But, Swamiji, will not the spirit break down at the thought of death and the heart be overpowered by despondency?

Swamiji: Quite so. At first, the heart will break down, and despondency and gloomy thoughts will occupy your mind. But persist, let days pass like that--and then? Then you will see that new strength has come into the heart, that the constant thought of death is giving you a new life and is making you more and more thoughtful by bringing every moment before your mind's eye the truth of the saying, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity!" Wait! Let days, months, and years pass, and you will feel that the spirit within is waking up with the strength of a lion, that the little power within has transformed itself into a mighty power! Think of death always, and you will realise the truth of every word I say. What more shall I say in words!

Swamiji: Do not praise me. Praise and censure have no value in this world of ours. They only rock a man as if in a swing. Praise I have had enough of; showers of censure I have also had to bear; but what avails thinking of them! Let everyone go on doing his own duty unconcerned. When the last moment arrives, praise and blame will be the same to you, to me, and to others. We are here to work, and will have to leave all when the call comes.

Myself: How little we are, Swamiji!

Swamiji: True! You have well said! Think of this infinite universe

1 with its millions and millions of solar systems, and think with what 2 an infinite, incomprehensible power they are impelled, running as if 3 to touch the Feet of the One Unknown--and how little we are!
4 Where then is room here to allow ourselves to indulge in vileness
5 and mean-mindedness? What should we gain here by fostering 6 mutual enmity and party-spirit? Take my advice: Set yourselves 7 wholly to the service of others, when you come from your colleges.
8 Believe me, far greater happiness would then be yours than if you 9 had had a whole treasury full of money and other valuables at your 10 command. As you go on your way, serving others, you will advance 11 accordingly in the path of knowledge.

12 Myself: But we are so very poor, Swamiji!

13 Swamiji: Leave aside your thoughts of poverty! In what respect are 14 you poor? Do you feel regret because you have not a coach and pair 15 or a retinue of servants at your beck and call? What of that? You 16 little know how nothing would be impossible for you in life if you 17 labour day and night for others with your heart's blood! And lo and 18 behold! the other side of the hallowed river of life stands revealed 19 before your eyes--the screen of Death has vanished, and you are the 20 inheritors of the wondrous realm of immortality!

21 Myself: Oh, how we enjoy sitting before you, Swamiji, and hearing 22 your life-giving words!

23 Swamiji: You see, in my travels throughout India all these years, I 24 have come across many a great soul, many a heart overflowing with 25 loving kindness, sitting at whose feet I used to feel a mighty current 26 of strength coursing into my heart, and the few words I speak to 27 you are only through the force of that current gained by coming in 28 contact with them! Do not think I am myself something great!

29 Myself: But we look upon you, Swamiji, as one who has realised
30 God!

31 No sooner did I say these words than those fascinating eyes of his 32 were filled with tears (Oh, how vividly I see that scene before my 33 eyes even now), and he with a heart overflowing with love, softly 34 and gently spoke: "At those Blessed Feet is the perfection of 35 Knowledge sought by the Jnanis! At those Blessed Feet also is the 36 fulfilment of Love sought by the Lovers! Oh, say, where else will 37 men and women go for refuge but to those Blessed Feet!"

38 After a while he again said, "Alas! what folly for men in this world 39 to spend their days fighting and quarrelling with one another as 40 they do! But how long can they go on in that way? In the evening of 41 life⁹¹ they must all come home, to the arms of the Mother."

1 ⁹¹ ?At the end of one's whole course of transmigratory existence.
2

[Shri Surendra Nath Sen--from private diary]

Saturday, the 22nd January, 1898.

Early in the morning I came to Swamiji who was then staying in the house of Balaram Babu at 57 Ramkanta Bose Street, Calcutta. The room was packed full with listeners. Swamiji was saying, "We want Shraddha, we want faith in our own selves. Strength is life, weakness is death. 'We are the Atman, deathless and free; pure, pure by nature. Can we ever commit any sin? Impossible!'--such a faith is needed. Such a faith makes men of us, makes gods of us. It is by losing this idea of Shraddha that the country has gone to ruin."

Question: How did we come to lose this Shraddha?

Swamiji: We have had a negative education all along from our boyhood. We have only learnt that we are nobodies. Seldom are we given to understand that great men were ever born in our country. Nothing positive has been taught to us. We do not even know how to use our hands and feet! We master all the facts and figures concerning the ancestors of the English, but we are sadly unmindful about our own. We have learnt only weakness. Being a conquered race, we have brought ourselves to believe that we are weak and have no independence in anything. So, how can it be but that the Shraddha is lost? The idea of true Shraddha must be brought back once more to us, the faith in our own selves must be reawakened, and, then only, all the problems which face our country will gradually be solved by ourselves.

1 Q. How can that ever be? How will Shraddha alone remedy the 2 innumerable evils with which our society is beset? Besides, there 3 are so many crying evils in the country, to remove which the Indian 4 National Congress and other patriotic associations are carrying on 5 a strenuous agitation and petitioning the British government. How 6 better can their wants be made known? What has Shraddha to do 7 with the matter?

8 Swamiji: Tell me, whose wants are those--yours or the ruler's? If 9 yours, will the ruler supply them for you, or will you have to do that 10 for yourselves?

11 Q. But it is the ruler's duty to see to the wants of the subject people.
12 Whom should we look up to for everything, if not to the king?

13 Swamiji: Never are the wants of a beggar fulfilled. Suppose the 14 government gives you all you need, where are the men who are 15 able to keep up the things demanded? So make men first. Men we 16 want, and how can men be made unless Shraddha is there?

17 Q. But such is not the view of the majority, sir.

18 Swamiji: What you call majority is mainly composed of fools and 19 men of common intellect. Men who have brains to think for 20 themselves are few, everywhere. These few men with brains are the 21 real leaders in everything and in every department of work; the 22 majority are guided by them as with a string, and that is good, for 23 everything goes all right when they follow in the footsteps of these 24 leaders. Those are only fools who think themselves too high to bend 25 their heads to anyone, and they bring on their own ruin by acting on 26 their own judgment. You talk of social reform? But what do you do?
27 All that you mean by your social reform is either widow remarriage, 28 or female emancipation, or something of that sort. Do you not? And 29 these again are directed within the confines of a few of the castes 30 only. Such a scheme of reform may do good to a few no doubt, but 31 of what

1 avail is that to the whole nation? Is that reform or only a form of 2 selfishness--somehow to cleanse your own room and keep it tidy
3 and let others go from bad to worse!

4 Q. Then, you mean to say that there is no need of social reform at 5 all?

6 Swamiji: Who says so? Of course there is need of it. Most of what 7 you talk of as social reform does not touch the poor masses; they 8 have already those things--the widow remarriage, female 9 emancipation, etc.--which you cry for. For this reason they will not 10 think of those things as reforms at all. What I mean to say is that 11 want of Shraddha has brought in all the evils among us, and is 12 bringing in more and more. My method of treatment is to take out 13 by the roots the very causes of the disease and not to keep them 14 merely suppressed. Reforms we should have in many ways; who 15 will be so foolish as to deny it? There is, for example, a good reason 16 for inter-marriage in India, in the absence of which the race is 17 becoming physically weaker day by day.

18 Since it was a day of a solar eclipse, the gentleman who was asking 19 these questions saluted Swamiji and left saying, "I must go now for 20 a bath in the Ganga. I shall, however, come another day."

III

24 [Shri Surendra Nath Sen--from private diary]

25 Sunday, the 23rd January, 1898.

27 It was evening and the occasion of the weekly meeting of the 28 Ramakrishna Mission, at the house of Balaram Babu of Baghbazar.
29 Swami Turiyananda, Swami Yogananda, Swami Premananda, and 30 others had come from the Math. Swamiji was seated in the 31 verandah to the east, which was now full of people, as were the 32 northern and the southern sections of the verandah. But such used 33 to be the case every day when Swamiji stayed in Calcutta.

34 Many of the people who came to the meeting had heard that 35 Swamiji could sing well, and so were desirous of hearing him.
36 Knowing this, Master Mahashaya (M.) whispered to a few 37 gentlemen near him to request Swamiji to sing; but he saw through 38 their intention and playfully asked, "Master Mahashaya, what are 39 you talking about among yourselves in whispers? Do speak out." At 40 the request of Master Mahashaya, Swamiji now began in his 41 charming voice the song--"Keep with loving care the darling Mother 42 Shyama in thy heart. . . ." It seemed as if a Vina was playing. At its 43 close, he said to Master Mahashaya, "Well, are you now satisfied?
44 But no more singing! Otherwise, being in the swing of it, I shall be 45 carried away by its intoxication. Moreover, my voice is now spoilt by 46 frequent lecturing in the West. My voice trembles a great deal. . . ."

47 Swamiji then asked one of his Brahmacharin disciples to 48 speak on the real nature of Mukti. So, the Brahmacharin stood up

1 and spoke at some length. A few others followed him. Swamiji then 2 invited discussion on the subject of the discourse, and called upon 3 one of his householder disciples to lead it; but as the latter tried to 4 advocate the Advaita and Jnana and assign a lower place to dualism
5 and Bhakti, he met with a protest from one of the audience. As each 6 of the two opponents tried to establish his own view-point, a lively 7 word-fight ensued. Swamiji watched them for a while but, seeing 8 that they were getting excited, silenced them with the following 9 words:

10 Why do you get excited in argument and spoil everything?
11 Listen! Shri Ramakrishna used to say that pure knowledge and 12 pure Bhakti are one and the same. According to the doctrine of 13 Bhakti, God is held to be "All-Love". One cannot even say, "I love 14 Him", for the reason that He is All-Love. There is no love outside of 15 Himself; the love that is in the heart with which you love Him is 16 even He Himself. In a similar way, whatever attractions or 17 inclinations one feels drawn by, are all He Himself. The thief steals, 18 the harlot sells her body to prostitution, the mother loves her child-- 19 in each of these too is He! One world system attracts another--there 20 also is He. Everywhere is He. According to the doctrine of Jnana 21 also, He is realised by one everywhere. Here lies the reconciliation 22 of Jnana and Bhakti. When one is immersed in the highest ecstasy 23 of divine vision (Bhava), or is in the state of Samadhi, then alone 24 the idea of duality ceases, and the distinction between the devotee
25 and his God vanishes. In the scriptures on Bhakti, five different 26 paths of relationship are mentioned, by any of which one can attain 27 to God; but another one can very well be added to them, viz. the 28 path of meditation on the non-separateness, or oneness with God.
29 Thus the Bhakta can call the Advaitins Bhaktas as well, but of the 30 non-differentiating type. As long as one is within the region of 31 Maya, so long the idea of duality will no doubt remain. Space-time-32 causation, or name-and-form, is what is called Maya. When one 33 goes beyond this Maya, then only the Oneness is realised, and then 34 man is neither a dualist nor an Advaitist--to him all is One. All this 35 difference that you notice between a Bhakta and a Jnani is in the 36 preparatory stage--one sees God outside, and the other sees Him
37 within. But there is another point: Shri Ramakrishna used to say 38 that there is another stage of Bhakti which is called the Supreme 39 Devotion (Parabhakti), i.e. to love Him after becoming established 40 in the consciousness of Advaita and after having attained Mukti. It 41 may seem paradoxical, and the question may be raised here why 42 such a one who has already attained Mukti should be desirous of 43 retaining the spirit of Bhakti? The answer is: The Mukta or the Free 44 is beyond all law; no law applies in his case, and hence no question 45 can be asked regarding him. Even becoming Mukta, some, out of 46 their own free will, retain Bhakti to taste of its sweetness.

47 Q. God may be in the love of the mother for her child; but, sir, this 48 idea is really perplexing that God is even in the thieves and the 49 harlots in the form of their natural inclinations to sin! It follows 50 then that God is as responsible for the sin as for all the virtue in this 51 world.

52 Swamiji: That consciousness comes in a stage of highest realisation,

1 when one sees that whatever is of the nature of love or attraction is 2 God. But one has to reach that state to see and realise that idea for 3 oneself in actual life.

4 Q. But still one has to admit that God is also in the sin!

5 Swamiji: You see, there are, in reality, no such different things as 6 good and evil. They are mere conventional terms. The same thing 7 we call bad, and again another time we call good, according to the 8 way we make use of it. Take for example this lamplight; because of 9 its burning, we are able to see and do various works of utility; this 10 is one mode of using the light. Again, if you put your fingers in it, 11 they will be burnt; that is another mode of using the same light. So 12 we should know that a thing becomes good or bad according to the 13 way we use it. Similarly with virtue and vice. Broadly speaking, the 14 proper use of any of the faculties of our mind and body is termed 15 virtue, and its improper application or waste is called vice.

16 Thus questions after questions were put and answered.
17 Someone remarked, "The theory that God is even there, where one 18 heavenly body attracts another, may or may not be true as a fact, 19 but there is no denying the exquisite poetry the idea conveys."

20 Swamiji: No, my dear sir, that is not poetry. One can see for oneself 21 its truth when one attains knowledge.

22 From what Swamiji further said on this point, I understood 23 him to mean that matter and spirit, though to all appearances they 24 seem to be two distinct things, are really two different forms of one 25 substance; and similarly, all the different forces that are known to 26 us, whether in the material or in the internal world, are but varying 27 forms of the manifestation of one Force. We call a thing matter, 28 where that spirit force is manifested less; and living, where it shows 29 itself more; but there is nothing which is absolutely matter at all 30 times and in all conditions. The same Force which presents itself in 31 the material world as attraction or gravitation is felt in its finer and 32 subtler state as love and the like in the higher spiritual stages of 33 realisation.

34 Q. Why should there be even this difference relating to individual 35 use? Why should there be at all this tendency in man to make bad 36 or improper use of any of his faculties?

37 Swamiji: That tendency comes as a result of one's own past actions
38 (Karma); everything one has is of his own doing. Hence it follows 39 that it is solely in the hands of every individual to control his 40 tendencies and to guide them properly.

41 Q. Even if everything is the result of our Karma, still it must have 42 had a beginning, and why should our tendencies have been good or 43 bad at the beginning?

44 Swamiji: How do you know that there is a beginning? The Srishti 45 (creation) is without beginning--this is the doctrine of the Vedas. So 46 long as there is God, there is creation as well.

47 Q. Well, sir, why is this Maya here, and whence has it come?

48 Swamiji: It is a mistake to ask "why" with respect to God; we can 49 only do so regarding one who has wants or imperfections. How can

1 there be any "why" concerning Him who has no wants and who is 2 the One Whole? No such question as "Whence has Maya come?"
3 can be asked. Time-space-causation is what is called Maya. You, I, 4 and everyone else are within this Maya; and you are asking about 5 what is beyond Maya! How can you do so while living within Maya?

6 Again many questions followed. The conversation turned on 7 the philosophies of Mill, Hamilton, Herbert Spencer, etc., and 8 Swamiji dwelt on them to the satisfaction of all. Everyone wondered 9 at the vastness of his Western philosophical scholarship and the 10 promptness of his replies.

11 The meeting dispersed after a short conversation on 12 miscellaneous subjects.

13 14 IV 15

16 [Shri Surendra Nath Sen--from private diary]

17 Monday, the 24th January, 1898.
18

19 The same gentleman who was asking questions of Swamiji on 20 Saturday last came again. He raised again the topic of 21 intermarriage and enquired, "How should intermarriage be 22 introduced between different nationalities?"

23 Swamiji: I do not advise our intermarriage with nations professing 24 an alien religion. At least for the present, that will, of a certainty, 25 slacken the ties of society and be a cause of manifold mischief. It is 26 the intermarriage between people of the same religion that I 27 advocate.

28 Q. Even then, it will involve much perplexity. Suppose I have a 29 daughter who is born and brought up in Bengal, and I marry her to 30 a Marathi or a Madrasi. Neither will the girl understand her 31 husband's language nor the husband the girl's. Again, the 32 difference in their individual habits and customs is so great. Such 33 are a few of the troubles in the case of the married couple. Then as 34 regards society, it will make confusion worse confounded.

35 Swamiji: The time is yet very long in coming when marriages of that 36 kind will be widely possible. Besides, it is not judicious now to go in 37 for that all of a sudden. One of the secrets of work is to go along the 38 line of least resistance. So, first of all, let there be marriages within 39 the sphere of one's own caste-people. Take for instance, the 40 Kayasthas of Bengal. They have several subdivisions amongst them, 41 such as, the Uttar-rarhi, Dakshin-rarhi, Bangaja, etc., and they do 42 not intermarry with each other. Now, let there be intermarriages 43 between the Uttar-rarhis and the Dakshin-rarhis, and if that is not 44 possible at present, let it be between the Bangajas and the Dakshin-45 rarhis. Thus we are to build up that which is already existing, and 46 which is in our hands to reduce into practice--reform does not mean 47 wholesale breaking down.

48 Q. Very well, let it be as you say: but what corresponding good can 1 come of it?

2 Swamiji: Don't you see how in our society, marriage, being 3 restricted for several hundreds of years within the same 4 subdivisions of each caste, has come to such a pass nowadays as 5 virtually to mean marital alliance between cousins and near 6 relations; and how for this very reason the race is getting 7 deteriorated physically, and consequently all sorts of disease and 8 other evils are finding a ready entrance into it? The blood having 9 had to circulate within the narrow circle of a limited number of 10 individuals has become vitiated; so the new-born children inherit 11 from their very birth the constitutional diseases of their fathers.
12 Thus, born with poor blood, their bodies have very little power to 13 resist the microbes of any disease, which are ever ready to prey 14 upon them. It is only by widening the circle of marriage that we can 15 infuse a new and a different kind of blood into our progeny, so that 16 they may be saved from the clutches of many of our present-day 17 diseases and other consequent evils.

18 Q. May I ask you, sir, what is your opinion about early marriage?

19 Swamiji: Amongst the educated classes in Bengal, the custom of 20 marrying their boys too early is dying out gradually. The girls are 21 also given in marriage a year or two older than before, but that has 22 been under compulsion--from pecuniary want. Whatever might be 23 the reason for it, the age of marrying girls should be raised still 24 higher. But what will the poor father do? As soon as the girl grows 25 up a little, every one of the female sex, beginning with the mother 26 down to the relatives and neighbours even, will begin to cry out 27 that he must find a bridegroom for her, and will not leave him in 28 peace until he does so! And, about your religious hypocrites, the 29 less said the better. In these days no one hears them, but still they 30 will take up the role of leaders themselves. The rulers passed the 31 Age of Consent Bill prohibiting a man under the threat of penalty to 32 live with a girl of twelve years, and at once all these so-called 33 leaders of your religion raised a tremendous hue and cry against it, 34 sounding the alarm, "Alas, our religion is lost!" As if religion 35 consisted in making a girl a mother at the age of twelve or thirteen!
36 So the rulers also naturally think, "Goodness gracious! What a 37 religion is theirs! And these people lead political agitations and 38 demand political rights!"

39 Q. Then, in your opinion, both men and women should be married at 40 an advanced age?

41 Swamiji: Certainly. But education should be imparted along with it, 42 otherwise irregularity and corruption will ensue. By education I do 43 not mean the present system, but something in the line of positive 44 teaching. Mere book-learning won't do. We want that education by 45 which character is formed, strength of mind is increased, the 46 intellect is expanded, and by which one can stand on one's own 47 feet.

48 Q. We have to reform our women in many ways.

49 Swamiji: With such an education women will solve their own
50 problems. They have all the time been trained in helplessness,

1 servile dependence on others, and so they are good only to weep
2 their eyes out at the slightest approach of a mishap or danger.
3 Along with other things they should acquire the spirit of valour and 4 heroism. In the present day it has become necessary for them also 5 to learn self-defence. See how grand was the Queen of Jhansi!

6 Q. What you advise is quite a new departure, and it will, I am afraid, 7 take a very long time yet to train our women in that way.

8 Swamiji: Anyhow, we have to try our best. We have not only to teach 9 them but to teach ourselves also. Mere begetting children does not 10 make a father; a great many responsibilities have to be taken upon 11 one's shoulders as well. To make a beginning in women's education:
12 our Hindu women easily understand what chastity means, because 13 it is their heritage. Now, first of all, intensify that ideal within them 14 above everything else, so that they may develop a strong character 15 by the force of which, in every stage of their life, whether married, 16 or single if they prefer to remain so, they will not be in the least 17 afraid even to give up their lives rather than flinch an inch from 18 their chastity. Is it little heroism to be able to sacrifice one's life for 19 the sake of one's ideal, whatever that ideal may be? Studying the 20 present needs of the age, it seems imperative to train some women 21 up in the ideal of renunciation, so that they will take up the vow of 22 lifelong virginity, fired with the strength of that virtue of chastity 23 which is innate in their life-blood from hoary antiquity. Along with 24 that they should be taught sciences and other things which would 25 be of benefit, not only to them but to others as well, and knowing 26 this they would easily learn these things and feel pleasure in doing 27 so. Our motherland requires for her well-being some of her children 28 to become such pure-souled Brahmacharins and Brahmacharinis.

29 Q. In what way will that conduce to her well-being?

30 Swamiji: By their example and through their endeavours to hold the 31 national ideal before the eyes of the people, a revolution in 32 thoughts and aspirations will take place. How do matters stand 33 now? Somehow, the parents must dispose of a girl in marriage, if 34 she be nine or ten years of age! And what a rejoicing of the whole 35 family if a child is born to her at the age of thirteen! If the trend of 36 such ideas is reversed, then only there is some hope for the ancient 37 Shraddha to return. And what to talk of those who will practise 38 Brahmacharya as defined above--think how much faith in 39 themselves will be theirs! And what a power for good they will be!

40 The questioner now saluted Swamiji and was ready to take 41 leave. Swamiji asked him to come now and then. "Certainly, sir," 42 replied the gentleman, "I feel so much benefited. I have heard from 43 you many new things, which I have not been told anywhere before."
44 I also went home as it was about time for dinner.

In the afternoon I came again to Swamiji and saw quite a good gathering round him. The topic was the Madhura-Bhava or the way of worshipping God as husband, as in vogue with some followers of Shri Chaitanya. His occasional bons mots were raising laughter, when someone remarked, "What is there to make so much fun of about the Lord's doings? Do you think that he was not a great saint, and that he did not do everything for the good of humanity?"

Swamiji: Who is that? Should I poke fun at you then, my dear sir! You only see the fun of it, do you? And you, sir, do not see the lifelong struggle through which I have passed to mould this life after his burning ideal of renunciation of wealth and lust, and my endeavours to infuse that ideal into the people at large! Shri Chaitanya was a man of tremendous renunciation and had nothing to do with woman and carnal appetites. But, in later times, his disciples admitted women into their order, mixed indiscriminately with them in his name, and made an awful mess of the whole thing. And the ideal of love which the Lord exemplified in his life was perfectly selfless and bereft of any vestige of lust; that sexless love can never be the property of the masses. But the subsequent Vaishnava Gurus, instead of laying particular stress first on the aspect of renunciation in the Master's life, bestowed all their zeal on preaching and infusing his ideal of love among the masses, and the consequence was that the common people could not grasp and assimilate that high ideal of divine love, and naturally made of it the worst form of love between man and woman.

27

29

Q. But, sir, he preached the name of the Lord Hari to all, even to the Chandalas; so why should not the common masses have a right to it?

30

32

Swamiji: I am talking not of his preaching, but of his great ideal of love--the Radha-prema,⁹² with which he used to remain intoxicated day and night, losing his individuality in Radha.

33

Q. Why may not that be made the common property of all?

34

36

37

38

39

40

41

42

44

Swamiji: Look at this nation and see what has been the outcome of such an attempt. Through the preaching of that love broadcast, the whole nation has become effeminate--a race of women! The whole of Orissa has been turned into a land of cowards; and Bengal, running after the Radha-prema, these past four hundred years, has almost lost all sense of manliness! The people are very good only at crying and weeping; that has become their national trait. Look at their literature, the sure index of a nation's thoughts and ideas. Why, the refrain of the Bengali literature for these four hundred years is strung to that same tune of moaning and crying. It has failed to give birth to any poetry which breathes a true heroic spirit!

45

Q. Who are then truly entitled to possess that Prema (love)?

46

47

Swamiji: There can be no love so long as there is lust--even a speck of it, as it were, in the heart. None but men of great renunciation,

1

⁹² ?The divine love which Radha had towards Shri Krishna.

1 none but mighty giants among men, have a right to that Love
2 Divine. If that highest ideal of love is held out to the masses, it will 3 indirectly tend to stimulate its worldly prototype which dominates 4 the heart of man--for, meditating on love to God by thinking of 5 oneself as His wife or beloved, one would very likely be thinking 6 most of the time of one's own wife--the result is too obvious to point 7 out.

8 Q. Then is it impossible for householders to realise God through 9 that path of love, worshipping God as one's husband or lover and 10 considering oneself as His spouse?

11 Swamiji: With a few exceptions; for ordinary householders it is 12 impossible no doubt. And why lay so much stress on this delicate 13 path, above all others? Are there no other relationships by which to 14 worship God, except this Madhura idea of love? Why not follow the 15 four other paths, and take the name of the Lord with all your heart?
16 Let the heart be opened first, and all else will follow of itself. But 17 know this for certain, that Prema cannot come while there is lust.
18 Why not try first to get rid of carnal desires? You will say, "How is 19 that possible? I am a householder." Nonsense! Because one is a 20 householder, does it mean that one should be a personification of 21 incontinence, or that one has to live in marital relations all one's 22 life? And, after all, how unbecoming of a man to make of himself a 23 woman, so that he may practise this Madhura love!

24 Q. True, sir. Singing God's name in a party (Namakirtana) is an 25 excellent help and gives one a joyous feeling. So say our scriptures, 26 and so did Shri Chaitanya Deva also preach to the masses. When 27 the Khole (drum) is played upon, it makes the heart leap with such 28 a transport that one feels inclined to dance.

29 Swamiji: That is all right, but don't think that Kirtana means 30 dancing only. It means singing the glories of God, in whatever way 31 that suits you. That vehement stirring up of feeling and that 32 dancing of the Vaishnavas are good and very catching no doubt; but 33 there is also a danger in practising them, from which you must save 34 yourself. The danger lies here--in the reaction. On the one hand, the 35 feelings are at once roused to the highest pitch, tears flow from the 36 eyes, the head reels as it were under intoxication--on the other 37 hand, as soon as the Sankirtan stops, that mass of feeling sinks 38 down as precipitately as it rose. The higher the wave rises on the 39 ocean, the lower it falls, with equal force. It is very difficult at that 40 stage to contain oneself against the shock of reaction; unless one 41 has proper discrimination, one is likely to succumb to the lower 42 propensities of lust etc. I have noticed the same thing in America 43 also. Many would go to church, pray with much devotion, sing with 44 great feeling, and even burst into tears when hearing the sermons; 45 but after coming out of church, they would have a great reaction 46 and succumb to carnal tendencies.

47 Q. Then, sir, do instruct us which of the ideas preached by Shri 48 Chaitanya we should take up as well suited to us, so that we may 49 not fall into errors.

50 Swamiji: Worship God with Bhakti tempered with Jnana. Keep the 51 spirit of discrimination along with Bhakti. Besides this, gather from 1 Shri Chaitanya, his heart, his loving kindness to all beings, his 2 burning passion for God, and make his renunciation the ideal of 3 your life.

4 The questioner now addressed the Swamiji with folded hands, "I 5 beg your pardon, sir. Now I come to see you are right. Seeing you
6 criticise in a playful mood the Madhura love of the Vaishnavas, I 7 could not at first understand the drift of your remarks; hence I took 8 exception to them."

9 Swamiji: Well, look here, if we are to criticise at all, it is better to 10 criticise God or God-men. If you abuse me I shall very likely get 11 angry with you, and if I abuse you, you will try to retaliate. Isn't it 12 so? But God or God-men will never return evil for evil.

13 The gentleman now left, after bowing down at the feet of 14 Swamiji. I have already said that such a gathering was an everyday 15 occurrence when Swamiji used to stay in Calcutta. From early in 16 the morning till eight or nine at night, men would flock to him at 17 every hour of the day. This naturally occasioned much irregularity 18 in the time of his taking his meals; so, many desiring to put a stop 19 to this state of things, strongly advised Swamiji not to receive 20 visitors except at appointed hours. But the loving heart of Swamiji, 21 ever ready to go to any length to help others, was so melted with 22 compassion at the sight of such a thirst for religion in the people, 23 that in spite of ill health, he did not comply with any request of the 24 kind. His only reply was, "They take so much trouble to come 25 walking all the way from their homes, and can I, for the 26 consideration of risking my health a little, sit here and not speak a 27 few words to them?"

28 At about 4 p.m. the general conversation came to a close, and 29 the gathering dispersed, except for a few gentlemen with whom 30 Swamiji continued his talk on different subjects, such as England 31 and America, and so on. In the course of conversation he said:

32 "I had a curious dream on my return voyage from England.
33 While our ship was passing through the Mediterranean Sea, in my 34 sleep, a very old and venerable-looking person, Rishi-like in 35 appearance, stood before me and said, 'Do ye come and effect our 36 restoration. I am one of that ancient order of Theraputtas 37 (Theraputae) which had its origin in the teachings of the Indian 38 rishis. The truths and ideals preached by us have been given out by 39 Christians as taught by Jesus; but for the matter of that, there was 40 no such personality by the name of Jesus ever born. Various 41 evidences testifying to this fact will be brought to light by 42 excavating here.' 'By excavating which place can those proofs and 43 relics you speak of be found?' I asked. The hoary-headed one,
44 pointing to a locality in the vicinity of Turkey, said, 'See here.'
45 Immediately after, I woke up, and at once rushed to the upper deck 46 and asked the Captain, 'What neighbourhood is the ship in just 47 now?' 'Look yonder', the Captain replied, 'there is Turkey and the 48 Island of Crete.'"

49 Was it but a dream, or is there anything in the above vision?
50 Who knows!

[Shri Priya Nath Sinha]

Our house was very close to Swamiji's, and since we were boys of the same section of the town, I often used to play with him. From my boyhood I had a special attraction for him, and I had a sincere belief that he would become a great man. When he became a Sannyasin we thought that the promise of a brilliant career for such a man was all in vain.

Afterwards, when he went to America, I read in newspaper reports of his lectures at the Chicago Parliament of Religions and others delivered in various places of America, and I thought that fire can never remain hidden under a cloth; the fire that was within Swamiji had now burst into a flame; the bud after so many years had blossomed.

After a time I came to know that he had returned to India, and had been delivering fiery lectures at Madras. I read them and wondered that such sublime truths existed in the Hindu religion and that they could be explained so lucidly. What an extraordinary power he had! Was he a man or a god?

A great enthusiasm prevailed when Swamiji came to Calcutta, and we followed him to the Sil's garden-house, on the Ganga, at Cossipore. A few days later, at the residence of Raja Radhakanta Dev, the "Calcutta boy" delivered an inspiring lecture to a huge concourse of people in reply to an address of welcome, and Calcutta heard him for the first time and was lost in admiration. But these are facts known to all.

After his coming to Calcutta, I was very anxious to see him once alone and be able to talk freely with him as in our boyhood. But there was always a gathering of eager inquirers about him, and conversations were going on without a break; so I did not get an opportunity for some time, until one day when we went out for a walk in the garden on the Ganga side. He at once began to talk, as of old, to me, the playmate of his boyhood. No sooner had a few words passed between us than repeated calls came, informing him that many gentlemen had come to see him. He became a little impatient at last and told the messenger, "Give me a little respite, my son; let me speak a few words with this companion of my boyhood; let me stay in the open air for a while. Go and give a welcome to those who have come, ask them to sit down, offer them tobacco, and request them to wait a little."

When we were alone again, I asked him, "Well, Swamiji, you are a Sadhu (holy man). Money was raised by subscription for your reception here, and I thought, in view of the famine in this country, that you would wire, before arriving in Calcutta, saying, 'Don't spend a single pice on my reception, rather contribute the whole

1 sum to the famine relief fund'; but I found that you did nothing of 2 the kind. How was that?"

3 Swamiji: Why, I wished rather that a great enthusiasm should 4 be stirred up. Don't you see, without some such thing how would 5 the people be drawn towards Shri Ramakrishna and be fired in his 6 name? Was this ovation done for me personally, or was not his name 7 glorified by this? See how much thirst has been created in the 8 minds of men to know about him! Now they will come to know of 9 him gradually, and will not that be conducive to the good of the 10 country? If the people do not know him who came for the welfare of 11 the country, how can good befall them? When they know what he 12 really was, then men-real men-will be made; and when there will 13 be such men, how long will it take to drive away famines etc. from 14 the land? So I say that I rather desired that there should be some 15 bustle and stir in Calcutta, so that the public might be inclined to 16 believe in the mission of Shri Ramakrishna; otherwise what was the 17 use of making so much fuss for my sake? What do I care for it?
18 Have I become any greater now than when I used to play with you 19 at your house? I am the same now as I was before. Tell me, do you 20 find any change in me?

21 Though I said, "No, I do not find much change to speak of", 22 yet in my mind I thought, "You have now, indeed, become a god."

23 Swamiji continued: "Famine has come to be a constant 24 quantity in our country, and now it is, as it were, a sort of blight 25 upon us. Do you find in any other country such frequent ravages of 26 famine? No, because there are men in other countries, while in 27 ours, men have become akin to dead matter, quite inert. Let the 28 people first learn to renounce their selfish nature by studying Shri 29 Ramakrishna, by knowing him as he really was, and then will 30 proceed from them real efforts trying to stop the frequently 31 recurring famines. By and by I shall make efforts in that direction 32 too; you will see."

33 Myself: That will be good. Then you are going to deliver many 34 lectures here, I presume; otherwise, how will his name be 35 preached?

36 Swamiji: What nonsense! Nothing of the kind! Has anything 37 been left undone by which his name can be known? Enough has 38 been done in that line. Lectures won't do any good in this country.
39 Our educated countrymen would hear them and, at best, would 40 cheer and clap their hands, saying, "Well done"; that is all. Then 41 they would go home and digest, as we say everything they had 42 heard, with their meal! What good will hammering do on a piece of 43 rusty old iron? It will only crumble into pieces. First, it should be 44 made red-hot, and then it can be moulded into any shape by 45 hammering. Nothing will avail in our country without setting a 46 glowing and living example before the people. What we want are 47 some young men who will renounce everything and sacrifice their 48 lives for the country's sake. We should first form their lives and then 49 some real work can be expected.

50 Myself: Well, Swamiji, it has always puzzled me that, while 51 men of our country, unable to understand their own religion, were

1 embracing alien religions, such as Christianity, Mohammedanism,
2 etc., you, instead of doing anything for them, went over to England
3 and America to preach Hinduism.

4 Swamiji: Don't you see that circumstances have changed
5 now? Have the men of our country the power left in them to take up 6 and practise true religion? What they have is only pride in 7 themselves that they are very Sattvika. Time was when they were 8 Sattvika, no doubt, but now they have fallen very low. The fall from 9 Sattva brings one down headlong into Tamas! That is what has 10 happened to them. Do you think that a man who does not exert 11 himself at all, who only takes the name of Hari, shutting himself up 12 in a room, who remains quiet and indifferent even when seeing a 13 huge amount of wrong and violence done to others before his very 14 eyes, possesses the quality of Sattva? Nothing of the kind, he is only 15 enshrouded in dark Tamas. How can the people of a country 16 practise religion who do not get even sufficient food to appease
17 their hunger? How can renunciation come to the people of a 18 country in whose minds the desires for Bhoga (enjoyment) have not 19 been in the least satisfied? For this reason, find out, first of all, the 20 ways and means by which men may get enough to eat and have 21 enough luxuries to enable them to enjoy life a little; and then 22 gradually, true Vairagya (dispassion) will come, and they will be fit 23 and ready to realise religion in life. The people of England and 24 America, how full of Rajas they are! They have become satiated
25 with all sorts of worldly enjoyment. Moreover, Christianity, being a 26 religion of faith and superstition, occupies the same rank as our 27 religion of the Puranas. With the spread of education and culture, 28 the people of the West can no more find peace in that. Their present 29 condition is such that, giving them one lift will make them reach the 30 Sattva. Then again, in these days, would you accept the words of a 31 Sannyasin clad in rags, in the same degree as you would the words 32 of a white-face (Westerner) who might come and speak to you on 33 your own religion?

34 Myself: Just so, Swamiji! Mr. N. N. Ghosh also speaks exactly 35 to the same effect.

36 Swamiji: Yes, when my Western disciples after acquiring 37 proper training and illumination will come in numbers here and ask 38 you, "What are you all doing? Why are you of so little faith? How 39 are your rites and religion, manners, customs, and morals in any 40 way inferior? We even regard your religion to be the highest!"--then 41 you will see that lots of our big and influential folk will hear them.
42 Thus they will be able to do immense good to this country. Do not 43 think for a moment that they will come to take up the position of 44 teachers of religion to you. They will, no doubt, be your Guru 45 regarding practical sciences etc., for the improvement of material 46 conditions, and the people of our country will be their Guru in 47 everything pertaining to religion. This relation of Guru and disciple 48 in the domain of religion will for ever exist between India and the 49 rest of the world.

50 Myself: How can that be, Swamiji? Considering the feeling of 51 hatred with which they look upon us, it does not seem probable that 52 they will ever do good to us, purely from an unselfish motive.

1 Swamiji: They find many reasons to hate us, and so they may 2 justify themselves in doing so. In the first place, we are a conquered 3 race, and moreover there is nowhere in the world such a nation of 4 mendicants as we are! The masses who comprise the lowest castes, 5 through ages of constant tyranny of the higher castes and by being 6 treated by them with blows and kicks at every step they took, have 7 totally lost their manliness and become like professional beggars; 8 and those who are removed one stage higher than these, having 9 read a few pages of English, hang about the thresholds of public 10 offices with petitions in their hands. In the case of a post of twenty 11 or thirty rupees falling vacant, five hundred B.A.s and M.A.s will 12 apply for it! And, dear me! how curiously worded these petitions 13 are! "I have nothing to eat at home, sir, my wife and children are 14 starving; I most humbly implore you, sir, to give me some means to 15 provide for myself and my family, or we shall die of starvation!" 16 Even when they enter into service, they cast all self-respect to the 17 winds, and servitude in its worst form is what they practise. Such is 18 the condition, then, of the masses. The highly-educated, prominent 19 men among you form themselves into societies and clamour at the 20 top of their voices: "Alas, India is going to ruin, day by day! O 21 English rulers, admit our countrymen to the higher offices of the 22 State, relieve us from famines" and so on, thus rending the air, day 23 and night, with the eternal cry of "Give" and "Give"! The burden of 24 all their speech is, "Give to us, give more to us, O Englishmen!"
25 Dear me! what more will they give to you? They have given 26 railways, telegraphs, well-ordered administration to the country-- 27 have almost entirely suppressed robbers, have given education in 28 science--what more will they give? What does anyone give to others 29 with perfect unselfishness? Well, they have given you so much; let 30 me ask, what have you given to them in return?

31 Myself: What have we to give, Swamiji? We pay taxes.

32 Swamiji: Do you, really? Do you give taxes to them of your 33 own will, or do they exact them by compulsion because they keep 34 peace in the country? Tell me plainly, what do you give them in 35 return for all that they have done for you? You also have something 36 to give them that they have not. You go to England, but that is also 37 in the garb of a beggar--praying for education. Some go, and what 38 they do there at the most is, perchance, to applaud the Westerner's 39 religion in some speeches and then come back. What an 40 achievement, indeed! Why, have you nothing to give them? An 41 inestimable treasure you have, which you can give--give them your 42 religion, give them your philosophy! Study the history of the whole 43 world, and you will see that every high ideal you meet with 44 anywhere had its origin in India. From time immemorial India has 45 been the mine of precious ideas to human society; giving birth to 46 high ideas herself, she has freely distributed them broadcast over 47 the whole world. The English are in India today, to gather those 48 higher ideals, to acquire a knowledge of the Vedanta, to penetrate 49 into the deep mysteries of that eternal religion which is yours. Give 50 those invaluable gems in exchange for what you receive from them.
51 The Lord took me to their country to remove this opprobrium of the 52 beggar that is attributed by them to us. It is not right to go to

1 England for the purpose of begging only. Why should they always 2 give us alms? Does anyone do so for ever? It is not the law of nature 3 to be always taking gifts with outstretched hands like beggars. To 4 give and take is the law of nature. Any individual or class or nation 5 that does not obey this law never prospers in life. We also must 6 follow that law. That is why I went to America. So great is now the 7 thirst for religion in the people there that there is room enough 8 even if thousands of men like me go. They have been for a long time 9 giving you of what wealth they possess, and now is the time for you 10 to share your priceless treasure with them. And you will see how 11 their feelings of hatred will be quickly replaced by those of faith, 12 devotion, and reverence towards you, and how they will do good to 13 your country even unasked. They are a nation of heroes--never do 14 they forget any good done to them.

15 Myself: Well, Swamiji, in your lectures in the West you have 16 frequently and eloquently dwelt on our characteristic talents and 17 virtues, and many convincing proofs you have put forward to show 18 our whole-souled love of religion; but now you say that we have 19 become full of Tamas; and at the same time you are accrediting us 20 as the teachers of the eternal religion of the Rishis to the world!
21 How is that?

22 Swamiji: Do you mean to say that I should go about from 23 country to country, expatiating on your failings before the public?
24 Should I not rather hold up before them the characteristic virtues 25 that mark you as a nation? It is always good to tell a man his 26 defects in a direct way and in a friendly spirit to make him 27 convinced of them, so that he may correct himself--but you should 28 trumpet forth his virtues before others. Shri Ramakrishna used to 29 say that if you repeatedly tell a bad man that he is good, he turns in 30 time to be good; similarly, a good man becomes bad if he is 31 incessantly called so. There, in the West, I have said enough to the 32 people of their shortcomings. Mind, up to my time, all who went 33 over to the West from our country have sung paeans to them in 34 praise of their virtues and have trumpeted out only our blemishes to 35 their ears. Consequently, it is no wonder that they have learnt to 36 hate us. For this reason I have laid before them your virtues, and 37 pointed out to them their vices, just as I am now telling you of your 38 weaknesses and their good points. However full of Tamas you may 39 have become, something of the nature of the ancient Rishis, 40 however little it may be, is undoubtedly in you still--at least the 41 framework of it. But that does not show that one should be in a 42 hurry to take up at once the role of a teacher of religion and go over 43 to the West to preach it. First of all, one must completely mould 44 one's religious life in solitude, must be perfect in renunciation and 45 must preserve Brahmacharya without a break. The Tamas has 46 entered into you--what of that? Cannot the Tamas be destroyed? It 47 can be done in less than no time! It was for the destruction of this 48 Tamas that Bhagavan Shri Ramakrishna came to us.

49 Myself: But who can aspire to be like you, Swamiji?

50 Swamiji: Do you think that there will be no more 51 Vivekanandas after I die! That batch of young men who came and 52 played music before me a little while ago, whom you all despise for

1 being addicted to intoxicating drugs and look upon as worthless
2 fellows, if the Lord wishes, each and everyone of them may become 3 a Vivekananda! There will be no lack of Vivekanandas, if the world
4 needs them--thousands and millions of Vivekanandas will appear-- 5 from where, who knows!

6 Know for certain that the work done by me is not the work of 7 Vivekananda, it is His work--the Lord's own work! If one governor-8 general retires, another is sure to be sent in his place by the 9 Emperor. Enveloped in Tamas however much you may be, know all 10 that will clear away if you take refuge in Him by being sincere to 11 the core of your heart. The time is opportune now, as the physician 12 of the world-disease has come. Taking His name, if you set yourself 13 to work, He will accomplish everything Himself through you. Tamas 14 itself will be transformed into the highest Sattva!

15 Myself: Whatever you may say, I cannot bring myself to 16 believe in these words. Who can come by that oratorical power of 17 expounding philosophy which you have?

18 Swamiji: You don't know! That power may come to all. That 19 power comes to him who observes unbroken Brahmacharya for a 20 period of twelve years, with the sole object of realising God. I have 21 practised that kind of Brahmacharya myself, and so a screen has 22 been removed, as it were, from my brain. For that reason, I need 23 not any more think over or prepare myself for any lectures on such 24 a subtle subject as philosophy. Suppose I have to lecture tomorrow;
25 all that I shall speak about will pass tonight before my eyes like so 26 many pictures; and the next day I put into words during my lecture 27 all those things that I saw. So you will understand now that it is not 28 any power which is exclusively my own. Whoever will practise
29 unbroken Brahmacharya for twelve years will surely have it. If you 30 do so, you too will get it. Our Shastras do not say that only such and 31 such a person will get it and not others!

32 Myself: Do you remember, Swamiji, one day, before you took 33 Sannyasa, we were sitting in the house of --, and you were trying to 34 explain the mystery of Samadhi to us. And when I called in question 35 the truth of your words, saying that Samadhi was not possible in 36 this Kali Yuga, you emphatically demanded: "Do you want to see 37 Samadhi or to have it yourself? I get Samadhi myself, and I can 38 make you have it!" No sooner had you finished saying so than a 39 stranger came up and we did not pursue that subject any further.

40 Swamiji: Yes, I remember the occasion.

41 Later, on my pressing him to make me get Samadhi, he said, 42 "You see, having continually lectured and worked hard for several 43 years, the quality of Rajas has become too predominant in me.
44 Hence that power is lying covered, as it were, in me now. If I leave 45 all work and go to the Himalayas and meditate in solitude for some 46 time, then that power will again come out in me."

4 A day or two later, as I was coming out of my house intending 5 to pay a visit to Swamiji, I met two of my friends who expressed a 6 wish to accompany me, for they wanted to ask Swamiji something 7 about Pranayama. I had heard that one should not visit a temple or 8 a Sannyasin without taking something as an offering; so we took 9 some fruits and sweets with us and placed them before him.
10 Swamiji took them in his hands, raised them to his head, and bowed 11 to us before even we made our obeisance to him. One of the two 12 friends with me had been a fellow-student of his. Swamiji 13 recognised him at once and asked about his health and welfare.
14 Then he made us sit down by him. There were many others there 15 who had come to see and hear him. After replying to a few 16 questions put by some of the gentlemen, Swamiji, in the course of 17 his conversation, began to speak about Pranayama. First of all, he 18 explained through modern science the origin of matter from the 19 mind, and then went on to show what Pranayama is. All three of us 20 had carefully read beforehand his book called Raja-Yoga. But from 21 what we heard from him that day about Pranayama, it seemed to 22 me that very little of the knowledge that was in him had been 23 recorded in that book. I understand also that what he said was not 24 mere book-learning, for who could explain so lucidly and 25 elaborately all the intricate problems of religion, even with the help 26 of science, without himself realising the Truth?

27 His conversation on Pranayama went on from half past three 28 o'clock till half past seven in the evening. When the meeting 29 dissolved and we came away, my companions asked me how 30 Swamiji could have known the questions that were in their hearts, 31 and whether I had communicated to him their desire for asking 32 those questions.

33 A few days after this occasion, I saw Swamiji in the house of 34 the late Priya Nath Mukherjee at Baghbazar. There were present
35 Swami Brahmananda, Swami Yogananda, Mr. G. C. Ghosh, Atul
36 Babu, and one or two other friends. I said, "Well, Swamiji, the two 37 gentlemen who went to see you the other day wanted to ask you 38 some questions about Pranayama, which had been raised in their 39 minds by reading your book on Raja-Yoga some time before you 40 returned to this country, and they had then told me of them. But 41 that day, before they asked you anything, you yourself raised those 42 doubts that had occurred to them and solved them! They were very 43 much surprised and inquired of me if I had let you know their 44 doubts beforehand." Swamiji replied: "Similar occurrences having 45 come to pass many times in the West, people often used to ask me, 46 'How could you know the questions that were agitating our minds?'
47 This knowledge does not happen to me so often, but with Shri 48 Ramakrishna it was almost always there."

49 In this connection Atul Babu asked him: "You have said in 50 Raja-Yoga that one can come to know all about one's previous 51 births. Do you know them yourself?"

1 Swamiji: Yes, I do.

2 Atul Babu: What do you know? Have you any objection to tell?

3 Swamiji: I can know them--I do know them--but I prefer not to 4 say anything in detail.

[Shri Priya Nath Sinha]

10

11 It was an evening in July 1898, at the Math, in Nilambar 12 Mukerjee's garden-house, Belur. Swamiji with all his disciples had 13 been meditating, and at the close of the meditation came out and 14 sat in one of the rooms. As it was raining hard and a cold wind was 15 blowing, he shut the door and began to sing to the accompaniment 16 of Tanpura. The singing being over, a long conversation on music 17 followed. Swami Shivananda asked him, "What is Western music 18 like?"

19 Swamiji: Oh, it is very good; there is in it a perfection of 20 harmony, which we have not attained. Only, to our untrained ears, it 21 does not sound well, hence we do not like it, and think that the 22 singers howl like jackals. I also had the same sort of impression, but 23 when I began to listen to the music with attention and study it 24 minutely, I came more and more to understand it, and I was lost in 25 admiration. Such is the case with every art. In glancing at a highly 26 finished painting we cannot understand where its beauty lies.
27 Moreover, unless the eye is, to a certain extent, trained, one cannot 28 appreciate the subtle touches and blendings, the inner genius of a 29 work of art. What real music we have lies in Kirtana and Dhrupada; 30 the rest has been spoiled by being modulated according to the 31 Islamic methods. Do you think that singing the short and light airs 32 of Tappa songs in a nasal voice and flitting like lightning from one 33 note to another by fits and starts are the best things in the world of 34 music? Not so. Unless each note is given full play in every scale, all 35 the science of music is marred. In painting, by keeping in touch 36 with nature, you can make it as artistic as you like; there is no harm 37 in doing that, and the result will be nothing but good. Similarly, in 38 music, you can display any amount of skill by keeping to science, 39 and it will be pleasing to the ear. The Mohammedans took up the 40 different Ragas and Raginis after coming into India. But they put 41 such a stamp of their own colouring on the art of Tappa songs that 42 all the science in music was destroyed.

43 Q. Why, Maharaj (sir)? Who has not a liking for music in 44 Tappa?

45 Swamiji: The chirping of crickets sounds very good to some.
46 The Santals think their music also to be the best of all. You do not 47 seem to understand that when one note comes upon another in 48 such quick succession, it not only robs music of all grace, but, on

1 the other hand, creates discordance rather. Do not the permutation 2 and combination of the seven keynotes form one or other of the 3 different melodies of music, known as Ragas and Raginis? Now, in 4 Tappa, if one slurs over a whole melody (Raga) and creates a new 5 tune, and over and above that, if the voice is raised to the highest 6 pitch by tremulous modulation, say, how can the Raga be kept 7 intact? Again, the poetry of music is completely destroyed if there 8 be in it such profuse use of light and short strains just for effect. To 9 sing by keeping to the idea, meant to be conveyed by a song, totally 10 disappeared from our country when Tappas came into vogue.
11 Nowadays, it seems, the true art is reviving a little with the 12 improvement in theatres; but, on the other hand, all regard for 13 Ragas and Raginis is being more and more flung to the winds.

14 Accordingly, to those who are past masters in the art of 15 singing Dhrupada, it is painful to hear Tappas. But in our music the 16 cadence, or a duly regulated rise and fall of voice or sound, is very 17 good. The French detected and appreciated this trait first, and tried 18 to adapt and introduce it in their music. After their doing this, the 19 whole of Europe has now thoroughly mastered it.

20 Q. Maharaj, their music seems to be pre-eminently martial, 21 whereas that element appears to be altogether absent in ours.

22 Swamiji: Oh, no, we have it also. In martial music, harmony is 23 greatly needed. We sadly lack harmony, hence it does not show 24 itself so much. Our music had been improving steadily. But when 25 the Mohammedans came, they took possession of it in such a way 26 that the tree of music could grow no further. The music of the 27 Westerners is much advanced. They have the sentiment of pathos 28 as well as of heroism in their music, which is as it should be. But 29 our antique musical instrument made from the gourd has been 30 improved no further.

31 Q. Which of the Ragas and Raginis are martial in tune?

32 Swamiji: Every Raga may be made martial if it is set in 33 harmony and the instruments are tuned accordingly. Some of the 34 Raginis can also become martial.

35 The conversation was then closed, as it was time for supper.
36 After supper, Swamiji enquired as to the sleeping arrangements for 37 the guests who had come from Calcutta to the Math to pass the 38 night, and he then retired to his bedroom.

IX

43 [Shri Priya Nath Sinha]

45 It was about two years after the new Math had been 46 constructed and while all the Swamis were living there that I came 47 one morning to pay a visit to my Guru. Seeing me, Swamiji smiled 48 and after inquiring of my welfare etc., said, "You are going to stay

1 today, are you not?"

2 "Certainly", I said, and after various inquiries I asked, "Well, 3 Maharaj, what is your idea of educating our boys?"

4 Swamiji: Guru-griha-vasa--living with the Guru.

5 Q. How?

6 Swamiji: In the same way as of old. But with this education 7 has to be combined modern Western science. Both these are 8 necessary.

9 Q. Why, what is the defect in the present university system?

10 Swamiji: It is almost wholly one of defects. Why, it is nothing 11 but a perfect machine for turning out clerks. I would even thank my 12 stars if that were all. But no! See how men are becoming destitute 13 of Shraddha and faith.

14 They assert that the Gita is only an interpolation, and that the 15 Vedas are but rustic songs! They like to master every detail 16 concerning things and nations outside of India, but if you ask them, 17 they do not know even the names of their own forefathers up to the 18 seventh generation, not to speak of the fourteenth!

19 Q. But what does that matter? What if they do not know the 20 names of their forefathers?

21 Swamiji: Don't think so. A nation that has no history of its 22 own has nothing in this world. Do you believe that one who has 23 such faith and pride as to feel, "I come of noble descent", can ever 24 turn out to be bad? How could that be? That faith in himself would 25 curb his actions and feelings, so much so that he would rather die
26 than commit wrong. So a national history keeps a nation well-27 restrained and does not allow it to sink so low. Oh, I know you will 28 say, "But we have not such a history!" No, there is not any, 29 according to those who think like you. Neither is there any, 30 according to your big university scholars; and so also think those 31 who, having travelled through the West in one great rush, come 32 back dressed in European style and assert, "We have nothing, we 33 are barbarians." Of course, we have no history exactly like that of 34 other countries. Suppose we take rice, and the Englishmen do not.
35 Would you for that reason imagine that they all die of starvation, 36 and are going to be exterminated? They live quite well on what they 37 can easily procure or produce in their own country and what is 38 suited to them. Similarly, we have our own history exactly as it 39 ought to have been for us. Will that history be made extinct by 40 shutting your eyes and crying, "Alas! we have no history!" Those 41 who have eyes to see, find a luminous history there, and on the 42 strength of that they know the nation is still alive. But that history 43 has to be rewritten. It should be restated and suited to the 44 understanding and ways of thinking which our men have acquired 45 in the present age through Western education.

46 Q. How has that to be done?

47 Swamiji: That is too big a subject for a talk now. However, to 48 bring that about, the old institution of "living with the Guru" and 49 similar systems of imparting education are needed. What we want

1 are Western science coupled with Vedanta, Brahmacharya as the 2 guiding motto, and also Shraddha and faith in one's own self.
3 Another thing that we want is the abolition of that system which 4 aims at educating our boys in the same manner as that of the man 5 who battered his ass, being advised that it could thereby be turned 6 into a horse.

7 Q. What do you mean by that?

8 Swamiji: You see, no one can teach anybody. The teacher
9 spoils everything by thinking that he is teaching. Thus Vedanta says 10 that within man is all knowledge--even in a boy it is so--and it 11 requires only an awakening, and that much is the work of a teacher.
12 We have to do only so much for the boys that they may learn to 13 apply their own intellect to the proper use of their hands, legs, ears, 14 eyes, etc., and finally everything will become easy. But the root is 15 religion. Religion is as the rice, and everything else, like the 16 curries. Taking only curries causes indigestion, and so is the case 17 with taking rice alone. Our pedagogues are making parrots of our 18 boys and ruining their brains by cramming a lot of subjects into 19 them. Looking from one standpoint, you should rather be grateful to 20 the Viceroy⁹³ for his proposal of reforming the university system, 21 which means practically abolishing higher education; the country
22 will, at least, feel some relief by having breathing time. Goodness 23 gracious! what a fuss and fury about graduating, and after a few 24 days all cools down! And after all that, what is it they learn but that 25 what religion and customs we have are all bad, and what the 26 Westerners have are all good! At last, they cannot keep the wolf 27 from the door! What does it matter if this higher education remains 28 or goes? It would be better if the people got a little technical 29 education, so that they might find work and earn their bread, 30 instead of dawdling about and crying for service.

31 Q. Yes, the Marwaris are wiser, since they do not accept 32 service and most of them engage themselves in some trade.

33 Swamiji: Nonsense! They are on the way to bringing ruin on 34 the country. They have little understanding of their own interests.
35 You are much better, because you have more of an eye towards 36 manufactures. If the money that they lay out in their business and 37 with which they make only a small percentage of profit were 38 utilised in conducting a few factories and workshops, instead of 39 filling the pockets of Europeans by letting them reap the benefit of 40 most of the transactions, then it would not only conduce to the well-41 being of the country but bring by far the greater amount of profit to 42 them, as well. It is only the Kabulis who do not care for service--the 43 spirit of independence is in their very bone and marrow. Propose to 44 anyone of them to take service, and you will see what follows!

45 Q. Well, Maharaj, in case higher education is abolished, will 46 not the men become as stupid as cows, as they were before?

1 ⁹³ ?Lord Curzon, who took steps to raise the standard of university 2 education so high as to make it very expensive and hence almost 3 inaccessible to boys of the middle classes.
4

1 Swamiji: What nonsense! Can ever a lion become a jackal?
2 What do you mean? Is it ever possible for the sons of the land that 3 has nourished the whole world with knowledge from time 4 immemorial to turn as stupid as cows, because of the abolition of 5 higher education by Lord Curzon?

6 Q. But think what our people were before the advent of the 7 English, and what they are now.

8 Swamiji: Does higher education mean mere study of material 9 sciences and turning out things of everyday use by machinery? The 10 use of higher education is to find out how to solve the problems of 11 life, and this is what is engaging the profound thought of the 12 modern civilised world, but it was solved in our country thousands 13 of years ago.

14 Q. But your Vedanta also was about to disappear?

15 Swamiji: It might be so. In the efflux of time the light of 16 Vedanta now and then seems as if about to be extinguished, and 17 when that happens, the Lord has to incarnate Himself in the human 18 body; He then infuses such life and strength into religion that it 19 goes on again for some time with irresistible vigour. That life and 20 strength has come into it again.

21 Q. What proof is there, Maharaj, that India has freely 22 contributed her knowledge to the rest of the world?

23 Swamiji: History itself bears testimony to the fact. All the 24 soul-elevating ideas and the different branches of knowledge that 25 exist in the world are found on proper investigation to have their 26 roots in India.

27 Aglow with enthusiasm, Swamiji dwelt at length on this topic.
28 His health was very bad at the time, and moreover owing to the 29 intense heat of summer, he was feeling thirsty and drinking water 30 too often. At last he said, "Dear Singhi, get a glass of iced water for 31 me please, I shall explain everything to you clearly." After drinking 32 the iced water he began afresh.

33 Swamiji: What we need, you know, is to study, independent of 34 foreign control, different branches of the knowledge that is our 35 own, and with it the English language and Western science; we 36 need technical education and all else that may develop industries so 37 that men, instead of seeking for service, may earn enough to 38 provide for themselves, and save something against a rainy day.

39 Q. What were you going to say the other day about the tol
40 (Sanskrit boarding school) system?

41 Swamiji: Haven't you read the stories from the Upanishads? I 42 will tell you one. Satyakama went to live the life of a Brahmacharin 43 with his Guru. The Guru gave into his charge some cows and sent 44 him away to the forest with them. Many months passed by, and 45 when Satyakama saw that the number of cows was doubled he 46 thought of returning to his Guru. On his way back, one of the bulls, 47 the fire, and some other animals gave him instructions about the 48 Highest Brahman. When the disciple came back, the Guru at once 49 saw by a mere glance at his face that the disciple had learnt the

1 knowledge of the Supreme Brahman.⁹⁴ Now, the moral this story is 2 meant to teach is that true education is gained by constant living in 3 communion with nature.

4 Knowledge should be acquired in that way, otherwise by 5 educating yourself in the tol of a Pandit you will be only a human 6 ape all your life. One should live from his very boyhood with one 7 whose character is like a blazing fire and should have before him a 8 living example of the highest teaching. Mere reading that it is a sin
9 to tell a lie will be of no use. Every boy should be trained to practise
10 absolute Brahmacharya, and then, and then only, faith--Shraddha-- 11 will come. Otherwise, why will not one who has no Shraddha speak 12 an untruth? In our country, the imparting of knowledge has always 13 been through men of renunciation. Later, the Pandits, by 14 monopolising all knowledge and restricting it to the tols, have only 15 brought the country to the brink of ruin. India had all good 16 prospects so long as Tyagis (men of renunciation) used to impart
17 knowledge.

18 Q. What do you mean, Maharaj? There are no Sannyasins in 19 other countries, but see how by dint of their knowledge India is laid 20 prostrate at their feet!

21 Swamiji: Don't talk nonsense, my dear, hear what I say. India 22 will have to carry others' shoes for ever on her head if the charge of 23 imparting knowledge to her sons does not again fall upon the 24 shoulders of Tyagis. Don't you know how an illiterate boy, possessed 25 of renunciation, turned the heads of your great old Pandits? Once at 26 the Dakshineswar Temple the Brahmana who was in charge of the 27 worship of Vishnu broke a leg of the image. Pandits were brought 28 together at a meeting to give their opinions, and they, after 29 consulting old books and manuscripts, declared that the worship of 30 this broken image could not be sanctioned according to the 31 Shastras and a new image would have to be consecrated. There 32 was, consequently, a great stir. Shri Ramakrishna was called at last.
33 He heard and asked, "Does a wife forsake her husband in case he 34 becomes lame?" What followed? The Pandits were struck dumb, all 35 their Shastric commentaries and erudition could not withstand the 36 force of this simple statement. If what you say was true, why should 37 Shri Ramakrishna come down to this earth, and why should he 38 discourage mere book-learning so much? That new life-force which 39 he brought with him has to be instilled into learning and education, 40 and then the real work will be done.

41 Q. But that is easier said than done.

42 Swamiji: Had it been easy, it would not have been necessary 43 for him to come. What you have to do now is to establish a Math in 44 every town and in every village. Can you do that? Do something at 45 least. Start a big Math in the heart of Calcutta. A well-educated 46 Sadhu should be at the head of that centre and under him there 47 should be departments for teaching practical science and arts, with 48 a specialist Sannyasin in charge of each of these departments.

1 ⁹⁴ ?Chhandogya, IV. ix. 2.
2

1 Q. Where will you get such Sadhus?

2 Swamiji: We shall have to manufacture them. Therefore, I 3 always say that some young men with burning patriotism and 4 renunciation are needed. None can master a thing perfectly in so 5 short a time as the Tyagis will.

6 After a short silence Swamiji said, "Singhi, there are so many 7 things left to be done for our country that thousands like you and 8 me are needed. What will mere talk do? See to what a miserable 9 condition the country is reduced; now do something! We haven't 10 even got a single book well suited for the little boys.

11 Q. Why, there are so many books of Ishwar Chandra 12 Vidyasagar for the boys!

13 No sooner had I said this than he laughed out and said: Yes, 14 there you read "Ishvar Nirakar Chaitanya Svarup"--(God is without 15 form and of the essence of pure knowledge); "Subal ati subodh 16 balak"--(Subal is a very good boy), and so on. That won't do. We 17 must compose some books in Bengali as also in English with short 18 stories from the Ramayana, the Mahabharata, the Upanishads, etc., 19 in very easy and simple language, and these are to be given to our 20 little boys to read.

21 It was about eleven o'clock by this time. The sky became 22 suddenly overcast, and a cool breeze began to blow. Swamiji was 23 greatly delighted at the prospect of rain. He got up and said, "Let 24 us, Singhi, have a stroll by the side of the Ganga." We did so, and he 25 recited many stanzas from the Meghaduta of Kalidasa, but the one 26 undercurrent of thought that was all the time running through his 27 mind was the good of India. He exclaimed, "Look here, Singhi, can 28 you do one thing? Can you put a stop to the marriage of our boys 29 for some time?

30 I said, "Well, Maharaj, how can we think of that when the 31 Babus are trying, on the other hand, all sorts of means to make 32 marriage cheaper?"

33 Swamiji: Don't trouble your head on that score; who can stem 34 the tide of time! All such agitations will end in empty sound, that is 35 all. The dearer the marriages become, the better for the country.
36 What a hurry-scurry of passing examinations and marrying right 37 off! It seems as if no one was to be left a bachelor, but it is just the 38 same thing again, next year!

39 After a short silence, Swamiji again said, "if I can get some 40 unmarried graduates, I may try to send them over to Japan and 41 make arrangements for their technical education there, so that 42 when they come back, they may turn their knowledge to the best 43 account for India. What a good thing that would be!

44 Q. Why, Maharaj, is it better for us to go to Japan than to 45 England?

46 Swamiji: Certainly! In my opinion, if all our rich and educated 47 men once go and see Japan, their eyes will be opened.

48 Q. How?

1 Swamiji: There, in Japan, you find a fine assimilation of 2 knowledge, and not its indigestion, as we have here. They have 3 taken everything from the Europeans, but they remain Japanese all 4 the same, and have not turned European; while in our country, the 5 terrible mania of becoming Westernised has seized upon us like a 6 plague.

7 I said: "Maharaj, I have seen some Japanese paintings; one 8 cannot but marvel at their art. Its inspiration seems to be 9 something which is their own and beyond imitation."

10 Swamiji: Quite so. They are great as a nation because of their 11 art. Don't you see they are Asians, as we are? And though we have 12 lost almost everything, yet what we still have is wonderful. The very 13 soul of the Asian is interwoven with art. The Asian never uses a 14 thing unless there be art in it. Don't you know that art is, with us, a 15 part of religion? How greatly is a lady admired, among us, who can 16 nicely paint the floors and walls, on auspicious occasions, with the 17 paste of rice powder? How great an artist was Shri Ramakrishna 18 himself!

19 Q. The English art is also good, is it not?

20 Swamiji: What a stupid fool you are! But what is the use of 21 blaming you when that seems to be the prevailing way of thinking!
22 Alas, to such a state is our country reduced! The people will look 23 upon their own gold as brass, while the brass of the foreigner is 24 gold to them! This is, indeed, the magic wrought by modern 25 education! Know that since the time the Europeans have come into 26 contact with Asia, they are trying to infuse art into their own life.

27 Myself: If others hear you talk like this, Maharaj, they will 28 think that you take a pessimistic view of things.

29 Swamiji: Naturally! What else can they think who move in a 30 rut! How I wish I could show you everything through my eyes! Look 31 at their buildings--how commonplace, how meaningless, they are!
32 Look at those big government buildings; can you, just by seeing 33 their outside, make out any meaning for which each of them 34 stands? No, because they are all so unsymbolical. Take again the 35 dress of Westerners: their stiff coats and straight pants, fitting 36 almost tightly to the body, are, in our estimation, hardly decent. Is it 37 not so? And, oh, what beauty, indeed, in that! Now, go all over our 38 motherland and see if you cannot read aright, from their very 39 appearance, the meaning for which our buildings stand, and how 40 much art there is in them! The glass is their drinking vessel, and 41 ours is the metal Ghati (pitcher-shaped); which of the two is 42 artistic? Have you seen the farmers' homes in our villages?

43 Myself: Yes, I have, of course.

44 Swamiji: What have you seen of them?

45 I did not know what to say. However, I replied, "Maharaj, they 46 are faultlessly neat and clean, the yards and floors being daily well 47 plastered over".

48 Swamiji: Have you seen their granaries for keeping paddy?
49 What an art is there in them! What a variety of paintings even on

1 their mud walls! And then, if you go and see how the lower classes
2 live in the West, you would at once mark the difference. Their ideal
3 is utility, ours art. The Westerner looks for utility in everything, 4 whereas with us art is everywhere. With the Western education,
5 those beautiful Ghaties of ours have been discarded, and enamel 6 glasses have usurped their place in our homes! Thus the ideal of 7 utility has been imbibed by us to such an extent as to make it look 8 little short of the ridiculous. Now what we need is the combination 9 of art and utility. Japan has done that very quickly, and so she has 10 advanced by giant strides. Now, in their turn, the Japanese are 11 going to teach the Westerners.

12 Q. Maharaj, which nation in the world dresses best?

13 Swamiji: The Aryans do; even the Europeans admit that. How 14 picturesquely their dresses hang in folds! The royal costumes of 15 most nations are, to some extent, a sort of imitation of the Aryans'-- 16 the same attempt is made there to keep them in folds, and those 17 costumes bear a marked difference to their national style.

18 By the by, Singhi, leave off that wretched habit of wearing 19 those European shirts.

20 Q. Why, Maharaj?

21 Swamiji: For the reason that they are used by the Westerners 22 only as underwear. They never like to see them worn outside. How 23 mistaken of the Bengalis to do so! As if one should wear anything 24 and everything, as if there was no unwritten law about dress, as if 25 there was no ancestral style to follow! Our people are outcasted by 26 taking the food touched by the lower classes; it would have been 27 very well if the same law applied to their wearing any irregular 28 style of dress. Why can't you adapt your dress in some way to our 29 own style? What sense is there in your adopting European shirts 30 and coats?

31 It began to rain now, and the dinner-bell also rang. So we 32 went in to partake of the Prasada (consecrated food) with others.
33 During the meal, Swamiji said, addressing me: "Concentrated food 34 should be taken. To fill the stomach with a large quantity of rice is 35 the root of laziness." A little while after he said again, "Look at the 36 Japanese, they take rice with the soup of split peas, twice or thrice 37 a day. But even the strongly built take a little at a time, though the 38 number of meals may be more. Those who are well-to-do among 39 them take meat daily. While we stuff ourselves twice a day up to the 40 throat, as it were, and the whole of our energy is exhausted in 41 digesting such a quantity of rice!"

42 Q. Is it feasible for us Bengalis, poor as we are, to take meat?

43 Swamiji: Why not? You can afford to have it in small 44 quantities. Half a pound a day is quite enough. The real evil is 45 idleness, which is the principal cause of our poverty. Suppose the 46 head of a firm gets displeased with someone and decreases his pay; 47 or out of three or four bread-winning sons in a family one suddenly 48 dies; what do they do? Why, they at once curtail the quantity of milk 49 for the children, or live on one meal a day, having a little popped 50 rice or so at night!

1 Q. But what else can they do under the circumstances?

2 Swamiji: Why can't they exert themselves and earn more to 3 keep up their standard of food? But no! They must go to their local 4 Addas (rendezvous) and idle hours away! Oh, if they only knew how 5 they wasted their time!

9 [Shri Priya Nath Sinha]

10

11 Once I went to see Swamiji while he was staying in Calcutta
12 at the house of the late Balaram Basu. After a long conversation 13 about Japan and America, I asked him, "Well, Swamiji, how many 14 disciples have you in the West?"

15 Swamiji: A good many.

16 Q. Two or three thousands?

17 Swamiji: Maybe more than that.

18 Q. Are they all initiated by you with Mantras?

19 Swamiji: Yes.

20 Q. Did you give them permission to utter Pranava (Om)?

21 Swamiji: Yes.

22 Q. How did you, Maharaj? They say that the Shudras have no right 23 to Pranava, and none has except the Brahmins. Moreover, the 24 Westerners are Mlechchhas, not even Shudras.

25 Swamiji: How do you know that those whom I have initiated are not 26 Brahmins?

27 Myself: Where could you get Brahmins outside India, in the lands of 28 the Yavanas and Mlechchhas?

29 Swamiji: My disciples are all Brahmins! I quite admit the truth of 30 the words that none except the Brahmins has the right to Pranava.
31 But the son of a Brahmin is not necessarily always a Brahmin; 32 though there is every possibility of his being one, he may not 33 become so. Did you not hear that the nephew of Aghore Chakravarti 34 of Baghbazar became a sweeper and actually used to do all the 35 menial services of his adopted caste? Was he not the son of a 36 Brahmin?

1 The Brahmin caste and the Brahmanya qualities are two distinct 2 things. In India, one is held to be a Brahmin by one's caste, but in 3 the West, one should be known as such by one's Brahmanya
4 qualities. As there are three Gunas--Sattva, Rajas, and Tamas--so 5 there are Gunas which show a man to be a Brahmin, Kshatriya, 6 Vaishya, or Shudra. The qualities of being a Brahmin or a Kshatriya
7 are dying out from the country; but in the West they have now 8 attained to Kshatriyahood, from which the next step is 9 Brahminhood; and many there are who have qualified themselves 10 for that.

11 Q. Then you call those Brahmins who are Sattvika by nature.

12 Swamiji: Quite so. As there are Sattva, Rajas, and Tamas--one or 13 other of these Gunas more or less--in every man, so the qualities 14 which make a Brahmin, Kshatriya, Vaishya, or Shudra are inherent 15 in every man, more or less. But at times one or other of these 16 qualities predominates in him in varying degrees, and it is 17 manifested accordingly. Take a man in his different pursuits, for 18 example: when he is engaged in serving another for pay, he is in 19 Shudrahood; when he is busy transacting some piece of business 20 for profit, on his own account, he is a Vaishya; when he fights to 21 right wrongs, then the qualities of a Kshatriya come out in him; and 22 when he meditates on God or passes his time in conversation about 23 Him, then he is a Brahmin. Naturally, it is quite possible for one to 24 be changed from one caste into another. Otherwise, how did 25 Vishvamitra become a Brahmin and Parashurama a Kshatriya?

26 Q. What you say seems to be quite right, but why then do not our 27 Pandits and family-Gurus teach us the same thing?

28 Swamiji: That is one of the great evils of our country. But let the 29 matter rest now.

30 Swamiji here spoke highly of the Westerners' spirit of practicality, 31 and how, when they take up religion also, that spirit shows itself.

32 Myself: True, Maharaj, I have heard that their spiritual and psychic 33 powers are very quickly developed when they practise religion. The 34 other day Swami Saradananda showed me a letter written by one of 35 his Western disciples, describing the spiritual powers highly 36 developed in the writer through the Sadhanas practised for only 37 four months.

38 Swamiji: So you see! Now you understand whether there are 39 Brahmins in the West or not. You have Brahmins here also, but they 40 are bringing the country down to the verge of ruin by their awful 41 tyranny, and consequently what they have naturally is vanishing 42 away by degrees. The Guru initiates his disciple with a Mantra, but 43 that has come to be a trade with him. And then, how wonderful is 44 the relation nowadays between a Guru and his disciple! Perchance, 45 the Guru has nothing to eat at home, and his wife brings the matter 46 to his notice and says, "Pray, go once again to your disciples, dear.
47 Will your playing at dice all day long save us from hunger?" The 48 Brahmin in reply says, "Very well, remind me of it tomorrow
49 morning. I have come to hear that my disciple so-and-so is having a 50 run of luck, and, moreover, I have not been to him for a long time."

1 This is what your Kula-Guru system has come to in Bengal!
2 Priestcraft in the West is not so degenerated, as yet; it is on the 3 whole better than your kind!

7 XI

9 (From the Diary of a disciple ⁹⁵)

11 Disciple: How is it, Swamiji, that you do not lecture in this country?
12 You have stirred Europe and America with your lectures, but 13 coming back here you have kept silence.

14 Swamiji: In this country, the ground should be prepared first; then if 15 the seed is sown, the plant will come out best. The ground in the 16 West, in Europe and America is very fertile and fit for sowing seeds.
17 There, they have reached the climax of Bhoga (enjoyment). Being 18 satiated with Bhoga to the full, their minds are not getting peace 19 now even in those enjoyments, and they feel as if they wanted
20 something else. In this country you have neither Bhoga nor Yoga 21 (renunciation). When one is satiated with Bhoga, then it is that one 22 will listen to and understand the teachings on Yoga. What good will 23 lectures do in a country like India which has become the birthplace 24 of disease, sorrow, and affliction, and where men are emaciated 25 through starvation, and weak in mind?

26 Disciple: How is that? Do you not say that ours is the land of 27 religion and that here the people understand religion as they do 28 nowhere else? Why then will not this country be animated by your 29 inspiring eloquence and reap to the full the fruits thereof?

30 Swamiji: Now understand what religion means. The first thing 31 required is the worship of the Kurma (tortoise) Incarnation, and the 32 belly-god is this Kurma, as it were. Until you pacify this, no one will 33 welcome your words about religion. India is restless with the 34 thought of how to face this spectre of hunger. The draining of the 35 best resources of the country by the foreigners, the unrestricted 36 exports of merchandise, and, above all, the abominable jealousy
37 natural to slaves are eating into the vitals of India. First of all, you 38 must remove this evil of hunger and starvation, this constant 39 anxiety for bare existence, from those to whom you want to preach 40 religion; otherwise, lectures and such things will be of no benefit.

41 Disciple: What should we do then to remove that evil?

42 Swamiji: First, some young men full of the spirit of renunciation are 43 needed--those who will be ready to sacrifice their lives for others, 44 instead of devoting themselves to their own happiness. With this

1 object in view I shall establish a Math to train young Sannyasins, 2 who will go from door to door and make the people realise their 3 pitiable condition by means of facts and reasoning, and instruct 4 them in the ways and means for their welfare, and at the same time
5 will explain to them as clearly as possible, in very simple and easy 6 language, the higher truths of religion. The masses in our country 7 are like the sleeping Leviathan. The education imparted by the 8 present university system reaches one or two per cent of the 9 masses only. And even those who get that do not succeed in their 10 endeavours of doing any good to their country. But it is not their 11 fault, poor fellows! As soon as they come out of their college, they 12 find themselves fathers of several children! Somehow or other they 13 manage to secure the position of a clerk, or at the most, a deputy 14 magistrate. This is the finale of education! With the burden of a 15 family on their backs, they find no time to do anything great or 16 think anything high. They do not find means enough to fulfil their 17 personal wants and interests; so what can be expected of them in 18 the way of doing anything for others?

19 Disciple: Is there then no way out for us?

20 Swamiji: Certainly there is. This is the land of Religion Eternal. The 21 country has fallen, no doubt, but will as surely rise again, and that 22 upheaval will astound the world. The lower the hollows the billows 23 make, the higher and with greater force will they rise again.

24 Disciple: How will India rise again?

25 Swamiji: Do you not see? The dawn has already appeared in the 26 eastern sky, and there is little delay in the sun's rising. You all set 27 your shoulders to the wheel! What is there in making the world all 28 in all, and thinking of "My Samsara (family and property), my 29 Samsara"? Your duty at present is to go from one part of the 30 country to another, from village to village, and make the people 31 understand that mere sitting idly won't do any more. Make them 32 understand their real condition and say, "O ye brothers, arise!
33 Awake! How much longer would you remain asleep!" Go and advise 34 them how to improve their own condition, and make them 35 comprehend the sublime truths of the Shastras (scriptures), by 36 presenting them in a lucid and popular way. So long the Brahmins 37 have monopolised religion; but since they cannot hold their ground 38 against the strong tide of time, go and take steps so that one and all 39 in the land may get that religion. Impress upon their minds that 40 they have the same right to religion as the Brahmins. Initiate all, 41 even down to the Chandalas (people of the lowest castes), in these 42 fiery Mantras. Also instruct them, in simple words, about the 43 necessities of life, and in trade, commerce, agriculture, etc. If you 44 cannot do this, then fie upon your education and culture, and fie 45 upon your studying the Vedas and Vedanta!

46 Disciple: But where is that strength in us? I should have felt myself 47 blessed if I had a hundredth part of your powers, Swamiji.

48 Swamiji: How foolish! Power and things like that will come by 49 themselves. Put yourself to work, and you will find such tremendous 50 power coming to you that you will find it hard to bear. Even the 51 least work done for others awakens the power within; even thinking

1 the least good of others gradually instils into the heart the strength
2 of a lion. I love you all ever so much, but I wish you all to die 3 working for others--I should rather be glad to see you do that!

4 Disciple: What will become of those, then, who depend on me?

5 Swamiji: If you are ready to sacrifice your life for others, God will 6 certainly provide some means for them. Have you not read in the 7 Gita (VI. 40) the words of Shri Krishna, "{Sanskrit}--Never does a 8 doer of good, O my beloved, come to grief"?

9 Disciple: I see, sir.

10 Swamiji: The essential thing is renunciation. Without renunciation 11 none can pour out his whole heart in working for others. The man 12 of renunciation sees all with an equal eye and devotes himself to 13 the service of all. Does not our Vedanta also teach us to see all with 14 an equal eye? Why then do you cherish the idea that the wife and 15 children are your own, more than others? At your very threshold, 16 Narayana Himself in the form of a poor beggar is dying of 17 starvation! Instead of giving him anything, would you only satisfy 18 the appetites of your wife and children with delicacies? Why, that is 19 beastly!

20 Disciple: To work for others requires a good deal of money at times, 21 and where shall I get that?

22 Swamiji: Why not do as much as lies within your power? Even if you 23 cannot give to others for want of money, surely you can at least 24 breathe into their ears some good words or impart some good 25 instruction, can't you? Or does that also require money?

26 Disciple: Yes, sir, that I can do.

27 Swamiji: But saying, "I can", won't do. Show me through action
28 what you can do, and then only I shall know that your coming to me 29 is turned to some good account. Get up, and put your shoulders to 30 the wheel--how long is this life for? As you have come into this 31 world, leave some mark behind. Otherwise, where is the difference 32 between you and the trees and stones? They, too, come into 33 existence, decay and die. If you like to be born and to die like them, 34 you are at liberty to do so. Show me by your actions that your 35 reading the Vedanta has been fruitful of the highest good. Go and 36 tell all, "In every one of you lies that Eternal Power", and try to 37 wake It up. What will you do with individual salvation? That is sheer 38 selfishness. Throw aside your meditation, throw away your 39 salvation and such things! Put your whole heart and soul in the 40 work to which I have consecrated myself.

41 With bated breath the disciple heard these inspiring words, and 42 Swamiji went on with his usual fire and eloquence.

43 Swamiji: First of all, make the soil ready, and thousands of 44 Vivekanandas will in time be born into this world to deliver lectures 45 on religion. You needn't worry yourself about that! Don't you see 46 why I am starting orphanages, famine-relief works, etc.? Don't you 47 see how Sister Nivedita, a British lady, has learnt to serve Indians 48 so well, by doing even menial work for them? And can't you, being 49 Indians, similarly serve your own fellow-countrymen? Go, all of you,

1 wherever there is an outbreak of plague or famine, or wherever the 2 people are in distress, and mitigate their sufferings. At the most you 3 may die in the attempt--what of that? How many like you are being 4 born and dying like worms every day? What difference does that 5 make to the world at large? Die you must, but have a great ideal to 6 die for, and it is better to die with a great ideal in life. Preach this 7 ideal from door to door, and you will yourselves be benefited by it at 8 the same time that you are doing good to your country. On you lie 9 the future hopes of our country. I feel extreme pain to see you 10 leading a life of inaction. Set yourselves to work--to work! Do not 11 tarry--the time of death is approaching day by day! Do not sit idle, 12 thinking that everything will be done in time, later on! Mind-- 13 nothing will be done that way!

XII

18 Disciple: Pray, Swamiji, how can Jnana and Bhakti be reconciled?
19 We see the followers of the path of devotion (Bhaktas) close their 20 ears at the name of Shankara, and again, the followers of the path 21 of knowledge (Jnanis) call the Bhaktas fanatics, seeing them weep
22 in torrents, or sing and dance in ecstasy, in the name of the Lord.

23 Swamiji: The thing is, all this conflict is in the preliminary 24 (preparatory) stages of Jnana and Bhakti. Have you not heard Shri 25 Ramakrishna's story about Shiva's demons and Rama's monkeys?⁹⁶

26 Disciple: Yes, sir, I have.

27 Swamiji: But there is no difference between the supreme Bhakti 28 and the supreme Jnana. The supreme Bhakti is to realise God as the 29 form of Prema (love) itself. If you see the loving form of God 30 manifest everywhere and in everything, how can you hate or injure 31 others? That realisation of love can never come so long as there is 32 the least desire in the heart, or what Shri Ramakrishna used to say, 33 attachment for Kama-Kanchana (sense-pleasure and wealth). In the 34 perfect realisation of love, even the consciousness of one's own 35 body does not exist. Also, the supreme Jnana is to realise the 36 oneness everywhere, to see one's own self as the Self in everything.
37 That too cannot come so long as there is the least consciousness of 38 the ego (Aham).

39 Disciple: Then what you call love is the same as supreme 40 knowledge?

41 Swamiji: Exactly so. Realisation of love comes to none unless one 42 becomes a perfect Jnani. Does not the Vedanta say that Brahman is 43 Sat-Chit-Ananda--the absolute Existence-Knowledge-Bliss?

1 ⁹⁶ ?There was once a fight between Shiva and Rama. Shiva was 2 the Guru of Rama, and Rama was the Guru of Shiva. They fought 3 but became friendly again. But there was no end to the quarrels and 4 wranglings between the demons of Shiva and the monkeys of 5 Rama!
6

1 Disciple: Yes, sir.

2 Swamiji: The phrase Sat-Chit-Ananda means--Sat, i.e. existence, 3 Chit, i.e. consciousness or knowledge, and Ananda, i.e. bliss which 4 is the same as love. There is no controversy between the Bhakta
5 and the Jnani regarding the Sat aspect of Brahman. Only, the Jnanis 6 lay greater stress on His aspect of Chit or knowledge, while the 7 Bhaktas keep the aspect of Ananda or love more in view. But no 8 sooner is the essence of Chit realised than the essence of Ananda is 9 also realised. Because what is Chit is verily the same as Ananda.

10 Disciple: Why then is so much sectarianism prevalent in India? And 11 why is there so much controversy between the scriptures on Bhakti 12 and Jnana?

13 Swamiji: The thing is, all this waging of war and controversy is 14 concerning the preliminary ideals, i.e. those ideals which men take 15 up to attain the real Jnana or real Bhakti. But which do you think is 16 the higher--the end or the means? Surely, the means can never be 17 higher than the end, because the means to realise the same end 18 must be numerous, as they vary according to the temperament or 19 mental capacities of individual followers. The counting of beads, 20 meditation, worship, offering oblations in the sacred fire--all these 21 and such other things are the limbs of religion; they are but the 22 means; and to attain to supreme devotion (Para-Bhakti) or to the 23 highest realisation of Brahman is the pre-eminent end. If you look a 24 little deeper, you will understand what they are fighting about. One 25 says, "If you pray to God facing the East, then you will reach Him."
26 "No," says another, "you will have to sit facing the West, and then 27 only you will see Him." Perhaps someone realised God in 28 meditation, ages ago, by sitting with his face to the East, and his 29 disciples at once began to preach this attitude, asserting that none 30 can ever see God unless he assumes this position. Another party 31 comes forward and inquires, "How is that? Such and such a person 32 realised God while facing the West, and we have seen this 33 ourselves." In this way all these sects have originated. Someone 34 might have attained supreme devotion by repeating the name of the 35 Lord as Hari, and at once it entered into the composition of the 36 Shastra as:

37 {Sanskrit}

38 --"The name of the Lord Hari, the name of the Lord Hari, the name 39 of the Lord Hari alone. Verily, there is no other, no other, no other 40 path than this in the age of Kali."

41 Someone, again, let us suppose, might have attained perfection
42 with the name of Allah, and immediately another creed originated 43 by him began to spread, and so on. But we have to see what is the 44 end to which all these forms of worship and other religious 45 practices are intended to lead. The end is Shraddha. We have not 46 any synonym in our Bengali language to express the Sanskrit word 47 Shraddha. The (Katha) Upanishad says that Shraddha entered into 48 the heart of Nachiketa. Even with the word Ekagrata (one-49 pointedness) we cannot express the whole significance of the word 50 Shraddha. If you meditate on any truth with steadfast devotion and 51 concentration, you will see that the mind is more and more tending

1 onwards to Oneness, i.e. taking you towards the realisation of the 2 absolute Existence-Knowledge-Bliss. The scriptures on Bhakti or 3 Jnana give special advice to men to take up in life the one or the 4 other of such Nishthas (scrupulous persistence) and make it their 5 own. With the lapse of ages, these great truths become distorted 6 and gradually transform themselves into Deshacharas or the 7 prevailing customs of a country. It has happened, not only in India, 8 but in every nation and every society in the world. And the common 9 people, lacking in discriminating, make these the bone of 10 contention and fight among themselves. They have lost sight of the 11 end, and hence sectarianism, quarrels, and fights continue.

12 Disciple: What then is the saving means, Swamiji?

13 Swamiji: That true Shraddha, as of old, has to be brought back 14 again. The weeds have to be taken up by the roots. In every faith 15 and in every path, there are, no doubt, truths which transcend time 16 and space, but a good deal of rubbish has accumulated over them.
17 This has to be cleared away, and the true eternal principles have to 18 be held before the people; and then only, our religion and our 19 country will be really benefited.

20 Disciple: How will that be effected?

21 Swamiji: Why, first of all, we have to introduce the worship of the 22 great saints. Those great-souled ones who have realised the eternal 23 truths are to be presented before the people as the ideals to be 24 followed; as in the case of India--Shri Ramachandra, Shri Krishna, 25 Mahavira, and Shri Ramakrishna, among others. Can you bring in 26 the worship of Shri Ramachandra and Mahavira in this country?
27 Keep aside for the present the Vrindavan aspect of Shri Krishna, 28 and spread far and wide the worship of Shri Krishna roaring the 29 Gita out, with the voice of a lion. And bring into daily use the 30 worship of Shakti--the divine Mother, the source of all power.

31 Disciple: Is the divine play of Shri Krishna with the Gopis of 32 Vrindavan not good, then?

33 Swamiji: Under the present circumstances, that worship is of no 34 good to you. Playing on the flute and so on will not regenerate the 35 country. We now mostly need the idea of a hero with the 36 tremendous spirit of Rajas thrilling through his veins from head to 37 foot--the hero who will dare and die to know the Truth--the hero 38 whose armour is renunciation, whose sword is wisdom. We want 39 now the spirit of the brave warrior in the battlefield of life, and not 40 of the wooing lover who looks upon life as a pleasure-garden!

41 Disciple: Is then the path of love, as depicted in the ideal of the 42 Gopis, false?

43 Swamiji: Who says so? Not I! That is a very superior form of 44 worship (Sadhana). In this age of tremendous attachment to sense-45 pleasure and wealth, very few are able even to comprehend those 46 higher ideals.

47 Disciple: Then are not those who are worshipping God as husband 48 or lover (Madhura) following the proper path?

49 Swamiji: I dare say not. There may be a few honourable exceptions

1 among them, but know, that the greater part of them are possessed 2 of dark Tamasika nature. Most of them are full of morbidity and 3 affected with exceptional weakness. The country must be raised.
4 The worship of Mahavira must be introduced; the Shakti-puja must 5 form a part of our daily practice; Shri Ramachandra must be 6 worshipped in every home. Therein lies your welfare, therein lies 7 the good of the country--there is no other way.

8 Disciple: But I have heard that Bhagavan Shri Ramakrishna used to 9 sing the name of God very much?

10 Swamiji: Quite so, but his was a different case. What comparison 11 can there be between him and ordinary men? He practised in his 12 life all the different ideals of religion to show that each of them 13 leads but to the One Truth. Shall you or I ever be able to do all that 14 he has done? None of us has understood him fully. So, I do not 15 venture to speak about him anywhere and everywhere. He only 16 knows what he himself really was; his frame was a human one only, 17 but everything else about him was entirely different from others.

18 Disciple: Do you, may I ask, believe him to be an Avatara
19 (Incarnation of God)?

20 Swamiji: Tell me first--what do you mean by an Avatara?

21 Disciple: Why, I mean one like Shri Ramachandra, Shri Krishna, 22 Shri Gauranga, Buddha, Jesus, and others.

23 Swamiji: I know Bhagavan Shri Ramakrishna to be even greater 24 than those you have just named. What to speak of believing, which 25 is a petty thing--I know ! Let us, however, drop the subject now; 26 more of it another time.

27 After a pause Swamiji continued: To re-establish the Dharma, there 28 come Mahapurushas (great teachers of humanity), suited to the 29 needs of the times and society. Call them what you will--either 30 Mahapurushas or Avataras--it matters little. They reveal, each in his 31 own life, the ideal. Then, by degrees, shapes are moulded in their 32 matrices--MEN are made! Gradually, sects arise and spread. As 33 time goes on, these sects degenerate, and similar reformers come 34 again. This has been the law flowing in uninterrupted succession, 35 like a current, down the ages.

36 Disciple: Why do you not preach Shri Ramakrishna as an Avatara?
37 You have, indeed, power, eloquence, and everything else needed to 38 do it.

39 Swamiji: Truly, I tell you, I have understood him very little. He 40 appears to me to have been so great that, whenever I have to speak 41 anything of him, I am afraid lest I ignore or explain away the truth, 42 lest my little power does not suffice, lest in trying to extol him I 43 present his picture by painting him according to my lights and 44 belittle him thereby!

45 Disciple: But many are now preaching him as an Avatara.

46 Swamiji: Let them do so if they like. They are doing it in the light in 47 which they have understood him. You too can go and do the same, if 48 you have understood him.

1 Disciple: I cannot even grasp you, what to say of Shri Ramakrishna!
2 I should consider myself blessed in this life if I get a little of your 3 grace.

9 Disciple: Pray, Swamiji, if the One Brahman is the only Reality, why 10 then exists all this differentiation in the world?

11 Swamiji: Are you not considering this question from the point of 12 view of phenomenal existence? Looking from the phenomenal side 13 of existence, one can, through reasoning and discrimination, 14 gradually arrive at the very root of Unity. But if you were firmly 15 established in that Unity, how from that standpoint, tell me, could 16 you see this differentiation?

17 Disciple: True, if I had existed in the Unity, how should I be able to 18 raise this question of "why"? As I put this question, it is already 19 taken for granted that I do so by seeing this diversity.

20 Swamiji: Very well. To enquire about the root of Oneness through 21 the diversity of phenomenal existence is named by the Shastras as 22 Vyatireki reasoning, or the process of arguing by the indirect
23 method, that is, Adhyaropa and Apavada, first taking for granted 24 something that is non-existent or unreal as existing or real, and 25 then showing through the course of reasoning that that is not a 26 substance existing or real. You are talking of the process of arriving 27 at the truth through assuming that which is not-true as true--are 28 you not?

29 Disciple: To my mind, the state of the existing or the seen seems to 30 be self-evident, and hence true, and that which is opposite to it 31 seems, on the other hand, to be unreal.

32 Swamiji: But the Vedas say, "One only without a second". And if in 33 reality there is the One only that exists--the Brahman--then, your 34 differentiation is false. You believe in the Vedas, I suppose?

35 Disciple: Oh, yes, for myself I hold the Vedas as the highest 36 authority; but if, in argument, one does not accept them to be so, 37 one must, in that case, have to be refuted by other means.

38 Swamiji: That also can be done. Look here, a time comes when 39 what you call differentiation vanishes, and we cannot perceive it at 40 all. I have experienced that state in my own life.

41 Disciple: When have you done so?

42 Swamiji: One day in the temple-garden at Dakshineswar Shri 43 Ramakrishna touched me over the heart, and first of all I began to 44 see that the houses--rooms, doors, windows, verandahs--the trees, 45 the sun, the moon--all were flying off, shattering to pieces as it 46 were--reduced to atoms and molecules--and ultimately became 47 merged in the Akasha. Gradually again, the Akasha also vanished,

1 and after that, my consciousness of the ego with it; what happened
2 next I do not recollect. I was at first frightened. Coming back from 3 that state, again I began to see the houses, doors, windows, 4 verandahs, and other things. On another occasion, I had exactly the 5 same realisation by the side of a lake in America.

6 Disciple: Might not this state as well be brought about by a 7 derangement of the brain? And I do not understand what happiness 8 there can be in realising such a state.

9 Swamiji: A derangement of the brain! How can you call it so, when 10 it comes neither as the result of delirium from any disease, nor of 11 intoxication from drinking, nor as an illusion produced by various 12 sorts of queer breathing exercises--but when it comes to a normal 13 man in full possession of his health and wits? Then again, this 14 experience is in perfect harmony with the Vedas. It also coincides 15 with the words of realisation of the inspired Rishis and Acharyas of 16 old. Do you take me, at last, to be a crack-brained man? (smiling).

17 Disciple: Oh, no, I did not mean that of course. When there are to 18 be found hundreds of illustrations about such realisation of Oneness 19 in the Shastras, and when you say that it can be as directly realised 20 as a fruit in the palm of one's hand, and when it has been your own 21 personal experience in life, perfectly coinciding with the words of 22 the Vedas and other Shastras--how dare I say that it is false? Shri 23 Shankaracharya also realising that state has said, "Where is the 24 universe vanished?" and so on.

25 Swamiji: Know--this knowledge of Oneness is what the Shastras 26 speak of as realisation of the Brahman, by knowing which, one gets 27 rid of fear, and the shackles of birth and death break for ever.
28 Having once realised that Supreme Bliss, one is no more 29 overwhelmed by pleasure and pain of this world. Men being 30 fettered by base lust-and-wealth cannot enjoy that Bliss of 31 Brahman.

32 Disciple: If it is so, and if we are really of the essence of the 33 Supreme Brahman, then why do we not exert ourselves to gain that 34 Bliss? Why do we again and again run into the jaws of death, being 35 decoyed by this worthless snare of lust-and-wealth?

36 Swamiji: You speak as if man does not desire to have that Bliss!
37 Ponder over it, and you will see that whatever anyone is doing, he is 38 doing in the hope of gaining that Supreme Bliss. Only, not everyone 39 is conscious of it and so cannot understand it. That Supreme Bliss 40 fully exists in all, from Brahma down to the blade of grass. You are 41 also that undivided Brahman. This very moment you can realise if 42 you think yourself truly and absolutely to be so. It is all mere want 43 of direct perception. That you have taken service and work so hard 44 for the sake of your wife also shows that the aim is ultimately to 45 attain to that Supreme Bliss of Brahman. Being again and again 46 entangled in the intricate maze of delusion and hard hit by sorrows 47 and afflictions, the eye will turn of itself to one's own real nature, 48 the Inner Self. It is owing to the presence of this desire for bliss in 49 the heart, that man, getting hard shocks one after another, turns his 50 eye inwards--to his own Self. A time is sure to come to everyone, 51 without exception, when he will do so--to one it may be in this life,

1 to another, after thousands of incarnations.

2 Disciple: It all depends upon the blessings of the Guru and the 3 grace of the Lord!

4 Swamiji: The wind of grace of the Lord is blowing on, for ever and 5 ever. Do you spread your sail. Whenever you do anything, do it with 6 your whole heart concentrated on it. Think day and night, "I am of 7 the essence of that Supreme Existence-Knowledge-Bliss--what fear 8 and anxiety have I? This body, mind, and intellect are all transient, 9 and That which is beyond these is myself."

10 Disciple: Thoughts like these come only for a while now and then, 11 but quickly vanish, and I think all sorts of trash and nonsense.

12 Swamiji: It happens like that in the initial stage, but gradually it is 13 overcome. But from the beginning, intensity of desire in the mind is 14 needed. Think always, "I am ever-pure, ever-knowing, and ever-15 free; how can I do anything evil? Can I ever be befooled like 16 ordinary men with the insignificant charms of lust and wealth?"
17 Strengthen the mind with such thoughts. This will surely bring real 18 good.

19 Disciple: Once in a while strength of mind comes. But then again I 20 think that if I would appear at the Deputy Magistrateship 21 Examination, wealth and name and fame would come and I should 22 live well and happy.

23 Swamiji: Whenever such thoughts come in the mind, discriminate
24 within yourself between the real and the unreal. Have you not read 25 the Vedanta? Even when you sleep, keep the sword of 26 discrimination at the head of your bed, so that covetousness cannot 27 approach you even in dream. Practising such strength, renunciation 28 will gradually come, and then you will see--the portals of heaven are 29 wide open to you.

30 Disciple: If it is so, Swamiji, how is it then that the texts on Bhakti 31 say that too much of renunciation kills the feelings that make for 32 tenderness?

33 Swamiji: Throw away, I say, texts which teach things like that!
34 Without renunciation, without burning dispassion for sense-objects, 35 without turning away from wealth and lust as from filthy 36 abomination--"{Sanskrit}--never can one attain salvation even in 37 hundreds of Brahma's cycles". Repeating the names of the Lord, 38 meditation, worship, offering libations in sacred fire, penance--all 39 these are for bringing forth renunciation. One who has not gained 40 renunciation, know his efforts to be like unto those of the man who 41 is pulling at the oars all the while that the boat is at anchor.
42 "{Sanskrit}--Neither by progeny nor by wealth, but by renunciation 43 alone some (rare ones) attained immortality" (Kaivalya Upanishad, 44 3).

45 Disciple: Will mere renouncing of wealth and lust accomplish
46 everything?

47 Swamiji: There are other hindrances on the path even after 48 renouncing those two; then, for example, comes name and fame.
49 Very few men, unless of exceptional strength, can keep their

1 balance under that. People shower honours upon them, and various 2 enjoyments creep in by degrees. It is owing to this that three-3 fourths of the Tyagis are debarred from further progress! For 4 establishing this Math and other things, who knows but that I may 5 have to come back again!

6 Disciple: If you say things like that, then we are undone!

7 Swamiji: What fear? "{Sanskrit}--Be fearless, be fearless, be 8 fearless!" You have seen Nag Mahashaya--how even while living the 9 life of a householder, he is more than a Sannyasin! This is very 10 uncommon; I have rarely seen one like him. If anyone wants to be a 11 householder, let him be like Nag Mahashaya. He shines like a 12 brilliant luminary in the spiritual firmament of East Bengal. Ask the 13 people of that part of the country to visit him often; that will do 14 much good to them.

15 Disciple: Nag Mahashaya, it seems, is the living personification of 16 humility in the play of Shri Ramakrishna's divine drama on earth.

17 Swamiji: Decidedly so, without a shadow of doubt! I have a wish to 18 go and see him once. Will you go with me? I love to see fields 19 flooded over with water in the rains. Will you write to him?

20 Disciple: Certainly I will. He is always mad with joy when he hears 21 about you, and says that East Bengal will be sanctified into a place 22 of pilgrimage by the dust of your feet.

23 Swamiji: Do you know, Shri Ramakrishna used to speak of Nag
24 Mahashaya as a "flaming fire"?

25 Disciple: Yes, so I have heard.

26 At the request of Swamiji, the disciple partook of some Prasada 27 (consecrated food), and left for Calcutta late in the evening; he was 28 deeply thinking over the message of fearlessness that he had heard 29 from the lips of the inspired teacher--"I am free!" "I am free!"

XIV

34 Disciple: Shri Ramakrishna used to say, Swamiji, that a man cannot 35 progress far towards religious realisation unless he first 36 relinquishes Kama-Kanchana (lust and greed). If so, what will 37 become of householders? For their whole minds are set on these 38 two things.

39 Swamiji: It is true that the mind can never turn to God until the 40 desire for lust and wealth has gone from it, be the man a 41 householder or a Sannyasin. Know this for a fact, that as long as the 42 mind is caught in these, so long true devotion, firmness, and 43 Shraddha (faith) can never come.

44 Disciple: Where will the householders be, then? What way are they 45 to follow?

46 Swamiji: To satisfy our smaller desires and have done with them for

1 ever, and to relinquish the greater ones by discrimination--that is 2 the way. Without renunciation God can never be realised--
3 {Sanskrit}--even if Brahma himself enjoined otherwise!

4 Disciple: But does renunciation of everything come as soon as one 5 becomes a monk?

6 Swamiji: Sannyasins are at least struggling to make themselves
7 ready for renunciation, whereas householders are in this matter 8 like boatmen who work at their oars while the boat lies at anchor. Is 9 the desire for enjoyment ever appeased? "{Sanskrit}--It increases 10 ever and ever" (Bhagavata, IX xix. 14).

11 Disciple: Why? May not world-weariness come, after enjoying the 12 objects of the senses over and over for a long time?

13 Swamiji: To how many does that come? The mind becomes 14 tarnished by constant contact with the objects of the senses and 15 receives a permanent moulding and impress from them.
16 Renunciation, and renunciation alone, is the real secret, the 17 Mulamantra, of all Realisation.

18 Disciple: But there are such injunctions of the seers in the 19 scriptures as these: "{Sanskrit}--To restrain the five senses while 20 living with one's wife and children is Tapas." "{Sanskrit}--For him 21 whose desires are under control, living in the midst of his family is 22 the same as retiring into a forest for Tapasya."

23 Swamiji: Blessed indeed are those who can renounce Kama-24 Kanchana, living in their homes with their family! But how many 25 can do that?

26 Disciple: But then, what about the Sannyasins? Are they all able to 27 relinquish lust and love for riches fully?

28 Swamiji: As I said just now, Sannyasins are on the path of 29 renunciation, they have taken the field, at least, to fight for the 30 goal; but householders, on the other hand, having no knowledge as 31 yet of the danger that comes through lust and greed, do not even 32 attempt to realise the Self; that they must struggle to get rid of 33 these is an idea that has not yet entered their minds.

34 Disciple: But many of them are struggling for it.

35 Swamiji: Oh, yes, and those who are doing so will surely renounce 36 by degrees; their inordinate attachment for Kama-Kanchana will 37 diminish gradually. But for those who procrastinate, saying, "Oh, 38 not so soon! I shall do it when the time comes", Self-realisation is 39 very far off. "Let me realise the Truth this moment! In this very 40 life!"--these are the words of a hero. Such heroes are ever ready to 41 renounce the very next moment, and to such the scripture says, 42 "{Sanskrit}--The moment you feel disgust for the vanities of the 43 world, leave it all and take to the life of a monk."⁹⁷

44 Disciple: But was not Shri Ramakrishna wont to say, "All these 45 attachments vanish through the grace of God when one prays to 46 Him?"

1 ⁹⁷ ?Jabala Upanishad, 3.
2

1 Swamiji: Yes, it is so, no doubt, through His mercy, but one needs to 2 be pure first before one can receive this mercy--pure in thought, 3 word, and deed; then it is that His grace descends on one.

4 Disciple: But of what necessity is grace to him who can control 5 himself in thought, word, and deed? For then he would be able to 6 develop himself in the path of spirituality by means of his own 7 exertions!

8 Swamiji: The Lord is very merciful to him whom He sees struggling 9 heart and soul for Realisation. But remain idle, without any 10 struggle, and you will see that His grace will never come.

11 Disciple: Everyone longs to be good, yet the mind, for some 12 inscrutable reasons, turns to evil! Does not everyone wish to be 13 good--to be perfect--to realise God?

14 Swamiji: Know them to be already struggling who desire this. God 15 bestows His mercy when this struggle is maintained.

16 Disciple: In the history of the Incarnations, we find many persons 17 who, we should say, had led very dissipated lives and yet were able 18 to realise God without much trouble and without performing any 19 Sadhana or devotion. How is this accounted for?

20 Swamiji: Yes, but a great restlessness must already have come upon 21 them; long enjoyment of the objects of the senses must already 22 have created in them deep disgust. Want of peace must have been 23 consuming their very hearts. So deeply they had already felt this 24 void in their hearts that life even for a moment had seemed 25 unbearable to them unless they could gain that peace which follows 26 in the train of the Lord's mercy. So God was kind to them. This 27 development took place in them direct from Tamas to Sattva.

28 Disciple: Then, whatever was the path, they may be said to have 29 realised God truly in that way?

30 Swamiji: Yes, why not? But is it not better to enter into a mansion 31 by the main entrance than by its doorway of dishonour?

32 Disciple: No doubt that is true. Yet, the point is established that 33 through mercy alone one can realise God.

34 Swamiji: Oh, yes, that one can, but few indeed are there who do so!

35 Disciple: It appears to me that those who seek to realise God by 36 restraining their senses and renouncing lust and wealth hold to the 37 (free-will) theory of self-exertion and self-help; and that those who 38 take the name of the Lord and depend on Him are made free by the 39 Lord Himself of all worldly attachments, and led by Him to the 40 supreme stage of realisation.

41 Swamiji: True, those are the two different standpoints, the former 42 held by the Jnanis, and the latter by the Bhaktas. But the ideal of 43 renunciation is the keynote of both.

44 Disciple: No doubt about that! But Shri Girish Chandra Ghosh⁹⁸

1 ⁹⁸ ?The great Bengali actor-dramatist, a staunch devotee of Shri
2 Ramakrishna.
3

1 once said to me that there could be no condition in God's mercy;
2 there could be no law for it! If there were, then it could no longer
3 be termed mercy. The realm of grace or mercy must transcend all 4 law.

5 Swamiji: But there must be some higher law at work in the sphere
6 alluded to by G. C. of which we are ignorant. Those are words, 7 indeed, for the last stage of development, which alone is beyond 8 time, space, and causation. But, when we get there, who will be 9 merciful, and to whom, where there is no law of causation? There 10 the worshipper and the worshipped, the meditator and the object of 11 meditation, the knower and the known, all become one--call that 12 Grace or Brahman, if you will. It is all one uniform homogeneous 13 entity!

14 Disciple: Hearing these words from you, Swamiji, I have come to 15 understand the essence of all philosophy and religion (Vedas and 16 Vedanta); it seems as if I had hitherto been living in the midst of 17 high-sounding words without any meaning.

XV

22 Disciple: Pray, Swamiji, do tell me if there is any relation between 23 the discrimination of food taken and the development of spirituality 24 in man.

25 Swamiji: Yes, there is, more or less.

26 Disciple: Is it proper or necessary to take fish and meat?

27 Swamiji: Ay, take them, my boy! And if there be any harm in doing 28 so, I will take care of that. Look at the masses of our country! What 29 a look of sadness on their faces and want of courage and 30 enthusiasm in their hearts, with large stomachs and no strength in 31 their hands and feet--a set of cowards frightened at every trifle!

32 Disciple: Does the taking of fish and meat give strength? Why do 33 Buddhism and Vaishnavism preach "{Sanskrit}--Non-killing is the 34 highest virtue"?

35 Swamiji: Buddhism and Vaishnavism are not two different things.
36 During the decline of Buddhism in India, Hinduism took from her a 37 few cardinal tenets of conduct and made them her own, and these 38 have now come to be known as Vaishnavism. The Buddhist tenet, 39 "Non-killing is supreme virtue", is very good, but in trying to 40 enforce it upon all by legislation without paying any heed to the 41 capacities of the people at large, Buddhism has brought ruin upon 42 India. I have come across many a "religious heron"⁹⁹ in India, who ⁹⁹ ?Meaning, religious hypocrite. The heron, so the story goes, gave it out to the fishes that he had forsaken his old habit of catching fish and turned highly religious. So he took his stand on the brink of the water and feigned to be meditating, while in reality he was always watching his opportunity to catch the unwary fish.

1 fed ants with sugar, and at the same time would not hesitate to 2 bring ruin on his own brother for the sake of "filthy lucre"!

3 Disciple: But in the Vedas as well as in the laws of Manu, there are 4 injunctions to take fish and meat.

5 Swamiji: Ay, and injunctions to abstain from killing as well. For the 6 Vedas enjoin: "{Sanskrit}—Cause no injury to any being"; Manu
7 also says, "{Sanskrit}--Cessation of desire brings great results."
8 Killing and non-killing have both been enjoined, according to the 9 individual capacity, or fitness and adaptability of those who will 10 observe the one practice or the other.

11 Disciple: It is the fashion here nowadays to give up fish and meat as 12 soon as one takes to religion, and to many it is more sinful not to do 13 so than to commit such great sins as adultery. How, do you think, 14 such notions came into existence?

15 Swamiji: What's the use of your knowing how they came, when you 16 see clearly, do you not, that such notions are working ruin to our 17 country and our society? Just see--the people of East Bengal eat 18 much fish, meat, and turtle, and they are much healthier than those 19 of this part of Bengal. Even the rich men of East Bengal have not 20 yet taken to Loochis or Chapatis at night, and they do not suffer 21 from acidity and dyspepsia like us. I have heard that in the villages 22 of East Bengal the people have not the slightest idea of what 23 dyspepsia means!

24 Disciple: Quite so, Swamiji. We never complain of dyspepsia in our 25 part of the country. I first heard of it after coming to these parts. We 26 take fish with rice, mornings and evenings.

27 Swamiji: Yes, take as much of that as you can, without fearing
28 criticism. The country has been flooded with dyspeptic Babajis 29 living on vegetables only. That is no sign of Sattva, but of deep 30 Tamas--the shadow of death. Brightness in the face, undaunted 31 enthusiasm in the heart, and tremendous activity--these result from 32 Sattva; whereas idleness, lethargy, inordinate attachment, and 33 sleep are the signs of Tamas.

34 Disciple: But do not fish and meat increase Rajas in man?

35 Swamiji: That is what I want you to have. Rajas is badly needed just 36 now! More than ninety per cent of those whom you now take to be 37 men with the Sattva quality are only steeped in the deepest Tamas.
38 Enough if you find one-sixteenth of them to be really Sattvika! What 39 we want now is an immense awakening of Rajasika energy, for the 40 whole country is wrapped in the shroud of Tamas. The people of 41 this land must be fed and clothed--must be awakened--must be 42 made more fully active. Otherwise they will become inert, as inert 43 as trees and stones. So, I say, eat large quantities of fish and meat, 44 my boy!

45 Disciple: Does a liking for fish and meat remain when one has fully 46 developed the Sattva quality?

47 Swamiji: No, it does not. All liking for fish and meat disappears 48 when pure Sattva is highly developed, and these are the signs of its 49 manifestation in a soul: sacrifice of everything for others, perfect

1 non-attachment to lust and wealth, want of pride and egotism. The 2 desire for animal food goes when these things are seen in a man.
3 And where such indications are absent, and yet you find men siding 4 with the non-killing party, know it for a certainty that here there is 5 either hypocrisy or a show of religion. When you yourself come to 6 that stage of pure Sattva, give up fish and meat, by all means.

7 Disciple: In the Chhandogya Upanishad (VII. xxvi. 2) there is this 8 passage, "{Sanskrit}--Through pure food the Sattva quality in a 9 man becomes pure."

10 Swamiji: Yes, I know. Shankaracharya has said that the word Ahara 11 there means "objects of the senses", whereas Shri Ramanuja has 12 taken the meaning of Ahara to be "food". In my opinion we should 13 take that meaning of the word which reconciles both these points of 14 view. Are we to pass our lives discussing all the time about the 15 purity and impurity of food only, or are we to practise the 16 restraining of our senses? Surely, the restraining of the senses is 17 the main object; and the discrimination of good and bad, pure and 18 impure foods, only helps one, to a certain extent, in gaining that 19 end. There are, according to our scriptures, three things which 20 make food impure: (1) Jati-dosha or natural defects of a certain 21 class of food, like onions, garlic, etc.; (2) Nimitta-dosha or defects 22 arising from the presence of external impurities in it, such as dead 23 insects, dust, etc. that attach to sweetmeats bought from shops; (3) 24 Ashraya-dosha or defects that arise by the food coming from evil 25 sources, as when it has been touched and handled by wicked
26 persons. Special care should be taken to avoid the first and second 27 classes of defects. But in this country men pay no regard just to 28 these two, and go on fighting for the third alone, the very one that 29 none but a Yogi could really discriminate! The country from end to 30 end is being bored to extinction by the cry, "Don't touch", "Don't 31 touch", of the non-touchism party. In that exclusive circle of theirs, 32 too, there is no discrimination of good and bad men, for their food 33 may be taken from the hands of anyone who wears a thread round 34 his neck and calls himself a Brahmin! Shri Ramakrishna was quite 35 unable to take food in this indiscriminate way from the hands of any 36 and all. It happened many a time that he would not accept food 37 touched by a certain person or persons, and on rigorous 38 investigation it would turn out that these had some particular stain 39 to hide. Your religion seems nowadays to be confined to the 40 cooking-pot alone. You put on one side the sublime truths of religion 41 and fight, as they say, for the skin of the fruit and not for the fruit 42 itself!

43 Disciple: Do you mean, then, that we should eat the food handled by 44 anyone and everyone?

45 Swamiji: Why so? Look here. You being a Brahmin of a certain 46 class, say, of the Bhattacharya class, why should you not eat rice 47 cooked by Brahmins of all classes? Why should you, who belong to 48 the Rarhi section, object to taking rice cooked by a Brahmin of the 49 Barendra section, or why should a Barendra object to taking your 50 rice? Again, why should not the other subcastes in the west and 51 south of India, e.g. the Marathi, Telangi, Kanouji, do the same? Do 52 you not see that hundreds of Brahmins and Kayasthas in Bengal

1 now go secretly to eat dainties in public restaurants, and when they 2 come out of those places pose as leaders of society and frame rules 3 to support don't-touchism. Must our society really be guided by 4 laws dictated by such hypocrites? No, I say. On the contrary we 5 must turn them out. The laws laid down by the great Rishis of old 6 must be brought back and be made to rule supreme once more.
7 Then alone can national well-being be ours.

8 Disciple: Then do not the laws laid down by the Rishis rule and 9 guide our present society?

10 Swamiji: Vain delusion! Where indeed is that the case nowadays?
11 Nowhere have I found the laws of the Rishis current in India, even 12 when during my travels I searched carefully and thoroughly. The 13 blind and not unoften meaningless customs sanctioned by the 14 people, local prejudices and ideas, and the usages and ceremonials 15 prevalent amongst women, are what really govern society
16 everywhere! How many care to read the Shastras or to lead society 17 according to their ordinances after careful study?

18 Disciple: What are we to do, then?

19 Swamiji: We must revive the old laws of the Rishis. We must initiate 20 the whole people into the codes of our old Manu and Yajnavalkya, 21 with a few modifications here and there to adjust them to the 22 changed circumstances of the time. Do you not see that nowhere in 23 India now are the original four castes (Chaturvarnya) to be found?
24 We have to redivide the whole Hindu population, grouping it under 25 the four main castes, of Brahmins, Kshatriyas, Vaishyas, and 26 Shudras, as of old. The numberless modern subdivisions of the 27 Brahmins that split them up into so many castes, as it were, have to 28 be abolished and a single Brahmin caste to be made by uniting 29 them all. Each of the three remaining castes also will have to be 30 brought similarly into single groups, as was the case in Vedic times.
31 Without this will the Motherland be really benefited by your simply 32 crying as you do nowadays, "We won't touch you!"; "We won't take 33 him back into our caste!"; Never, my boy!

SAYINGS AND UTTERANCES

1. Man is born to conquer nature and not to follow it.
2. When you think you are a body, you are apart from the universe; when you think you are a soul, you are a spark from the great Eternal Fire; when you think you are the Atman (Self), you are All.
3. The will is not free--it is a phenomenon bound by cause and effect--but there is something behind the will which is free.
4. Strength is in goodness, in purity.
5. The universe is--objectified God.
6. You cannot believe in God until you believe in yourself.
7. The root of evil is in the illusion that we are bodies. This, if any, is the original sin.
8. One party says thought is caused by matter, and the other says matter is caused by thought. Both statements are wrong; matter and thought are coexistent. There is a third something of which both matter and thought are products.
9. As particles of matter combine in space, so mind-waves combine in time.
10. To define God is--grinding the already ground; for He is the only being we know.
11. Religion is the idea which is raising the brute unto man, and man unto God.
12. External nature is only internal nature writ large.
13. The motive is the measure of your work. What motive can be higher than that you are God, and that the lowest man is also God?
14. The observer in the psychic world needs to be very strong and scientifically trained.
15. To believe that mind is all, that thought is all is only a higher materialism.
16. This world is the great gymnasium where we come to make ourselves strong.
17. You cannot teach a child any more than you can grow a plant. All you can do is on the negative side--you can only help. It is a manifestation from within; it develops its own nature--you can only take away obstructions.
18. As soon as you make a sect, you protest against universal brotherhood. Those who really feel universal brotherhood do not talk much, but their very actions speak aloud.
19. Truth can be stated in a thousand different ways, yet each

1 one can be true.

2 20. You have to grow from inside out. None can teach you, 3 none can make you spiritual. There is no other teacher but your 4 own soul.

5 21. If in an infinite chain a few links can be explained, by the 6 same method all can be explained.

7 22. That man has reached immortality who is disturbed by 8 nothing material.

9 23. Everything can be sacrificed for truth, but truth cannot be 10 sacrificed for anything.

11 24. The search for truth is the expression of strength--not the 12 groping of a weak, blind man.

13 25. God has become man; man will become God again.

14 26. It is child's talk that a man dies and goes to heaven. We 15 never come nor go. We are where we are. All the souls that have 16 been, are, and will be, are on one geometrical point.

17 27. He whose book of the heart has been opened needs no 18 other books. Their only value is to create desire in us. They are 19 merely the experiences of others.

20 28. Have charity towards all beings. Pity those who are in 21 distress. Love all creatures. Do not be jealous of anyone. Look not 22 to the faults of others.

23 29. Man never dies, nor is he ever born; bodies die, but he 24 never dies.

25 30. No one is born into a religion, but each one is born for a
26 religion.

27 31. There is really but one Self in the universe, all else is but 28 Its manifestations.

29 32. All the worshippers are divided into the common masses 30 and the brave few.

31 33. If it is impossible to attain perfection here and now, there 32 is no proof that we can attain perfection in any other life.

33 34. If I know one lump of clay perfectly, I know all the clay
34 there is. This is the knowledge of principles, but their adaptations 35 are various. When you know yourself you know all.

1 35. Personally I take as much of the Vedas as agrees with 2 reason. Parts of the Vedas are apparently contradictory. They are 3 not considered as inspired in the Western sense of the word, but as 4 the sum total of the knowledge of God, omniscience. This 5 knowledge comes out at the beginning of a cycle and manifests 6 itself; and when the cycle ends, it goes down into minute form.
7 When the cycle is projected again, that knowledge is projected 8 again with it. So far the theory is all right. But that only these books 9 which are called the Vedas are His knowledge is mere sophistry.
10 Manu says in one place that that part of the Vedas which agrees 11 with reason is the Vedas, and nothing else. Many of our 12 philosophers have taken this view.

13 36. Of all the scriptures of the world it is the Vedas alone that 14 declare that even the study of the Vedas is secondary. The real 15 study is "that by which we realise the Unchangeable". And that is 16 neither reading, nor believing, nor reasoning, but superconscious 17 perception, or Samadhi.

18 37. We have been low animals once. We think they are 19 something different from us. I hear, Western people say, "The world 20 was created for us." If tigers could write books, they would say, 21 man was created for them and that man is a most sinful animal, 22 because he does not allow him (the tiger) to catch him easily. The 23 worm that crawls under your feet today is a God to be.

24 38. "I should very much like our women to have your 25 intellectuality, but not if it must be at the cost of purity", said Swami 26 Vivekananda in New York. "I admire you for all that you know, but I 27 dislike the way that you cover what is bad with roses and call it 28 good. Intellectuality is not the highest good. Morality and 29 spirituality are the things for which we strive. Our women are not 30 so learned, but they are more pure.

31 "To all women every man save her husband should be as her 32 son. To all men every woman save his own wife should be as his 33 mother. When I look about me and see what you call gallantry, my 34 soul is filled with disgust. Not until you learn to ignore the question 35 of sex and to meet on a ground of common humanity will your 36 women really develop. Until then they are playthings, nothing more.
37 All this is the cause of divorce. Your men bow low and offer a chair, 38 but in another breath they offer compliments. They say, 'Oh, 39 madam, how beautiful are your eyes!' What right have they to do 40 this? How dare a man venture so far, and how can you women 41 permit it? Such things develop the less noble side of humanity. They 42 do not tend to nobler ideals.

43 "We should not think that we are men and women, but only 44 that we are human beings, born to cherish and to help one another.
45 No sooner are a young man and a young woman left alone than he 46 pays compliments to her, and perhaps before he takes a wife, he 47 has courted two hundred women. Bah! If I belonged to the 48 marrying set, I could find a woman to love without all that!

49 "When I was in India and saw these things from the outside, I
50 was told it was all right, it was mere pleasantry, and I believed it.
51 But I have travelled since then, and I know it is not right. It is

1 wrong, only you of the West shut your eyes and call it good. The 2 trouble with the nations of the West is that they are young, foolish, 3 fickle, and wealthy. What mischief can come of one of these 4 qualities; but when all three, all four, are combined, beware!"

5 But severe as the Swami was upon all, Boston received the 6 hardest blow:

7 "Of all, Boston is the worst. There the women are all faddists, 8 all fickle, merely bent on following something new and strange."

9 39. "Where is the spirituality one would expect in a country", 10 he said in America, "that is so boastful of its civilisation?"

11 40. "Here" and "hereafter" are words to frighten children. It 12 is all "here". To live and move in God, even here, even in this body, 13 all self should go out, all superstition should be banished. Such 14 persons live in India. Where are such in this country (America)?
15 Your preachers speak against dreamers. The people of this country 16 would be better off if there were more dreamers. There is a good 17 deal of difference between dreaming and the brag of the nineteenth 18 century. The whole world is full of God and not of sin. Let us help 19 one another, let us love one another.

20 41. Let me die a true Sannyasin as my Master did, heedless 21 of money, of women, and of fame! And of these the most insidious is 22 the love of fame!

23 42. I have never spoken of revenge, I have always spoken of 24 strength. Do we dream of revenging ourselves on this drop of sea-25 spray? But it is a great thing to a mosquito!

26 43. "This is a great land," said Swamiji on one occasion in 27 America, "but I would not like to live here. Americans think too 28 much of money. They give it preference over anything else. Your 29 people have much to learn. When your nation is as old as ours, you 30 will be wiser."

31 44. It may be that I shall find it good to get outside of my 32 body--to cast it off like a disused garment. But I shall not cease to 33 work! I shall inspire men everywhere, until the world shall know 34 that it is one with God.

35 45. All that I am, all that the world itself will some day be, is 36 owing to my Master, Shri Ramakrishna, who incarnated and 37 experienced and taught this wonderful unity which underlies 38 everything, having discovered it alike in Hinduism, in Islam, and in 39 Christianity.

40 46. Give the organ of taste a free rein, and the other organs
41 will also run on unbridled.

42 47. Jnana, Bhakti, Yoga and Karma--these are the four paths 43 which lead to salvation. One must follow the path for which one is 44 best suited; but in this age special stress should be laid on Karma-
45 Yoga.

46 48. Religion is not a thing of imagination but of direct 47 perception. He who has seen even a single spirit is greater than 48 many a book-learned Pandit.

1 49. Once Swamiji was praising someone very much; at this,
2 one sitting near by said to him, "But he does not believe in you."
3 Hearing this, Swamiji at once replied: "Is there any legal affidavit 4 that he should have to do so? He is doing good work, and so he is 5 worthy of praise."

6 50. In the domain of true religion, book-learning has no right 7 to enter.

8 51. The downfall of a religious sect begins from the day that 9 the worship of the rich enters into it.

10 52. If you want to do anything evil, do it before the eyes of 11 your superiors.

12 53. By the grace of the Guru, a disciple becomes a Pandit 13 (scholar) even without reading books.

14 54. There is no sin nor virtue: there is only ignorance. By 15 realisation of non-duality this ignorance is dispelled.

16 55. Religious movements come in groups. Each one of them
17 tries to rear itself above the rest. But as a rule only one of them 18 really grows in strength, and this, in the long run, swallows up all 19 the contemporary movements.

20 56. When Swamiji was at Ramnad, he said in the course of a 21 conversation that Shri Rama was the Paramatman and that Sita was 22 the Jivatman, and each man's or woman's body was the Lanka
23 (Ceylon). The Jivatman which was enclosed in the body, or captured 24 in the island of Lanka, always desired to be in affinity with the 25 Paramatman, or Shri Rama. But the Rakshasas would not allow it, 26 and Rakshasas represented certain traits of character. For instance, 27 Vibhishana represented Sattva Guna; Ravana, Rajas; and 28 Kumbhakarna, Tamas. Sattva Guna means goodness; Rajas means 29 lust and passions, and Tamas darkness, stupor, avarice, malice, and 30 its concomitants. These Gunas keep back Sita, or Jivatman, which is 31 in the body, or Lanka, from joining Paramatman, or Rama. Sita, thus 32 imprisoned and trying to unite with her Lord, receives a visit from 33 Hanuman, the Guru or divine teacher, who shows her the Lord's 34 ring, which is Brahma-Jnana, the supreme wisdom that destroys all 35 illusions; and thus Sita finds the way to be at one with Shri Rama, 36 or, in other words, the Jivatman finds itself one with the 37 Paramatman.

38 57. A true Christian is a true Hindu, and a true Hindu is a 39 true Christian.

40 58. All healthy social changes are the manifestations of the 41 spiritual forces working within, and if these are strong and well 42 adjusted, society will arrange itself accordingly. Each individual has 43 to work out his own salvation; there is no other way, and so also 44 with nations. Again, the great institutions of every nation are the 45 conditions of its very existence and cannot be transformed by the 46 mould of any other race. Until higher institutions have been 47 evolved, any attempt to break the old ones will be disastrous.
48 Growth is always gradual.

49 It is very easy to point out the defects of institutions, all being

1 more or less imperfect, but he is the real benefactor of humanity 2 who helps the individual to overcome his imperfections under 3 whatever institutions he may live. The individuals being raised, the 4 nation and its institutions are bound to rise. Bad customs and laws 5 are ignored by the virtuous, and unwritten but mightier laws of 6 love, sympathy, and integrity take their place. Happy is the nation 7 which can rise to the necessity of but few law books, and needs no
8 longer to bother its head about this or that institution. Good men 9 rise beyond all laws, and will help their fellows to rise under 10 whatever conditions they live.

11 The salvation of India, therefore, depends on the strength of 12 the individual, and the realisation by each man of the divinity 13 within.

14 59. Spirituality can never be attained until materiality is 15 gone.

16 60. The first discourse in the Gita can be taken allegorically.

17 61. "Swami, you have no idea of time", remarked an impatient
18 American devotee, afraid of missing a steamer. "No," retorted
19 Swamiji calmly, "you live in time; we live in eternity!"

20 62. We are always letting sentiment usurp the place of duty 21 and flatter ourselves that we are acting in response to true love.

22 63. We must get beyond emotionalism if we want the power 23 to renounce. Emotion belongs to the animals. They are creatures of 24 emotion entirely.

25 64. It is not sacrifice of a high order to die for one's young.
26 The animals do that, and just as readily as any human mother ever 27 did. It is no sign of real love to do that; it is merely blind emotion.

28 65. We are for ever trying to make our weakness look like 29 strength, our sentiment like love, our cowardice like courage, and 30 so on.

31 66. Say to your soul in regard to vanities, weakness, etc., 32 "This does not befit thee. This does not befit thee."

33 67. Never loved a husband the wife for the wife's sake or the 34 wife the husband for the husband's sake. It is God in the wife the 35 husband loves, and God in the husband the wife loves. It is God in 36 every one that draws us to the one we love, God in everything and 37 in everybody that makes us love. God is the only love.

38 68. Oh, if only you knew yourselves! You are souls; you are 39 Gods. If ever I feel like blaspheming, it is when I call you man.

40 69. In everyone is God, the Atman; all else is but dream, an 41 illusion.

42 70. If I do not find bliss in the life of the Spirit, shall I seek 43 satisfaction in the life of the senses? If I cannot get nectar; shall I 44 fall back upon ditch water? The bird called Chataka drinks from the 45 clouds only, ever calling as it soars, "Pure water! Pure water!" And 46 no storms or tempests make it falter on wing or descend to drink 47 from the earth.

1 71. Any sect that may help you to realise God is welcome.
2 Religion is the realising of God.

3 72. An atheist can be charitable but not religious. But the 4 religious man must be charitable.

5 73. Everyone makes shipwreck on the rock of would-be 6 Guruism, except those souls that were born to be Gurus.

7 74. Man is a compound of animality, humanity, and divinity.

8 75. The term "social progress" has as much mean ing as "hot 9 ice" or "dark light". There is no such thing, ultimately, as "social 10 progress"!

11 76. Things are not bettered, but we are bettered, by making 12 changes in them.

13 77. Let me help my fellow men; that is all I seek.

14 78. "No", said the Swami, very softly, in answer to a question 15 in New York, "I do not believe in the occult. If a thing be unreal, it is 16 not. What is unreal does not exist. Strange things are natural 17 phenomena. I know them to be matters of science. Then they are 18 not occult to me. I do not believe in occult societies. They do no 19 good, and can never do good."

20 79. There are four general types of men--the rational, the 21 emotional, the mystical, and the worker. For each of these we must 22 provide suitable forms of worship. There comes the rational man, 23 who says, "I care not for this form of worship. Give me the 24 philosophical, the rational--that I can appreciate." So for the 25 rational man is the rational philosophic worship.

26 There comes the worker. He says, "I care not for the worship 27 of the philosopher. Give me work to do for my fellow men." So for 28 him is provided work as the path of worship. As for the mystical and 29 the emotional, we have their respective modes of devotion. All these 30 men have, in religion, the elements of their faith.

31 80. I stand for truth. Truth will never ally itself with 32 falsehood. Even if all the world should be against me, Truth must 33 prevail in the end.

34 81. Wherever you see the most humanitarian ideas fall into 35 the hands of the multitude, the first result you notice is 36 degradation. It is learning and intellect that help to keep things 37 safe. It is the cultured among a community that are the real 38 custodians of religion and philosophy in their purest form. It is that 39 form which serves as the index for the intellectual and social 40 condition of a community.

41 82. "I do not come", said Swamiji on one occasion in America, 42 "to convert you to a new belief. I want you to keep your own belief; I 43 want to make the Methodist a better Methodist; the Presbyterian a 44 better Presbyterian; the Unitarian a better Unitarian. I want to 45 teach you to live the truth, to reveal the light within your own soul."

46 83. Happiness presents itself before man, wearing the crown 47 of sorrow on its head. He who welcomes it must also welcome 48 sorrow.

1 84. He is free, he is great, who turns his back upon the world, 2 who has renounced everything, who has controlled his passion, and 3 who thirsts for peace. One may gain political and social 4 independence, but if one is a slave to his passions and desires, one 5 cannot feel the pure joy of real freedom.

6 85. Doing good to others is virtue (Dharma); injuring others is 7 sin. Strength and manliness are virtue; weakness and cowardice 8 are sin. Independence is virtue; dependence is sin. Loving others is 9 virtue; hating others is sin. Faith in God and in one's own Self is 10 virtue; doubt is sin. Knowledge of oneness is virtue; seeing diversity 11 is sin. The different scriptures only show the means of attaining 12 virtue.

13 86. When, by reasoning, Truth is comprehended by the 14 intellect, then it is realised in the heart, the fountain-head of 15 feeling. Thus the head and the heart become illumined at the same 16 moment; and then only, as says the Upanishad, "The knot of the 17 heart is rent asunder, and all doubts cease" (Munkdaka Upanishad, 18 II.ii.8).

19 When in ancient times this knowledge (Jnana) and this feeling 20 (Bhava) thus blossomed forth simultaneously in the heart of the 21 Rishi, then the Highest Truth become poetic, and then the Vedas 22 and other scriptures were composed. It is for this reason that one 23 finds, in study ing them, that the two parallel lines of Bhava and 24 Jnana have at last met, as it were, in the plane of the Vedas and 25 become combined and inseparable.

26 87. The scriptures of different religions point out different 27 means to attain the ideals of universal love, freedom, manliness, 28 and selfless benevolence. Every religious sect is generally at 29 variance as to its idea of what is virtue and what is vice, and fights 30 with others over the means of attaining virtue and eschewing vice, 31 instead of aiming at realising the end. Every means is helpful more 32 or less, and the Gita (XVIII. 48) says, "Every undertaking is 33 attended with defects as fire with smoke"; so the means will no 34 doubt appear more or less defective. But as we are to attain the 35 highest virtue through the means laid down in our respective 36 scriptures, we should try our best to follow them. Moreover, they 37 should be tempered with reason and discrimination. Thus, as we 38 progress, the riddle of virtue and vice will be solved by itself.

39 88. How many in our country truly understand the Shastras
40 nowadays? They have only learnt such words as Brahman, Maya, 41 Prakriti, and so on, and confuse their heads with them. Setting 42 aside the real meaning and purpose of the Shastras, they fight over 43 the words only. If the Shastras cannot help all men in all conditions 44 at all times, of what use, then, are such Shastras? If the Shastras 45 show the way to the Sannyasins only and not to the householders, 46 then what need has a householder for such one-sided Shastras? If 47 the Shastras can only help men when they give up all work and 48 retire into the forests, and cannot show the way of lighting the lamp 49 of hope in the hearts of men of the workaday world--in the midst of 50 their daily toil, disease, misery, and poverty, in the despondency of 51 the penitent, in the self-reproach of the downtrodden, in the terror

1 of the battlefield, in lust, anger and pleasure, in the joy of victory, in 2 the darkness of defeat, and finally, in the dreaded night of death-- 3 then weak humanity has no need of such Shastras, and such 4 Shastras will be no Shastras at all!

5 89. Through Bhoga (enjoyment) Yoga will come in time. But 6 alas, such is the lot of my countrymen that, not to speak of 7 possessing Yoga, they cannot even have a little Bhoga! Suffering all 8 sorts of indignities they can with the utmost difficulty only meet the 9 barest needs of the body--and even that everyone cannot do! It is 10 strange that such a state of affairs does not disturb our sleep and 11 rouse us to our immediate duties.

12 90. Agitate ever so much for your rights and privileges, but 13 remember that so long as we do not truly elevate ourselves by 14 rousing intensely the feeling of self-respect in the nation, so long 15 our hope of gaining rights and privileges is like the day-dream of 16 Alnascar.

17 91. When a genius of a man with some special great power is 18 born, all the best and the most creative faculties of his whole 19 heredity are drawn towards the making up of his personality and 20 squeezed dry, as it were. It is for this reason that we find that all 21 those who are subsequently born in such a family are either idiots 22 or men of very ordinary calibre, and that in time such a family in 23 many cases becomes extinct.

24 92. If you cannot attain salvation in this life, what proof is 25 there that you can attain it in the life or lives to come?

26 93. While visiting the Taj at Agra he remarked: "If you 27 squeeze a bit of this marble, it will drip drops of royal love and its 28 sorrow." Further he observed, "It takes really six months to study a 29 square inch of its interior works of beauty."

30 94. When the real history of India will be unearthed, it will be 31 proved that, as in matters of religion, so in fine arts, India is the 32 primal Guru of the whole world.

33 95. Speaking of architecture he said: "People say Calcutta is a 34 city of palaces, but the houses look much like so many boxes placed 35 one upon the other! They convey no idea whatever. In Rajputana 36 you can still find much pure Hindu architecture. If you look at a 37 Dharmashala, you will feel as if it calls you with open arms to take 38 shelter within and partake of its unqualified hospitableness. If you 39 look at a temple, you are sure to find a Divine Presence in and 40 about it. If you look about a rural cottage, you will at once be able 41 to comprehend the special meanings of its different portions, and 42 that the whole structure bears evidence to the predominant nature 43 and ideal of the owner thereof. This sort of expressive architecture I 44 have seen nowhere else except in Italy."

REASON, FAITH AND LOVE

[Swamiji had made the home of the Hale family his headquarters during almost all of 1894 before the pivot of his activities moved eastward to the Atlantic Coast. It was on George W. Hale's letter paper and thus, presumably, during one of his stays in the latter's home, that Swamiji jotted down in pencil a series of notes on the subjects of reason, faith, and love, which have recently come to light. Unfortunately the date of the manuscript cannot be accurately determined.]

Reason--has its limits--its base-- its degeneration. The walls round it-- Agnosticism. Atheism. But must not stop
The beyond is acting upon influencing us every moment--the sky the stars acting upon us--even those not seen. Therefore must go beyond--reason alone can't go--finite cannot get at the infinite.

Faith its degeneration when alone--bigotry fanaticism--sectarianism. Narrowing finite therefore cannot get to the infinite Sometimes gain in intensity but loses in extensity--and in bigots & fanatics become worship of his own pride & vanity

Is there no other way--there is Love it never degenerates--peaceful softening ever widening--the universe is too small for its expansiveness.

We cannot define it we can only trace it through its development and describe its surroundings

It is at first--what the gravitation is to the external world--a tendency to unification forms and conventionalities are its death.
Worship through forms--methods--services forms--up to then no love.

When love comes method dies.
Human language and human forms

1 God as father, God as mother, God as 2 the lover--Surata-varadhanam etc. Solomon's Song of 3 Songs--Dependence and independence
4 Love Love--
5 Love the chaste wife--Anasuya Sita--
6 not as hard dry duty but as ever pleasing
7 love--Sita worship--
8 The madness of Love--God intoxicated man
9 The allegory of Radha--misunderstood
10 The restriction more increase-- 11 Lust is the death of love
12 Self is the death of love
13 individual to general
14 Concrete to abstract--to absolute
15 The praying Mohammedan and the girl
16 The Sympathy--Kabir--
17 The Christian nun from whose hands blood came 18 The Mohammedan Saint
19 Every particle seeking its own complement
20 When it finds that it is at rest
21 Every man seeking--happiness--& stability
22 The search is real but the objects are themselves 23 but happiness is coming to them momentary at least 24 through the search of these objects.
25 The only object unchangeable and the only 26 complement of character and aspirations of the human 27 Soul is God.
28 Love is struggle of a human Soul to find its 29 complement its stable equilibrium its infinite rest

29 Vivekananda's papers. He evidently intended to write a book and 30 jotted down some points for the work.]

33 BONDAGE

34

35 1. Desire is infinite, its fulfilment limited. Desire is unlimited 36 in everyone; the power of fulfilment varies. Thus some are more 37 successful than others in life.

38 2. This limitation is the bondage we are struggling against all 39 our lives.

40 3. We desire only the pleasurable, not the painful.

1 4. The objects of desire are all complex--pleasure-giving and 2 pain-bringing mixed up.

3 5. We do not or cannot see the painful parts in objects, we are 4 charmed with only the pleasurable portion; and, thus grasping the 5 pleasurable, we unwittingly draw in the painful.

6 6. At times we vainly hope that in our case only the 7 pleasurable will come, leaving the painful aside, which never 8 happens.

9 7. Our desires also are constantly changing--what we would 10 prize today we would reject tomorrow. The pleasure of the present 11 will be the pain of the future, the loved hated, and so on.

12 8. We vainly hope that in the future life we shall be able to 13 gather in only the pleasurable, to the exclusion of the painful.

14 9. The future is only the extension of the present. Such a 15 thing cannot be!

16 10. Whosoever seeks pleasure in objects will get it, but he 17 must take the pain with it.

18 11. All objective pleasure in the long run must bring pain, 19 because of the fact of change or death.

20 12. Death is the goal of all objects, change is the nature of all 21 objective things.

22 13. As desire increases, so increases the power of pleasure, 23 so the power of pain.

24 14. The finer the organism, the higher the culture--the 25 greater is the power to enjoy pleasure and the sharper are the 26 pangs of pain.

27 15. Mental pleasures are greatly superior to physical joys.
28 Mental pains are more poignant than physical tortures.

29 16. The power of thought, of looking far away into the future, 30 and the power of memory, or recalling the past to the present, make 31 us live in heaven; they make us live in hell also.

32 17. The man who can collect the largest amount of 33 pleasurable objects around him is as a rule too unimaginative to 34 enjoy them. The man of great imagination is thwarted by the 35 intensity of his feeling of loss, or fear of loss, or perception of 36 defects.

37 18. We are struggling hard to conquer pain, succeeding in the 38 attempt, and yet creating new pains at the same time.

39 19. We achieve success, and we are overthrown by failure; 40 we pursue pleasure and we are pursued by pain.

41 20. We say we do, we are made to do. We say we work, we 42 are made to labour. We say we live, we are made to die every 43 moment. We are in the crowd, we cannot stop, must go on--it 44 deserves no cheering. Had it not been so, no amount of cheering 45 would make us undertake all this pain and misery for a grain of 46 pleasure--which, alas, in most cases is only a hope!

1 21. Our pessimism is a dread reality, our optimism is a faint
2 cheering, making the best of a bad job.

4 II

5 THE LAW

6
7 1. The law is never separate from the phenomena, the 8 principle from the person.

9 2. The law is the method of action or poise of every single 10 phenomenon within its scope.

11 3. We get our knowledge of law from the massing and 12 welding of changes that occur. We never see law beyond these 13 changes. The idea of law as something separate from phenomena is 14 a mental abstraction, a convenient use of words and nothing more.
15 Law is a part of every change within its range, a manner which 16 resides in the things governed by the law. The power resides in the 17 things, is a part of our idea of that thing--its action upon something 18 else is in a certain manner--this is our law.

19 4. Law is in the actual state of things--it is in how they act 20 towards each other, and not in how they should. It might have been 21 better if fire did not burn or water wet; but that they do--this is the 22 law; and if it is a true law, a fire that does not burn or water that 23 does not wet is neither fire nor water.

24 5. Spiritual laws, ethical laws, social laws, national laws--are 25 laws if they are parts of existing spiritual and human units and the 26 unfailing experience of the action of every unit said to be bound by 27 such laws.

28 6. We, by turn, are made by law and make it. A generalisation 29 of what man does invariably in certain circumstances is a law with 30 regard to man in that particular aspect. It is the invariable, 31 universal human action that is law for man--and which no individual 32 can escape--and yet the summation of the action of each individual 33 is the universal Law. The sum total, or the universal, or the infinite 34 is fashioning the individual, while the individual is keeping by its 35 action the Law alive. Law in this sense is another name for the 36 universal. The universal is dependent upon the individual, the 37 individual dependent upon the universal. It is an infinite made up of 38 finite parts, an infinite of number, though involving the difficulty of 39 assuming an infinity summed up of finites--yet for all practical 40 purposes, it is a fact before us. And as the law, or whole, or the 41 infinite cannot be destroyed--and the destruction of a part of an 42 infinite is an impossibility, as we cannot either add anything to or 43 subtract anything from the infinite--each part persists for ever.

1 7. Laws regarding the materials of which the body of man is 2 composed have been found out, and also the persistence of these 3 materials through time has been shown. The elements which 4 composed the body of a man a hundred thousand years ago have 5 been proved to be still existing in some place or other. The thoughts 6 which have been projected also are living in other minds.

7 8. But the difficulty is to find a law about the man beyond the 8 body.

9 9. The spiritual and ethical laws are not the method of action 10 of every human being. The systems of ethics of morality, even of 11 national laws, are honoured more in the breach than in the 12 observance. If they were laws how could they be broken?

13 10. No man is able to go against the law of nature. How is it 14 that we always complain of his breaking the moral laws, national 15 laws?

16 11. The national laws at best are the embodied will of a 17 majority of the nation--always a state of things wished for, not 18 actually existing.

19 12. The ideal law may be that no man should covet the 20 belongings of others, but the actual law is that a very large number 21 do.

22 13. Thus the word law used in regard to laws of nature has a 23 very different interpretation when applied to ethics and human 24 actions generally.

25 14. Analysing the ethical laws of the world and comparing 26 them with the actual state of things, two laws stand out supreme.
27 The one, that of repelling everything from us--separating ourselves 28 from everyone--which leads to self-aggrandisement even at the cost 29 of everyone else's happiness. The other, that of self-sacrifice--of 30 taking no thought of ourselves--only of others. Both spring from the 31 search for happiness--one, of finding happiness in injuring others 32 and the ability of feeling that happiness in our own senses. The 33 other, of finding happiness in doing good to others--the ability of 34 feeling happy, as it were, through the senses of others. The great 35 and good of the world are those who have the latter power 36 predominating. Yet both these are working side by side conjointly; 37 in almost everyone they are found in mixture, one or the other 38 predominating. The thief steals, perhaps, for someone he loves.

41 THE ABSOLUTE AND THE ATTAINMENT OF 42 FREEDOM

43
44 1. Om Tat Sat--that Being--Knowing--Bliss.

45 (a) The only real Existence, which alone is--everything else
46 exists inasmuch as it reflects that real Existence.

47 (b) It is the only Knower--the only Self-luminous--the Light of 1 consciousness. Everything else shines by light borrowed from It.

2 Everything else knows inasmuch as it reflects Its knowing.
3 (c) It is the only Blessedness--as in It there is no want. It 4 comprehends all--is the essence of all.
5 It is Sat-Chit-Ananda.

1 (d) It has no parts, no attributes, neither pleasure nor pain,
2 nor is it matter nor mind. It is the Supreme, Infinite, Impersonal
3 Self in everything, the Infinite Ego of the Universe.

4 (e) It is the Reality in me, in thee, and in everything-- 5 therefore,

6 "That thou art"--Tattvamasi.

7 2. The same Impersonal is conceived by the mind as the 8 Creator, the Ruler, and the Dissolver of this universe, its material as 9 well as its efficient cause, the Supreme Ruler--the Living, the 10 Loving, the Beautiful, in the highest sense.

11 (a) The Absolute Being is manifested in Its highest in Isvara, 12 or the Supreme Ruler, as the highest and omnipotent Life or 13 Energy.

14 (b) The Absolute Knowledge is manifesting Itself in Its 15 highest as Infinite Love, in the Supreme Lord.

16 (c) The Absolute Bliss is manifested as the Infinite Beautiful, 17 in the Supreme Lord. He is the greatest attraction of the soul.

18 Satyam-Shivam-Sundaram.

19 The Absolute or Brahman, the Sat-Chit-Ananda, is Impersonal
20 and the real Infinite.

21 Every existence from the highest to the lowest, all manifest 22 according to their degree as--energy (in the higher life), attraction 23 (in the higher love), and struggle for equilibrium (in the higher 24 happiness). This highest Energy-Love-Beauty is a person, an 25 individual, the Infinite Mother of this universe--the God of gods--the 26 Lord of lords, omnipresent yet separate from the universe--the Soul 27 of souls, yet separate from every soul--the Mother of this universe, 28 because She has produced it--its Ruler, because She guides it with 29 the greatest love and in the long run brings everything back to 30 Herself. Through Her command the sun and moon shine, the clouds 31 rain, and death stalks upon the earth.

32 She is the power of all causation. She energises every cause 33 unmistakably to produce the effect. Her will is the only law, and as 34 She cannot make a mistake, nature's laws--Her will--can never be 35 changed. She is the life of the Law of Karma or causation. She is 36 the fructifier of every action. Under Her guidance we are 37 manufacturing our lives through our deeds or Karma.

38 Freedom is the motive of the universe, freedom its goal. The 39 laws of nature are the methods through which we are struggling to 40 reach that freedom, under the guidance of Mother. This universal 41 struggle for freedom attains its highest expression in man in the 42 conscious desire to be free.

43 This freedom is attained by the threefold means of--work, 44 worship, and knowledge.

45 (a) Work--constant, unceasing effort to help others and love 46 others.

47 (b) Worship--consists in prayer, praise, and meditation.

1 (c) Knowledge--that follows meditation.

3 THE BELUR MATH: AN APPEAL

5 The success which attended the labours of the disciples of 6 Shri Ramakrishna Paramahansa in diffusing the principles of Hindu 7 religion and obtaining some respect for our much abused faith in 8 the West, gave rise to the hope of training a number of young 9 Sannyasins to carry on the propaganda, both in and out of India.
10 And an attempt is being made to educate a number of young men 11 according to the Vedic principle of students living in touch with the 12 Guru.

13 A Math has already been started on the Ganga near Calcutta, 14 through the kindness of some European and American friends.

15 The work, to produce any visible results in a short time, 16 requires funds and hence this appeal to those who are in sympathy 17 with our efforts.

18 It is intended to extend the operation of the Math, by 19 educating in the Math as many young men as the funds can afford, 20 in both Western science and Indian spirituality, so that in addition to 21 the advantages of a University education, they will acquire a manly 22 discipline by living in contact with their teachers.

23 The central Math near Calcutta will gradually start branches 24 in other parts of the country as men become ready and the means 25 are forthcoming.

26 It is a work which will take time to bring forth any permanent 27 result and requires a great deal of sacrifice on the part of our young 28 men and on those who have the means of helping this work.

29 We believe the men are ready, and our appeal therefore is to 30 those who really love their religion and their country and have the 31 means to show their sympathy practically by helping the cause.

35 THE ADVAITA ASHRAMA, HIMALAYAS

37 In Whom is the Universe, Who is in the Universe, Who is the 38 Universe; in Whom is the Soul, Who is in the Soul, Who is the Soul 39 of Man; knowing Him--and therefore the Universe--as our Self, 40 alone extinguishes all fear, brings an end to misery and leads to 41 Infinite Freedom. Wherever there has been expansion in love or 42 progress in well-being, of individuals or numbers, it has been 43 through the perception, realisation, and the practicalisation of the 44 Eternal Truth--THE ONENESS OF ALL BEINGS. "Dependence is 45 misery. Independence is happiness." The Advaita is the only system 46 which gives unto man complete possession of himself, takes off all

1 dependence and its associated superstitions, thus making us brave
2 to suffer, brave to do, and in the long run attain to Absolute
3 Freedom.

4 Hitherto it has not been possible to preach this Noble Truth 5 entirely free from the settings of dualistic weakness; this alone, we 6 are convinced, explains why it has not been more operative and 7 useful to mankind at large.

8 To give this ONE TRUTH a freer and fuller scope in elevating 9 the lives of individuals and leavening the mass of mankind, we start 10 this Advaita Ashrama on the Himalayan heights, the land of its first 11 expiration.

12 Here it is hoped to keep Advaita free from all superstitions
13 and weakening contaminations. Here will be taught and practised 14 nothing but the Doctrine of Unity, pure and simple; and though in 15 entire sympathy with all other systems, this Ashrama is dedicated 16 to Advaita and Advaita alone.

17 18 19 THE RAMAKRISHNA HOME OF SERVICE 20 VARANASI: AN APPEAL

21
22 Dear__

23 We beg your acceptance of the past year's Report of the 24 Ramakrishna Home of Service, Varanasi, embodying a short 25 statement of our humble efforts towards the amelioration, however 26 little, of the miserable state into which a good many of our fellow-27 beings, generally old men and women, are cast in this city.

28 In these days of intellectual awakening and steadily asserting 29 public opinion, the holy places of the Hindus, their condition, and 30 method of work have not escaped the keen eye of criticism; and this 31 city, being the holy of holies to all Hindus, has not failed to attract 32 its full share of censure.

33 In other sacred places people go to purify themselves from 34 sin, and their connection with these places is casual, and of a few 35 days' duration. In this, the most ancient and living centre of Aryan 36 religious activity, there come men and women, and as a rule, old 37 and decrepit, waiting to pass unto Eternal Freedom, through the 38 greatest of all sanctifications, death under the shadow of the temple 39 of the Lord of the universe.

40 And then there are those who have renounced everything for 41 the good of the world and have for ever lost the helping hands of 42 their own flesh and blood and childhood's associations.

43 They too are overtaken by the common lot of humanity, 44 physical evil in the form of disease.

45 It may be true that some blame attaches to the management 46 of the place. It may be true that the priests deserve a good part of 1 the sweeping criticism generally heaped upon them; yet we must 2 not forget the great truth--like people, like priests. If the people 3 stand by with folded hands and watch the swift current of misery 4 rushing past their doors, dragging men, women and children, the 5 Sannyasin and the householder into one common whirlpool of 6 helpless suffering, and make not the least effort to save any from 7 the current, only waxing eloquent at the misdoings of the priests of 8 the holy places, not one particle of suffering can ever be lessened, 9 not one ever be helped.

10 Do we want to keep up the faith of our forefathers in the 11 efficacy of the Eternal City of Shiva towards salvation?

12 If we do, we ought to be glad to see the number of those 13 increase from year to year who come here to die.

14 And blessed be the name of the Lord that the poor have this 15 eager desire for salvation, the same as ever.

16 The poor who come here to die have voluntarily cut 17 themselves off from any help they could have received in the places 18 of their birth, and when disease overtakes them, their condition we 19 leave to your imagination and to your conscience as a Hindu to feel 20 and to rectify.

21 Brother, does it not make you pause and think of the 22 marvellous attraction of this wonderful place of preparation for final 23 rest? Does it not strike you with a mysterious sense of awe--this 24 age-old and never-ending stream of pilgrims marching to salvation 25 through death?

26 If it does--come and lend us a helping hand.

27 Never mind if your contribution is only a mite, your help only 28 a little; blades of grass united into a rope will hold in confinement 29 the maddest of elephants--says the old proverb.

30 Ever yours in the Lord of the universe,

31 Vivekananda

32 33 34 WHO KNOWS HOW MOTHER PLAYS!

35
36 Perchance a prophet thou--
37 Who knows? Who dares touch
38 The depths where Mother hides
39 Her silent failless bolts!

40
41 Perchance the child had glimpse
42 Of shades, behind the scenes,
43 With eager eyes and strained,
44 Quivering forms--ready
45 To jump in front and be 46 Events, resistless, strong.

1 Who knows but Mother, how,
2 And where, and when, they come?

3
4 Perchance the shining sage
5 Saw more than he could tell;
6 Who knows, what soul, and when,
7 The Mother makes Her throne?

8
9 What law would freedom bind?
10 What merit guide Her will,
11 Whose freak is greatest order,
12 Whose will resistless law?

13
14 To child may glories ope
15 Which father never dreamt;
16 May thousandfold in daughter
17 Her powers Mother store.

20 TO THE FOURTH OF JULY

21 [It is well known that Swami Vivekananda's death (or 22 resurrection, as some of us would prefer to call it!) took place on 23 the 4th of July, 1902. On the 4th of July, 1898, he was travelling with 24 some American disciples in Kashmir, and as part of a domestic 25 conspiracy for the celebration of the day--the anniversary of the 26 American Declaration of Independence--he prepared the following 27 poem, to be read aloud at the early breakfast. The poem itself fell to 28 the keeping of Dhira Mata.]

29
30 Behold, the dark clouds melt away,
31 That gathered thick at night, and hung
32 So like a gloomy pall above the earth!
33 Before thy magic touch, the world
34 Awakes. The birds in chorus sing.
35 The flowers raise their star-like crowns--
36 Dew-set, and wave thee welcome fair.
37 The lakes are opening wide in love
38 Their hundred thousand lotus-eyes
39 To welcome thee, with all their depth.
40 All hail to thee, thou Lord of Light!
41 A welcome new to thee, today,
42 O Sun! Today thou sheddest Liberty !

43
44 Bethink thee how the world did wait,
45 And search for thee, through time and clime.
46 Some gave up home and love of friends,
47 And went in quest of thee, self-banished,

1 Through dreary oceans, through primeval forests,
2 Each step a struggle for their life or death;
3 Then came the day when work bore fruit,
4 And worship, love, and sacrifice,
5 Fulfilled, accepted, and complete.
6 Then thou, propitious, rose to shed
7 The light of Freedom on mankind.

8
9 Move on, O Lord, in thy resistless path!
10 Till thy high noon o'erspreads the world.
11 Till every land reflects thy light,
12 Till men and women, with uplifted head, 13 Behold their shackles broken, and 14 Know, in springing joy, their life renewed!

17 THE EAST AND THE WEST

19 INTRODUCTION

20
21 Vast and deep rivers--swelling and impetuous--charming 22 pleasure-gardens by the river banks, putting to shame the celestial 23 Nandana-Kanana; amidst these pleasure-gardens rise, towering to 24 the sky, beautiful marble palaces, decorated with the most exquisite 25 workmanship of fine art; on the sides, in front, and behind, clusters 26 of huts, with crumbling mud-walls and dilapidated roofs, the 27 bamboos of which, forming their skeletons, as it were, are exposed 28 to view; moving about here and there emaciated figures of young 29 and old in tattered rags, whose faces bear deep-cut lines of the 30 despair and poverty of hundreds of years; cows, bullocks, buffaloes 31 everywhere--ay, the same melancholy look in their eyes, the same 32 feeble physique; on the wayside refuse and dirt: This is our present-33 day India!

34 Worn-out huts by the very side of palaces, piles of refuse in 35 the near proximity of temples, the Sannyasin clad with only a little 36 loin-cloth, walking by the gorgeously dressed, the pitiful gaze of 37 lustreless eyes of the hunger-stricken at the well-fed and the amply-38 provided: This is our native land!

39 Devastation by violent plague and cholera; malaria eating 40 into the very vitals of the nation; starvation and semi-starvation as 41 second nature; death-like famine often dancing its tragic dance; the 42 Kurukshetra (battlefield) of malady and misery, the huge cremation 43 ground, strewn with the dead bones of lost hope, activity, joy, and 44 courage; and in the midst of that, sitting in august silence, the Yogi, 45 absorbed in deep communion with the Spirit, with no other goal in 46 life than Moksha: This is what meets the eye of the European 47 traveller in India.

1 A conglomeration of three hundred million souls, resembling 2 men only in appearance, crushed out of life by being downtrodden 3 by their own people and foreign nations, by people professing their 4 own religion and by others of foreign faiths; patient in labour and 5 suffering and devoid of initiative like the slave; without any hope, 6 without any past, without any future; desirous only of maintaining 7 the present life anyhow, however precarious; of malicious nature 8 befitting a slave, to whom the prosperity of their fellow-men is 9 unbearable; bereft of Shraddha, like one with whom all hope is 10 dead, faithless; whose weapon of defence is base trickery, 11 treachery, and slyness like that of a fox; the embodiment of 12 selfishness; licking the dust of the feet of the strong, withal dealing 13 a death-blow to those who are comparatively weak; full of ugly, 14 diabolical superstitions which come naturally to those who are 15 weak and hopeless of the future; without any standard of morality 16 as their backbone; three hundred millions of souls such as these are 17 swarming on the body of India like so many worms on a rotten, 18 stinking carcass: This is the picture concerning us, which naturally 19 presents itself to the English official!

20 Maddened with the wine of newly acquired powers; devoid of 21 discrimination between right and wrong; fierce like wild beasts, 22 henpecked, lustful; drenched in liquor, having no idea of chastity or 23 purity, nor of cleanly ways and habits; believing in matter only, with 24 a civilisation resting on matter and its various applications; 25 addicted to the aggrandisement of self by exploiting others'
26 countries, others' wealth, by force, trick, and treachery; having no 27 faith in the life hereafter, whose Atman (Self) is the body, whose 28 whole life is only in the senses and creature comforts: Thus, to the 29 Indian, the Westerner is the veriest demon (Asura).

30 These are the views of observers on both sides--views born of 31 mutual indiscrimination and superficial knowledge or ignorance.
32 The foreigners, the Europeans, come to India, live in palatial
33 buildings in the perfectly clean and healthy quarters of our towns 34 and compare our "native" quarters with their neat and beautifully 35 laid-out cities at home; the Indians with whom they come in contact 36 are only of one class--those who hold some sort of employment 37 under them. And, indeed, distress and poverty are nowhere else to 38 be met with as in India; besides that, there is no gainsaying that 39 dirt and filth are everywhere. To the European mind, it is 40 inconceivable that anything good can possibly be amidst such dirt, 41 such slavery, and such degradation.

42 We, on the other hand, see that the Europeans eat without 43 discrimination whatever they get, have no idea of cleanliness as we 44 have, do not observe caste distinctions, freely mix with women, 45 drink wine, and shamelessly dance at a ball, men and women held 46 in each other's arms: and we ask ourselves in amazement, what 47 good can there be in such a nation?

48 Both these views are derived from without, and do not look 49 within and below the surface. We do not allow foreigners to mix in 50 our society, and we call them Mlechchhas; they also in their turn 51 hate us as slaves and call us "niggers". In both of these views there 52 must be some truth, though neither of the parties has seen the real

1 thing behind the other.

1 With every man, there is an idea; the external man is only the 2 outward manifestation, the mere language of this idea within.
3 Likewise, every nation has a corresponding national idea. This idea 4 is working for the world and is necessary for its preservation. The 5 day when the necessity of an idea as an element for the 6 preservation of the world is over, that very day the receptacle of 7 that idea, whether it be an individual or a nation, will meet
8 destruction. The reason that we Indians are still living, in spite of so 9 much misery, distress, poverty, and oppression from within and 10 without is that we have a national idea, which is yet necessary for 11 the preservation of the world. The Europeans too have a national 12 idea of their own, without which the world will not go on; therefore 13 they are so strong. Does a man live a moment, if he loses all his 14 strength? A nation is the sum total of so many individual men; will a 15 nation live if it has utterly lost all its strength and activity? Why did 16 not this Hindu race die out, in the face of so many troubles and 17 tumults of a thousand years? If our customs and manners are so 18 very bad, how is it that we have not been effaced from the face of 19 the earth by this time? Have the various foreign conquerors spared 20 any pains to crush us out? Why, then, were not the Hindus blotted 21 out of existence, as happened with men in other countries which 22 are uncivilised? Why has not India depopulated and turned into a 23 wilderness? Why, then foreigners would have lost no time to come 24 and settle in India, and till her fertile lands in the same way as they 25 did and are still doing in America, Australia, and Africa! Well, then, 26 my foreigner, you are not so strong as you think yourself to be; it is 27 a vain imagination. First understand that India has strength as well, 28 has a substantial reality of her own yet. Furthermore, understand 29 that India is still living, because she has her own quota yet to give 30 to the general store of the world's civilisation. And you too 31 understand this full well, I mean those of our countrymen who have 32 become thoroughly Europeanised both in external habits and in 33 ways of thought and ideas, and who are continually crying their 34 eyes out and praying to the European to save them--"We are 35 degraded, we have come down to the level of brutes; O ye
36 European people, you are our saviours, have pity on us and raise us 37 from this fallen state!" And you too understand this, who are 38 singing Te Deums and raising a hue and cry that Jesus is come to 39 India, and are seeing the fulfillment of the divine decree in the 40 fullness of time. Oh, dear! No! neither Jesus is come nor Jehovah; 41 nor will they come; they are now busy in saving their own hearths 42 and homes and have no time to come to our country. Here is the 43 selfsame Old Shiva seated as before, the bloody Mother Kali
44 worshipped with the selfsame paraphernalia, the pastoral Shepherd 45 of Love, Shri Krishna, playing on His flute. Once this Old Shiva, 46 rising on His bull and taboring on His Damaru travelled from India, 47 on the one side, to Sumatra, Borneo, Celebes, Australia, as far as 48 the shores of America, and on the other side, this Old Shiva
49 battened His bull in Tibet, China, Japan, and as far up as Siberia, 50 and is still doing the same. The Mother Kali is still exacting Her 51 worship even in China and Japan: it is She whom the Christians 52 metamorphosed into the Virgin Mary, and worship as the mother of 53 Jesus the Christ. Behold the Himalayas! There to the north is

1 Kailas, the main abode of the Old Shiva. That throne the ten-2 headed, twenty-armed, mighty Ravana could not shake--now for the 3 missionaries to attempt the task?--Bless my soul! Here in India will 4 ever be the Old Shiva taboring on his Damaru, the Mother Kali
5 worshipped with animal sacrifice, and the lovable Shri Krishna
6 playing on His flute. Firm as the Himalayas they are; and no 7 attempts of anyone, Christian or other missionaries, will ever be 8 able to remove them. If you cannot bear them--avaunt! For a 9 handful of you, shall a whole nation be wearied out of all patience
10 and bored to death? Why don't you make your way somewhere else 11 where you may find fields to graze upon freely--the wide world is 12 open to you! But no, that they won't do. Where is that strength to do 13 it? They would eat the salt of that Old Shiva and play Him false, 14 slander Him, and sing the glory of a foreign Saviour--dear me! To 15 such of our countrymen who go whimpering before foreigners--"We 16 are very low, we are mean, we are degraded, everything we have is 17 diabolical"--to them we say: "Yes, that may be the truth, forsooth, 18 because you profess to be truthful and we have no reason to 19 disbelieve you; but why do you include the whole nation in that We 20 ? Pray, sirs, what sort of good manner is that?"

21 First, we have to understand that there are not any good 22 qualities which are the privileged monopoly of one nation only. Of 23 course, as with individuals, so with nations, there may be a 24 prevalence of certain good qualities, more or less in one nation than 25 in another.

26 With us, the prominent idea is Mukti; with the Westerners, it 27 is Dharma. What we desire is Mukti; what they want is Dharma.
28 Here the word "Dharma" is used in the sense of the Mimamsakas.
29 What is Dharma? Dharma is that which makes man seek for 30 happiness in this world or the next. Dharma is established on work; 31 Dharma is impelling man day and night to run after and work for 32 happiness.

33 What is Mukti? That which teaches that even the happiness of 34 this life is slavery, and the same is the happiness of the life to come, 35 because neither this world nor the next is beyond the laws of 36 nature; only, the slavery of this world is to that of the next as an 37 iron chain is to a golden one. Again, happiness, wherever it may be, 38 being within the laws of nature, is subject to death and will not last 39 ad infinitum . Therefore man must aspire to become Mukta, he must 40 go beyond the bondage of the body; slavery will not do. This 41 Moksha-path is only in India and nowhere else. Hence is true the 42 oft-repeated saying that Mukta souls are only in India and in no 43 other country. But it is equally true that in future they will be in 44 other countries as well; that is well and good, and a thing of great 45 pleasure to us. There was a time in India when Dharma was 46 compatible with Mukti. There were worshippers of Dharma, such as 47 Yudhishtira, Arjuna, Duryodhana, Bhishma, and Karna, side by 48 side with the aspirants of Mukti, such as Vyasa, Shuka, and Janaka.
49 On the advent of Buddhism, Dharma was entirely neglected, and 50 the path of Moksha alone became predominant. Hence, we read in 51 the Agni Purana, in the language of similes, that the demon

1 Gayasura--that is, Buddha¹⁰⁰--tried to destroy the world by showing
2 the path of Moksha to all; and therefore the Devas held a council
3 and by stratagem set him at rest for ever. However, the central fact 4 is that the fall of our country, of which we hear so much spoken, is 5 due to the utter want of this Dharma. If the whole nation practises 6 and follows the path of Moksha, that is well and good; but is that 7 possible? Without enjoyment, renunciation can never come; first 8 enjoy and then you can renounce. Otherwise, if the whole nation, all 9 of a sudden, takes up Sannyasa, it does not gain what it desires, but 10 it loses what it had into the bargain--the bird in the hand is fled, nor 11 is that in the bush caught. When, in the heyday of Buddhistic 12 supremacy, thousands of Sannyasins lived in every monastery, then 13 it was that the country was just on the verge of its ruin! The 14 Bauddhas, the Christians, the Mussulmans, and the Jains prescribe, 15 in their folly, the same law and the same rule for all. That is a great 16 mistake; education, habits, customs, laws, and rules should be 17 different for different men and nations, in conformity with their 18 difference of temperament. What will it avail, if one tries to make 19 them all uniform by compulsion? The Bauddhas declared, "Nothing 20 is more desirable in life than Moksha; whoever you are, come one 21 and all to take it." I ask, "Is that ever possible?" "You are a 22 householder, you must not concern yourself much with things of 23 that sort; you do your Svadharma (natural duty)"--thus say the 24 Hindu scriptures. Exactly so! He who cannot leap one foot, is going 25 to jump across the ocean to Lanka in one bound! Is it reason? You 26 cannot feed your own family or dole out food to two of your fellow-27 men, you cannot do even an ordinary piece of work for the common 28 good, in harmony with others--and you are running after Mukti! The 29 Hindu scriptures say, "No doubt, Moksha is far superior to Dharma; 30 but Dharma should be finished first of all". The Bauddhas were 31 confounded just there and brought about all sorts of mischief. Non-32 injury is right; "Resist not evil" is a great thing--these are indeed 33 grand principles; but the scriptures say, "Thou art a householder; if 34 anyone smites thee on thy cheek, and thou dost not return him an 35 eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, thou wilt verily be a sinner." 36 Many say, "When one has come to kill you, there is no sin in killing 37 him, even though he be a Brahmin" (Manu, VIII. 350). This is very 38 true, and this is a thing which should not be forgotten. Heroes only 39 enjoy the world. Show your heroism; apply, according to 40 circumstances, the fourfold political maxims of conciliation, bribery, 41 sowing dissensions, and open war, to win over your adversary and 42 enjoy the world--then you will be Dharmika (righteous). Otherwise, 43 you live a disgraceful life if you pocket your insults when you are 44 kicked and trodden down by anyone who takes it into his head to do 45 so; your life is a veritable hell here, and so is the life hereafter. This 46 is what the Shastras say. Do your Svadharma--this is truth, the truth 47 of truths. This is my advice to you, my beloved co-religionists. Of 48 course, do not do any wrong, do not injure or tyrannise over 49 anyone, but try to do good to others as much as you can. But

1 ¹⁰⁰ ?Swamiji afterwards changed this view with reference to 2 Buddha, as is evident from the letter dated Varanasi, the 9th
3 February, 1902, in this volume.
4

1 passively to submit to wrong done by others is a sin--with the 2 householder. He must try to pay them back in their own coin then 3 and there. The householder must earn money with great effort and 4 enthusiasm, and by that must support and bring comforts to his 5 own family and to others, and perform good works as far as 6 possible. If you cannot do that, how do you profess to be a man? You 7 are not a householder even--what to talk of Moksha for you!!

8 We have said before that Dharma is based on work. The 9 nature of the Dharmika is constant performance of action with 10 efficiency. Why, even the opinion of some Mimamsakas is that those 11 parts of the Vedas which do not enjoin work are not, properly 12 speaking, Vedas at all. One of the aphorisms of Jaimini runs thus: 13 "{Sanskrit}--The purpose of the Vedas being work, those parts of 14 the Vedas that do not deal with work miss the mark."

15 "By constant repetition of the syllable Om and by meditating
16 on its meaning, everything can be obtained"; "All sins are washed 17 away by uttering the name of the Lord"; "He gets all, who resigns 18 himself to the Will of God"--yes, these words of the Shastras and the 19 sages are, no doubt, true. But, do you see, thousands of us are, for 20 our whole life, meditating on Om, are getting ecstatic in devotion in 21 the name of the Lord, and are crying, "Thy Will be done, I am fully 22 resigned to Thee!"--and what are they actually getting in return?
23 Absolutely nothing! How do you account for this? The reason lies 24 here, and it must be fully understood. Whose meditation is real and 25 effective? Who can really resign himself to the Will of God? Who can 26 utter with power irresistible, like that of a thunderbolt, the name of 27 the Lord? It is he who has earned Chitta-shuddhi, that is, whose 28 mind has been purified by work, or in other words, he who is the 29 Dharmika.

30 Every individual is a centre for the manifestation of a certain 31 force. This force has been stored up as the resultant of our previous 32 works, and each one of us is born with this force at his back. So 33 long as this force has not worked itself out, who can possibly 34 remain quiet and give up work? Until then, he will have to enjoy or 35 suffer according to the fruition of his good or bad work and will be 36 irresistibly impelled to do work. Since enjoyment and work cannot 37 be given up till then, is it not better to do good rather than bad 38 works--to enjoy happiness rather than suffer misery? Shri 39 Ramprasad¹⁰¹ used to say, "They speak of two works, 'good' and 40 'bad'; of them, it is better to do the good."

41 Now what is that good which is to be pursued? The good for 42 him who desires Moksha is one, and the good for him who wants 43 Dharma is another. This is the great truth which the Lord Shri 44 Krishna, the revealer of the Gita, has tried therein to explain, and 45 upon this great truth is established the Varnashrama¹⁰² system and

1 the doctrine of Svadharma etc. of the Hindu religion.
2 {Sanskrit} (Gita, XII.13.)
3 --"He who has no enemy, and is friendly and compassionate 4 towards all, who is free from the feelings of 'me and mine', even-5 minded in pain and pleasure, and forbearing"--these and other 6 epithets of like nature are for him whose one goal in life is Moksha.
7 {Sanskrit} (Gita, II.3.)
8 --"Yield not to unmanliness, O son of Pritha! Ill doth it befit 9 thee. Cast off this mean faint-heartedness and arise, O scorcher of 10 thine enemies."
11 {Sanskrit} (Gita, XI. 33.)
12 --"Therefore do thou arise and acquire fame. After conquering 13 thy enemies, enjoy unrivalled dominion; verily, by Myself have they 14 been already slain; be thou merely the instrument, O Savyasachin 15 (Arjuna)."

1 In these and similar passages in the Gita the Lord is showing 2 the way to Dharma. Of course, work is always mixed with good and 3 evil, and to work, one has to incur sin, more or less. But what of 4 that? Let it be so. Is not something better than nothing? Is not 5 insufficient food better than going without any? Is not doing work, 6 though mixed with good and evil, better than doing nothing and 7 passing an idle and inactive life, and being like stones? The cow 8 never tells a lie, and the stone never steals, but, nevertheless, the 9 cow remains a cow and the stone a stone. Man steals and man tells 10 lies, and again it is man that becomes a god. With the prevalence of 11 the Sattvika essence, man becomes inactive and rests always in a 12 state of deep Dhyana or contemplation; with the prevalence of the 13 Rajas, he does bad as well as good works; and with the prevalence 14 of the Tamas again, he becomes inactive and inert. Now, tell me, 15 looking from outside, how are we to understand, whether you are in 16 a state wherein the Sattva or the Tamas prevails? Whether we are 17 in a state of Sattvika calmness, beyond all pleasure and pain, and 18 past all work and activity, or whether we are in the lowest Tamasika 19 state, lifeless, passive, dull as dead matter, and doing no work, 20 because there is no power in us to do it, and are, thus, silently and 21 by degrees, getting rotten and corrupted within--I seriously ask you 22 this question and demand an answer. Ask your own mind, and you 23 shall know what the reality is. But, what need to wait for the 24 answer? The tree is known by its fruit. The Sattva prevailing, the 25 man is inactive, he is calm, to be sure; but that inactivity is the 26 outcome of the centralisation of great powers, that calmness is the 27 mother of tremendous energy. That highly Sattvika man, that great 28 soul, has no longer to work as we do with hands and feet--by his 29 mere willing only, all his works are immediately accomplished to 30 perfection. That man of predominating Sattva is the Brahmin, the 31 worshipped of all. Has he to go about from door to door, begging 32 others to worship him? The Almighty Mother of the universe writes 33 with Her own hand, in golden letters on his forehead, "Worship ye 34 all, this great one, this son of Mine", and the world reads and 35 listens to it and humbly bows down its head before him in 36 obedience. That man is really--

37 {Sanskrit} (Gita, XII. 13)

38 --"He who has no enemy, and is friendly and compassionate
39 towards all, who is free from the feelings of 'me and mine', even-40 minded in pain and pleasure, and forbearing." And mark you, those 41 things which you see in pusillanimous, effeminate folk who speak in 42 a nasal tone chewing every syllable, whose voice is as thin as of one 43 who has been starving for a week, who are like a tattered wet rag, 44 who never protest or are moved even if kicked by anybody--those 45 are the signs of the lowest Tamas, those are the signs of death, not 46 of Sattva--all corruption and stench. It is because Arjuna was going 47 to fall into the ranks of these men that the Lord is explaining 48 matters to him so elaborately in the Gita. Is that not the fact? Listen 49 to the very first words that came out of the mouth of the Lord, 50 "{Sanskrit}--Yield not to unmanliness, O Partha! Ill doth it befit 51 thee!" and then later, "{Sanskrit}--Therefore do thou arise and 52 acquire fame." Coming under the influence of the Jains, Buddhas,

1 and others, we have joined the lines of those Tamasika people.
2 During these last thousand years, the whole country is filling the air 3 with the name of the Lord and is sending its prayers to Him; and 4 the Lord is never lending His ears to them. And why should He?
5 When even man never hears the cries of the fool, do you think God 6 will? Now the only way out is to listen to the words of the Lord in 7 the Gita, "{Sanskrit}--Yield not to unmanliness, O Partha!"
8 "{Sanskrit}--Therefore do thou arise and acquire fame."

9 Now let us go on with our subject-matter--the East and the 10 West. First see the irony of it. Jesus Christ, the God of the 11 Europeans, has taught: Have no enemy, bless them that curse you; 12 whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other 13 also; stop all your work and be ready for the next world; the end of 14 the world is near at hand. And our Lord in the Gita is saying: 15 Always work with great enthusiasm, destroy your enemies and 16 enjoy the world. But, after all, it turned out to be exactly the 17 reverse of what Christ or Krishna implied. The Europeans never 18 took the words of Jesus Christ seriously. Always of active habits, 19 being possessed of a tremendous Rajasika nature, they are 20 gathering with great enterprise and youthful ardour the comforts 21 and luxuries of the different countries of the world and enjoying 22 them to their hearts' content. And we are sitting in a corner, with 23 our bag and baggage, pondering on death day and night, and 24 singing, "{Sanskrit}--Very tremulous and unsteady is the water on 25 the lotus-leaf; so is the life of man frail and transient"--with the 26 result that it is making our blood run cold and our flesh creep with 27 the fear of Yama, the god of death; and Yama, too, alas, has taken 28 us at our word, as it were--plague and all sorts of maladies have 29 entered into our country! Who are following the teachings of the 30 Gita?--the Europeans. And who are acting according to the will of 31 Jesus Christ?--The descendants of Shri Krishna! This must be well 32 understood. The Vedas were the first to find and proclaim the way 33 to Moksha, and from that one source, the Vedas, was taken 34 whatever any great Teacher, say, Buddha or Christ, afterwards 35 taught. Now, they were Sannyasins, and therefore they "had no 36 enemy and were friendly and compassionate towards all". That was 37 well and good for them. But why this attempt to compel the whole 38 world to follow the same path to Moksha? "Can beauty be 39 manufactured by rubbing and scrubbing? Can anybody's love be 40 won by threats or force?" What does Buddha or Christ prescribe for 41 the man who neither wants Moksha nor is fit to receive it?-- 42 Nothing! Either you must have Moksha or you are doomed to 43 destruction--these are the only two ways held forth by them, and 44 there is no middle course. You are tied hand and foot in the matter 45 of trying for anything other than Moksha. There is no way shown 46 how you may enjoy the world a little for a time; not only all 47 openings to that are hermetically sealed to you, but, in addition, 48 there are obstructions put at every step. It is only the Vedic religion 49 which considers ways and means and lays down rules for the 50 fourfold attainment of man, comprising Dharma, Artha, Kama, and 51 Moksha. Buddha ruined us, and so did Christ ruin Greece and 52 Rome! Then, in due course of time, fortunately, the Europeans 53 became Protestants, shook off the teachings of Christ as

1 represented by Papal authority, and heaved a sigh of relief. In India, 2 Kumarila again brought into currency the Karma-Marga, the way of 3 Karma only, and Shankara and Ramanuja firmly re-established the 4 Eternal Vedic religion, harmonising and balancing in due
5 proportions Dharma, Artha, Kama, and Moksha. Thus the nation
6 was brought to the way of regaining its lost life; but India has three 7 hundred million souls to wake, and hence the delay. To revive three 8 hundred millions--can it be done in a day?

9 The aims of the Buddhistic and the Vedic religions are the 10 same, but the means adopted by the Buddhistic are not right. If the 11 Buddhistic means were correct, then why have we been thus 12 hopelessly lost and ruined? It will not do to say that the efflux of 13 time has naturally wrought this. Can time work, transgressing the 14 laws of cause and effect?

15 Therefore, though the aims are the same, the Bauddhas for 16 want of right means have degraded India. Perhaps my Bauddha 17 brothers will be offended at this remark, and fret and fume; but 18 there's no help for it; the truth ought to be told, and I do not care 19 for the result. The right and correct means is that of the Vedas--the 20 Jati Dharma, that is, the Dharma enjoined according to the different 21 castes--the Svadharma, that is, one's own Dharma, or set of duties 22 prescribed for man according to his capacity and position--which is 23 the very basis of Vedic religion and Vedic society. Again, perhaps, I 24 am offending many of my friends, who are saying, I suppose, that I 25 am flattering my own countrymen. Here let me ask them once for 26 all: What do I gain by such flattery? Do they support me with any 27 money or means? On the contrary, they try their best to get 28 possession of money which I secure by begging from outside of 29 India for feeding the famine-stricken and the helpless; and if they 30 do not get it, they abuse and slander! Such then, O my educated 31 countrymen, are the people of my country. I know them too well to 32 expect anything from them by flattery. I know they have to be 33 treated like the insane; and anyone who administers medicine to a 34 madman must be ready to be rewarded with kicks and bites; but he 35 is the true friend who forces the medicine down the throats of such 36 and bears with them in patience.

37 Now, this Jati Dharma, this Svadharma, is the path of welfare 38 of all societies in every land, the ladder to ultimate freedom. With 39 the decay of this Jati Dharma, this Svadharma, has come the 40 downfall of our land. But the Jati Dharma or Svadharma as 41 commonly understood at present by the higher castes is rather a 42 new evil, which has to be guarded against. They think they know 43 everything of Jati Dharma, but really they know nothing of it.
44 Regarding their own village customs as the eternal customs laid 45 down by the Vedas, and appropriating to themselves all privileges, 46 they are going to their doom! I am not talking of caste as 47 determined by qualitative distinction, but of the hereditary caste 48 system. I admit that the qualitative caste system is the primary one; 49 but the pity is qualities yield to birth in two or three generations.
50 Thus the vital point of our national life has been touched; otherwise, 51 why should we sink to this degraded state? Read in the Gita, 52 "{Sanskrit}"--I should then be the cause of the admixture of races,

1 and I should thus ruin these beings." How came this terrible Varna-2 Samkarya--this confounding mixture of all castes--and 3 disappearance of all qualitative distinctions? Why has the white 4 complexion of our forefathers now become black? Why did the 5 Sattvaguna give place to the prevailing Tamas with a sprinkling, as 6 it were, of Rajas in it? That is a long story to tell, and I reserve my 7 answer for some future occasion. For the present, try to understand 8 this, that if the Jati Dharma be rightly and truly preserved, the 9 nation shall never fall. If this is true, then what was it that brought 10 our downfall? That we have fallen is the sure sign that the basis of 11 the Jati Dharma has been tampered with. Therefore, what you call 12 the Jati Dharma is quite contrary to what we have in fact. First, 13 read your own Shastras through and through, and you will easily 14 see that what the Shastras define as caste--Dharma, has 15 disappeared almost everywhere from the land. Now try to bring 16 back the true Jati Dharma, and then it will be a real and sure boon 17 to the country. What I have learnt and understood, I am telling you 18 plainly. I have not been imported from some foreign land to come 19 and save you, that I should countenance all your foolish customs 20 and give scientific explanations for them; it does not cost our 21 foreign friends anything, they can well afford to do so. You cheer 22 them up and heap applause upon them, and that is the acme of 23 their ambition. But if dirt and dust be flung at your faces, it falls on 24 mine too! Don't you see that?

25 I have said elsewhere that every nation has a national 26 purpose of its own. Either in obedience to the Law of nature, or by 27 virtue of the superior genius of the great ones, the social manners 28 and customs of every nation are being moulded into shape, so as to 29 bring that purpose to fruition. In the life of every nation, besides 30 that purpose and those manners and customs that are essentially 31 necessary to effect that purpose, all others are superfluous. It does 32 not matter much whether those superfluous customs and manners 33 grow or disappear; but a nation is sure to die when the main 34 purpose of its life is hurt.

35 When we were children, we heard the story of a certain 36 ogress who had her soul living in a small bird, and unless the bird 37 was killed, the ogress would never die. The life of a nation is also 38 like that. Again another thing you will observe, that a nation will 39 never greatly grudge if it be deprived of these rights which have 40 not much to do with its national purpose, nay, even if all of such are 41 wrested from it; but when the slightest blow is given to that 42 purpose on which rests its national life, that moment it reacts with 43 tremendous power.

44 Take for instance the case of the three living nations, of 45 whose history you know more or less, viz. the French, the English, 46 and the Hindu. Political independence is the backbone of the 47 French character. French subjects bear calmly all oppressions.
48 Burden them with heavy taxes, they will not raise the least voice 49 against them; compel the whole nation to join the army, they never 50 complain; but the instant anyone meddles with that political 51 independence, the whole nation will rise as one man and madly
52 react. No one man shall be allowed to usurp authority over us;

1 whether learned or ignorant, rich or poor, of noble birth or of the 2 lower classes, we have equal share in the Government of our 3 country, and in the independent control of our society--this is the 4 root-principle of the French character. He must suffer who will try 5 to interfere with this freedom.

6 In the English character, the "give and take" policy, the 7 business principle of the trader, is principally inherent. To the 8 English, just and equitable distribution of wealth is of essential 9 interest. The Englishman humbly submits to the king and to the 10 privileges of the nobility; only if he has to pay a farthing from his 11 pocket, he must demand an account of it. There is the king; that is 12 all right; he is ready to obey and honour him; but if the king wants 13 money, the Englishman says: All right, but first let me understand 14 why it is needed, what good it will bring; next, I must have my say 15 in the matter of how it is to be spent, and then I shall part with it.
16 The king, once trying to exact money from the English people by 17 force, brought about a great revolution. They killed the king.

18 The Hindu says that political and social independence are 19 well and good, but the real thing is spiritual independence--Mukti.
20 This is our national purpose; whether you take the Vaidika, the 21 Jaina, or the Bauddha, the Advaita, the Vishishtadvaita, or the 22 Dvaita--there, they are all of one mind. Leave that point untouched 23 and do whatever you like, the Hindu is quite unconcerned and 24 keeps silence; but if you run foul of him there, beware, you court 25 your ruin. Rob him of everything he has, kick him, call him a 26 "nigger" or any such name, he does not care much; only keep that 27 one gate of religion free and unmolested. Look here, how in the 28 modern period the Pathan dynasties were coming and going, but 29 could not get a firm hold of their Indian Empire, because they were 30 all along attacking the Hindu's religion. And see, how firmly based, 31 how tremendously strong was the Mogul Empire. Why? Because the 32 Moguls left that point untouched. In fact, Hindus were the real prop 33 of the Mogul Empire; do you not know that Jahangir, Shahjanhan, 34 and Dara Shikoh were all born of Hindu mothers? Now then 35 observe--as soon as the ill-fated Aurangzeb again touched that 36 point, the vast Mogul Empire vanished in an instant like a dream.
37 Why is it that the English throne is so firmly established in India?
38 Because it never touches the religion of the land in any way. The 39 sapient Christian missionaries tried to tamper a little with this 40 point, and the result was the Mutiny of 1857. So long as the English 41 understand this thoroughly and act accordingly, their throne in 42 India will remain unsullied and unshaken. The wise and far-seeing 43 among the English also comprehend this and admit it--read Lord
44 Roberts's Forty-one Years in India.¹⁰³

45 Now you understand clearly where the soul of this ogress is-- 46 it is in religion. Because no one was able to destroy that, therefore 47 the Hindu nation is still living, having survived so many troubles 48 and tribulations. Well, one Indian scholar asks, "What is the use of 49 keeping the soul of the nation in religion? Why not keep it in social 50 or political independence, as is the case with other nations?" It is 103 ? Vide 30th and 31st Chapters.

1 very easy to talk like that. If it be granted, for the sake of argument,
2 that religion and spiritual independence, and soul, God, and Mukti
3 are all false, even then see how the matter stands. As the same fire
4 is manifesting itself in different forms, so the same one great Force 5 is manifesting itself as political independence with the French, as 6 mercantile genius and expansion of the sphere of equity with the 7 English, and as the the desire for Mukti or spiritual independence
8 with the Hindu. Be it noted that by the impelling of this great Force, 9 has been moulded the French and the English character, through 10 several centuries of vicissitudes of fortune; and also by the 11 inspiration of that great Force, with the rolling of thousands of 12 centuries, has been the present evolution of the Hindu national 13 character. I ask in all seriousness--which is easier, to give up our 14 national character evolved out of thousands of centuries, or your 15 grafted foreign character of a few hundred years? Why do not the 16 English forget their warlike habits and give up fighting and 17 bloodshed, and sit calm and quiet concentrating their whole energy 18 on making religion the sole aim of their life?

19 The fact is, that the river has come down a thousand miles 20 from its source in the mountains; does it, or can it go back to its 21 source? If it ever tries to trace back its course, it will simply dry up 22 by being dissipated in all directions. Anyhow the river is sure to fall 23 into the ocean, sooner or later, either by passing through open and 24 beautiful plains or struggling through grimy soil. If our national life 25 of these ten thousand years has been a mistake, then there is no 26 help for it; and if we try now to form a new character, the inevitable 27 result will be that we shall die.

28 But, excuse me if I say that it is sheer ignorance and want of 29 proper understanding to think like that, namely, that our national 30 ideal has been a mistake. First go to other countries and study 31 carefully their manners and conditions with your own eyes--not with 32 others'--and reflect on them with a thoughtful brain, if you have it; 33 then read your own scriptures, your ancient literature, travel 34 throughout India, and mark the people of her different parts and 35 their ways and habits with the wide-awake eye of an intelligent and 36 keen observer--not with a fool's eye--and you will see as clear as 37 noonday that the nation is still living intact and its life is surely 38 pulsating. You will find there also that, hidden under the ashes of 39 apparent death, the fire of our national life is yet smouldering and 40 that the life of this nation is religion, its language religion, and its 41 idea religion; and your politics, society, municipality, plague-42 prevention work, and famine-relief work--all these things will be 43 done as they have been done all along here, viz. only through 44 religion; otherwise all your frantic yelling and bewailing will end in 45 nothing, my friend!

46 Besides, in every country, the means is the same after all, 47 that is, whatever only a handful of powerful men dictate becomes 48 the fait accompli; the rest of the men only follow like a flock of 49 sheep, that's all. I have seen your Parliament, your Senate, your 50 vote, majority, ballot; it is the same thing everywhere, my friend.
51 The powerful men in every country are moving society whatever 52 way they like, and the rest are only like a flock of sheep. Now the

1 question is this, who are these men of power in India?--they who 2 are giants in religion. It is they who lead our society; and it is they 3 again who change our social laws and usages when necessity 4 demands; and we listen to them silently and do what they 5 command. The only difference with ours is, that we have not that 6 superfluous fuss and bustle of the majority, the vote, ballot, and 7 similar concomitant tugs-of-war as in other countries. That is all.

8 Of course we do not get that education which the common 9 people in the West do, by the system of vote and ballot etc., but, on 10 the other hand, we have not also amongst us that class of people 11 who, in the name of politics, rob others and fatten themselves by 12 sucking the very life-blood of the masses in all European countries.
13 If you ever saw, my friend, that shocking sight behind the scene of 14 acting of these politicians--that revelry of bribery, that robbery in 15 broad daylight, that dance of the Devil in man, which are practised 16 on such occasions--you would be hopeless about man! "Milk goes 17 abegging from door to door, while the grog-shop is crowded; the 18 chaste woman seldom gets the wherewithal to hide her modesty, 19 while the woman of the town flutters about in all her jewelry!" They 20 that have money have kept the government of the land under their 21 thumb, are robbing the people and sending them as soldiers to fight 22 and be slain on foreign shores, so that, in case of victory; their 23 coffers may be full of gold bought by the blood of the subject-people 24 on the field of battle. And the subject-people? Well, theirs is only to 25 shed their blood. This is politics! Don't be startled, my friend; don't 26 be lost in its mazes.

27 First of all, try to understand this: Does man make laws, or do 28 laws make man? Does man make money, or does money make man?
29 Does man make name and fame, or name and fame make man?

30 Be a man first, my friend, and you will see how all those 31 things and the rest will follow of themselves after you. Give up that 32 hateful malice, that dog-like bickering and barking at one another, 33 and take your stand on good purpose, right means, righteous 34 courage, and be brave. When you are born a man, leave some 35 indelible mark behind you. "When you first came to this world, O 36 Tulsi,¹⁰⁴ the world rejoiced and you cried; now live your life in doing 37 such acts that when you will leave this world, the world will cry for 38 you and you will leave it laughing." If you can do that, then you are 39 a man; otherwise, what good are you?

40 Next, you must understand this, my friend, that we have 41 many things to learn from other nations. The man who says he has 42 nothing more to learn is already at his last grasp. The nation that 43 says it knows everything is on the very brink of destruction! "As 44 long as I live, so long do I learn." But one point to note here is that 45 when we take anything from others, we must mould it after our own 46 way. We shall add to our stock what others have to teach, but we 47 must always be careful to keep intact what is essentially our own.
48 For instance, suppose I want to have my dinner cooked in the 1 ¹⁰⁴ ?A poet and a devotee--the author of the Ramcharitmanasa.

2 Here the poet is addressing himself.
3

1 European fashion. When taking food, the Europeans sit on chairs, 2 and we are accustomed to squat on the floor. To imitate the 3 Europeans, if I order my dinner to be served on a table and have to 4 sit on a chair more than an hour, my feet will be in a fair way of 5 going to Yama's door, as they say, and I shall writhe in torture; what 6 do you say to that? So I must squat on the floor in my own style, 7 while having their dishes. Similarly, whenever we learn anything 8 from others, we must mould it after our own fashion, always 9 preserving in full our characteristic nationality. Let me ask, "Does 10 man wear clothes or do clothes make the man?" The man of genius 11 in any dress commands respect; but nobody cares for fools like me, 12 though carrying, like the washerman's ass, a load of clothes on my 13 back.

14 15 16 CUSTOMS: EASTERN AND WESTERN 17

18 The foregoing, by way of an introduction, has come to be 19 rather long; but after all this talk it will be easier for us to compare 20 the two nations. They are good, and we are also good. "You can 21 neither praise the one nor blame the other; both the scales are 22 equal." Of course, there are gradations and varieties of good, this is 23 all.

24 According to us, there are three things in the make-up of 25 man. There is the body, there is the mind, and there is the soul.
26 First let us consider the body, which is the most external thing 27 about man.

28 First, see how various are the differences with respect to the 29 body. How many varieties of nose, face, hair, height, complexion, 30 breadth, etc., there are!

31 The modern ethnologists hold that variety of complexion is 32 due to intermixture of blood. Though the hot or cold climate of the 33 place to a certain extent affects the complexion, no doubt, yet the 34 main cause of its change is heredity. Even in the coldest parts of the 35 world, people with dark complexions are seen, and again in the 36 hottest countries white men are seen to live. The complexion of the 37 aboriginal tribes of Canada, in America, and of the Eskimos of the 38 Northern Polar regions, is not white. While islands, such as Borneo, 39 Celebes, etc., situated in the equatorial regions are peopled by 40 white aborigines.

41 According to the Hindu Shastras, the three Hindu castes, 42 Brahmana, Kshatriya, and Vaishya, and the several nations outside 43 India, to wit, Cheen, Hun, Darad, Pahlava, Yavana, and Khash are 44 all Aryas. This Cheen of our Shastras is not the modern Chinaman.
45 Besides, in those days, the Chinamen did not call themselves Cheen 46 at all. There was a distinct, powerful nation, called Cheen, living in 47 the north-eastern parts of Kashmir, and the Darads lived where are 48 now seen the hill-tribes between India and Afghanistan. Some 49 remnants of the ancient Cheen are yet to be found in very small

1 numbers, and Daradisthan is yet in existence. In the Rajatarangini, 2 the history of Kashmir, references are often made to the supremacy
3 of the powerful Darad-Raj. An ancient tribe of Huns reigned for a 4 long period in the north-western parts of India. The Tibetans now 5 call themselves Hun, but this Hun is perhaps "Hune". The fact is, 6 that the Huns referred to in Manu are not the modern Tibetans, but 7 it is quite probable that the modern Tibetans are the product of a 8 mixture of the ancient Aryan Huns and some other Mogul tribes 9 that came to Tibet from Central Asia. According to Prjevalski and 10 the Duc d' Orleans, the Russian and French travellers, there are 11 still found in some parts of Tibet tribes with faces and eyes of the 12 Aryan type. "Yavana" was the name given to the Greeks. There has 13 been much dispute about the origin of this name. Some say that the 14 name Yavana was first used to designate a tribe of Greeks 15 inhabiting the place called "Ionia", and hence, in the Pali writs of 16 the Emperor Asoka, the Greeks are named "Yonas", and afterwards
17 from this "Yona" the Sanskrit word Yavana, was derived. Again, 18 according to some of our Indian antiquarians, the word Yavana does 19 not stand for the Greeks. But all these views are wrong. The 20 original word is Yavana itself; for not only the Hindus but the 21 ancient Egyptians and the Babylonians as well called the Greeks by 22 that name. By the word Pahlava is meant the ancient Parsees, 23 speaking the Pahlavi tongue. Even now, Khash denotes the semi-24 civilised Aryan tribes living in mountainous regions and in the 25 Himalayas, and the word is still used in this sense. In that sense, 26 the present Europeans are the descendants of the Khash; in other 27 words, those Aryan tribes that were uncivilised in ancient days are 28 all Khash.

29 In the opinion of modern savants, the Aryans had reddish-
30 white complexion, black or red hair, straight noses, well-drawn 31 eyes, etc.; and the formation of the skull varied a little according to 32 the colour of the hair. Where the complexion is dark, there the 33 change has come to pass owing to the mixture of the pure Aryan 34 blood with black races. They hold that there are still some tribes to 35 the west of the Himalayan borders who are of pure Aryan blood, 36 and that the rest are all of mixed blood; otherwise, how could they 37 be dark? But the European Pundits ought to know by this time that, 38 in the southern parts of India, many children are born with red hair, 39 which after two or three years changes into black, and that in the 40 Himalayas many have red hair and blue or grey eyes.

41 Let the Pundits fight among themselves; it is the Hindus who 42 have all along called themselves Aryas. Whether of pure or mixed 43 blood, the Hindus are Aryas; there it rests. If the Europeans do not 44 like us, Aryas, because we are dark, let them take another name for 45 themselves--what is that to us?

46 Whether black or white, it does not matter; but of all the 47 nations of the world, the Hindus are the handsomest and finest in 48 feature. I am not bragging nor saying anything in exaggeration 49 because they belong to my own nationality, but this fact is known all 50 over the world. Where else can one find a higher percentage of fine-
51 featured men and women than in India? Besides, it has to be taken 52 into consideration how much more is required in our country to

1 make us look handsome than in other countries, because our bodies 2 are so much more exposed. In other countries, the attempt is 3 always to make ugly persons appear beautiful under cover of 4 elaborate dresses and clothes.

5 Of course, in point of health, the Westerners are far superior 6 to us. In the West, men of forty years and women of fifty years are 7 still young. This is, no doubt, because they take good food, dress 8 well and live in a good climate, and above all, the secret is that they 9 do not marry at an early age. Ask those few strong tribes among 10 ourselves and see what their marriageable age is. Ask the hill 11 tribes, such as, the Goorkhas, the Punjabis, the Jats, and the Afridis, 12 what their marriageable age is. Then read your own Shastras--thirty 13 is the age fixed for the Brahmana, twenty-five for the Kshatriya, and 14 twenty for the Vaishya. In point of longevity and physical and 15 mental strength, there is a great difference between the Westerners 16 and ourselves. As soon as we attain to forty, our hope and physical 17 and mental strength are on the decline. While, at that age, full of 18 youthful vigour and hope, they have only made a start.

19 We are vegetarians--most of our diseases are of the stomach; 20 our old men and women generally die of stomach complaints. They 21 of the West take meat--most of their diseases are of the heart; their 22 old men and women generally die of heart or lung diseases. A 23 learned doctor of the West observes that the people who have 24 chronic stomach complaints generally tend to a melancholy and 25 renouncing nature, and the people suffering from complaints of the 26 heart and the upper parts of the body have always hope and faith to 27 the last; the cholera patient is from the very beginning afraid of 28 death, while the consumptive patient hopes to the last moment that 29 he will recover. "Is it owing to this," my doctor friend may with good 30 reasoning ask, "that the Indians always talk and think of death and 31 renunciation?" As yet I have not been able to find a satisfactory 32 answer to this; but the question seems to have an air of truth about 33 it, and demands serious consideration.

34 In our country, people suffer little from diseases of the teeth 35 and hair; in the West, few people have natural, healthy teeth, and 36 baldness is met with everywhere. Our women bore their noses and 37 ears for wearing ornaments; in the West, among the higher classes, 38 the women do not do those things much, nowadays; but by 39 squeezing the waist, making the spine crooked, and thus displacing 40 the liver and spleen and disfiguring the form, they suffer the 41 torment of death to make themselves shapely in appearance and 42 added to that is the burden of dress, over which they have to show 43 their features to the best advantages. Their Western dress is, 44 however, more suited for work. With the exception of the dress worn 45 in society by the ladies of the wealthy classes, the dress of the 46 women in general is ugly. The Sari of our women, and the Choga, 47 Chapkan, and turban of our men defy comparison as regards beauty 48 in dress. The tight dresses cannot approach in beauty the loose 49 ones that fall in natural folds. But all our dresses being flowing, and 50 in folds, are not suited for doing work; in doing work, they are 51 spoiled and done for. There is such a thing as fashion in the West.
52 Their fashion is in dress, ours in ornaments, though nowadays it is

1 entering a little into clothes also. Paris is the centre of fashion for 2 ladies' dress and London for men's. The actresses of Paris often set 3 the fashions. What new fashion of dress a distinguished actress of 4 the time would wear, the fashionable world would greedily imitate.
5 The big firms of dressmakers set the fashions nowadays. We can 6 form no idea of the millions of pounds that are spent every year in 7 the making of dress in the West. The dress-making business has 8 become a regular science. What colour of dress will suit with the 9 complexion of the girl and the colour of her hair, what special 10 feature of her body should be disguised, and what displayed to the 11 best advantage--these and many other like important points, the 12 dressmakers have seriously to consider. Again, the dress that ladies 13 of very high position wear, others have to wear also, otherwise they 14 lose their caste! This is FASHION.

15 Then again, this fashion is changing every day, so to say; it is 16 sure to change four times with the four seasons of the year, and, 17 besides, many other times as well. The rich people have their 18 dresses made after the latest fashion by expert firms; those who 19 belong to the middle classes have them often done at home by 20 women-tailors, or do them themselves. If the new fashion 21 approaches very near to their last one, then they just change or 22 adjust their clothes accordingly; otherwise, they buy new ones. The 23 wealthy classes give away their dresses which have gone out of 24 fashion to their dependants and servants.

25 The ladies' maids and valets sell them, and those are 26 exported to the various colonies established by the Europeans in 27 Africa, Asia, and Australia, and there they are used again. The 28 dresses of those who are immensely rich are all ordered from Paris; 29 the less wealthy have them copied in their own country by their 30 own dressmakers. But the ladies' hats must be of French make. As 31 a matter of fact, the dress of the English and the German women is 32 not good; they do not generally follow the Paris fashions--except, of 33 course, a few of the rich and the higher classes. So, the women of 34 other countries indulge in jokes at their expense. But men in 35 England mostly dress very well. The American men and women, 36 without distinction, wear very fashionable dress. Though the 37 American Government imposes heavy duties on all dresses 38 imported from London or Paris, to keep out foreign goods from the 39 country--yet, all the same, the women order their dress from Paris, 40 and men, from London. Thousands of men and women are 41 employed in daily introducing into the market woollen and silk 42 fabrics of various kinds and colours, and thousands, again, are 43 manufacturing all sorts of dresses out of them. Unless the dress is 44 exactly up to date, ladies and gentlemen cannot walk in the street 45 without being remarked upon by the fashionable. Though we have 46 not all this botheration of the fashion in dress in our country, we 47 have, instead, a fashion in ornaments, to a certain extent. The 48 merchants dealing in silk, woollen, and other materials in the West 49 have their watchful eyes always fixed on the way the fashion 50 changes, and what sort of things people have begun to like; or they 51 hit upon a new fashion, out of their own brain, and try to draw the 52 attention of the people thereto. When once a merchant succeeds in 1 gaining the eyes of the people to the fashion brought into the 2 market by him, he is a made man for life. At the time of the 3 Emperor Napoleon III of France, his wife, the Empress Eugenie, 4 was the universally recognised avatar of fashion of the West. The 5 shawls of Kashmir were her special favourites, and therefore 6 shawls worth millions of rupees used to be exported every year, in 7 her time, from Kashmir to Europe. With the fall of Napoleon III, the 8 fashion has changed, and Kashmir shawls no longer sell. And as for 9 the merchants of our country, they always walk in the old rut. They 10 could not opportunely hit upon any new style to catch the fancy of 11 the West under the altered circumstances, and so the market was 12 lost to them. Kashmir received a severe shock and her big and rich 13 merchants all of a sudden failed.

14 This world, if you have the eyes to see, is yours--if not, it is 15 mine; do you think that anyone waits for another? The Westerners 16 are devising new means and methods to attract the luxuries and the 17 comforts of different parts of the world. They watch the situation 18 with ten eyes and work with two hundred hands, as it were; while 19 we will never do what the authors of Shastras have not written in 20 books, and thus we are moving in the same old groove, and there is 21 no attempt to seek anything original and new; and the capacity to 22 do that is lost to us now. The whole nation is rending the skies with 23 the cry for food and dying of starvation. Whose fault is it? Ours!
24 What means are we taking in hand to find a way out of the pitiable
25 situation? Zero! Only making great noise by our big and empty talk!
26 That is all that we are doing. Why not come out of your narrow 27 corner and see, with your eyes open, how the world is moving 28 onwards? Then the mind will open and the power of thinking and of 29 timely action will come of itself. You certainly know the story of the 30 Devas and the Asuras. The Devas have faith in their soul, in God, 31 and in the after-life, while the Asuras give importance to this life, 32 and devote themselves to enjoying this world and trying to have 33 bodily comforts in every possible way. We do not mean to discuss 34 here whether the Devas are better than the Asuras, or the Asuras 35 than the Devas, but, reading their descriptions in the Puranas, the 36 Asuras seem to be, truth to tell, more like MEN, and far more manly 37 than the Devas; the Devas are inferior, without doubt, to the Asuras, 38 in many respects. Now, to understand the East and the West, we 39 cannot do better than interpret the Hindus as the sons of the Devas 40 and the Westerners as the sons of the Asuras.

41 First, let us see about their respective ideas of cleanliness of 42 the body. Purity means cleanliness of mind and body; the latter is 43 effected by the use of water etc. No nation in the world is as cleanly 44 in the body as the Hindu, who uses water very freely. Taking a 45 plunge bath is wellnigh scarce in other nations, with a few 46 exceptions. The English have introduced it into their country after 47 coming in contact with India. Even now, ask those of our students 48 who have resided in England for education, and they will tell you 49 how insufficient the arrangements for bathing are there. When the 50 Westerners bathe--and that is once a week--they change their inner 51 clothing. Of course, nowadays, among those who have means, many 52 bathe daily and among Americans the number is larger; the 1 Germans once in a week, the French and others very rarely! Spain

2 and Italy are warm countries, but there it is still less! Imagine their 3 eating of garlic in abundance, profuse perspiration day and night, 4 and yet no bath! Ghosts must surely run away from them, what to 5 say of men! What is meant by bath in the West? Why, the washing of 6 face, head, and hands, i.e. only those parts which are exposed. A 7 millionaire friend of mine once invited me to come over to Paris:
8 Paris, which is the capital of modern civilisation--Paris, the heaven 9 of luxury, fashion, and merriment on earth--the centre of arts and 10 sciences. My friend accommodated me in a huge palatial hotel, 11 where arrangements for meals were in a right royal style, but, for 12 bath--well, no name of it. Two days I suffered silently--till at last I 13 could bear it no longer, and had to address my friend thus: "Dear 14 brother, let this royal luxury be with you and yours! I am panting to 15 get out of this situation. Such hot weather, and no facility of 16 bathing; if it continues like this, I shall be in imminent danger of 17 turning mad like a rabid dog." Hearing this, my friend became very 18 sorry for me and annoyed with the hotel authorities, and said: "I 19 won't let you stay here any more, let us go and find out a better 20 place". Twelve of the chief hotels were seen, but no place for 21 bathing was there in any of them. There are independent bathing-22 houses, where one can go and have a bath for four or five rupees.
23 Good heavens! That very afternoon I read in a paper that an old 24 lady entered into the bath-tub and died then and there! Whatever 25 the doctors may say, I am inclined to think that perhaps that was 26 the first occasion in her life to come into contact with so much 27 water, and the frame collapsed by the sudden shock! This is no 28 exaggeration. Then, the Russians and some others are awfully 29 unclean in that line. Starting from Tibet, it is about the same all 30 over those regions. In every boarding house in America, of course, 31 there is a bath-room, and an arrangement of pipe-water.

32 See, however, the difference here. Why do we Hindus bathe?
33 Because of the fear of incurring sin. The Westerners wash their 34 hands and face for cleanliness' sake. Bathing with us means 35 pouring water over the body, though the oil and the dirt may stick 36 on and show themselves. Again, our Southern Indian brothers 37 decorate themselves with such long and wide caste-marks that it 38 requires, perchance the use of a pumice-stone to rub them off. Our 39 bath, on the other hand, is an easy matter--to have a plunge in, 40 anywhere; but not so, in the West. There they have to put off a load 41 of clothes, and how many buttons and hooks and eyes are there! We 42 do not feel any delicacy to show our body; to them it is awful, but 43 among men, say, between father and son, there is no impropriety; 44 only before women you have to cover yourself cap-a-pie.

45 This custom of external cleanliness, like all other customs, 46 somethings turns out to be, in the long run, rather a tyranny or the 47 very reverse of Achara (cleanliness). The European says that all 48 bodily matters have to be attended to in private. Well and good. "It 49 is vulgar to spit before other people. To rinse your mouth before 50 others is disgraceful." So, for fear of censure, they do not wash 51 their mouth after meals, and the result is that the teeth gradually 52 decay. Here is non-observance of cleanliness for fear of society or 1 civilisation. With us, it is the other extreme--to rinse and wash the 2 mouth before all men, or sitting in the street, making a noise as if 3 you were sick--this is rather tyranny. Those things should, no doubt, 4 be done privately and silently, but not to do them for fear of society 5 is also equally wrong.

6 Again, society patiently bears and accommodates itself to 7 those customs which are unavoidable in particular climates. In a 8 warm country like ours, we drink glass after glass of water; now, 9 how can we help eructating; but in the West, that habit is very 10 ungentlemanly. But there, if you blow the nose and use your pocket 11 handkerchief at the time of eating--that is not objectionable, but 12 with us, it is disgusting. In a cold country like theirs, one cannot 13 avoid doing it now and then.

14 We Hindus hold dirt in abomination very much, but, all the 15 same, we are, in point of fact, frequently dirty ourselves. Dirt is so 16 repugnant to us that if we touch it we bathe; and so to keep 17 ourselves away from it, we leave a heap of it to rot near the house-- 18 the only thing to be careful about is not to touch it; but, on the other 19 hand, do we ever think that we are living virtually in hell? To avoid 20 one uncleanliness, we court another and a greater uncleanliness; to 21 escape from one evil, we follow on the heels of another and a 22 greater evil. He who keeps dirt heaped in his house is a sinner, no 23 doubt about that. And for his retribution he has not to wait for the 24 next life; it recoils on his head betimes--in this very life.

25 The grace of both Lakshmi (goddess of fortune) and Sarasvati 26 (goddess of learning) now shines on the peoples of the Western 27 countries. They do not stop at the mere acquisition of the objects of 28 enjoyment, but in all their actions they seek for a sort of beauty and 29 grace. In eating and drinking, in their homes and surroundings, in 30 everything, they want to see an all-round elegance. We also had 31 that trait once--when there was wealth and prosperity in the land.
32 We have now too much poverty, but, to make matters worse, we are 33 courting our ruin in two ways--namely, we are throwing away what 34 we have as our own, and labouring in vain to make others' ideals 35 and habits ours. Those national virtues that we had are gradually 36 disappearing, and we are not acquiring any of the Western ones
37 either? In sitting, walking, talking, etc., there was in the olden days 38 a traditional, specific trait of our own; that is now gone, and withal 39 we have not the ability to take in the Western modes of etiquette.
40 Those ancient religious rites, practices, studies, etc., that were left 41 to us, you are consigning to the tide-waters to be swept away--and 42 yet something new and suitable to the exigencies of the time, to 43 make up for them, is not striking its roots and becoming stable with 44 us. In oscillating between these two lines, all our present distress 45 lies. The Bengal that is to be has not as yet got a stable footing. It is 46 our arts that have fared the worst of all. In the days gone by, our old 47 women used to paint the floors, doors, and walls of their houses 48 with a paste of rice-powder, drawing various beautiful figures; they 49 used to cut plantain leaves in an artistic manner, to serve the food 50 on; they used to lavish their art in nicely arranging the different 51 comestibles on the plates. Those arts, in these days, have gradually 52 disappeared or are doing so.

1 Of course new things have to be learnt, have to be introduced 2 and worked out; but is that to be done by sweeping away all that is 3 old, just because it is old? What new things have you learnt? Not 4 any--save and except a jumble of words! What really useful science
5 or art have you acquired? Go, and see, even now in the distant 6 villages, the old woodwork and brickwork. The carpenters of your 7 towns cannot even turn out a decent pair of doors. Whether they 8 are made for a hut or a mansion is hard to make out! They are only 9 good at buying foreign tools, as if that is all of carpentry! Alas! That 10 state of things has come upon all matters in our country. What we 11 possessed as our own is all passing away, and yet, all that we have 12 learnt from foreigners is the art of speechifying. Merely reading 13 and talking! The Bengalis, and the Irish in Europe, are races cast in 14 the same mould--only talking and talking, and bandying words.
15 These two nations are adepts in making grandiloquent speeches.
16 They are nowhere, when a jot of real practical work is required-- 17 over and above that, they are barking at each other and fighting 18 among themselves all the days of their life!

19 In the West, they have a habit of keeping everything about 20 themselves neat and clean, and even the poorest have an eye 21 towards it. And this regard for cleanliness has to be observed; for, 22 unless the people have clean suits of clothes, none will employ them 23 in their service. Their servants, maids, cooks, etc., are all dressed in 24 spotlessly clean clothes. Their houses are kept trim and tidy by 25 being daily brushed, washed, and dusted. A part of good breeding 26 consists in not throwing things about, but keeping them in their 27 proper places. Their kitchens look clean and bright--vegetable 28 peelings and such other refuse are placed, for the time being, in a 29 separate receptacle, and taken, later on, by a scavenger to a 30 distance and thrown away in a proper place set apart for the 31 purpose. They do not throw such things about in their yards or on 32 the roads.

33 The houses and other buildings of those who are wealthy are 34 really a sight worth seeing--these are, night and day, a marvel of 35 orderliness and cleanliness! Over and above that, they are in the 36 habit of collecting art treasures from various countries, and 37 adorning their rooms with them. As regards ourselves, we need not, 38 of course, at any rate for the present, go in for collecting works of 39 art as they do; but should we, or should we not, at least preserve 40 those which we possess from going to ruin? It will take up a long 41 time yet to become as good and efficient as they are in the arts of 42 painting and sculpture. We were never very skillful in those two 43 departments of art. By imitating the Europeans we at the utmost 44 can only produce one or two Ravi Varmas among us! But far better 45 than such artists are our Patuas (painters) who do the Chalchitras¹⁰⁵
46 of our goddesses, in Bengal. They display in their work at least a 47 boldness in the brilliancy of their colours. The paintings of Ravi 48 Varma and others make one hide one's face from shame! Far better 49 are those gilded pictures of Jaipur and the Chalchitra of the 1 ¹⁰⁵ ?Arch-shaped frames over the images of deities, with Pauranika goddess Durga that we have had from old times. I shall reserve my reflections on the European arts of sculpture and painting for some future occasion. That is too vast a subject to enter upon here.

2 pictures.

III. FOOD AND COOKING

Now hear something about the Western art of cooking. There is greater purity observed in our cooking than in any other country; on the other hand, we have not that perfect regularity, method, and cleanliness of the English table. Every day our cook first bathes and changes his clothes before entering the kitchen; he neatly cleanses all the utensils and the hearth with water and earth, and if he chances to touch his face, nose, or any part of his body, he washes his hands before he touches again any food. The Western cook scarcely bathes; moreover, he tastes with a spoon the cooking he is engaged in, and does not think much of redipping the spoon into the pot. Taking out his handkerchief he blows his nose vigorously, and again with the same hand he, perchance, kneads the dough. He never thinks of washing his hands when he comes from outside, and begins his cooking at once. But all the same, he has snow-white clothes and cap. Maybe, he is dancing on the dough--why, because he may knead it thoroughly well with the whole pressure of his body, no matter if the sweat of his brow get mixed with it! (Fortunately nowadays, machines are widely in use for the task.) After all this sacrilege, when the bread is finished, it is placed on a porcelain dish covered with a snow-white napkin and is carried by the servant dressed in a spotless suit of clothes with white gloves on; then it is laid on the table spread over with a clean tablecloth. Mark here, the gloves--lest the man touches anything with his bare fingers!

Observe ours on the other hand. Our Brahmin cook has first purified himself with a bath, and then cooked the dinner in thoroughly cleansed utensils, but he serves it to you on a plate on the bare floor which has been pasted over with earth and cow-dung; and his cloth, albeit daily washed, is so dirty that it looks as if it were never washed. And if the plantain-leaf, which sometimes serves the purpose of a plate, is torn, there is a good chance of the soup getting mixed up with the moist floor and cow-dung paste and giving rise to a wonderful taste!

After taking a nice bath we put on a dirty-looking cloth, almost sticky with oil; and in the West, they put on a perfectly clean suit on a dirty body, without having had a proper bath. Now, this is to be understood thoroughly--for here is the point of essential difference between the Orient and the Occident. That inward vision of the Hindu and the outward vision of the West, are manifest in all their respective manners and customs. The Hindu always looks inside, and the Westerner outside. The Hindu keeps diamonds wrapped in a rag, as it were; and the Westerner preserves a lump of earth in a golden casket! The Hindu bathes to keep his body clean, he does not care how dirty his cloth may be; the Westerner takes care to wear clean clothes--what matters it if dirt remains on

1 his body! The Hindu keeps neat and clean the rooms, doors, floors, 2 and everything inside his house; what matters it if a heap of dirt 3 and refuse lies outside his entrance door! The Westerner looks to 4 covering his floors with bright and beautiful carpets, the dirt and 5 dust under them is all right if concealed from view! The Hindu lets 6 his drains run open over the road, the bad smell does not count 7 much! The drains in the West are underground--the hotbed of 8 typhoid fever! The Hindu cleanses the inside, the Westerner 9 cleanses the outside.

10 What is wanted is a clean body with clean clothes. Rinsing 11 the mouth, cleansing the teeth and all that must be done--but in 12 private. The dwelling-houses must be kept clean, as well as the 13 streets and thoroughfares and all outlying places. The cook must 14 keep his clothes clean as well as his body. Moreover, the meals must 15 be partaken of in spotless cups and plates, sitting in a neat and tidy 16 place. Achara or observance of the established rules of conduct in 17 life is the first step to religion, and of that again, cleanliness of body 18 and mind, cleanliness in everything, is the most important factor.
19 Will one devoid of Achara ever attain to religion? Don't you see 20 before your very eyes the miseries of those who are devoid of 21 Achara? Should we not, thus paying dearly for it, learn the lesson?
22 Cholera, malaria, and plague have made their permanent home in 23 India, and are carrying away their victims by millions. Whose fault 24 is it? Ours, to be sure. We are sadly devoid of Achara!

25 All our different sects of Hinduism admit the truth of the 26 celebrated saying of the Shruti,¹⁰⁶ "{Sanskrit}--When the food is 27 pure, then the inner-sense, memory (of the soul's perfection)
28 becomes steady." Only, according to Shankaracharya, the word 29 Ahara means the sense-perceptions, and Ramanuja takes the word 30 to mean food. But what is the solution? All sects agree that both are 31 necessary, and both ought to be taken into account. Without pure 32 food, how can the Indriyas (organs) perform their respective 33 functions properly? Everyone knows by experience that impure food 34 weakens the power of receptivity of the Indriyas or makes them act
35 in opposition to the will. It is a well-known fact that indigestion 36 distorts the vision of things and makes one thing appear as another, 37 and that want of food makes the eyesight and other powers of the 38 senses dim and weak. Similarly, it is often seen that some particular 39 kind of food brings on some particular state of the body and the 40 mind. This principle is at the root of those many rules which are so 41 strictly enjoined in Hindu society--that we should take this sort and 42 avoid that sort of food--though in many cases, forgetting their 43 essential substance, the kernel, we are now busy only with 44 quarrelling about the shell and keeping watch and ward over it.

45 Ramanujacharya asks us to avoid three sorts of defects 46 which, according to him, make food impure. The first defect is that 47 of the Jati, i.e. the very nature or the species to which the food 48 belongs, as onion, garlic, and so on. These have an exciting 49 tendency and, when taken, produce restlessness of the mind, or in 50 other words, perturb the intellect. The next is that of Ashraya, i.e.

¹⁰⁶ ?Chhandogya Upanishad, VII. xxvi. 2.

1 the nature of the person from whom the food comes. The food
2 coming from a wicked person will make one impure and think 3 wicked thoughts, while the food coming from a good man will 4 elevate one's thoughts. Then the other is Nimitta-dosha, i.e.
5 impurity in food due to such agents in it as dirt and dust, worms or 6 hair; taking such food also makes the mind impure. Of these three 7 defects, anyone can eschew the Jati and the Nimitta, but it is not 8 easy for all to avoid the Ashraya. It is only to avoid this Ashraya-
9 dosha, that we have so much of "Don't-touchism" amongst us
10 nowadays. "Don't touch me!" "Don't touch me!"

11 But in most cases, the cart is put before the horse; and the 12 real meaning of the principle being misunderstood, it becomes in 13 time a queer and hideous superstition. In these cases, the Acharas 14 of the great Acharyas, the teachers of mankind, should be followed 15 instead of the Lokacharas, i.e. the customs followed by the people 16 in general. One ought to read the lives of such great Masters as 17 Shri Chaitanya Deva and other similarly great religious teachers 18 and see how they behaved themselves with their fellow-men in this 19 respect. As regards the Jati-dosha in food, no other country in the 20 world furnishes a better field for its observation than India. The 21 Indians, of all nations, take the purest of foods and, all over the 22 world, there is no other country where the purity as regards the Jati 23 is so well observed as in India. We had better attend to the Nimitta-24 dosha a little more now in India, as it is becoming a source of 25 serious evil with us. It has become too common with us to buy food 26 from the sweets-vendor's shop in the bazaar, and you can judge for 27 yourselves how impure these confections are from the point of view 28 of the Nimitta-dosha; for, being kept exposed, the dirt and dust of 29 the roads as well as dead insects adhere to them, and how stale and 30 polluted they must sometimes be. All this dyspepsia that you notice 31 in every home and the prevalence of diabetes from which the 32 townspeople suffer so much nowadays are due to the taking of 33 impure food from the bazaars; and that the village-people are not as 34 a rule so subject to these complaints is principally due to the fact 35 that they have not these bazaars near them, where they can buy at 36 their will such poisonous food as Loochi, Kachoori, etc. I shall dwell 37 on this in detail later on.

38 This is, in short, the old general rule about food. But there 39 were, and still are, many differences of opinion about it. Again, as in 40 the old, so in the present day, there is a great controversy whether 41 it is good or bad to take animal food or live only on a vegetable diet, 42 whether we are benefited or otherwise by taking meat. Besides, the 43 question whether it is right or wrong to kill animals has always 44 been a matter of great dispute. One party says that to take away 45 life is a sin, and on no account should it be done. The other party 46 replies: "A fig for your opinion! It is simply impossible to live 47 without killing." The Shastras also differ, and rather confuse one, on 48 this point. In one place the Shashtra dictates, "Kill animals in 49 Yajnas", and again, in another place it says, "Never take away life".
50 The Hindus hold that it is a sin to kill animals except in sacrifices, 51 but one can with impunity enjoy the pleasure of eating meat after 52 the animal is sacrificed in a Yajna. Indeed, there are certain rules prescribed for the householder in which he is required to kill animals on certain occasions, such as Shraddha and so on; and if he omits to kill animals at those times, he is condemned as a sinner. Manu says that if those that are invited to Shraddha and certain other ceremonies do not partake of the animal food offered there, they take birth in an animal body in their next.

On the other hand, the Jains, the Buddhists, and the Vaishnavas protest, saying, "We do not believe in the dictates of such Hindu Shastras; on no account should the taking away of life be tolerated." Asoka, the Buddhist emperor, we read, punished those who would perform Yajnas or offer meat to the invited at any ceremony. The position in which the modern Vaishnavas find themselves is rather one of difficulty. Instances are found in the Ramayana¹⁰⁷ and the Mahabharata¹⁰⁸ of the drinking of wine and the taking of meat by Rama and Krishna, whom they worship as God. Sita Devi vows meat, rice, and a thousand jars of wine to the river-goddess, Ganga!¹⁰⁹

In the West, the contention is whether animal food is injurious to health or not, whether it is more strengthening than vegetable diet or not, and so on. One party says that those that take animal food suffer from all sorts of bodily complaints. The other contradicts this and says, "That is all fiction. If that were true, then the Hindus would have been the healthiest race, and the powerful nations, such as the English, the Americans, and others, whose principal food is meat, would have succumbed to all sorts of maladies and ceased to exist by this time." One says that the flesh of the goat makes the intellect like that of the goat, the flesh of the swine like that of the swine, and fish like that of the fish. The other declares that it can as well be argued then that the potato makes a potato-like brain, the vegetables make a vegetable-like brain--resembling dull and dead matter. Is it not better to have the intelligence of a living animal than to have the brain dull and inert like dead matter? One party says that those things which are in the chemical composition of animal food are also equally present in the vegetables. The other ridicules it and exclaims. "Why, they are in the air too. Go then and live on air only". One argues that the vegetarians are very painstaking and can go through hard and long-sustained labour. The other says, "If that were true, then the

1 vegetarian nations would occupy the foremost rank, which is not 2 the case, the strongest and foremost nations being always those 3 that take animal food." Those who advocate animal food contend:
4 "Look at the Hindus and the Chinamen, how poor they are. They do 5 not take meat, but live somehow on the scanty diet of rice and all 6 sorts of vegetables. Look at their miserable condition. And the 7 Japanese were also in the same plight, but since they commenced
8 taking meat, they have turned over a new leaf. In the Indian 9 regiments there are about a lac and a half of native sepoys; see how 10 many of them are vegetarians. The best parts of them, such as the 11 Sikhs and the Goorkhas, are never vegetarians." One party says, 12 "Indigestion is due to animal food." The other says, "That is all stuff 13 and nonsense. It is mostly the vegetarians who suffer from stomach 14 complaints." Again, "It may be the vegetable food acts as an 15 effective purgative to the system. But is that any reason that you 16 should induce the whole world to take to it?"

17 Whatever one or the other may say, the real fact, however, is 18 that the nations who take animal food are always, as a rule, notably 19 brave, heroic, and thoughtful. The nations who take animal food 20 also assert that in those days when the smoke from Yajnas used to 21 rise in the Indian sky and the Hindus used to take the meat of 22 animals sacrificed, then only great religious geniuses and 23 intellectual giants were born among them; but since the drifting of 24 the Hindus into the Babaji's vegetarianism, not one great, original 25 man arose from amidst them. Taking this view into account, the 26 meat-eaters in our country are afraid to give up their habitual diet.
27 The Arya Samajists are divided amongst themselves on this point, 28 and a controversy is raging within their fold--one party holding that 29 animal food is absolutely necessary, and the opposite party 30 denouncing it as extremely wrong and unjust.

31 In this way, discussions of a conflicting character, giving rise 32 to mutual abuses, quarrels, and fights, are going on. After carefully 33 scrutinising all sides of the question and setting aside all fanaticism 34 that is rampant on this delicate question of food, I must say that my 35 conviction tends to confirm this view--that the Hindus are, after all 36 right; I mean that injunction of the Hindu Shastras which lays down 37 the rule that food, like many other things, must be different 38 according to the difference of birth and profession; this is the sound 39 conclusion. But the Hindus of the present day will neither follow 40 their Shastras nor listen to what their great Acharyas taught.

41 To eat meat is surely barbarous and vegetable food is 42 certainly purer--who can deny that? For him surely is a strict 43 vegetarian diet whose one end is to lead solely a spiritual life. But 44 he who has to steer the boat of his life with strenuous labour 45 through the constant life-and-death struggles and the competition 46 of this world must of necessity take meat. So long as there will be in 47 human society such a thing as the triumph of the strong over the 48 weak, animal food is required, or some other suitable substitute for 49 it has to be discovered; otherwise, the weak will naturally be 50 crushed under the feet of the strong. It will not do to quote solitary 51 instances of the good effect of vegetable food on some particular 52 person or persons: compare one nation with another and then draw

1 conclusions.

2 The vegetarians, again, are also divided amongst themselves.
3 Some say that rice, potatoes, wheat, barley, maize, and other 4 starchy foods are of no use; these have been produced by man, and 5 are the source of all maladies. Starchy food which generates sugar
6 in the system is most injurious to health. Even horses and cows 7 become sickly and diseased if kept within doors and fed on wheat 8 and rice; but they get well again if allowed to graze freely on the 9 tender and growing herbage in the meadows. There is very little 10 starchy substance in grass and other green edible herbs. The 11 orang-outang eats grass and nuts and does not usually eat potato 12 and wheat, but if he ever does so, he eats them before they are 13 ripe, i.e. when there is not much starch in them. Others say that 14 taking roast meat and plenty of fruit and milk is best suited to the 15 attainment of longevity. More especially, they who take much fruit 16 regularly, do not so soon lose their youth, as the acid of fruit 17 dissolves the foul crust formed on the bones which is mainly the 18 cause of bringing on old age.

19 All these contentions have no end; they are going on 20 unceasingly. Now the judicious view admitted by all in regard to 21 this vexed question is, to take such food as is substantial and 22 nutritious and at the same time, easily digested. The food should be 23 such as contains the greatest nutriment in the smallest compass, 24 and be at the same time quickly assimilable; otherwise, it has 25 necessarily to be taken in large quantity, and consequently the 26 whole day is required only to digest it. If all the energy is spend 27 only in digesting food, what will there be left to do other works?

28 All fried things are really poisonous. The sweets-vendor's 29 shop is Death's door. In hot countries, the less oil and clarified 30 butter (ghee) taken the better. Butter is more easily digested than 31 ghee. There is very little substance in snow-white flour; whole-32 wheat flour is good as food. For Bengal, the style and preparation of 33 food that are still in vogue in our distant villages are commendable.
34 What ancient Bengali poet do you find singing the praise of Loochi 35 and Kachoori? These Loochis and Kachooris have been introduced 36 into Bengal from the North-Western Provinces; but even there, 37 people take them only occasionally. I have never seen even there 38 anyone who lives mainly on things fried in ghee, day after day. The 39 Chaube wrestlers of Mathura are, no doubt, fond of Loochis and 40 sweetmeats; but in a few years Chaubeji's power of digestion is 41 ruined, and he has to drug himself with appetising preparations 42 called Churans.

43 The poor die of starvation because they can get nothing to 44 eat, and the rich die of starvation because what they take is not 45 food. Any and every stuff eaten is not food; that is real food which, 46 when eaten, is well assimilated. It is better to fast rather than stuff 47 oneself with anything and everything. In the delicacies of the 48 sweetmeat shops there is hardly anything nourishing; on the other 49 hand, there is--poison! Of old, people used to take those injurious 50 things only occasionally; but now, the townspeople, especially those 51 who come from villages to live in towns, are the greatest sinners in 52 this respect, as they take them every day. What wonder is there that

1 they die prematurely of dyspepsia! If you are hungry, throw away
2 all sweets and things fried in ghee into the ditch, and buy a pice
3 worth of Moorhi (popped rice)--that will be cheaper and more
4 nutritious food. It is sufficient food to have rice, Dal (lentils), whole-5 wheat Chapatis (unfermented bread), fish, vegetables, and milk.
6 But Dal has to be taken as the Southern Indians take it, that is, the 7 soup of it only; the rest of the preparation give to the cattle. He may 8 take meat who can afford it, but not making it too rich with heating 9 spices, as the North-Western people do. The spices are no food at 10 all; to take them in abundance is only due to a bad habit. Dal is a 11 very substantial food but hard to digest. Pea-soup prepared of 12 tender peas is easily digested and pleasant to the taste. In Paris this 13 pea-soup is a favourite dish. First, boil the peas well, then make a 14 paste of them and mix them with water. Now strain the soup 15 through a wire-strainer, like that in which milk is strained and all 16 the outer skin will be separated. Then add some spices, such as 17 turmeric, black pepper, etc., according to taste, and broil it with a 18 little ghee in the pan--and you get a pleasant and wholesome Dal.
19 The meat-eaters can make it delicious by cooking it with the head of 20 a goat or fish.

21 That we have so many cases of diabetes in India is chiefly due 22 to indigestion; of course there are solitary instances in which 23 excessive brain work is the cause, but with the majority it is 24 indigestion. Pot-belly is the foremost sign of indigestion. Does 25 eating mean stuffing oneself? That much which one can assimilate 26 is proper food for one. Growing thin or fat is equally due to 27 indigestion. Do not give yourself up as lost because some symptoms 28 of diabetes are noticeable in you; those are nothing in our country 29 and should not be taken seriously into account. Only, pay more 30 attention to your diet so that you may avoid indigestion. Be in the 31 open air as much as possible, and take good long walks and work 32 hard. The muscles of the leg should be as hard as iron. If you are in 33 service, take leave when possible and make a pilgrimage to the 34 Badarikashrama in the Himalayas. If the journey is accomplished on 35 foot through the ascent and descent of two hundred miles in the 36 hills, you will see that this ghost of diabetes will depart from you.
37 Do not let the doctors come near you; most of them will harm you 38 more than do any good; and so far as possible, never take 39 medicines, which in most cases kill the patient sooner than the 40 illness itself. If you can, walk all the way from town to your native 41 village every year during the Puja vacation. To be rich in our 42 country has come to be synonymous with being the embodiment of 43 laziness and dependence. One who has to walk being supported by 44 another, or one who has to be fed by another, is doomed to be 45 miserable--is a veritable invalid. He who eats cautiously only the 46 finer coating of the Loochi, for fear that the whole will not agree 47 with him, is already dead in life. Is he a man or a worm who cannot 48 walk twenty miles at a stretch? Who can save one who invites 49 illness and premature death of his own will?

50 And as for fermented bread, it is also poison; do not touch it 51 at all! Flour mixed with yeast become injurious. Never take any 52 fermented thing; in this respect the prohibition in our Shastras of 1 partaking of any such article of food is a fact of great importance.

2 Any sweet thing which has turned sour is called in the Shastras 3 "Shukta", and that is prohibited to be taken, excepting curd, which 4 is good and beneficial. If you have to take bread, toast it well over 5 the fire.

6 Impure water and impure food are the cause of all maladies.
7 In America, nowadays, it has become a craze to purify the drinking 8 water. The filter has had its day and is now discredited, because it 9 only strains the water through, while all the finer germs of diseases 10 such as cholera, plague, remain intact in it; moreover, the filter
11 itself gradually becomes the hotbed of these germs. When the filter 12 was first introduced in Calcutta, for five years, it is said there was 13 no outbreak of cholera; since then it has become as bad as ever, for 14 the reason that the huge filter itself has now come to be the vehicle 15 of cholera germs. Of all kinds, the simple method that we have of 16 placing three earthen jars one over another on a three-footed 17 bamboo frame, is the best; but every second or third day the sand 18 and charcoal should be changed, or used again after heating them.
19 The method of straining water through a cloth containing a lump of 20 alum in it, that we find in vogue in the villages along the banks of 21 the Ganga in the vicinity of Calcutta, is the best of all. The particles 22 of alum taking with them all earth and impurities and the disease 23 germs, gradually settle at the bottom of the deep jar as sediment; 24 this simple system brings into disrepute pipewater and excels all 25 your foreign filters. Moreover, if the water is boiled it becomes 26 perfectly safe. Boil the water when the impurities are settled down 27 by the alum, and then drink it, and throw away filters and such 28 other things into the ditch. Now in America, the drinking water is 29 first turned into vapour by means of huge machines; then the 30 vapour is cooled down into water again, and through another 31 machine pure air is pressed into it to substitute that air which goes 32 out during the process of vaporisation. This water is very pure and 33 is used in every home.

34 In our country, he who has some means, feeds his children 35 with all sorts of sweets and ghee-fried things, because, perchance, 36 it is a shame--just think what the people will say!--to let them have 37 only rice and Chapatis! What can you expect children fed like that 38 to be but disproportionate in figure, lazy, worthless idiots, with no 39 backbone of their own? The English people, who are so strong a 40 race, who work so hard day and night, and whose native place is a 41 cold country--even they hold in dread the very name of sweetmeats
42 and food fried in butter! And we, who live in the zone of fire, as it 43 were, who do not like to move from one place to another--what do 44 we eat?--Loochis, Kachooris, sweets, and other things, all fried in 45 ghee or oil! Formerly, our village zemindars in Bengal would think 46 nothing of walking twenty or thirty miles, and would eat twice-47 twenty Koi-fish, bones and all--and they lived to a hundred years.
48 Now their sons and grandsons come to Calcutta and put on airs, 49 wear spectacles, eat the sweets from the bazaars, hire a carriage to 50 go from one street to another, and then complain of diabetes--and 51 their life is cut short; this is the result of their being "civilised, 52 Calcutta-ised" people. And doctors and Vaidyas hasten their ruin

1 too. They are all-knowing, they think they can cure anything with 2 medicine. If there is a little flatulence, immediately some medicine
3 is prescribed. Alas, it never enters into the heads of these Vaidyas 4 to advise them to keep away from medicine, and go and have a 5 good walk of four or five miles, or so.

6 I am seeing many countries, and many ways and preparations 7 of food; but none of them approaches the admirable cooking of our 8 various dishes of Bengal, and it is not too much to say that one 9 would like to take rebirth for the sake of again enjoying their 10 excellence.

11 It is a great pity that one does not appreciate the value of 12 teeth when one has them! Why should we imitate the West as 13 regards food--and how many can afford to do so? The food which is 14 suitable in our part of the country is pure Bengali food, cheap, 15 wholesome, and nourishing, like that of the people of Eastern 16 Bengal. Imitate their food as much as you can; the more you lean 17 westwards to copy the modes of food, the worse you are, and the 18 more uncivilised you become. You are Calcutta-ites, civilised, 19 forsooth! Carried away by the charm of that destructive net which 20 is of your own creation, the bazaar sweets, Bankura has consigned 21 its popped-rice to the river Damodar, its Kalai Dal has been cast 22 into the ditch, and Dacca and Vikrampur have thrown to the dogs 23 their old dishes--or in other words, they have become "civilised"!
24 You have gone to rack and ruin, and are leading others in the same 25 path, you townspeople, and you pride yourselves on your being 26 "civilised"! And these provincial people are so foolish that they will 27 eat all the refuse of Calcutta and suffer from dyspepsia and 28 dysentery, but will not admit that it is not suiting them, and will 29 defend themselves by saying that the air of Calcutta is damp and 30 "saline"! They must by all means be townspeople in every respect!

31 So far, in brief, about the merits of food and other customs.
32 Now I shall say something in the matter of what the Westerners 33 generally eat, and how by degrees it has changed.

34 The food of the poor in all countries is some species of corn; 35 herbs, vegetables, and fish and meat fall within the category of 36 luxuries and are used in the shape of chutney. The crop which 37 grows in abundance and is the chief produce of a country is the 38 staple food of its poorer classes; as in Bengal, Orissa, Madras, and 39 the Malabar coast, the prime food is rice, pulse, and vegetables, 40 and sometimes, fish and meat are used for chutney only. The food 41 of the well-to-do class in other parts of India is Chapatis 42 (unfermented bread) of wheat, and rice, of the people in general, 43 mainly Chapatis of Bazra, Marhua, Janar, Jhingora, and other corns.

44 All over India, herbs, vegetables, pulse, fish, and meat are 45 used only to make tasteful the Roti (unfermented bread), or the 46 rice, as the case may be, and hence they are called in Sanskrit, 47 "Vyanjana", i.e. that which seasons food. In the Punjab, Rajputana, 48 and the Deccan, though the rich people and the princes take many 49 kinds of meat every day, yet with them even, the principal food is 50 Roti or rice. He who takes daily one pound of meat, surely takes 51 two pounds of Chapatis along with it.

1 Similarly in the West, the chief foods of the people in poor 2 countries, and especially of the poor class in the rich parts, are 3 bread and potatoes; meat is rarely taken, and, if taken, is 4 considered as a chutney. In Spain, Portugal, Italy, and in other 5 comparatively warm countries, grapes grow profusely, and the wine 6 made of grapes is very cheap. These wines are not intoxicating (i.e.
7 unless one drinks a great quantity, one will not get intoxicated) and 8 are very nutritious. The poor of those countries, therefore, use 9 grape juice as a nourishment instead of fish and meat. But in the 10 northern parts of Europe, such as Russia, Sweden, and Norway, 11 bread made of rye, potatoes, and a little dried fish form the food of 12 the poor classes.

13 The food of the wealthy classes of Europe, and of all the 14 classes of America is quite different, that is to say, their chief food 15 is fish and meat, and bread, rice, and other things are taken as 16 chutney. In America, bread is taken very little. When fish is served, 17 it is served by itself, or when meat is served, it is served by itself 18 and is often taken without bread or rice. Therefore the plate has to 19 be changed frequently; if there are ten sorts of food, the plate has 20 to be changed as many times. If we were to take our food in this 21 way, we should have to serve like this--suppose the Shukta (bitter 22 curry) is first brought, and, changing that plate, Dal is served on 23 another; in the same way the soup arrives; and again a little rice by 24 itself, or a few Loochis, and so on. One benefit of this way of serving 25 is that a little only of many varieties is taken, and it saves one from 26 eating too much of anything. The French take coffee, and one or 27 two slices of bread and butter in the morning, fish and meat, etc., in 28 a moderate way about midday, and the principal meal comes at 29 night. With the Italians and Spaniards, the custom is the same as 30 that of the French. The Germans eat a good deal, five or six times a 31 day, with more or less meat every time; the English, three times, 32 the breakfast being rather small, but tea or coffee between; and the 33 Americans also three times, but the meal is rather large every time, 34 with plenty of meat. In all these countries, the principal meal, is, 35 however, dinner; the rich have French cooks and have food cooked 36 after the French fashion. To begin with, a little salted fish or roe, or 37 some sort of chutney or vegetable--this is by way of stimulating the 38 appetite; soup follows; then, according to the present day fashion, 39 fruit; next comes fish; then a meat-curry; after which a joint of roast 40 meat, and with it some vegetables; afterwards game birds, or 41 venison, etc., then sweets, and finally, delicious ice-cream. At the 42 table of the rich, the wine is changed every time the dish changes-- 43 and hock, claret, and iced champagne are served with the different 44 courses. The spoon and knife and fork are also changed each time 45 with the plate. After dinner--coffee without milk and liqueurs in very 46 tiny glasses are brought in, and smoking comes last. The greater 47 the variety of wines served with the various dishes, the greater will 48 the host be regarded as a rich and wealthy man of fashion. As much 49 money is spent over there in giving a dinner as would ruin a 50 moderately rich man of our country.

51 Sitting cross-legged on a wooden seat on the ground, with a 52 similar one to lean his back against, the Arya used to take his food

1 on a single metal plate, placed on a slightly-raised wooden stool.
2 The same custom is still in vogue in the Punjab, Rajputana, 3 Maharashtra, and Gujarat. The people of Bengal, Orissa, Telinga, 4 and Malabar, etc., do not use wooden stools to put the plates on, 5 but take their food on a plate or a plantain-leaf placed on the 6 ground. Even the Maharaja of Mysore does the same. The 7 Mussulmans sit on a large, white sheet, when taking their food. The 8 Burmese and the Japanese place their plates on the ground and sit 9 supporting themselves on their knees and feet only, and not flat on 10 their haunches like the Indians. The Chinamen sit on chairs, with 11 their dishes placed on a table, and use spoons and wooden chop-12 sticks in taking their food. In the olden times, the Romans and 13 Greeks had a table before them and, reclining on a couch, used to 14 eat their food with their fingers. The Europeans also, sitting on 15 chairs, used to take their food with their fingers from the table; now 16 they have spoons and forks. The Chinese mode of eating is really an 17 exercise requiring skill. As our Pan (betel)-vendors make, by 18 dexterity of hand, two separate pieces of thin iron-sheets work like 19 scissors in the trimming of Pan leaves, so the Chinese manipulate 20 two sticks between two fingers and the palm of the right hand, in 21 such a way as to make them act like tongs to carry the vegetables
22 up to their mouths. Again, putting the two together, and holding a 23 bowl of rice near the mouth, they push the rice in with the help of 24 those sticks formed like a little shovel.

25 The primitive ancestors of every nation used to eat, it is said, 26 whatever they could get. When they killed a big animal, they would 27 make it last for a month and would not reject it even after it got 28 rotten. Then gradually they became civilised and learnt cultivation.
29 Formerly, they could not get their food every day by hunting and 30 would, like the wild animals, gorge themselves one day and then 31 starve four or five days in the week. Later they escaped that, for 32 they could get their food every day by cultivation; but it remained a 33 standing custom to take with food something like rotten meat or 34 other things of the old days. Primarily, rotten meat was an 35 indispensable article of food; now that or something else in its place 36 became, like the sauce, a favourite relish. The Eskimos live in the 37 snowy regions, where no kind of corn can be produced; their daily 38 food is fish and flesh. Once in a way when they lose their appetite, 39 they take just a piece of rotten flesh to recover their lost appetite.
40 Even now, Europeans do not immediately cook wild birds, game, 41 and venison, while fresh, but they keep them hanging till they begin 42 to smell a little. In Calcutta the rotten meat of a deer is sold out as 43 soon as brought to the market, and people prefer some fish when 44 slightly rotten. In some parts of Europe, the cheese which smells a 45 little is regarded as very tasty. Even the vegetarians like to have a 46 little onion and garlic; the Southern Indian Brahmin must have 47 them in his cooking. But the Hindu Shastras prohibited that too, 48 making it a sin to take onions, garlic, domestic fowl, and pork to 49 one caste (the Brahmin); they that would take them would lose their 50 caste. So the orthodox Hindus gave up onions and garlic, and 51 substituted in their place asafoetida, a thing which is more 52 strikingly offensive in smell than either of the other two! The 53 orthodox Brahmins of the Himalayas similarly took to a kind of 1 dried grass smelling just like garlic! And what harm in that? The 2 scriptures do not say anything against taking these things!

3 Every religion contains some rules regarding the taking of 4 certain foods, and the avoiding of others; only Christianity is an 5 exception. The Jains and the Bauddhas will by no means take fish or 6 meat. The Jains, again, will not even eat potatoes, radishes, or other 7 vegetable roots, which grow underground, lest in digging them up 8 worms are killed. They will not eat at night lest some insect get into 9 their mouths in the dark. The Jews do not eat fish that have no 10 scales, do not eat pork, nor the animals that are not cloven-hoofed 11 and do not ruminate. Again, if milk or any preparation of milk be 12 brought into the kitchen where fish or flesh is being cooked, the 13 Jews will throw away everything cooked there. For this reason, the 14 orthodox Jews do not eat the food cooked by other nations. Like the 15 Hindus, too, they do not take flesh which is simply slaughtered and 16 not offered to God. In Bengal and the Punjab, another name of flesh 17 that is offered to the Goddess is Mahaprasada, lit., the "great 18 offering". The Jews do not eat flesh, unless it is Mahaprasada, i.e.
19 unless it is properly offered to God. Hence, they, like the Hindus, 20 are not permitted to buy flesh at any and every shop. The 21 Mussulmans obey many rules similar to the the Jews, but do not, 22 like them, go to extremes; they do not take milk and fish or flesh at 23 the same meal, but do not consider it so much harmful if they are in 24 the same kitchen or if one touches another. There is much similarity 25 respecting food between the Hindus and the Jews. The Jews, 26 however, do not take wild boar, which the Hindus do. In the Punjab, 27 on account of the deadly animosity between the Hindus and the 28 Mussulmans, the former do what the latter will not, and the wild 29 boar has come to be one of the very essential articles of food with 30 the Hindus there. With the Rajputs, hunting the wild boar and 31 partaking of its flesh is rather an act of Dharma. The taking of the 32 flesh of even the domesticated pig prevails to a great extent in the 33 Deccan among all castes except the Brahmins. The Hindus eat the 34 wild fowl (cock or hen), but not domesticated fowls.

35 The people of India from Bengal to Nepal and in the 36 Himalayas as far as the borders of Kashmir, follow the same usages 37 regarding food. In these parts, the customs of Manu are in force to 38 a large extent even up to this day. But they obtain more especially 39 in the parts from Kumaon to Kashmir than in Bengal, Bihar, 40 Allahabad, or Nepal. For example, the Bengalis do not eat fowl or 41 fowl's eggs, but they eat duck's eggs; so do the Nepalese; but from 42 Kumaon upwards, even that is not allowed. The Kashmiris eat with 43 pleasure eggs of the wild duck, but not of the domesticated bird. Of 44 the people of India, beginning from Allahabad, excepting in the 45 Himalayas, they who take the flesh of goat take fowl as well.

46 All these rules and prohibitions with respect to food are for 47 the most part meant, no doubt, in the interests of good health; of 48 course, in each and every instance, it is difficult accurately to 49 determine which particular food is conducive to health and which is 50 not. Again, swine and fowls eat anything and everything and are 51 very unclean; so they are forbidden. No one sees what the wild 52 animals eat in the forest; so they are not disallowed. Besides, the 1 wild animals are healthier and less sickly than the domesticated 2 ones. Milk is very difficult of digestion, especially when one is 3 suffering from acidity, and cases have happened when even by 4 gulping down a glass of milk in haste, life has been jeopardised.

5 Milk should be taken as a child does from its mother's breast; if it is 6 sucked or sipped by degrees, it is easily digestible, otherwise not.
7 Being itself hard of digestion, it becomes the more so when taken 8 with flesh; so the Jews are prohibited from taking flesh and milk at 9 the same meal.

10 The foolish and ignorant mother who forces her baby to 11 swallow too much milk beats her breast in despair within a few 12 months, on seeing that there is little hope of her darling's life! The 13 modern medical authorities prescribe only a pint of milk even for an 14 adult, and that is to be taken as slowly as possible; and for babies a 15 "feeding-bottle" is the best means. Our mothers are too busy with 16 household duties, so the maid-servant puts the crying baby in her 17 lap and not unfrequently holds it down with her knee, and by means 18 of a spoon makes it gulp down as much milk as she can! And the 19 result is that generally it is afflicted with liver complaint and seldom 20 grows up--that milk proves to be its doom; only those that have 21 sufficient vitality to survive this sort of dangerous feeding attain a 22 strong and healthy manhood. And think of our old-fashioned 23 confinement rooms, of the hot fomentations given to the baby, and 24 treatments of like nature. It was indeed a wonder and must have 25 been a matter of special divine grace that the mother and the baby 26 survived these severe trials and could become strong and healthy!

27 28 IV. CIVILISATION IN DRESS

29 In every country the respectability of a person is determined, 30 to a certain extent, by the nature of the dress he wears. As our 31 village-folk in Bengal say in their patois, "How can a gentleman be 32 distinguished from one of low birth unless his income is known?" 33 And not only income, "Unless it is seen how one dresses oneself, 34 how can it be known if one is a gentleman?" This is the same all 35 over the world, more or less. In Bengal, no gentleman can walk in 36 the streets with only a loin-cloth on; while in other parts of India, no 37 one goes out of doors with a turban on his head. In the West, the 38 French have all along taken the lead in everything--their food and 39 their dress are imitated by others. Even now, though different parts 40 of Europe have got different modes of clothes and dress of their 41 own, yet when one earns a good deal of money and becomes a 42 "gentleman", he straightway rejects his former native dress and 43 substitutes the French mode in its place. The Dutch farmer whose 44 native dress somewhat resembles the pajamas of the Kabulis, the 45 Greek clothed in full skirts, the Russ dressed somewhat after the 46 Tibetan fashion--as soon as they become "genteel", they wear
47 French coats and pantaloons. Needless to speak of women--no 48 sooner do they get rich than they must by any means have their 49 dresses made in Paris. America, England, France, and Germany are 50 now the rich countries in the West, and the dress of the people of 51 these countries, one and all, is made after the French fashion,

1 which is slowly and surely making its way into every part of Europe.
2 The whole of Europe seems to be an imitation of France. However,
3 men's clothes are better made nowadays in London than Paris, so 4 men have them "London-made", and women in the Parisian style.
5 Those who are very rich have their dresses sent from those two 6 places. America enforces an exorbitant tax upon the importation of 7 foreign dresses; notwithstanding that, the American women must 8 have them from Paris and London. This, only the Americans can 9 afford to do, for America is now the chief home of Kubera, the god 10 of wealth.

11 The ancient Aryans used to put on the Dhoti and Chadar.¹¹⁰
12 The Kshatriyas used to wear trousers and long coats when fighting.
13 At other times they would use only the Dhoti and Chadar; and they 14 wore the turban. The same custom is still in vogue, except in 15 Bengal, among the people in all parts of India; they are not so 16 particular about the dress for the rest of the body, but they must 17 have a turban for the head. In former times, the same was also the 18 custom for both the man and the woman. In the sculptured figures 19 of the Buddhistic period, the men and the women are seen to wear 20 only a piece of Kaupin. Even Lord Buddha's father, though a king, is 21 seen in some sculptures, sitting on a throne, dressed in the same 22 way; so also the mother, only she has, in addition, ornaments on her 23 feet and arms; but they all have turbans! The Buddhist Emperor, 24 Dharmashoka, is seen sitting on a drum-shaped seat, with only a 25 Dhoti on, and a Chadar round his neck, looking at damsels 26 performing a dance before him; the dancing girls are very little 27 clothed, having only short pieces of loose material hanging from the 28 waist; but the glory is--that the turban is there, and it makes the 29 principal feature of their dress. The high officials of the State who 30 attended the royal court, are, however, dressed in excellent 31 trousers and Chogas, or long coats. When the King Nala was 32 disguised as a charioteer in the service of the King Rituparna, he 33 drove the chariot at such a tremendous speed that the Chadar of 34 the king Rituparna was blown away to such a distance that it could 35 not be recovered; and as he had set out to marry, or join a 36 Svayamvara, he had to do so, perchance, without a Chadar. The 37 Dhoti and the Chadar are the time-honoured dress of the Aryans.
38 Hence, at the time of the performance of any religious ceremony, 39 the rule among the Hindus even now is to put on the Dhoti and 40 Chadar only.

41 The dress of the ancient Greeks and Romans was Dhoti and 42 Chadar--one broad piece of cloth and another smaller one made in 43 the form of the toga, from which the word Choga is derived.
44 Sometimes they used also a shirt, and at the time of fighting, 45 trousers and coats. The dress of the women was a long and 46 sufficiently broad, square-shaped garment, similar to that formed 47 by sewing two sheets lengthwise, which they slipped over the head 48 and tied round, once under the breast and again round the waist.

1 ¹¹⁰ ?Dhoti is a piece of cloth about four or five yards long, worn by 2 the Indians round the loins instead of breeches, and Chadar is a 3 piece of cloth three yards long, used as a loose upper garment.
4

1 Then they fastened the upper parts which were open, over both the 2 arms by means of large pins, in much the same way as the hill-
3 tribes of the northern Himalayas still wear their blankets. There 4 was a Chadar over this long garment. This dress was very simple 5 and elegant.

6 From the very old days, only the Iranians used shaped 7 dresses. Perhaps they learnt it from the Chinese. The Chinese were 8 the primeval teachers of civilisation in dress and other things
9 pertaining to various comforts and luxuries. From time immemorial, 10 the Chinese took their meals at a table, sitting on chairs, with many 11 elaborate auxiliaries, and wore shaped dresses of many varieties-- 12 coat, cap, trousers, and so on.

13 On conquering Iran, Alexander gave up the old Greek Dhoti
14 and Chadar and began using trousers. At this, his Greek soldiers 15 became so disaffected towards him that they were on the point of 16 mutiny. But Alexander was not the man to yield, and by the sheer 17 force of his authority he introduced trousers and coats as a fashion 18 in dress.

19 In a hot climate, the necessity of clothes is not so much felt. A 20 mere Kaupin is enough for the purpose of decency; other clothes 21 serve more as embellishments. In cold countries, as a matter of 22 unavoidable necessity, the people, when uncivilised, clothe 23 themselves with the skins of animals, and when they gradually 24 become civilised, they learn the use of blankets, and by degrees, 25 shaped dresses, such as pantaloons, coats, and so on. Of course it is 26 impossible in cold countries to display the beauty of ornaments, 27 which have to be worn on the bare body, for if they did so they 28 would suffer severely from cold. So the fondness for ornaments is 29 transferred to, and is satisfied by, the niceties of dress. As in India 30 the fashions in ornaments change very often, so in the West the 31 fashions in dress change every moment.

32 In cold countries, therefore, it is the rule that one should not 33 appear before others without covering oneself from head to foot. In 34 London, a gentleman or a lady cannot go out without conforming 35 himself or herself exactly to what society demands. In the West, it is 36 immodest for a woman to show her feet in society, but at a dance it 37 is not improper to expose the face, shoulders, and upper part of the 38 body to view. In our country, on the other hand, for a woman to 39 show her face is a great shame, (hence that rigorous drawing of the 40 veil), but not so the feet. Again, in Rajputana and the Himalayas 41 they cover the whole body except the waist!

42 In the West, actresses and dancing-girls are very thinly 43 covered, to attract men. Their dancing often means exposing their 44 limbs in harmonious movements accompanied by music. In our 45 country, the women of gentle birth are not so particular in covering 46 themselves thoroughly, but the dancing-girls are entirely covered.
47 In the West, women are always completely clothed in the daytime; 48 so attraction is greater in their being thinly covered. Our women 49 remain in the house most of the time, and much dressing 50 themselves is unusual; so with us, attraction is greater in their fully 51 covering themselves. In Malabar, men and women have only a piece

1 of cloth round their loins. With the Bengalis it is about the same, 2 and before men, the women scrupulously draw their veils, and 3 cover their bodies.

4 In all countries except China, I notice many queer and 5 mysterious ideas of propriety--in some matters they are carried too 6 far, in others again, what strikes one as being very incorrect is not 7 felt to be so at all.

8 The Chinese of both sexes are always fully covered from head 9 to foot. The Chinese are the disciples of Confucious, are the 10 disciples of Buddha, and their morality is quite strict and refined.
11 Obscene language, obscene books or pictures, any conduct the 12 least obscene--and the offender is punished then and there. The 13 Christian missionaries translated the Bible into the Chinese tongue.
14 Now, in the Bible there are some passages so obscene as to put to 15 shame some of the Puranas of the Hindus. Reading those 16 indecorous passages, the Chinamen were so exasperated against 17 Christianity that they made a point of never allowing the Bible to be 18 circulated in their country. Over and above that, missionary women 19 wearing evening dress and mixing freely with men invited the 20 Chinese to their parties. The simple-minded Chinese were 21 disgusted, and raised a cry, saying: Oh, horror! This religion is 22 come to us to ruin our young boys, by giving them this Bible to 23 read, and making them fall an easy prey to the charms of these half 24 clothed wily women! This is why the Chinese are so very indignant 25 with the Christians. Otherwise, the Chinese are very tolerant 26 towards other religions. I hear that the missionaries have now 27 printed an edition, leaving out the objectionable parts; but this step 28 has made the Chinese more suspicious than before.

31 V. ETIQUETTE AND MANNERS

32 Again, in the West, ideas of decency and etiquette vary in 33 accordance with the different countries. With the English and 34 Americans they are of one type, with the French of another, with 35 the Germans again different. The Russians and the Tibetans have 36 much in common; and the Turks have their own quite distinct 37 customs, and so on.

38 In Europe and America, the people are extremely particular 39 in observing privacy, much more than we are.

40 We are vegetarians, and so eat a quantity of vegetables etc., 41 and living in a hot country we frequently drink one or two glasses of 42 water at a time. The peasant of the Upper Provinces eats two 43 pounds of powdered barley, and then sets to drawing and drinking 44 water from the well every now and again, as he feels so thirsty. In 45 summer we keep open places in our house for distributing water to 46 the thirsty, through a hollowed bamboo stem. These ways make the 47 people not so very particular about privacy; they cannot help it.
48 Compare cowsheds and horses' stables with lions' and tigers' cages.
49 Compare the dog with the goat. The food of the Westerners is 50 chiefly meat, and in cold countries they hardly drink any water.

1 Gentlemen take a little wine in small glasses. The French detest
2 water; only Americans drink it in great quantities, for their country 3 is very warm in summer. New York is even hotter than Calcutta. The 4 Germans drink a good deal of beer, but not with their meals.

5 In cold countries, men are always susceptible to catching 6 cold, so they cannot help sneezing; in warm countries people have 7 to drink much water at meals, consequently we cannot help 8 eructation. Now note the etiquette: if you do that in a Western 9 society, your sin is unpardonable; but if you bring out your pocket-10 handkerchief and blow your nose vigorously, it will see nothing 11 objectionable in that. With us, the host will not feel satisfied, so to 12 say, unless he sees you doing the former, as that is taken as a sign 13 of a full meal; but what would you think of doing the latter when 14 having a meal in the company of others?

15 In England and America, no mention of indigestion or any 16 stomach complaints, you may be suffering from, should be made 17 before women; it is different matter, of course, if your friend is an 18 old woman, or if she is quite well known to you. They are not so 19 sensitive about these things in France. The Germans are even less 20 particular.

21 English and American men are very guarded in their 22 conversation before women; you cannot even speak of a "leg". The 23 French, like us, are very free in conversation; the Germans and the 24 Russians will use vulgar terms in the presence of anybody.

25 But conversations on being in love are freely carried on 26 between mother and son, between brothers and sisters, and 27 between them and their fathers. The father asks the daughter many 28 questions about her lover (the future bridegroom) and cuts all sorts 29 of jokes about her engagement. On such occasions, the French 30 maiden modestly hangs down her head, the English maiden is 31 bashful, and the American maiden gives him sharp replies to his 32 face. Kissing and even embrace are not so very objectionable; these 33 things can be talked of in society. But in our country, no talk, nor 34 even an indirect hint of love affairs, is permissible before superior 35 relations.

36 The Westerners are now rich people. Unless one's dress is 37 very clean and in conformity with strict etiquette, one will not be 38 considered a gentleman and cannot mix in society. A gentleman 39 must change his collar and shirt twice or thrice every day; the poor 40 people, of course, cannot do this. On the outer garment there must 41 not be stains or even a crease. However much you may suffer from 42 heat, you must go out with gloves for fear of getting your hands 43 dirty in the streets, and to shake hands with a lady with hands that 44 are not clean is very ungentleman-like. In polite society, if the act of 45 spitting or rinsing the mouth or picking the teeth be ever indulged 46 in--the offender will be marked as a Chandala, a man of low caste, 47 and shunned!

48 The Dharma of the Westerners is worship of Shakti--the 49 Creative Power regarded as the Female Principle. It is with them
50 somewhat like the Vamachari's worship of women. As the Tantrika 51 says, "On the left side the women . . . on the right, the cup full of 1 wine; in short, warm meat with ingredients. . . . The Tantrika

2 religion is very mysterious, inscrutable even to the Yogis." It is this 3 worship of Shakti that is openly and universally practised. The idea 4 of motherhood, i.e. the relation of a son to his mother, is also 5 noticed in great measure. Protestantism as a force is not very 6 significant in Europe, where the religion is, in fact, Roman Catholic.
7 In the religion, Jehovah, Jesus, and the Trinity are secondary; there,
8 the worship is for the Mother--She, the Mother, with the Child Jesus 9 in her arms. The emperor cries "Mother", the field-marshal cries 10 "Mother", the soldier with the flag in his hand cries "Mother", the 11 seaman at the helm cries "Mother", the fisherman in his rags cries
12 "Mother", the beggar in the street cries "Mother"! A million voices 13 in a million ways, from a million places--from the palace, from the 14 cottage, from the church, cry "Mother", "Mother", "Mother"!
15 Everywhere is the cry "Ave Maria"; day and night, "Ave Maria", 16 "Ave Maria"!

17 Next is the worship of the woman. This worship of Shakti is 18 not lust, but is that Shakti-Puja, that worship of the Kumari (virgin) 19 and the Sadhava (the married woman whose husband is living), 20 which is done in Varanasi, Kalighat, and other holy places. It is the 21 worship of the Shakti, not in mere thought, not in imagination, but 22 in actual, visible form. Our Shakti-worship is only in the holy places, 23 and at certain times only is it performed; but theirs is in every place 24 and always, for days, weeks, months, and years. Foremost is the 25 woman's state, foremost is her dress, her seat, her food, her wants, 26 and her comforts; the first honours in all respects are accorded to 27 her. Not to speak of the noble-born, not to speak of the young and 28 the fair, it is the worship of any and every woman, be she an 29 acquaintance or a stranger. This Shakti-worship the Moors, the 30 mixed Arab race, Mohammedan in religion, first introduced into 31 Europe when they conquered Spain and ruled her for eight 32 centuries. It was the Moors who first sowed in Europe the seeds of 33 Western civilisation and Shakti-worship. In course of time, the 34 Moors forgot this Shakti-Worship and fell from their position of 35 strength, culture and glory, to live scattered and unrecognised in an 36 unnoticed corner of Africa, and their power and civilisation passed 37 over to Europe. The Mother, leaving the Moors, smiled Her loving 38 blessings on the Christians and illumined their homes.

39 40 VI. FRANCE--PARIS

41 What is this Europe? Why are the black, the bronze, the 42 yellow, the red inhabitants of Asia, Africa, and America bent low at 43 the feet of the Europeans? Why are they the sole rulers in this Kali-44 Yuga? To understand this Europe one has to understand her 45 through France, the fountain-head of everything that is highest in 46 the West. The supreme power that rules the world is Europe, and of 47 this Europe the great centre is Paris. Paris is the centre of Western 48 civilisation. Here, in Paris, matures and ripens every idea of 49 Western ethics, manners and customs, light or darkness, good or 50 evil. This Paris is like a vast ocean, in which there is many a 51 precious gem, coral, and pearl, and in which, again, there are

1 sharks and other rapacious sea-animals as well. Of Europe, the 2 central field of work, the Karma-kshetra, is France. A picturesque 3 country, neither very cold nor very warm, very fertile, weather 4 neither excessively wet nor extremely dry, sky clear, sun sweet, 5 elms and oaks in abundance, grass-lands charming, hills and rivers
6 small, springs delightful. Excepting some parts of China, no other 7 country in the world have I seen that is so beautiful as France. That 8 play of beauty in water and fascination in land, that madness in the 9 air, that ecstasy in the sky! Nature so lovely--the men so fond of 10 beauty! The rich and the poor, the young and the old, keep their 11 houses, their rooms, the streets, the fields, the gardens, the walks, 12 so artistically neat and clean--the whole country looks like a picture.
13 Such love of nature and art have I seen nowhere else, except in 14 Japan. The palatial structures, the gardens resembling Indra's 15 paradise, the groves, even the farmer's fields--everywhere and in 16 everything there is an attempt at beauty, an attempt at art, 17 remarkable and effected with success, too.

18 From ancient times, France has been the scene of conflict 19 among the Gauls, the Romans, the Franks, and other nations. After 20 the destruction of the Roman Empire, the Franks obtained absolute 21 dominion over Europe. Their King, Charlemagne, forced 22 Christianity into Europe, by the power of the sword. Europe was 23 made known in Asia by these Franks. Hence we still call the 24 Europeans Franki, Feringi, Planki or Filinga, and so on.

25 Ancient Greece, the fountain-head of Western civilisation, 26 sank into oblivion from the pinnacle of her glory, the vast empire of 27 Rome was broken into pieces by the dashing waves of the barbarian 28 invaders--the light of Europe went out; it was at this time that 29 another barbarous race rose out of obscurity in Asia--the Arabs.
30 With extraordinary rapidity, that Arab tide began to spread over the 31 different parts of the world. Powerful Persia had to kiss the ground 32 before the Arabs and adopt the Mohammedan religion, with the 33 result that the Mussulman religion took quite a new shape; the 34 religion of the Arabs and the civilisation of Persia became 35 intermingled.

36 With the sword of the Arabs, the Persian civilisation began to 37 disseminate in all directions. That Persian civilisation had been 38 borrowed from ancient Greece and India. From the East and from 39 the West, the waves of Mussulman invaders dashed violently on 40 Europe and along with them also, the light of wisdom and 41 civilisation began dispersing the darkness of blind and barbarous 42 Europe. The wisdom, learning, and arts of ancient Greece entered 43 into Italy, overpowered the barbarians, and with their quickening 44 impulse, life began to pulsate in the dead body of the world-capital 45 of Rome. The pulsation of this new life took a strong and formidable 46 shape in the city of Florence--old Italy began showing signs of new 47 life. This is called the Renaissance, the new birth. But this new 48 birth was for Italy only a rebirth; while for the rest of Europe, it was 49 the first birth. Europe was born in the sixteenth century A.D. i.e.
50 about the time when Akbar, Jehangir, Shahjahan, and other Moghul 51 Emperors firmly established their mighty empire in India.

52 Italy was an old nation. At the call of the Renaissance, she

1 woke up and gave her response, but only to turn over on her side in 2 bed, as it were, and fall fast asleep again. For various reasons, India
3 also stirred up a little at this time. For three ruling generations
4 from Akbar, learning, wisdom, and arts came to be much esteemed
5 in India. But India was also a very old nation; and for some reason 6 or other, she also did the same as Italy and slept on again.

7 In Europe, the tide of revival in Italy struck the powerful,
8 young, and new nation, the Franks. The torrent of civilisation,
9 flowing from all quarters into Florence and there uniting, assumed 10 a new form; but Italy had not the power within herself to hold that 11 stupendous mass of fresh energy. The revival would have, as in 12 India, ended there, had it not been for the good fortune of Europe 13 that the new nation of the Franks gladly took up that energy, and 14 they in the vigour of their youthful blood boldly floated their 15 national ship on the tide; and the current of that progress gradually 16 gathered in volume and strength--from one it swelled into a 17 thousand courses. The other nations of Europe greedily took the 18 water of that tide into their own countries by cutting new channels, 19 and increased its volume and speed by pouring their own lifeblood
20 into it. That tidal wave broke, in the fullness of time, on the shores 21 of India. It reached as far as the coast of Japan, and she became 22 revitalised by bathing in its water. Japan is the new nation of Asia.

23 Paris is the fountain-head of European civilisation, as 24 Gomukhi is of the Ganga. This huge metropolis is a vision of heaven 25 on earth, the city of constant rejoicing. Such luxury, such 26 enjoyments, such mirthfulness are neither in London nor in Berlin 27 nor anywhere else. True, there is wealth in London and in New 28 York, in Berlin there is learning and wisdom; but nowhere is that 29 French soil, and above all, nowhere is that genius of the French 30 man. Let there be wealth in plenty, let there be learning and 31 wisdom, let there be beauty of nature also, elsewhere--but where is 32 the MAN? This remarkable French character is the incarnation of 33 the ancient Greek, as it were, that had died to be born again-- 34 always joyful, always full of enthusiasm, very light and silly, yet 35 again exceedingly grave, prompt, and resolute to do every work, 36 and again despondent at the least resistance. But that despondency 37 is only for a moment with the Frenchman, his face soon after 38 flowing again with fresh hope and trust.

39 The Paris University is the model of European universities. All 40 the Academies of Science that are in the world are imitations of the 41 French Academy. Paris is the first teacher of the founding of 42 colonial empires. The terms used in military art in all languages are 43 still mostly French. The style and diction of French writings are 44 copied in all the European languages. Of science, philosophy, and 45 art, this Paris is the mine. Everywhere, in every respect, there is 46 imitation of the French. As if the French were the townspeople, and 47 the other nations only villagers compared with them! What the 48 French initiate, the Germans, the English, and other nations 49 imitate, may be fifty or twenty-five years later, whether it be in 50 learning, or in art, or in social matters. This French civilisation 51 reached Scotland, and when the Scottish king became the king of 52 England, it awoke and roused England; it was during the reign of

1 the Stuart Dynasty of Scotland that the Royal Society and other 2 institutions were established in England.

3 Again, France is the home of liberty. From here, the city of 4 Paris, travelled with tremendous energy the power of the People,
5 and shook the very foundations of Europe. From that time the face 6 of Europe has completely changed and a new Europe has come into 7 existence. "Liberte, Equalite, Fraternite " is no more heard in 8 France; she is now pursuing other ideas and other purposes, while 9 the spirit of the French Revolution is still working among the other 10 nations of Europe.

11 One distinguished scientist of England told me the other day
12 that Paris was the centre of the world, and that the more a nation
13 would succeed in establishing its connections with the city of Paris, 14 the more would that nation's progress in national life be achieved.
15 Though such assertion is a partial exaggeration of fact, yet it is 16 certainly true that if anyone has to give to the world any new idea, 17 this Paris is the place for its dissemination. If one can gain the 18 approbation of the citizens of Paris, that voice the whole of Europe 19 is sure to echo back. The sculptor, the painter, the musician, the 20 dancer, or any artist, if he can first obtain celebrity in Paris, 21 acquires very easily the esteem and eulogy of other countries.

22 We hear only of the darker side of this Paris in our country-- 23 that it is a horrible place, a hell on earth. Some of the English hold 24 this view; and the wealthy people of other countries, in whose eyes 25 no other enjoyment is possible in life except the gratification of the 26 senses, naturally see Paris as the home of immorality and 27 enjoyments.

28 But it is the same in all big cities of the West, such as London, 29 Berlin, Vienna, New York. The only difference is: in other countries 30 the means of enjoyment are commonplace and vulgar, but the very 31 dirt of civilised Paris is coated over with gold leaf. To compare the 32 refined enjoyments of Paris with the barbarity, in this respect, of 33 other cities is to compare the wild boar's wallowing in the mire with 34 the peacock's dance spreading out its feathers like a fan.

35 What nation in the world has not the longing to enjoy and live 36 a life of pleasure? Otherwise, why should those who get rich hasten 37 to Paris of all places? Why do kings and emperors, assuming other 38 names come to Paris and live incognito and feel themselves happy 39 by bathing in this whirlpool of sense-enjoyment? The longing is in 40 all countries, and no pains are spared to satisfy it; the only 41 difference is: the French have perfected it as a science, they know 42 how to enjoy, they have risen to the highest rung of the ladder of 43 enjoyment.

44 Even then, most of the vulgar dances and amusements are for 45 the foreigner; the French people are very cautious, they never 46 waste money for nothing. All those luxuries, those expensive hotels 47 and cafes, at which the cost of a dinner is enough to ruin one, are 48 for the rich foolish foreigner. The French are highly refined, profuse 49 in etiquette, polished and suave in their manners, clever in drawing 50 money from one's pocket; and when they do, they laugh in their 51 sleeve.

1 Besides, there is another thing to note. Society, as it is among 2 the Americans, Germans, and the English, is open to all nations; so 3 the foreigner can quickly see the ins and outs of it. After an 4 acquaintance of a few days, the American will invite one to live in 5 his house for a while; the Germans also do the same; and the 6 English do so after a longer acquaintance. But it is very different 7 with the French; a Frenchman will never invite one to live with his 8 family unless he is very intimately acquainted with him. But when a 9 foreigner gets such an opportunity and has occasion and time 10 enough to see and know the family, he forms quite a different 11 opinion from what he generally hears. Is it not equally foolish of 12 foreigners to venture an opinion on our national character, as they 13 do, by seeing only the low quarters of Calcutta? So with Paris. The 14 unmarried women in France are as well guarded as in our country, 15 they cannot even mix freely in society; only after marriage can they 16 do so in company with their husbands. Like us, their negotiations 17 for marriage are carried on by their parents. Being a jolly people, 18 none of their big social functions will be complete without 19 professional dancers, as with us performances of dancing-girls are 20 given on the occasions of marriage and Puja. Living in a dark foggy 21 country, the English are gloomy, make long faces and remark that 22 such dances at one's home are very improper, but at a theatre they 23 are all right. It should be noted here that their dances may appear 24 improper to our eyes, but not so with them, they being accustomed 25 to them. The girl may, at a dance, appear in a dress showing the 26 neck and shoulders, and that is not taken as improper; and the 27 English and Americans would not object to attending such dances, 28 but on going home, might not refrain from condemning the French 29 customs!

30 Again, the idea is the same everywhere regarding the 31 chastity of women, whose deviation from it is fraught with danger, 32 but in the case of men it does not matter so much. The Frenchman 33 is, no doubt, a little freer in this respect, and like the rich men of 34 other countries cares not for criticism. Generally speaking, in 35 Europe, the majority of men do not regard a little lax conduct as so 36 very bad, and in the West, the same is the case with bachelors. The 37 parents of young students consider it rather a drawback if the latter 38 fight shy of women, lest they become effeminate. The one 39 excellence which a man must have, in the West, is courage. Their 40 word "virtue" and our word "Viratva" (heroism) are one and same.
41 Look to the derivation of the word "virtue" and see what they call 42 goodness in man. For women, they hold chastity as the most 43 important virtue, no doubt. One man marrying more than one wife 44 is not so injurious to society as a woman having more than one 45 husband at the same time, for the latter leads to the gradual decay 46 of the race. Therefore, in all countries good care is taken to 47 preserve the chastity of women. Behind this attempt of every 48 society to preserve the chastity of women is seen the hand of 49 nature. The tendency of nature is to multiply the population, and 50 the chastity of women helps that tendency. Therefore, in being 51 more anxious about the purity of women than of men, every society 52 is only assisting nature in the fulfillment of her purpose.

1 The object of my speaking of these things is to impress upon 2 you the fact that the life of each nation has a moral purpose of its 3 own, and the manners and customs of a nation must be judged from 4 the standpoint of that purpose. The Westerners should be seen 5 through their eyes; to see them through our eyes, and for them to 6 see us with theirs--both these are mistakes. The purpose of our life
7 is quite the opposite of theirs. The Sanskrit name for a student, 8 Brahmacharin, is synonymous with the Sanskrit word Kamajit.¹¹¹
9 Our goal of life is Moksha; how can that be ever attained without 10 Brahmacharya or absolute continence? Hence it is imposed upon 11 our boys and youth as an indispensable condition during their 12 studentship. The purpose of life in the West is Bhoga, enjoyment; 13 hence much attention to strict Brahmacharya is not so 14 indispensably necessary with them as it is with us.

15 Now, to return to Paris. There is no city in the world that can 16 compare with modern Paris. Formerly it was quite different from 17 what it is now--it was somewhat like the Bengali quarters of 18 Varanasi, with zigzag lanes and streets, two houses joined together 19 by an arch over the lane here and there, wells by the side of walls, 20 and so on. In the last Exhibition they showed a model of old Paris, 21 but that Paris has completely disappeared by gradual changes; the 22 warfare and revolutions through which the city has passed have, 23 each time, caused ravages in one part or another, razing everything 24 to the ground, and again, new Paris has risen in its place, cleaner 25 and more extensive.

26 Modern Paris is, to a great extent, the creation of Napoleon 27 III. He completed that material transformation of the city which had 28 already been begun at the fall of the ancient monarchy. The student 29 of the history of France need not be reminded how its people were 30 oppressed by the absolute monarchs of France prior to the French 31 Revolution. Napoleon III caused himself to be proclaimed Emperor 32 by sheer force of arms, wading through blood. Since the first 33 French Revolution, the French people were always fickle and thus a 34 source of alarm to the Empire. Hence the Emperor, in order to keep 35 his subjects contented and to please the ever-unstable masses of 36 Paris by giving them work, went on continually making new and 37 magnificent public roads and embankments and building gateways, 38 theatres, and many other architectural structures, leaving the 39 monuments of old Paris as before. Not only was the city traversed 40 in all directions by new thoroughfares, straight and wide, with 41 sumptuous houses raised or restored, but a line of fortification was 42 built doubling the area of the city. Thus arose the boulevards, and 43 the fine quarters of d'Antin and other neighbourhoods; and the 44 avenue of the Champs Elysees, which is unique in the world, was 45 reconstructed. This avenue is so broad that down the middle and on 46 both sides of it run gardens all along, and in one place it has taken 47 a circular shape which comprises the city front, towards the west, 48 called Place de la Concorde. Round this Place de la Concorde are 49 statues in the form of women representing the eight chief towns of 50 France. One of these statues represents the district of Strasburg.

1 ¹¹¹ ?One who has full control over his passions.
2

1 This district was wrested from the hands of the French by the 2 Germans after the battle of 1870. The pain of this loss the French 3 have not yet been able to get over, and that statue is still covered 4 with flowers and garlands offered in memory of its dead spirit, as it 5 were. As men place garlands over the tombs of their dead relations, 6 so garlands are placed on that statue, at one time or another.

7 It seems to me that the Chandni Chauk of Delhi might have 8 been at one time somewhat like this Place de la Concorde. Here 9 and there columns of victory, triumphal arches and sculptural art in 10 the form of huge statues of men and women, lions, etc., adorn the 11 square.

1 A very big triumphal column in imitation of Trajan's Column, 2 made of gun-metal (procured by melting 1,200 guns), is erected in 3 Place Vendome in memory of the great hero, Napoleon I; on the 4 sides are engraved the victories of his reign, and on the top is the 5 figure of Napoleon Bonaparte. In the Place de la Bastille stands the 6 Column of July (in memory of the Revolution of July 1789) on the 7 side of the old fortress, "The Bastille", afterwards used as a State 8 prison. Here were imprisoned those who incurred the king's 9 displeasure. In those old days, without any trial or anything of the 10 kind, the king would issue a warrant bearing the royal seal, called 11 "Lettre de Cachet". Then, without any inquiry as to what good 12 action the victim had done for his country, or whether he was really 13 guilty or not, without even any question as to what he actually did 14 to incur the king's wrath, he would be at once thrown into the 15 Bastille. If the fair favourites of the kings were displeased with 16 anyone, they could obtain by request a "Lettre de Cachet " from the 17 king against that man, and the poor man would at once be sent to 18 the Bastille. Of the unfortunate who were imprisoned there, very 19 few ever came out. When, afterwards, the whole country rose as 20 one man in revolt against such oppression and tyranny and raised 21 the cry of "Individual liberty, All are equal, No one is high or low", 22 the people of Paris in their mad excitement attacked the king and 23 queen. The very first thing the mob did was to pull down the 24 Bastille, the symbol of extreme tyranny of man over man, and 25 passed the night in dancing, singing, and feasting on the spot. The 26 king tried to escape, but the people managed to catch him, and 27 hearing that the father-in-law of the king, the Emperor of Austria, 28 was sending soldiers to aid his son-in-law, became blind with rage 29 and killed the king and the queen. The whole French nation became 30 mad in the name of liberty and equality--France became a republic-- 31 they killed all the nobility whom they could get hold of, and many of 32 the nobility gave up their titles and rank and made common cause 33 with the subject people. Not only so, they called all the nations of 34 the world to rise--"Awake, kill the kings who are all tyrants, let all 35 be free and have equal rights." Then all the kings of Europe began 36 to tremble in fear lest this fire might spread into their countries, 37 lest it might burn their thrones; and hence, determined to put it 38 down, they attacked France from all directions. On the other side, 39 the leaders of the French Republic proclaimed, "Our native land is 40 in peril, come one and all", and the proclamation soon spread like 41 the flames of a conflagration throughout the length and breadth of 42 France. The young, the old, the men, the women, the rich, the poor, 43 the high, the low, singing their martial song, La Marseillaise, the 44 inspiring national song of France, came out--crowds of the poor 45 French people, in rags, barefooted, in that severe cold, and half-46 starved--came out with guns on their shoulders--{Sanskrit} for the 47 destruction of the wicked and the salvation of their homes--and 48 boldly faced the vast united force of Europe. The whole of Europe 49 could not stand the onrush of that French army. At the head and 50 front of the French army, stood a hero at the movement of whose 51 finger the whole world trembled. He was Napoleon. With the edge 52 of the sword and at the point of the bayonet, he thrust "Liberty, 53 Equality, and Fraternity" into the very bone and marrow of Europe--

1 and thus the victory of the tri-coloured Cocarde was achieved.
2 Later, Napoleon became the Emperor of France and successfully
3 accomplished the consolidation of the French Empire.

4 Subsequently, not being favoured with an heir to the throne,
5 he divorced the partner of his life in weal and woe, the guiding 6 angel of his good fortune, the Empress Josephine, and married the 7 daughter of the Emperor of Austria. But the wheel of his luck
8 turned with his desertion of Josephine, his army died in the snow 9 and ice during his expedition against Russia. Europe, getting this 10 opportunity, forced him to abdicate his throne, sent him as an exile 11 to an island, and put on the throne one of the old royal dynasty. The 12 wounded lion escaped from the island and presented himself again 13 in France; the whole of France welcomed him and rallied under his 14 banner, and the reigning king fled. But this luck was broken once 15 for all, and it never returned. Again the whole of Europe united 16 against him and defeated him at the battle of Waterloo. Napoleon 17 boarded an English man-of-war and surrendered himself; the 18 English exiled him and kept him as a lifelong prisoner in the distant 19 island of St. Helena. Again a member of the old royal family of 20 France was reinstated as king. Later on, the French people became 21 restless under the old monarchy, rose in rebellion, drove away the 22 king and his family and re-established the Republic. In the course of 23 time a nephew of the great Napoleon became a favourite with the 24 people, and by means of intrigues he proclaimed himself Emperor.
25 He was Napoleon III. For some time his reign was very powerful; 26 but being defeated in conflict with the Germans he lost his throne, 27 and France became once more a republic; and since then down to 28 the present day she has continued to be republican.

30 VII. PROGRESS OF CIVILISATION

31 The theory of evolution, which is the foundation of almost all 32 the Indian schools of thought, has now made its way into the 33 physical science of Europe. It has been held by the religions of all 34 other countries except India that the universe in its entirety is 35 composed of parts distinctly separate from each other. God, nature, 36 man--each stands by itself, isolated from one another; likewise, 37 beasts, birds, insects, trees, the earth, stones, metals, etc., are all 38 distinct from one another; God created them separate from the 39 beginning.

40 Knowledge is to find unity in the midst of diversity--to 41 establish unity among things which appear to us to be different 42 from one another. That particular relation by which man finds this 43 sameness is called Law. This is what is known as Natural Law.

44 I have said before that our education, intelligence, and 45 thought are all spiritual, all find expression in religion. In the West, 46 their manifestation is in the external--in the physical and social 47 planes. Thinkers in ancient India gradually came to understand that 48 that idea of separateness was erroneous, that there was a 49 connection among all those distinct objects--there was a unity
50 which pervaded the whole universe--trees, shrubs, animals, men, 51 Devas, even God Himself; the Advaitin reaching the climax in this

1 line of thought declared all to be but the manifestations of the One.
2 In reality, the metaphysical and the physical universe are one, and 3 the name of this One is Brahman; and the perception of 4 separateness is an error--they called it Maya, Avidya, or nescience.
5 This is the end of knowledge.

6 If this matter is not comprehended at the present day by 7 anyone outside India--for India we leave out of consideration--how 8 is one to be regarded as a Pandit? However, most of the erudite
9 men in the West are coming to understand this, in their own way-- 10 through physical science. But how that One has become the many-- 11 neither do we understand, nor do they. We, too, have offered the 12 solution of this question by saying that it is beyond our 13 understanding, which is limited. They, too, have done the same. But 14 the variations that the One has undergone, the different sorts of 15 species and individuality It is assuming--that can be understood, 16 and the enquiry into this is called Science.

17 So almost all are now evolutionists in the West. As small 18 animals through gradual steps change into bigger ones, and big 19 animals sometimes deteriorate and become smaller and weaker, 20 and in course of time die out--so also, man is not born into a 21 civilised state all on a sudden; in these days an assertion to the 22 contrary is no longer believed in by anybody among the thoughtful 23 in the West, especially because of the evidence that their ancestors 24 were in a savage state only a few centuries ago, and from that state 25 such a great transformation has taken place in so short a time. So 26 they say that all men must have gradually evolved, and are evolving 27 from the uncivilised state.

28 Primitive men used to manage their work with implements of 29 wood and stone; they wore skins and leaves, and lived in mountain-30 caves or in huts thatched with leaves made somewhat after the 31 fashion of birds' nests, and thus somehow passed their days.
32 Evidence in proof of this is being obtained in all countries by 33 excavating the earth, and also in some few places, men at that same 34 primitive stage are still living. Gradually men learnt to use metal-- 35 soft metals such as tin and copper--and found out how to make tools 36 and weapons by fusing them. The ancient Greeks, the Babylonians, 37 and the Egyptians did not know the use of iron for a long time--even 38 when they became comparatively civilised and wrote books and 39 used gold and silver. At that time, the Mexicans, the Peruvians, the 40 Mayas, and other races among the aborigines of the New World 41 were comparatively civilised and used to build large temples; the 42 use of gold and silver was quite common amongst them (in fact the 43 greed for their gold and silver led the Spaniards to destroy them).
44 But they managed to make all these things, toiling very hard with 45 flint implements--they did not know iron even by name.

46 In the primitive stage, man used to kill animals and fish by 47 means of bows and arrows, or by the use of a net, and live upon 48 them. Gradually, he learnt to till the ground and tend the cattle.
49 Taming wild animals, he made them work for him or reared them
50 for his own eating when necessary; the cow, horse, hog, elephant, 51 camel, goat, sheep, fowls, birds, and other animals became 52 domesticated; of all these, the dog is the first friend of man.

1 So, in the course of time, the tilling of the soil came into 2 existence. The fruits, roots, herbs, vegetables, and the various 3 cereals eaten by man are quite different now from what they were 4 when they grew in a wild state. Through human exertion and 5 cultivation wild fruits gained in size and acquired toothsome-
6 ness, and wild grass was transformed into delicious rice. Constant 7 changes are going on, no doubt, in nature, by its own processes.
8 New species of trees and plants, birds and beasts are being always 9 created in nature through changes brought about by time, 10 environment and other causes. Thus before the creation of man, 11 nature was changing the trees, plants, and other animals by slow 12 and gentle degrees, but when man came on the scene, he began to 13 effect changes with rapid strides. He continually transported the 14 native fauna and flora of one country to another, and by crossing 15 them various new species of plants and animals were brought into 16 existence.

17 In the primitive stage there was no marriage, but gradually 18 matrimonial relations sprang up. At first, the matrimonial relation 19 depended, amongst all communities, on the mother. There was not 20 much fixity about the father, the children were named after the 21 mother; all the wealth was in the hands of the women, for they 22 were to bring up the children. In the course of time, wealth, the 23 women included, passed into the hands of the male members. The 24 male said, "All this wealth and grain are mine; I have grown these 25 in the fields or got them by plunder and other means; and if anyone 26 disputes my claims and wants to have a share of them, I will fight 27 him." In the same way he said, "All these women are exclusively 28 mine; if anyone encroaches upon my right to them, I will fight him." 29 Thus there originated the modern marriage system. Women became 30 as much the property of man as his slaves and chattels. The ancient 31 marriage custom was that the males of one tribe married the 32 women of another; and even then the women were snatched away
33 by force. In course of time, this business of taking away the bride 34 by violence dropped away, and marriage was contracted with the 35 mutual consent of both parties. But every custom leaves a faint 36 trace of itself behind, and even now we find in every country a mock 37 attack is made on such occasions upon the bridegroom.

38 In Bengal and Europe, handfuls of rice are thrown at the 39 bridegroom, and in Northern India the bride's women friends abuse 40 the bridegroom's party calling them names, and so on.

41 Society began to be formed and it varied according to 42 different countries. Those who lived on the seashore mostly earned 43 their livelihood by fishing in the sea, those on the plains by 44 agriculture. The mountaineers kept large flocks of sheep, and the 45 dwellers in the desert tended goats and camels. Others lived in the 46 forest and maintained themselves by hunting. The dwellers on the 47 plain learnt agriculture; their struggle for existence became less 48 keen; they had time for thought and culture, and thus became more 49 and more civilised. But with the advance of civilisation their bodies 50 grew weaker and weaker. The difference in physique between those 51 who always lived in the open air and whose principal article of food 52 was animal diet, and others who dwelt in houses and lived mostly

1 on grains and vegetables, became greater and greater. The hunter, 2 the shepherd, the fisherman turned robbers or pirates whenever 3 food became scarce and plundered the dwellers in the plains.
4 These, in their turn, united themselves in bands of large numbers 5 for the common interest of self-preservation; and thus little 6 kingdoms began to be formed.

7 The Devas lived on grains and vegetables, were civilised,
8 dwelt in villages, towns, and gardens, and wore woven clothing.
9 The Asuras¹¹² dwelt in the hills and mountains, deserts or on the 10 seashores, lived on wild animals, and the roots and fruits of the 11 forests, and on what cereals they could get from the Devas in 12 exchange for these or for their cows and sheep, and wore the hides
13 of wild animals. The Devas were weak in body and could not endure 14 hardships; the Asuras, on the other hand, were hardy with frequent 15 fasting and were quite capable of suffering all sorts of hardships.

16 Whenever food was scarce among the Asuras, they set out 17 from their hills and seashores to plunder towns and villages. At 18 times they attacked the Devas for wealth and grains; and whenever 19 the Devas failed to unite themselves in large numbers against them, 20 they were sure to die at the hands of the Asuras. But the Devas 21 being stronger in intelligence, commenced inventing all sorts of 22 machines for warfare. The Brahmastra, Garudastra, Vaishnavastra, 23 Shaivastra--all these weapons of miraculous power belonged to the 24 Devas. The Asuras fought with ordinary weapons, but they were 25 enormously strong. They defeated the Devas repeatedly, but they 26 never cared to become civilised, or learn agriculture, or cultivate 27 their intellect. If the victorious Asuras tried to reign over the 28 vanquished Devas in Svarga, they were sure to be outwitted by the 29 Devas' superior intellect and skill, and, before long, turned into 30 their slaves. At other times, the Asuras returned to their own places 31 after plundering. The Devas, whenever they were united, forced 32 them to retire, mark you, either into the hills or forests, or to the 33 seashore. Gradually each party gained in numbers and became 34 stronger and stronger; millions of Devas were united, and so were 35 millions of Asuras. Violent conflicts and fighting went on, and along 36 with them, the intermingling of these two forces.

37 From the fusion of these different types and races our 38 modern societies, manners, and customs began to be evolved. New 39 ideas sprang up and new sciences began to be cultivated. One class 40 of men went on manufacturing articles of utility and comfort, either 41 by manual or intellectual labour. A second class took upon 42 themselves the charge of protecting them, and all proceeded to 43 exchange these things. And it so happened that a band of fellows 44 who were very clever undertook to take these things from one place 45 to another and on the plea of remuneration for this, appropriated 46 the major portion of their profit as their due. One tilled the ground, 47 a second guarded the produce from being robbed, a third took it to 48 another place, and a fourth bought it. The cultivator got almost

1 ¹¹² ?The terms "Devas" and "Asuras" are used here in the sense in 2 which they occur in the Gita (XVI), i.e. races in which the 3 Daivi(divine) or the Asuri (non-divine) traits preponderate.
4

1 nothing; he who guarded the produce took away as much of it as he 2 could by force; the merchant who brought it to the market took the 3 lion's share; and the buyer had to pay out of all proportion for the 4 things, and smarted under the burden! The protector came to be 5 known as the king; he who took the commodities from one place to 6 another was the merchant. These two did not produce anything--but 7 still snatched away the best part of things and made themselves fat 8 by virtually reaping most of the fruits of the cultivator's toil and 9 labour. The poor fellow who produced all these things had often to 10 go without his meals and cry to God for help!

11 Now, with the march of events, all these matters grew more 12 and more involved, knots upon knots multiplied, and out of this 13 tangled network has evolved our modern complex society. But the 14 marks of a bygone character persist and do not die out completely.
15 Those who in their former births tended sheep or lived by fighting 16 or the like take to habits of piracy, robbery, and similar occupations
17 in their civilised incarnation also. With no forests to hunt in, no hills 18 or mountains in the neighbourhood on which to tend the flocks--by 19 the accident of birth in a civilised society, he cannot get enough 20 opportunity for either hunting, fishing, or grazing cattle--he is 21 obliged therefore to rob or steal, impelled by his own nature; what 22 else can he do? And the worthy daughters of those far-famed 23 ladies¹¹³ of the Pauranika age, whose names we are to repeat every 24 morning --they can no longer marry more than one husband at a 25 time, even if they want to, and so they turn unchaste. In these and 26 other ways, men of different types and dispositions, civilised and 27 savage, born with the nature of the Devas and the Asuras have 28 become fused together and form modern society. And that is why 29 we see, in every society, God playing in these forms--the Sadhu 30 Narayana, the robber Narayana, and so on. Again, the character of 31 any particular society came to be determined as Daivi (divine) or 32 Asuri (non-divine) quality, in proportion as one or the other of these 33 two different types of persons preponderated within it.

34 The whole of the Asian civilisation was first evolved on the 35 plains near large rivers and on fertile soils--on the banks of the 36 Ganga, the Yangtse-Kiang, and the Euphrates. The original 37 foundation of all these civilisations is agriculture, and in all of them 38 the Daivi nature predominates. Most of the European civilisation, 39 on the other hand, originated either in hilly countries or on the 40 seacoasts--piracy and robbery form the basis of this civilisation; 41 there the Asuri nature is preponderant.

42 So far as can be inferred in modern times, Central Asia and 43 the deserts of Arabia seem to have been the home of the Asuras.
44 Issuing from their fastnesses, these shepherds and hunters, the 45 descendants of the Asuras, being united in hordes after hordes, 46 chased the civilised Devas and scattered them all over the world.

47 Of course there was a primitive race of aborigines in the 48 continent of Europe. They lived in mountain caves, and the more 49 intelligent among them erected platforms by planting sticks in the 1 ¹¹³ ?Ahalya, Tara, Mandodari, Kunti, and Draupadi.

1 comparatively shallow parts of the water and built houses thereon.
2 They used arrows, spearheads, knives, and axes, all made of flint, 3 and managed every kind of work with them.

4 Gradually the current of the Asian races began to break forth
5 upon Europe, and as its effects, some parts became comparatively 6 civilised; the language of a certain people in Russia resembles the 7 languages of Southern India.

8 But for the most part these barbarians remained as 9 barbarous as ever, till a civilised race from Asia Minor conquered 10 the adjacent parts of Europe and founded a high order of new 11 civilisation: to us they are known as Yavanas, to the Europeans as 12 Greeks.

13 Afterwards, in Italy, a barbarous tribe known as the Romans 14 conquered the civilised Etruscans, assimilated their culture and 15 learning, and established a civilisation of their own on the ruins of 16 that of the conquered race. Gradually, the Romans carried their 17 victorious arms in all directions; all the barbarous tribes in the 18 south-west of Europe came under the suzerainty of Rome; only the 19 barbarians of the forests living in the northern regions retained 20 independence. In the efflux of time, however, the Romans became 21 enervated by being slaves to wealth and luxury, and at that time 22 Asia again let loose her armies of Asuras on Europe. Driven from 23 their homes by the onslaught of these Asuras, the barbarians of 24 Northern Europe fell upon the Roman Empire, and Rome was 25 destroyed. Encountered by the force of this Asian invasion, a new 26 race sprang up through the fusion of the European barbarians with 27 the remnants of the Romans and Greeks. At that time, the Jews
28 being conquered and driven away from their homes by the Romans, 29 scattered themselves throughout Europe, and with them their new 30 religion, Christianity, also spread all over Europe. All these 31 different races and their creeds and ideas, all these different hordes 32 of Asuras, heated by the fire of constant struggle and warfare, 33 began to melt and fuse in Mahamaya's crucible; and from that 34 fusion the modern European race has sprung up.

35 Thus a barbarous, very barbarous European race came into 36 existence, with all shades of complexion from the swarthy colour of 37 the Hindus to the milk-white colour of the north, with black, brown, 38 red, or white hair, black, grey, or blue eyes, resembling the fine
39 features of face, the nose and eyes of the Hindus, or the flat faces 40 of the Chinese. For some time they continued to fight among 41 themselves; those of the north leading the life of pirates harassed
42 and killed the comparatively civilised races. In the meantime, 43 however, the two heads of the Christian Churches, the Pope (in 44 French and Italian, Pape ¹¹⁴) of Italy and the Patriarch of 45 Constantinople, insinuating themselves, began to exercise their 46 authority over these brutal barbarian hordes, over their kings, 47 queens, and peoples.

48 On the other side, again Mohammedanism arose in the 49 deserts of Arabia. The wild Arabs, inspired by the teachings of a

1 ¹¹⁴ ?Pronounced as Pâp.
2

1 great sage, bore down upon the earth with an irresistible force and 2 vigour. That torrent, carrying everything before it, entered Europe 3 from both the East and the West, and along with this tide the 4 learning and culture of India and ancient Greece were carried into 5 Europe.

6 A tribe of Asuras from Central Asia known as the Seljuk 7 Tartars, accepted Mohammedanism and conquered Asia Minor and 8 other countries of Asia. The various attempts of the Arabs to 9 conquer India proved unsuccessful. The wave of Mohammedan 10 conquest, which had swallowed the whole earth, had to fall back 11 before India. They attacked Sindh once, but could not hold it; and 12 they did not make any other attempt after that.

13 But a few centuries afterwards, when the Turks and other 14 Tartar races were converted from Buddhism to Mohammedanism-- 15 at that time they conquered the Hindus, Persians, and Arabs, and 16 brought all of them alike under their subjection. Of all the 17 Mohammedan conquerors of India, none was an Arab or a Persian;
18 they were all Turks and Tartars. In Rajputana, all the Mohammedan 19 invaders were called Turks, and that is a true and historical fact.
20 The Charans of Rajputana sang "turuganko bodhi jor --The Turks 21 are very powerful"--and that was true. From Kutubuddin down to 22 the Mogul Emperors--all of them are Tartars. They are the same 23 race to which the Tibetans belong; only they have become 24 Mohammedans and changed their flat round faces by intermarrying 25 with the Hindus and Persians. They are the same ancient races of 26 Asuras. Even today they are reigning on the thrones of Kabul, 27 Persia, Arabia, and Constantinople, and the Gandharis (natives of 28 Kandahar) and Persians are still the slaves of the Turks. The vast 29 Empire of China, too, is lying at the feet of the Manchurian Tartars; 30 only these Manchus have not given up their religion, have not 31 become Mohammedans, they are disciples of the Grand Lama.
32 These Asuras never care for learning and cultivation of the 33 intellect; the only thing they understand is fighting. Very little of the 34 warlike spirit is possible without a mixture of that blood; and it is 35 that Tartar blood which is seen in the vigorous, martial spirit of 36 Northern Europe, especially in the Russians, who have three-37 fourths of Tartar blood in their veins. The fight between the Devas 38 and the Asuras will continue yet for a long time to come. The Devas 39 marry the Asura girls and the Asuras snatch away Deva brides--it is 40 this that leads to the formation of powerful mongrel races.

41 The Tartars seized and occupied the throne of the Arabian 42 Caliph, took possession of Jerusalem, the great Christian place of 43 pilgrimage, and other places, would not allow pilgrims to visit the 44 holy sepulchre, and killed many Christians. The heads of the 45 Christian Churches grew mad with rage and roused their barbarian
46 disciples throughout Europe, who in their turn inflamed the kings 47 and their subjects alike. Hordes of European barbarians rushed 48 towards Asia Minor to deliver Jerusalem from the hands of the 49 infidels. A good portion of them cut one another's throats, others 50 died of disease, while the rest were killed by the Mohammedans.
51 However, the blood was up of the wild barbarians, and no sooner
52 had the Mohammedans killed them than they arrived in fresh

1 numbers--with that dogged obstinacy of a wild savage. They 2 thought nothing even of plundering their own men, and making 3 meals of Mohammedans when they found nothing better. It is well
4 known that the English king Richard had a liking for Mohammedan 5 flesh.

6 Here the result was the same, as usually happens in a war
7 between barbarians and civilised men. Jerusalem and other places 8 could not be conquered. But Europe began to be civilised. The 9 English, French, German, and other savage nations who dressed 10 themselves in hides and ate raw flesh, came in contact with Asian 11 civilisation. An order of Christian soldiers of Italy and other 12 countries, corresponding to our Nagas, began to learn philosophy; 13 and one of their sects, the Knights Templars, became confirmed 14 Advaita Vedantists, and ended by holding Christianity up to ridicule.
15 Moreover, as they had amassed enormous riches, the kings of 16 Europe, at the orders of the Pope, and under the pretext of saving 17 religion, robbed and exterminated them.

18 On the other side, a tribe of Mohammedans, called the 19 Moors, established a civilised kingdom in Spain, cultivated various 20 branches of knowledge, and founded the first university in Europe.
21 Students flocked from all parts, from Italy, France, and even from 22 far-off England. The sons of royal families came to learn manners, 23 etiquette, civilisation, and the art of war. Houses, temples, edifices, 24 and other architectural buildings began to be built after a new 25 style.

26 But the whole of Europe was gradually transformed into a 27 vast military camp--and this is even now the case.

28 When the Mohammedans conquered any kingdom, their king 29 kept a large part for himself, and the rest he distributed among his 30 generals. These men did not pay any rent but had to supply the king 31 with a certain number of soldiers in time of need. Thus the trouble 32 of keeping a standing army always ready was avoided, and a 33 powerful army was created which served only in time of war. This 34 same idea still exists to a certain extent in Rajputana, and it was 35 brought into the West by the Mohammedans. The Europeans took 36 this system from the Mohammedans. But whereas with the 37 Mohammedans there were the king and his groups of feudatory 38 chiefs and their armies, and the rest--the body of the people--were 39 ordinary subjects who were left unmolested in time of war--in 40 Europe, on the other hand, the king and his groups of feudatory 41 chiefs were on one side, and they turned all the subject people into 42 their slaves. Everyone had to live under the shelter of a military 43 feudatory chief, as his man, and then only was he allowed to live; he 44 had to be always ready to fight at any time, at the word of 45 command.

46 What is the meaning of the "Progress of Civilisation" which 47 the Europeans boast so much about? The meaning of it is the 48 successful accomplishment of the desired object by the justification 49 of wrong means, i.e. by making the end justify the means. It makes 50 acts of theft, falsehood, and hanging appear proper under certain 51 circumstances; it vindicated Stanley's whipping of the hungry

1 Mohammedan guards who accompanied him, for stealing a few 2 mouthfuls of bread; it guides and justifies the well-known European 3 ethics which says, "Get out from this place, I want to come in and 4 possess it", the truth of which is borne out by the evidence of 5 history, that wherever the Europeans have gone, there has followed 6 the extinction of the aboriginal races. In London, this "progress of 7 civilisation" regards unfaithfulness in conjugal life, and, in Paris, 8 the running away of a man, leaving his wife and children helpless 9 and committing suicide as a mistake and not a crime.

10 Now compare the first three centuries of the quick spread of 11 the civilisation of Islam with the corresponding period of 12 Christianity. Christianity, during its first three centuries, was not 13 even successful in making itself known to the world; and since the 14 day when the sword of Constantine made a place for it in his 15 kingdom, what support has Christianity ever lent to the spread of 16 civilisation, either spiritual or secular? What reward did the 17 Christian religion offer to that European Pandit who sought to prove 18 for the first time that the Earth is a revolving planet? What scientist 19 has ever been hailed with approval and enthusiasm by the Christian 20 Church? Can the literature of the Christian flock consistently meet 21 the requirements of legal jurisprudence, civil or criminal, or of arts 22 and trade policies? Even now the "Church" does not sanction the 23 diffusion of profane literature. Is it possible, still, for a man who has 24 penetrated deep into modern learning and science to be an 25 absolutely sincere Christian? In the New Testament there is no 26 covert or overt praise of any arts and sciences. But there is scarcely 27 any science or branch of art that is not sanctioned and held up for 28 encouragement, directly or indirectly, in the Koran, or in the many 29 passages of the Hadis, the traditional sayings of Mohammed. The 30 greatest thinkers of Europe--Voltaire, Darwin, Buchner, 31 Flammarion, Victor Hugo, and a host of others like them--are in the 32 present times denounced by Christianity and are victims of the 33 vituperative tongues of its orthodox community. On the other hand, 34 Islam regards such people to be believers in the existence of God, 35 but only wanting in faith in the Prophet. Let there be a searching 36 investigation into the respective merits of the two religions as 37 regards their helpfulness, or the throwing of obstacles in the path 38 of progress, and it will be seen that wherever Islam has gone, there 39 it has preserved the aboriginal inhabitants--there those races still 40 exist, their language and their nationality abide even to the present 41 day.

42 Where can Christianity show such an achievement? Where 43 are, today, the Arabs of Spain, and the aboriginal races of America?
44 What treatment are the Christians according to the European Jews?
45 With the single exception of charitable organisations no other line
46 of work in Europe is in harmony with the teachings of the Gospel.
47 Whatever heights of progress Europe has attained, every one of 48 them has been gained by its revolt against Christianity--by its rising 49 against the Gospel. If Christianity had its old paramount sway in 50 Europe today, it would have lighted the fire of the Inquisition
51 against such modern scientists as Pasteur and Koch, and burnt
52 Darwin and others of his school at the stake. In modern Europe

1 Christianity and civilisation are two different things. Civilisation has 2 now girded up her loins to destroy her old enemy, Christianity, to 3 overthrow the clergy, and to wring educational and charitable 4 institutions from their hands. But for the ignorance-ridden rustic 5 masses, Christianity would never have been able for a moment to 6 support its present despised existence, and would have been pulled 7 out by its roots; for the urban poor are, even now, enemies of the 8 Christian Church! Now compare this with Islam. In the 9 Mohammedan countries, all the ordinances are firmly established 10 upon the Islamic religion, and its own preachers are greatly 11 venerated by all the officials of the State, and teachers of other 12 religions also are respected.

13 The European civilisation may be likened to a piece of cloth, 14 of which these are the materials: its loom is a vast temperate hilly 15 country on the seashore; its cotton, a strong warlike mongrel race 16 formed by the intermixture of various races; its warp is warfare in 17 defence of one's self and one's religion. The one who wields the 18 sword is great, and the one who cannot, gives up his independence 19 and lives under the protection of some warrior's sword. Its woof is 20 commerce. The means to this civilisation is the sword; its auxiliary-- 21 courage and strength; its aim--enjoyment here and hereafter.

22 And how is it with us? The Aryans are lovers of peace, 23 cultivators of the soil, and are quite happy and contented if they can 24 only rear their families undisturbed. In such a life they have ample 25 leisure, and therefore greater opportunity of being thoughtful and 26 civilised. Our King Janaka tilled the soil with his own hands, and he 27 was also the greatest of the knowers of Truth, of his time. With us, 28 Rishis, Munis, and Yogis have been born from the very beginning; 29 they have known from the first that the world is a chimera. Plunder 30 and fight as you may, the enjoyment that you are seeking is only in 31 peace; and peace, in the renunciation of physical pleasures.
32 Enjoyment lies not in physical development, but in the culture of 33 the mind and the intellect.

34 It was the knowers who reclaimed the jungles for cultivation.
35 Then, over that cleared plot of land was built the Vedic altar; in that 36 pure sky of Bharata, up rose the sacred smoke of Yajnas; in that air 37 breathing peace, the Vedic Mantras echoed and re-echoed--and 38 cattle and other beasts grazed without any fear of danger. The 39 place of the sword was assigned at the feet of learning and 40 Dharma. Its only work was to protect Dharma and save the lives of 41 men and cattle. The hero was the protector of the weak in danger-- 42 the Kshatriya. Ruling over the plough and the sword was Dharma, 43 the protector of all. He is the King of kings; he is ever-awake even 44 while the world sleeps. Everyone was free under the protection of 45 Dharma.

46 And what your European Pundits say about the Aryan's 47 swooping down from some foreign land, snatching away the lands
48 of the aborigines and settling in India by exterminating them, is all 49 pure nonsense, foolish talk! Strange, that our Indian scholars, too, 50 say amen to them; and all these monstrous lies are being taught to 51 our boys! This is very bad indeed.

1 I am an ignoramus myself; I do not pretend to any 2 scholarship; but with the little that I understand, I strongly 3 protested against these ideas at the Paris Congress. I have been 4 talking with the Indian and European savants on the subject, and 5 hope to raise many objections to this theory in detail, when time
6 permits. And this I say to you--to our Pundits--also, "You are learned 7 men, hunt up your old books and scriptures, please, and draw your 8 own conclusions."

9 Whenever the Europeans find an opportunity, they 10 exterminate the aborigines and settle down in ease and comfort on 11 their lands; and therefore they think the Aryans must have done the 12 same! The Westerners would be considered wretched vagabonds if 13 they lived in their native homes depending wholly on their own 14 internal resources, and so they have to run wildly about the world 15 seeking how they can feed upon the fat of the land of others by 16 spoliation and slaughter; and therefore they conclude the Aryans 17 must have done the same! But where is your proof? Guess-work?
18 Then keep your fanciful guesses to yourselves!

19 In what Veda, in what Sukta, do you find that the Aryans
20 came into India from a foreign country? Where do you get the idea 21 that they slaughtered the wild aborigines? What do you gain by 22 talking such nonsense? Vain has been your study of the Ramayana; 23 why manufacture a big fine story out of it?

24 Well, what is the Ramayana? The conquest of the savage
25 aborigines of Southern India by the Aryans! Indeed! Ramachandra
26 is a civilised Aryan king, and with whom is he fighting? With King 27 Ravana of Lanka. Just read the Ramayana, and you will find that 28 Ravana was rather more and not less civilised than Ramachandra.
29 The civilisation of Lanka was rather higher, and surely not lower, 30 than that of Ayodhya. And then, when were these Vanaras 31 (monkeys) and other Southern Indians conquered? They were all, 32 on the other hand, Ramachandra's friends and allies. Say which 33 kingdoms of Vali and Guhaka were annexed by Ramachandra?

34 It was quite possible, however, that in a few places there
35 were occasional fights between the Aryans and the aborigines; 36 quite possible, that one or two cunning Munis pretended to 37 meditate with closed eyes before their sacrificial fires in the jungles 38 of the Rakshasas, waiting, however, all the time to see when the 39 Rakshasas would throw stones and pieces of bone at them. No 40 sooner had this been done than they would go whining to the kings.
41 The mail-clad kings armed with swords and weapons of steel would 42 come on fiery steeds. But how long could the aborigines fight with 43 their sticks and stones? So they were killed or chased away, and the 44 kings returned to their capital. Well, all this may have been, but 45 how does this prove that their lands were taken away by the 46 Aryans? Where in the Ramayana do you find that?

47 The loom of the fabric of Aryan civilisation is a vast, warm, 48 level country, interspersed with broad, navigable rivers. The cotton 49 of this cloth is composed of highly civilised, semi-civilised, and 50 barbarian tribes, mostly Aryan. Its warp is Varnashramachara,¹¹⁵

1 ¹¹⁵ ?The old Aryan institution of the four castes and stages of life.

1 and its woof, the conquest of strife and competition in nature.

2 And may I ask you, Europeans, what country you have ever
3 raised to better conditions? Wherever you have found weaker
4 races, you have exterminated them by the roots, as it were. You 5 have settled on their lands, and they are gone for ever. What is the 6 history of your America, your Australia, and New Zealand, your 7 Pacific Islands and South Africa? Where are those aboriginal races
8 there today? They are all exterminated, you have killed them 9 outright, as if they were wild beasts. It is only where you have not 10 the power to do so, and there only, that other nations are still alive.

11 But India has never done that. The Aryans were kind and 12 generous; and in their hearts which were large and unbounded as 13 the ocean, and in their brains, gifted with superhuman genius, all 14 these ephemeral and apparently pleasant but virtually beastly
15 processes never found a place. And I ask you, fools of my own 16 country, would there have been this institution of Varnashrama if 17 the Aryans had exterminated the aborigines in order to settle on 18 their lands?

19 The object of the peoples of Europe is to exterminate all in 20 order to live themselves. The aim of the Aryans is to raise all up to 21 their own level, nay, even to a higher level than themselves. The 22 means of European civilisation is the sword; of the Aryans, the 23 division into different Varnas. This system of division into different 24 Varnas is the stepping-stone to civilisation, making one rise higher 25 and higher in proportion to one's learning and culture. In Europe, it 26 is everywhere victory to the strong and death to the weak. In the 27 land of Bharata, every social rule is for the protection of the weak.

THE METHODS AND PURPOSE OF RELIGION

In studying the religions of the world we generally find two methods of procedure. The one is from God to man. That is to say, we have the Semitic group of religions in which the idea of God comes almost from the very first, and, strangely enough, without any idea of soul. It was very remarkable amongst the ancient Hebrews that, until very recent periods in their history, they never evolved any idea of a human soul. Man was composed of certain mind and material particles, and that was all. With death everything ended. But, on the other hand, there was a most wonderful idea of God evolved by the same race. This is one of the methods of procedure. The other is through man to God. The second is peculiarly Aryan, and the first is peculiarly Semitic.

The Aryan first began with the soul. His ideas of God were hazy, indistinguishable, not very clear; but, as his idea of the human soul began to be clearer, his idea of God began to be clearer in the same proportion. So the inquiry in the Vedas was always through the soul. All the knowledge the Aryans got of God was through the human soul; and, as such, the peculiar stamp that has been left upon their whole cycle of philosophy is that introspective search after divinity. The Aryan man was always seeking divinity inside his own self. It became, in course of time, natural, characteristic. It is remarkable in their art and in their commonest dealings. Even at the present time, if we take a European picture of a man in a religious attitude, the painter always makes his subject point his eyes upwards, looking outside of nature for God, looking up into the skies. In India, on the other hand, the religious attitude is always presented by making the subject close his eyes. He is, as it were, looking inward.

These are the two subjects of study for man, external and internal nature; and though at first these seem to be contradictory, yet external nature must, to the ordinary man, be entirely composed of internal nature, the world of thought. The majority of philosophies in every country, especially in the West, have started with the assumption that these two, matter and mind, are contradictory existences; but in the long run we shall find that they converge towards each other and in the end unite and form an infinite whole. So it is not that by this analysis I mean a higher or lower standpoint with regard to the subject. I do not mean that those who want to search after truth through external nature are wrong, nor that those who want to search after truth through internal nature are higher. These are the two modes of procedure. Both of them must live; both of them must be studied; and in the end we shall find that they meet. We shall see that neither is the body antagonistic to the mind, nor the mind to the body, although we find many persons who think that this body is nothing. In old times, every country was full of people who thought this body was only a disease, a sin, or something of that kind. Later on, however, we see how, as it was taught in the Vedas, this body melts into the 1 mind, and the mind into the body.

2 You must remember the one theme that runs through all the 3 Vedas: "Just as by the knowledge of one lump of clay we know all 4 the clay that is in the universe, so what is that, knowing which we 5 know everything else?" This, expressed more or less clearly, is the 6 theme of all human knowledge. It is the finding of a unity towards 7 which we are all going. Every action of our lives--the most material, 8 the grossest as well as the finest, the highest, the most spiritual--is 9 alike tending towards this one ideal, the finding of unity. A man is 10 single. He marries. Apparently it may be a selfish act, but at the 11 same time, the impulsion, the motive power, is to find that unity. He 12 has children, he has friends, he loves his country, he loves the 13 world, and ends by loving the whole universe. Irresistibly we are 14 impelled towards that perfection which consists in finding the unity, 15 killing this little self and making ourselves broader and broader.
16 This is the goal, the end towards which the universe is rushing.
17 Every atom is trying to go and join itself to the next atom. Atoms 18 after atoms combine, making huge balls, the earths, the suns, the 19 moons, the stars, the planets. They, in their turn, are trying to rush 20 towards each other, and, at last, we know that the whole universe, 21 mental and material, will be fused into one.

22 The process that is going on in the cosmos on a large scale, is 23 the same as that going on in the microcosm on a smaller scale. Just 24 as this universe has its existence in separation, in distinction, and 25 all the while is rushing towards unity, non-separation, so in our little 26 worlds, each soul is born, as it were, cut off from the rest of the 27 world. The more ignorant, the more unenlightened the soul, the 28 more it thinks that it is separate from the rest of the universe. The 29 more ignorant the person, the more he thinks he will die or will be 30 reborn, and so forth--ideas that are an expression of this 31 separateness. But we find that, as knowledge comes, man grows, 32 morality is evolved, and the idea of non-separateness begins.
33 Whether men understand it or not, they are impelled by that power 34 behind to become unselfish. That is the foundation of all morality. It 35 is the quintessence of all ethics, preached in any language, or in 36 any religion, or by any prophet in the world. "Be thou unselfish", 37 "Not 'I', but 'thou'"--that is the background of all ethical codes. And 38 what is meant by this is the recognition of non-individuality--that 39 you are a part of me, and I of you; the recognition that in hurting 40 you I hurt myself, and in helping you I help myself; the recognition 41 that there cannot possibly be death for me when you live. When one 42 worm lives in this universe, how can I die? For my life is in the life 43 of that worm. At the same time it will teach us that we cannot leave 44 one of our fellow-beings without helping him, that in his good 45 consists my good.

46 This is the theme that runs through the whole of Vedanta, and 47 which runs through every other religion. For, you must remember, 48 religions divide themselves generally into three parts. There is the 49 first part, consisting of the philosophy, the essence, the principles of 50 every religion. These principles find expression in mythology--lives 51 of saints or heroes, demi-gods, or gods or divine beings; and the 52 whole idea of this mythology is that of power. And in the lower class

1 of mythologies--the primitive--the expression of this power is in the 2 muscles; their heroes are strong, gigantic. One hero conquers the 3 whole world. As man advances, he must find expression for his 4 energy higher than in the muscles; so his heroes also find 5 expression in something higher. The higher mythologies have 6 heroes who are gigantic moral men. Their strength is manifested in 7 becoming moral and pure. They can stand alone, they can beat back 8 the surging tide of selfishness and immorality. The third portion of 9 all religions is symbolism, which you call ceremonials and forms.
10 Even the expression through mythology, the lives of heroes, is not 11 sufficient for all. There are minds still lower. Like children they 12 must have their kindergarten of religion, and these symbologies are 13 evolved--concrete examples which they can handle and grasp and 14 understand, which they can see and feel as material somethings.

15 So in every religion you find there are the three stages:
16 philosophy, mythology and ceremonial. There is one advantage 17 which can be pleaded for the Vedanta, that in India, fortunately, 18 these three stages have been sharply defined. In other religions the 19 principles are so interwoven with the mythology that it is very hard 20 to distinguish one from the other. The mythology stands supreme, 21 swallowing up the principles; and in course of centuries the 22 principles are lost sight of. The explanation, the illustration of the 23 principle, swallows up the principle, and the people see only the 24 explanation, the prophet, the preacher, while the principles have 25 gone out of existence almost--so much so that even today, if a man 26 dares to preach the principles of Christianity apart from Christ, 27 they will try to attack him and think he is wrong and dealing blows 28 at Christianity. In the same way, if a man wants to preach the 29 principles of Mohammedanism, Mohammedans will think the same; 30 because concrete ideas, the lives of great men and prophets, have 31 entirely overshadowed the principles.

32 In Vedanta the chief advantage is that it was not the work of 33 one single man; and therefore, naturally, unlike Buddhism, or 34 Christianity, or Mohammedanism, the prophet or teacher did not 35 entirely swallow up or overshadow the principles. The principles 36 live, and the prophets, as it were, form a secondary group, 37 unknown to Vedanta. The Upanishads speak of no particular 38 prophet, but they speak of various prophets and prophetesses. The 39 old Hebrews had something of that idea; yet we find Moses 40 occupying most of the space of the Hebrew literature. Of course I 41 do not mean that it is bad that these prophets should take religious 42 hold of a nation; but it certainly is very injurious if the whole field of 43 principles is lost sight of. We can very much agree as to principles, 44 but not very much as to persons. The persons appeal to our 45 emotions; and the principles, to something higher, to our calm 46 judgment. Principles must conquer in the long run, for that is the 47 manhood of man. Emotions many times drag us down to the level of 48 animals. Emotions have more connection with the senses than with 49 the faculty of reason; and, therefore, when principles are entirely 50 lost sight of and emotions prevail, religions degenerate into 51 fanaticism and sectarianism. They are no better than party politics 52 and such things. The most horribly ignorant notions will be taken

1 up, and for these ideas thousands will be ready to cut the throats of 2 their brethren. This is the reason that, though these great 3 personalities and prophets are tremendous motive powers for good, 4 at the same time their lives are altogether dangerous when they 5 lead to the disregard of the principles they represent. That has 6 always led to fanaticism, and has deluged the world in blood.
7 Vedanta can avoid this difficulty, because it has not one special 8 prophet. It has many Seers, who are called Rishis or sages. Seers-- 9 that is the literal translation--those who see these truths, the 10 Mantras.

11 The word Mantra means "thought out", cogitated by the 12 mind; and the Rishi is the seer of these thoughts. They are neither 13 the property of particular persons, nor the exclusive property of any 14 man or woman, however great he or she may be; nor even the 15 exclusive property of the greatest spirits--the Buddhas or Christs-- 16 whom the world has produced. They are as much the property of 17 the lowest of the low, as they are the property of a Buddha, and as 18 much the property of the smallest worm that crawls as of the 19 Christ, because they are universal principles. They were never 20 created. These principles have existed throughout time; and they 21 will exist. They are non-create--uncreated by any laws which 22 science teaches us today. They remain covered and becomes 23 discovered, but are existing through all eternity in nature. If 24 Newton had not been born, the law of gravitation would have 25 remained all the same and would have worked all the same. It was 26 Newton's genius which formulated it, discovered it, brought it into 27 consciousness, made it a conscious thing to the human race. So are 28 these religious laws, the grand truths of spirituality. They are 29 working all the time. If all the Vedas and the Bibles and the Korans 30 did not exist at all, if seers and prophets had never been born, yet 31 these laws would exist. They are only held in abeyance, and slowly 32 but surely would work to raise the human race, to raise human 33 nature. But they are the prophets who see them, discover them, and 34 such prophets are discoverers in the field of spirituality. As Newton 35 and Galileo were prophets of physical science, so are they prophets 36 of spirituality. They can claim no exclusive right to any one of these 37 laws; they are the common property of all nature.

38 The Vedas, as the Hindus say, are eternal. We now 39 understand what they mean by their being eternal, i.e. that the laws 40 have neither beginning nor end, just as nature has neither 41 beginning nor end. Earth after earth, system after system, will 42 evolve, run for a certain time, and then dissolve back again into 43 chaos; but the universe remains the same. Millions and millions of 44 systems are being born, while millions are being destroyed. The 45 universe remains the same. The beginning and the end of time can 46 be told as regards a certain planet; but as regards the universe, 47 time has no meaning at all. So are the laws of nature, the physical 48 laws, the mental laws, the spiritual laws. Without beginning and 49 without end are they; and it is within a few years, comparatively 50 speaking, a few thousand years at best, that man has tried to reveal 51 them. The infinite mass remains before us. Therefore the one great 52 lesson that we learn from the Vedas, at the start, is that religion has

1 just begun. The infinite ocean of spiritual truth lies before us to be 2 worked on, to be discovered, to be brought into our lives. The world
3 has seen thousands of prophets, and the world has yet to see 4 millions.

5 There were times in olden days when prophets were many in 6 every society. The time is to come when prophets will walk through 7 every street in every city in the world. In olden times, particular, 8 peculiar persons were, so to speak, selected by the operations of 9 the laws of society to become prophets. The time is coming when 10 we shall understand that to become religious means to become a 11 prophet, and that none can become religious until he or she 12 becomes a prophet. We shall come to understand that the secret of 13 religion is not being able to think and say all these thoughts; but, as 14 the Vedas teach, to realise them, to realise newer and higher ones 15 than have ever been realised, to discover them, bring them to 16 society; and the study of religion should be the training to make 17 prophets. The schools and colleges should be training grounds for 18 prophets. The whole universe must become prophets; and until a 19 man becomes a prophet, religion is mockery and a byword unto 20 him. We must see religion, feel it, realise it in a thousand times 21 more intense a sense than that in which we see the wall.

22 But there is one principle which underlies all these various 23 manifestations of religion and which has been already mapped out 24 for us. Every science must end where it finds a unity, because we 25 cannot go any further. When a perfect unity is reached, that science 26 has nothing more of principles to tell us. All the work that religions 27 have to do is to work out the details. Take any science, chemistry, 28 for example. Suppose we can find one element out of which we can 29 manufacture all the other elements. Then chemistry, as a science, 30 will have become perfect. What will remain for us is to discover 31 every day new combinations of that one material and the 32 application of those combinations for all the purposes of life. So 33 with religion. The gigantic principles, the scope, the plan of religion 34 were already discovered ages ago when man found the last words, 35 as they are called, of the Vedas--"I am He"--that there is that One in 36 whom this whole universe of matter and mind finds its unity, whom 37 they call God, or Brahman, or Allah, or Jehovah, or any other name.
38 We cannot go beyond that. The grand principle has been already 39 mapped out for us. Our work lies in filling it in, working it out, 40 applying it to every part of our lives. We have to work now so that 41 every one will become a prophet. There is a great work before us.

42 In old times, many did not understand what a prophet meant.
43 They thought it was something by chance, that just by a fiat of will 44 or some superior intelligence, a man gained superior knowledge. In 45 modern times, we are prepared to demonstrate that this knowledge 46 is the birthright of every living being, whosoever and wheresoever 47 he be, and that there is no chance in this universe. Every man who, 48 we think, gets something by chance, has been working for it slowly 49 and surely through the ages. And the whole question devolves upon 50 us: "Do we want to be prophets?" If we want, we shall be.

51 This, the training of prophets, is the great work that lies 52 before us; and, consciously or unconsciously, all the great systems

1 of religion are working toward this one great goal, only with this 2 difference, that in many religions you will find they declare that this 3 direct perception of spirituality is not to be had in this life, that man 4 must die, and after his death there will come a time in another 5 world, when he will have visions of spirituality, when he will realise 6 things which now he must believe. But Vedanta will ask all people 7 who make such assertions, "Then how do you know that spirituality 8 exists?" And they will have to answer that there must have been 9 always certain particular people who, even in this life, have got a 10 glimpse of things which are unknown and unknowable.

11 Even this makes a difficulty. If they were peculiar people, 12 having this power simply by chance, we have no right to believe in 13 them. It would be a sin to believe in anything by chance, because 14 we cannot know it. What is meant by knowledge? Destruction of 15 peculiarity. Suppose a boy goes into a street or a menagerie, and 16 sees a peculiarly shaped animal. He does not know what it is. Then 17 he goes to a country where there are hundreds like that one, and he 18 is satisfied, he knows what the species is. Our knowledge is 19 knowing the principle. Our non-knowledge is finding the particular 20 without reference to principle. When we find one case or a few 21 cases separate from the principle, without any reference to the 22 principle, we are in darkness and do not know. Now, if these 23 prophets, as they say, were peculiar persons who alone had the 24 right to catch a glimpse of that which is beyond and no one else has 25 the right, we should not believe in these prophets, because they are 26 peculiar cases without any reference to a principle. We can only 27 believe in them if we ourselves become prophets.

28 You, all of you, hear about the various jokes that get into the 29 newspapers about the sea-serpent; and why should it be so?
30 Because a few persons, at long intervals, came and told their 31 stories about the sea-serpent, and others never see it. They have no 32 particular principle to which to refer, and therefore the world does 33 not believe. If a man comes to me and says a prophet disappeared 34 into the air and went through it, I have the right to see that. I ask 35 him, "Did your father or grandfather see it?" "Oh, no," he replies, 36 "but five thousand years ago such a thing happened." And if I do not 37 believe it, I have to be barbecued through eternity!

38 What a mass of superstition this is! And its effect is to 39 degrade man from his divine nature to that of brutes. Why was 40 reason given us if we have to believe? Is it not tremendously 41 blasphemous to believe against reason? What right have we not to 42 use the greatest gift that God has given to us? I am sure God will 43 pardon a man who will use his reason and cannot believe, rather 44 than a man who believes blindly instead of using the faculties He 45 has given him. He simply degrades his nature and goes down to the 46 level of the beasts--degrades his senses and dies. We must reason; 47 and when reason proves to us the truth of these prophets and great 48 men about whom the ancient books speak in every country, we shall 49 believe in them. We shall believe in them when we see such 50 prophets among ourselves. We shall then find that they were not 51 peculiar men, but only illustrations of certain principles. They 52 worked, and that principle expressed itself naturally, and we shall

1 have to work to express that principle in us. They were prophets, 2 we shall believe, when we become prophets. They were seers of 3 things divine. They could go beyond the bounds of senses and catch 4 a glimpse of that which is beyond. We shall believe that when we 5 are able to do it ourselves and not before.

6 That is the one principle of Vedanta. Vedanta declares that 7 religion is here and now, because the question of this life and that 8 life, of life and death, this world and that world, is merely one of 9 superstition and prejudice. There is no break in time beyond what 10 we make. What difference is there between ten and twelve o'clock, 11 except what we make by certain changes in nature? Time flows on 12 the same. So what is meant by this life or that life? It is only a 13 question of time, and what is lost in time may be made up by speed 14 in work. So, says Vedanta, religion is to be realised now. And for you 15 to become religious means that you will start without any religion, 16 work your way up and realise things, see things for yourself; and 17 when you have done that, then, and then alone, you have religion.
18 Before that you are no better than atheists, or worse, because the 19 atheist is sincere--he stands up and says, "I do not know about 20 these things"--while those others do not know but go about the 21 world saying, "We are very religious people." What religion they 22 have no one knows, because they have swallowed some 23 grandmother's story, and priests have asked them to believe these 24 things; if they do not, then let them take care. That is how it is 25 going.

26 Realisation of religion is the only way. Each one of us will 27 have to discover. Of what use are these books, then, these Bibles of 28 the world? They are of great use, just as maps are of a country. I 29 have seen maps of England all my life before I came here, they 30 were great helps to me in forming some sort of conception of 31 England. Yet, when I arrived in this country, what a difference 32 between the maps and the country itself! So is the difference 33 between realisation and scriptures. These books are only the maps, 34 the experiences of past men, as a motive power to us to dare to 35 make the same experiences and discover in the same way, if not 36 better.

37 This is the first principle of Vedanta, that realisation is 38 religion, and he who realises is the religious man; and he who does 39 not is no better than he who says, "I do not know", if not worse, 40 because the other says, "I do not know", and is sincere. In this 41 realisation, again, we shall be helped very much by these books, not 42 only as guides, but as giving instructions and exercises; for every 43 science has its own particular method of investigation. You will find 44 many persons in this world who will say, "I wanted to become 45 religious, I wanted to realise these things, but I have not been able, 46 so I do not believe anything". Even among the educated you will 47 find these. Large numbers of people will tell you, "I have tried to be 48 religious all my life, but there is nothing in it." At the same time you 49 will find this phenomenon: Suppose a man is a chemist, a great 50 scientific man. He comes and tells you this. If you say to him, "I do 51 not believe anything about chemistry, because I have tried all my 52 life to become a chemist and do not find anything in it", he will ask,

1 "When did you try?" "When I went to bed, I repeated 'O chemistry, 2 come to me', and it never came." That is the very same thing. The 3 chemist laughs at you and says, "Oh, that is not the way. Why did 4 you not go to the laboratory and get all the acids and alkalis and 5 burn your hands from time to time? That alone would have taught 6 you." Do you take the same trouble with religion? Every science has 7 its own method of learning, and religion is to be learnt the same 8 way. It has its own method, and here is something we can learn, 9 and must learn, from all the ancient prophets of the world, every 10 one who has found something, who has realised religion. They will 11 give us the methods, the particular methods, through which alone 12 we shall be able to realise the truths of religion. They struggled all 13 their lives, discovered particular methods of mental culture, 14 bringing the mind to a certain state, the finest perception, and 15 through that they perceived the truths of religion. To become 16 religious, to perceive religion, feel it, to become a prophet, we have 17 to take these methods and practice them; and then if we find 18 nothing, we shall have the right to say, "There is nothing in religion, 19 for I have tried and failed."

20 This is the practical side of all religions. You will find it in 21 every Bible in the world. Not only do they teach principles and 22 doctrines, but in the lives of the saints you find practices; and when 23 it is not expressly laid down as a rule of conduct, you will always 24 find in the lives of these prophets that even they regulated their 25 eating and drinking sometimes. Their whole living, their practice, 26 their method, everything was different from the masses who 27 surrounded them; and these were the causes that gave them the 28 higher light, the vision of the Divine. And we, if we want to have 29 this vision, must be ready to take up these methods. It is practice, 30 work, that will bring us up to that. The plan of Vedanta, therefore, 31 is: first, to lay down the principles, map out for us the goal, and 32 then to teach us the method by which to arrive at the goal, to 33 understand and realise religion.

34 Again, these methods must be various. Seeing that we are so 35 various in our natures, the same method can scarcely be applied to 36 any two of us in the same manner. We have idiosyncrasies in our 37 minds, each one of us; so the method ought to be varied. Some, you 38 will find, are very emotional in their nature; some very 39 philosophical, rational; others cling to all sorts of ritualistic forms-- 40 want things which are concrete. You will find that one man does not 41 care for any ceremony or form or anything of the sort; they are like 42 death to him. And another man carries a load of amulets all over his 43 body; he is so fond of these symbols! Another man who is emotional 44 in his nature wants to show acts of charity to everyone; he weeps, 45 he laughs, and so on. And all of these certainly cannot have the 46 same method. If there were only one method to arrive at truth, it 47 would be death for everyone else who is not similarly constituted.
48 Therefore the methods should be various. Vedanta understands that 49 and wants to lay before the world different methods through which 50 we can work. Take up any one you like; and if one does not suit you, 51 another may. From this standpoint we see how glorious it is that 52 there are so many religions of the world, how good it is that there

1 are so many teachers and prophets, instead of there being only one, 2 as many persons would like to have it. The Mohammedans want to 3 have the whole world Mohammedan; the Christians, Christian; and 4 the Buddhists, Buddhist; but Vedanta says, "Let each person in the 5 world be separate, if you will; the one principle, the unity will be 6 behind. The more prophets there are, the more books, the more 7 seers, the more methods, so much the better for the world". Just as 8 in social life the greater the number of occupations in every society, 9 the better for that society, the more chance is there for everyone of 10 that society to make a living; so in the world of thought and of 11 religion. How much better it is today when we have so many 12 divisions of science--how much more is it possible for everyone to 13 have great mental culture, with this great variety before us! How 14 much better it is, even on the physical plane, to have the 15 opportunity of so many various things spread before us, so that we 16 may choose any one we like, the one which suits us best! So it is 17 with the world of religions. It is a most glorious dispensation of the 18 Lord that there are so many religions in the world; and would to 19 God that these would increase every day, until every man had a 20 religion unto himself!

21 Vedanta understands that and therefore preaches the one 22 principle and admits various methods. It has nothing to say against 23 anyone--whether you are a Christian, or a Buddhist, or a Jew, or a 24 Hindu, whatever mythology you believe, whether you owe 25 allegiance to the prophet of Nazareth, or of Mecca, or of India, or of 26 anywhere else, whether you yourself are a prophet--it has nothing 27 to say. It only preaches the principle which is the background of 28 every religion and of which all the prophets and saints and seers 29 are but illustrations and manifestations. Multiply your prophets if 30 you like; it has no objection. It only preaches the principle, and the 31 method it leaves to you. Take any path you like; follow any prophet 32 you like; but have only that method which suits your own nature, so 33 that you will be sure to progress.

THE NATURE OF THE SOUL AND ITS GOAL

The earliest idea is that a man, when he dies, is not annihilated. Something lives and goes on living even after the man is dead. Perhaps it would be better to compare the three most ancient nations--the Egyptians, the Babylonians, and the ancient Hindus--and take this idea from all of them. With the Egyptians and the Babylonians, we find a sort of soul idea--that of a double. Inside this body, according to them, there is another body which is moving and working here; and when the outer body dies, the double gets out and lives on for a certain length of time; but the life of the double is limited by the preservation of the outer body. If the body which the double has left is injured in any part, the double is sure to be injured in that part. That is why we find among the ancient Egyptians such solicitude to preserve the dead body of a person by embalming, building pyramids, etc. We find both with the Babylonians and the ancient Egyptians that this double cannot live on through eternity; it can, at best, live on for a certain time only, that is, just so long as the body it has left has been preserved.

The next peculiarity is that there is an element of fear connected with this double. It is always unhappy and miserable; its state of existence is one of extreme pain. It is again and again coming back to those that are living, asking for food and drink and enjoyments that it can no more have. It is wanting to drink of the waters of the Nile, the fresh waters which it can no more drink. It wants to get back those foods it used to enjoy while in this life; and when it finds it cannot get them, the double becomes fierce, sometimes threatening the living with death and disaster if it is not supplied with such food.

Coming to Aryan thought, we at once find a very wide departure. There is still the double idea there, but it has become a sort of spiritual body; and one great difference is that the life of this spiritual body, the soul, or whatever you may call it, is not limited by the body it has left. On the contrary, it has obtained freedom from this body, and hence the peculiar Aryan custom of burning the dead. They want to get rid of the body which the person has left, while the Egyptian wants to preserve it by burying, embalming, and building pyramids. Apart from the most primitive system of doing away with the dead, amongst nations advanced to a certain extent, the method of doing away with the bodies of the dead is a great indication of their idea of the soul. Wherever we find the idea of a departed soul closely connected with the idea of the dead body, we always find the tendency to preserve the body, and we also find burying in some form or other. On the other hand, with those in whom the idea has developed that the soul is a separate entity from the body and will not be hurt if the dead body is even destroyed, burning is always the process resorted to. Thus we find among all ancient Aryan races burning of the dead, although the Parsees changed it to exposing the body on a tower. But the very name of the tower (Dakhma) means a burning-place, showing that in ancient

1 times they also used to burn their bodies. The other peculiarity is 2 that among the Aryans there was no element of fear with these 3 doubles. They are not coming down to ask for food or help; and 4 when denied that help, they do not become ferocious or try to 5 destroy those that are living. They rather are joyful, are glad at 6 getting free. The fire of the funeral pyre is the symbol of 7 disintegration. The symbol is asked to take the departed soul gently 8 up and to carry it to the place where the fathers live, where there is 9 no sorrow, where there is joy forever, and so on.

10 Of these two ideas we see at once that they are of a similar 11 nature, the one optimistic, and the other pessimistic--being the 12 elementary. The one is the evolution of the other. It is quite possible 13 that the Aryans themselves had, or may have had, in very ancient 14 times exactly the same idea as the Egyptians. In studying their most 15 ancient records, we find the possibility of this very idea. But it is 16 quite a bright thing, something bright. When a man dies, this soul 17 goes to live with the fathers and lives there enjoying their 18 happiness. These fathers receive it with great kindness; this is the 19 most ancient idea in India of a soul. Later on, this idea becomes 20 higher and higher. Then it was found out that what they called the 21 soul before was not really the soul. This bright body, fine body, 22 however fine it might be, was a body after all; and all bodies must 23 be made up of materials, either gross or fine. Whatever had form or 24 shape must be limited, and could not be eternal. Change is inherent 25 in every form. How could that which is changeful be eternal? So, 26 behind this bright body, as it were, they found something which was 27 the soul of man. It was called the Atman, the Self. This Self idea 28 then began. It had also to undergo various changes. By some it was 29 thought that this Self was eternal; that it was very minute, almost 30 as minute as an atom; that it lived in a certain part of the body, and 31 when a man died, his Self went away, taking along with it the bright 32 body. There were other people who denied the atomic nature of the 33 soul on the same ground on which they had denied that this bright 34 body was the soul.

35 Out of all these various opinions rose Sankhya philosophy, 36 where at once we find immense differences. The idea there is that 37 man has first this gross body; behind the gross body is the fine 38 body, which is the vehicle of the mind, as it were; and behind even 39 that is the Self, the Perceiver, as the Sankhyas call it, of the mind; 40 and this is omnipresent. That is, your soul, my soul, everyone's soul 41 is everywhere at the same time. If it is formless, how can it be said 42 to occupy space? Everything that occupies space has form. The 43 formless can only be infinite. So each soul is everywhere. The 44 second theory put forward is still more startling. They all saw in 45 ancient times that human beings are progressive, at least many of 46 them. They grew in purity and power and knowledge; and the 47 question was asked: Whence was this knowledge, this purity, this 48 strength which men manifested? Here is a baby without any 49 knowledge. This baby grows and becomes a strong, powerful, and 50 wise man. Whence did that baby get its wealth of knowledge and 51 power? The answer was that it was in the soul; the soul of the baby 52 had this knowledge and power from the very beginning. This power,

1 this purity, this strength were in that soul, but they were 2 unmanifested; they have become manifested. What is meant by this 3 manifestation or unmanifestation? That each soul is pure and 4 perfect, omnipotent and omniscient, as they say in the Sankhya; but 5 it can manifest itself externally only according to the mind it has 6 got. The mind is, as it were, the reflecting mirror of the soul. My 7 mind reflects to a certain extent the powers of my soul; so your 8 soul, and so everyone's. That mirror which is clearer reflects the 9 soul better. So the manifestation varies according to the mind one 10 possesses; but the souls in themselves are pure and perfect.

11 There was another school who thought that this could not be.
12 Though souls are pure and perfect by their nature, this purity and 13 perfection become, as they say, contracted at times, and expanded 14 at other times. There are certain actions and certain thoughts 15 which, as it were, contract the nature of the soul; and then also 16 other thoughts and acts, which bring its nature out, manifest it.
17 This again is explained. All thoughts and actions that make the 18 power and purity of the soul get contracted are evil actions, evil 19 thoughts; and all those thoughts and actions which make the soul 20 manifest itself--make the powers come out, as it were--are good and 21 moral actions. The difference between the two theories is very 22 slight; it is more or less a play on the words expansion and 23 contraction. The one that holds that the variation only depends on 24 the mind the soul has got is the better explanation, no doubt, but 25 the contracting and expanding theory wants to take refuge behind 26 the two words; and they should be asked what is meant by 27 contraction of the soul, or expansion. Soul is a spirit. You can 28 question what is meant by contraction or expansion with regard to 29 material, whether gross which we call matter, or fine, the mind; but 30 beyond that, if it is not matter, that which is not bound by space or 31 by time, how to explain the words contraction and expansion with 32 regard to that? So it seems that this theory which holds that the 33 soul is pure and perfect all the time, only its nature is more 34 reflected in some minds than in others, is the better. As the mind 35 changes, its character grows, as it were, more and more clear and 36 gives a better reflection of the soul. Thus it goes on, until the mind 37 has become so purified that it reflects fully the quality of the soul; 38 then the soul becomes liberated.

39 This is the nature of the soul. What is the goal? The goal of 40 the soul among all the different sects in India seems to be the same.
41 There is one idea with all, and that is liberation. Man is infinite; and 42 this limitation in which he exists now is not his nature. But through 43 these limitations he is struggling upward and forward until he 44 reaches the infinite, the unlimited, his birthright, his nature. All 45 these combinations and recombinations and manifestations that we 46 see round us are not the aim or the goal, but merely by the way and 47 in passing. These combinations as earths and suns, and moons and 48 stars, right and wrong, good and bad, our laughter and our tears, 49 our joys and sorrows, are to enable us to gain experience through 50 which the soul manifests its perfect nature and throws off 51 limitation. No more, then, is it bound by laws either of internal or 52 external nature. It has gone beyond all law, beyond all limitation,

1 beyond all nature. Nature has come under the control of the soul, 2 not the soul under the control of nature, as it thinks it is now. That 3 is the one goal that the soul has; and all the succeeding steps 4 through which it is manifesting, all the successive experiences
5 through which it is passing in order to attain to that goal--freedom-- 6 are represented as its births. The soul is, as it were, taking up a 7 lower body and trying to express itself through that. It finds that to 8 be insufficient, throws it aside, and a higher one is taken up.
9 Through that it struggles to express itself. That also is found to be 10 insufficient, is rejected, and a higher one comes; so on and on until 11 a body is found through which the soul manifests its highest 12 aspirations. Then the soul becomes free.

13 Now the question is: If the soul is infinite and exists 14 everywhere, as it must do, if it is a spirit, what is meant by its 15 taking up bodies and passing through body after body? The idea is 16 that the soul neither comes nor goes, neither is born nor dies. How 17 can the omnipresent be born? It is meaningless nonsense to say 18 that the soul lives in a body. How can the unlimited live in a limited 19 space? But as a man having a book in his hands reads one page and 20 turns it over, goes to the next page, reads that, turns it over, and so 21 on, yet it is the book that is being turned over, the pages that are 22 revolving, and not he--he is where he is always--even so with regard 23 to the soul. The whole of nature is that book which the soul is 24 reading. Each life, as it were, is one page of that book; and that 25 read, it is turned over, and so on and on, until the whole of the book 26 is finished, and the soul becomes perfect, having got all the 27 experiences of nature. Yet at the same time it never moved, nor 28 came, nor went; it was only gathering experiences. But it appears 29 to us that we are moving. The earth is moving, yet we think that the 30 sun is moving instead of the earth, which we know to be a mistake, 31 a delusion of the senses. So is also this delusion that we are born 32 and that we die, that we come or that we go. We neither come nor 33 go, nor have we been born. For where is the soul to go? There is no 34 place for it to go. Where is it not already?

35 Thus the theory comes of the evolution of nature and the 36 manifestation of the soul. The processes of evolution, higher and 37 higher combinations, are not in the soul; it is already what it is.
38 They are in nature. But as nature is evolving forward into higher 39 and higher combinations, more and more of the majesty of the soul 40 is manifesting itself. Suppose here is a screen, and behind the 41 screen is wonderful scenery. There is one small hole in the screen 42 through which we can catch only a little bit of that scenery behind.
43 Suppose that hole becomes increased in size. As the hole increases 44 in size, more and more of the scenery behind comes within the 45 range of vision; and when the whole screen has disappeared, there 46 is nothing between the scenery and you; you see the whole of it.
47 This screen is the mind of man. Behind it is the majesty, the purity, 48 the infinite power of the soul, and as the mind becomes clearer and 49 clearer, purer and purer, more of the majesty of the soul manifests
50 itself. Not that the soul is changing, but the change is in the screen.
51 The soul is the unchangeable One, the immortal, the pure, the ever-52 blessed One.

1 So, at last, the theory comes to this. From the highest to the 2 lowest and most wicked man, in the greatest of human beings and 3 the lowest of crawling worms under our feet, is the soul, pure and 4 perfect, infinite and ever-blessed. In the worm that soul is 5 manifesting only an infinitesimal part of its power and purity, and in 6 the greatest man it is manifesting most of it. The difference consists 7 in the degree of manifestation, but not in the essence. Through all 8 beings exist the same pure and perfect soul.

9 There are also the ideas of heavens and other places, but 10 these are thought to be second-rate. The idea of heaven is thought 11 to be a low idea. It arises from the desire for a place of enjoyment.
12 We foolishly want to limit the whole universe with our present 13 experience. Children think that the whole universe is full of 14 children. Madmen think the whole universe a lunatic asylum, and so 15 on. So those to whom this world is but sense-enjoyment, whose 16 whole life is in eating and feasting, with very little difference 17 between them and brute beasts--such are naturally found to 18 conceive of places where they will have more enjoyments, because 19 this life is short. Their desire for enjoyment is infinite, so they are 20 bound to think of places where they will have unobstructed 21 enjoyment of the senses; and we see, as we go on, that those who 22 want to go to such places will have to go; they will dream, and when 23 this dream is over, they will be in another dream where there is 24 plenty of sense-enjoyment; and when that dream breaks, they will 25 have to think of something else. Thus they will be driving about 26 from dream to dream.

27 Then comes the last theory, one more idea about the soul. If 28 the soul is pure and perfect in its essence and nature, and if every 29 soul is infinite and omnipresent, how is it that there can be many 30 souls? There cannot be many infinities. There cannot be two even, 31 not to speak of many. If there were two infinities, one would limit the 32 other, and both become finite. The infinite can only be one, and 33 boldly the last conclusion is approached--that it is but one and not 34 two.

35 Two birds are sitting on the same tree, one on the top, the 36 other below, both of most beautiful plumage. The one eats the 37 fruits, while the other remains calm and majestic, concentrated in 38 its own glory. The lower bird is eating fruits, good and evil, going 39 after sense-enjoyments; and when it eats occasionally a bitter fruit, 40 it gets higher and looks up and sees the other bird sitting there 41 calm and majestic, neither caring for good fruit nor for bad, 42 sufficient unto itself, seeking no enjoyment beyond itself. It itself is 43 enjoyment; what to seek beyond itself? The lower bird looks at the 44 upper bird and wants to get near. It goes a little higher; but its old 45 impressions are upon it, and still it goes about eating the same 46 fruit. Again an exceptionally bitter fruit comes; it gets a shock, 47 looks up. There the same calm and majestic one! It comes near but 48 again is dragged down by past actions, and continues to eat the 49 sweet and bitter fruits. Again the exceptionally bitter fruit comes, 50 the bird looks up, gets nearer; and as it begins to get nearer and 51 nearer, the light from the plumage of the other bird is reflected 52 upon it. Its own plumage is melting away, and when it has come

1 sufficiently near, the whole vision changes. The lower bird never 2 existed, it was always the upper bird, and what it took for the lower 3 bird was only a little bit of a reflection.

4 Such is the nature of the soul. This human soul goes after 5 sense-enjoyments, vanities of the world; like animals it lives only in 6 the senses, lives only in momentary titillations of the nerves. When 7 there comes a blow, for a moment the head reels, and everything 8 begins to vanish, and it finds that the world was not what it thought 9 it to be, that life was not so smooth. It looks upward and sees the 10 infinite Lord a moment, catches a glimpse of the majestic One, 11 comes a little nearer, but is dragged away by its past actions.
12 Another blow comes, and sends it back again. It catches another 13 glimpse of the infinite Presence, comes nearer, and as it approaches 14 nearer and nearer, it begins to find out that its individuality--its low, 15 vulgar, intensely selfish individuality--is melting away; the desire to 16 sacrifice the whole world to make that little thing happy is melting 17 away; and as it gets gradually nearer and nearer, nature begins to 18 melt away. When it has come sufficiently near, the whole vision 19 changes, and it finds that it was the other bird, that this infinity 20 which it had viewed as from a distance was its own Self, this 21 wonderful glimpse that it had got of the glory and majesty was its 22 own Self, and it indeed was that reality. The soul then finds That 23 which is true in everything. That which is in every atom, 24 everywhere present, the essence of all things, the God of this 25 universe--know that thou art He, know that thou art free.

THE IMPORTANCE OF PSYCHOLOGY

The idea of psychology in the West is very much degraded. Psychology is the science of sciences; but in the West it is placed upon the same plane as all other sciences; that is, it is judged by the same criterion--utility.

How much practical benefit will it do to humanity? How much will it add to our rapidly growing happiness? How much will it detract from our rapidly increasing pain? Such is the criterion by which everything is judged in the West.

People seem to forget that about ninety per cent of all our knowledge cannot, in the very nature of things, be applied in a practical way to add to our material happiness or to lessen our misery. Only the smallest fraction of our scientific knowledge can have any such practical application to our daily lives. This is so because only an infinitely small percentage of our conscious mind is on the sensuous plane. We have just a little bit of sensuous consciousness and imagine that to be our entire mind and life; but, as a matter of fact, it is but a drop in the mighty ocean of subconscious mind. If all there is of us were a bundle of sense-perceptions, all the knowledge we could gain could be utilised in the gratification of our sense-pleasures. But fortunately such is not the case. As we get further and further away from the animal state, our sense-pleasures become less and less; and our enjoyment, in a rapidly increasing consciousness of scientific and psychological knowledge, becomes more and more intense; and "knowledge for the sake of knowledge", regardless of the amount of sense-pleasures it may conduce to, becomes the supreme pleasure of the mind.

But even taking the Western idea of utility as a criterion by which to judge, psychology, by such a standard even, is the science of sciences. Why? We are all slaves to our senses, slaves to our own minds, conscious and subconscious. The reason why a criminal is a criminal is not because he desires to be one, but because he has not his mind under control and is therefore a slave to his own conscious and subconscious mind, and to the mind of everybody else. He must follow the dominant trend of his mind; he cannot help it; he is forced onward in spite of himself, in spite of his own better promptings, his own better nature; he is forced to obey the dominant mandate of his own mind. Poor man, he cannot help himself. We see this in our own lives constantly. We are constantly doing things against the better side of our nature, and afterwards we upbraid ourselves for so doing and wonder what we could have been thinking of, how we could do such a thing! Yet again and again we do it, and again and again we suffer for it and upbraid ourselves. At the time, perhaps, we think we desire to do it, but we only desire it because we are forced to desire it. We are forced onward, we are helpless! We are all slaves to our own and to everybody else's mind; whether we are good or bad, that makes no difference. We are led here and there because we cannot help

1 ourselves. We say we think, we do, etc. It is not so. We think 2 because we have to think. We act because we have to. We are 3 slaves to ourselves and to others. Deep down in our subconscious 4 mind are stored up all the thoughts and acts of the past, not only of 5 this life, but of all other lives we have lived. This great boundless 6 ocean of subjective mind is full of all the thoughts and actions of the 7 past. Each one of these is striving to be recognised, pushing 8 outward for expression, surging, wave after wave, out upon the 9 objective mind, the conscious mind. These thoughts, the stored-up 10 energy, we take for natural desires, talents, etc. It is because we do 11 not realise their true origin. We obey them blindly, unquestioningly; 12 and slavery, the most helpless kind of slavery, is the result; and we 13 call ourselves free. Free! We who cannot for a moment govern our 14 own minds, nay, cannot hold our minds on a subject, focus it on a 15 point to the exclusion of everything else for a moment! Yet we call 16 ourselves free. Think of it! We cannot do as we know we ought to do 17 even for a very short space of time. Some sense-desire will crop up, 18 and immediately we obey it. Our conscience smites us for such 19 weakness, but again and again we do it, we are always doing it. We 20 cannot live up to a high standard of life, try as we will. The ghosts 21 of past thoughts, past lives hold us down. All the misery of the 22 world is caused by this slavery to the senses. Our inability to rise 23 above the sense-life--the striving for physical pleasures, is the cause 24 of all the horrors and miseries in the world.

25 It is the science of psychology that teaches us to hold in check 26 the wild gyrations of the mind, place it under the control of the will, 27 and thus free ourselves from its tyrannous mandates. Psychology is 28 therefore the science of sciences, without which all sciences and all 29 other knowledge are worthless.

30 The mind uncontrolled and unguided will drag us down, 31 down, for ever--rend us, kill us; and the mind controlled and guided 32 will save us, free us. So it must be controlled, and psychology 33 teaches us how to do it.

34 To study and analyse any material science, sufficient data are 35 obtained. These facts are studied and analysed, and a knowledge of 36 the science is the result. But in the study and analysis of the mind, 37 there are no data, no facts acquired from without, such as are 38 equally at the command of all. The mind is analysed by itself. The 39 greatest science, therefore, is the science of the mind, the science 40 of psychology.

41 In the West, the powers of the mind, especially unusual 42 powers, are looked upon as bordering on witchcraft and mysticism.
43 The study of higher psychology has been retarded by its being 44 identified with mere alleged psychic phenomena, as is done by 45 some mystery-mongering order of Hindu fakirs.

46 Physicists obtain pretty much the same results the world over.
47 They do not differ in their general facts, nor in the results which 48 naturally follow from such facts. This is because the data of physical 49 science are obtainable by all and are universally recognised, and 50 the results are logical conclusions based upon these universally 51 recognised facts. In the realm of the mind, it is different. Here there

1 are no data, no facts observable by the physical senses, and no
2 universally recognised materials therefore, from which to build a 3 system of psychology after their being equally experimented upon 4 by all who study the mind.

5 Deep, deep within, is the soul, the essential man, the Atman.
6 Turn the mind inward and become united to that; and from that 7 standpoint of stability, the gyrations of the mind can be watched 8 and facts observed, which are to be found in all persons. Such facts, 9 such data, are to be found by those who go deep enough, and only 10 by such. Among that large class of self-styled mystics the world 11 over, there is a great difference of opinion as to the mind, its 12 nature, powers, etc. This is because such people do not go deep 13 enough. They have noticed some little activity of their own and 14 others' minds and, without knowing anything about the real 15 character of such superficial manifestations, have published them 16 as facts universal in their application; and every religious and 17 mystical crank has facts, data, etc., which, he claims, are reliable 18 criteria for investigation, but which are in fact nothing more or less 19 than his own imaginings.

20 If you intend to study the mind, you must have systematic 21 training; you must practice to bring the mind under your control, to 22 attain that consciousness from which you will be able to study the 23 mind and remain unmoved by any of its wild gyrations. Otherwise 24 the facts observed will not be reliable; they will not apply to all 25 people and therefore will not be truly facts or data at all.

26 Among that class who have gone deeply into the study of the 27 mind, the facts observed have been the same, no matter in what 28 part of the world such persons may be or what religious belief they 29 may have. The results obtained by all who go deep enough into the 30 mind are the same.

31 The mind operates by perception and impulsion. For instance, 32 the rays of the light enter my eyes, are carried by the nerves to the 33 brain, and still I do not see the light. The brain then conveys the 34 impulse to the mind, but yet I do not see the light; the mind then 35 reacts, and the light flashes across the mind. The mind's reaction is 36 impulsion, and as a result the eye perceives the object.

37 To control the mind you must go deep down into the 38 subconscious mind, classify and arrange in order all the different 39 impressions, thoughts, etc. stored up there, and control them. This 40 is the first step. By the control of the subconscious mind you get 41 control over the conscious.

NATURE AND MAN

The modern idea of nature includes only that part of the universe that is manifested on the physical plane. That which is generally understood to be mind is not considered to be nature.

Philosophers endeavouring to prove the freedom of the will have excluded the mind from nature; for as nature is bound and governed by law, strict unbending law, mind, if considered to be in nature, would be bound by law also. Such a claim would destroy the doctrine of free will; for how can that be free which is bound by law?

The philosophers of India have taken the reverse stand. They hold all physical life, manifest and unmanifest, to be bound by law. The mind as well as external nature, they claim, is bound by law, and by one and the same law. If mind is not bound by law, if the thoughts we think are not the necessary results of preceding thoughts, if one mental state is not followed by another which it produces, then mind is irrational; and who can claim free will and at the same time deny the operation of reason? And on the other hand, who can admit that the mind is governed by the law of causation and claim that the will is free?

Law itself is the operation of cause and effect. Certain things happen according to certain other things which have gone before. Every precedent has its consequent. Thus it is in nature. If this operation of law obtains in the mind, the mind is bound and is therefore not free. No, the will is not free. How can it be? But we all know, we all feel, that we are free. Life would have no meaning, it would not be worth living, if we were not free.

The Eastern philosophers accepted this doctrine, or rather propounded it, that the mind and the will are within time, space, and causation, the same as so-called matter; and that they are therefore bound by the law of causation. We think in time; our thoughts are bound by time; all that exists, exists in time and space. All is bound by the law of causation.

Now that which we call matter and mind are one and the same substance. The only difference is in the degree of vibration. Mind at a very low rate of vibration is what is known as matter. Matter at a high rate of vibration is what is known as mind. Both are the same substance; and therefore, as matter is bound by time and space and causation, mind which is matter at a high rate of vibration is bound by the same law.

Nature is homogeneous. Differentiation is in manifestation. The Sanskrit word for nature is Prakriti, and means literally differentiation. All is one substance, but it is manifested variously.

Mind becomes matter, and matter in its turn becomes mind, it is simply a question of vibration.

Take a bar of steel and charge it with a force sufficient to cause it to vibrate, and what would happen? If this were done in a dark room, the first thing you would be aware of would be a sound,

1 a humming sound. Increase the force, and the bar of steel would 2 become luminous; increase it still more, and the steel would 3 disappear altogether. It would become mind.

4 Take another illustration: If I do not eat for ten days, I cannot 5 think. Only a few stray thoughts are in my mind. I am very weak
6 and perhaps do not know my own name. Then I eat some bread, 7 and in a little while I begin to think; my power of mind has 8 returned. The bread has become mind. Similarly, the mind lessens 9 its rate of vibration and manifests itself in the body, becomes 10 matter.

11 As to which is first--matter or mind, let me illustrate: A hen
12 lays an egg; the egg brings out another hen; that hen lays another 13 egg; that egg brings out another hen, and so on in an endless chain.
14 Now which is first--the egg or the hen? You cannot think of an egg 15 that was not laid by a hen, or a hen that was not hatched out of an 16 egg. It makes no difference which is first. Nearly all our ideas run 17 themselves into the hen and egg business.

18 The greatest truths have been forgotten because of their very 19 simplicity. Great truths are simple because they are of universal 20 application. Truth itself is always simple. Complexity is due to 21 man's ignorance.

22 Man's free agency is not of the mind, for that is bound. There 23 is no freedom there. Man is not mind, he is soul. The soul is ever 24 free, boundless, and eternal. Herein is man's freedom, in the soul.
25 The soul is always free, but the mind identifying itself with its own 26 ephemeral waves, loses sight of the soul and becomes lost in the 27 maze of time, space, and causation--Maya.

28 This is the cause of our bondage. We are always identifying 29 ourselves with the mind, and the mind's phenomenal changes.

30 Man's free agency is established in the soul, and the soul, 31 realising itself to be free, is always asserting the fact in spite of the 32 mind's bondage: "I am free! I am what I am! I am what I am!" This 33 is our freedom. The soul--ever free, boundless, eternal--through 34 aeons and aeons is manifesting itself more and more through its 35 instrument, the mind.

36 What relation then does man bear to nature? From the lowest 37 form of life to man, the soul is manifesting itself through nature.
38 The highest manifestation of the soul is involved in the lowest form 39 of manifest life and is working itself outward through the process 40 called evolution.

41 The whole process of evolution is the soul's struggle to 42 manifest itself. It is a constant struggle against nature.

43 It is a struggle against nature, and not conformity to nature, 44 that makes man what he is. We hear a great deal about living in 45 harmony with nature, of being in tune with nature. This is a 46 mistake. This table, this pitcher, the minerals, a tree, are all in 47 harmony with nature. Perfect harmony is there, no discord. To be in 48 harmony with nature means stagnation, death. How did man build 49 this house? By being in harmony with nature? No. By fighting

1 against nature. It is the constant struggle against nature that 2 constitutes human progress, not conformity with it.

CONCENTRATION AND BREATHING

The main difference between men and the animals is the difference in their power of concentration. All success in any line of work is the result of this. Everybody knows something about concentration. We see its results every day. High achievements in art, music, etc. are the results of concentration. An animal has very little power of concentration. Those who have trained animals find much difficulty in the fact that the animal is constantly forgetting what is told him. He cannot concentrate his mind long upon anything at a time. Herein is the difference between man and the animals--man has the greater power of concentration. The difference in their power of concentration also constitutes the difference between man and man. Compare the lowest with the highest man. The difference is in the degree of concentration. This is the only difference.

Everybody's mind becomes concentrated at times. We all concentrate upon those things we love, and we love those things upon which we concentrate our minds. What mother is there that does not love the face of her homeliest child? That face is to her the most beautiful in the world. She loves it because she concentrates her mind upon it; and if every one could concentrate his mind on that same face, everyone would love it. It would be to all the most beautiful face. We all concentrate our minds upon those things we love. When we hear beautiful music, our minds become fastened upon it, and we cannot take them away. Those who concentrate their minds upon what you call classical music do not like common music, and vice versa. Music in which the notes follow each other in rapid succession holds the mind readily. A child loves lively music, because the rapidity of the notes gives the mind no chance to wander. A man who likes common music dislikes classical music, because it is more complicated and requires a greater degree of concentration to follow it.

The great trouble with such concentrations is that we do not control the mind; it controls us. Something outside of ourselves, as it were, draws the mind into it and holds it as long as it chooses. We hear melodious tones or see a beautiful painting, and the mind is held fast; we cannot take it away.

If I speak to you well upon a subject you like, your mind becomes concentrated upon what I am saying. I draw your mind away from yourself and hold it upon the subject in spite of yourself. Thus our attention is held, our minds are concentrated upon various things, in spite of ourselves. We cannot help it.

Now the question is: Can this concentration be developed, and can we become masters of it? The Yogis say, yes. The Yogis say that we can get perfect control of the mind. On the ethical side there is danger in the development of the power of concentration--the danger of concentrating the mind upon an object and then being unable to detach at will. This state causes great suffering.

1 Almost all of our suffering is caused by our not having the power of 2 detachment. So along with the development of concentration we 3 must develop the power of detachment. We must learn not only to 4 attach the mind to one thing exclusively, but also to detach it at a 5 moment's notice and place it on something else. These two should 6 be developed together to make it safe.

7 This is the systematic development of the mind. To me the 8 very essence of education is concentration of mind, not the 9 collecting of facts. If I had to do my education over again, and had 10 any voice in the matter, I would not study facts at all. I would 11 develop the power of concentration and detachment, and then with 12 a perfect instrument I could collect facts at will. Side by side, in the 13 child, should be developed the power of concentration and 14 detachment.

15 My development has been one-sided all along. I developed 16 concentration without the power of detaching my mind at will; and 17 the most intense suffering of my life has been due to this. Now I 18 have the power of detachment, but I had to learn it in later life.

19 We should put our minds on things; they should not draw our 20 minds to them. We are usually forced to concentrate. Our minds are 21 forced to become fixed upon different things by an attraction in 22 them which we cannot resist. To control the mind, to place it just 23 where we want it, requires special training. It cannot be done in 24 any other way. In the study of religion the control of the mind is 25 absolutely necessary. We have to turn the mind back upon itself in 26 this study.

27 In training the mind the first step is to begin with breathing.
28 Regular breathing puts the body in a harmonious condition; and it is 29 then easier to reach the mind. In practicing breathing, the first 30 thing to consider is Asana or posture. Any posture in which a 31 person can sit easily is his proper position. The spine should be kept 32 free, and the weight of the body should be supported by the ribs.
33 Do not try by contrivances to control the mind; simple breathing is 34 all that is necessary in that line. All austerities to gain 35 concentration of the mind are a mistake. Do not practise them.

36 The mind acts on the body, and the body in its turn acts upon 37 the mind. They act and react upon each other. Every mental state 38 creates a corresponding state in the body, and every action in the 39 body has its corresponding effect on the mind. It makes no 40 difference whether you think the body and mind are two different 41 entities, or whether you think they are both but one body--the 42 physical body being the gross part and the mind the fine part. They 43 act and react upon each other. The mind is constantly becoming the 44 body. In the training of the mind, it is easier to reach it through the 45 body. The body is easier to grapple with than the mind.

46 The finer the instrument, the greater the power. The mind is 47 much finer and more powerful than the body. For this reason it is 48 easier to begin with the body.

49 The science of breathing is the working through the body to 50 reach the mind. In this way we get control of the body, and then we

1 begin to feel the finer working of the body, the finer and more
2 interior, and so on till we reach the mind. As we feel the finer 3 workings of the body, they come under our control. After a while 4 you will be able to feel the operation of the mind on the body. You 5 will also feel the working of one half of the mind upon the other 6 half, and also feel the mind recruiting the nerve centres; for the 7 mind controls and governs the nervous system. You will feel the 8 mind operating along the different nerve currents.

9 Thus the mind is brought under control--by regular systematic 10 breathing, by governing the gross body first and then the fine body.

11 The first breathing exercise is perfectly safe and very 12 healthful. It will give you good health, and better your condition 13 generally at least. The other practices should be taken up slowly 14 and carefully.

INTRODUCTION TO JNANA-YOGA

This is the rational and philosophic side of Yoga and very difficult, but I will take you slowly through it.

Yoga means the method of joining man and God. When you understand this, you can go on with your own definitions of man and God, and you will find the term Yoga fits in with every definition. Remember always, there are different Yogas for different minds, and that if one does not suit you, another may. All religions are divided into theory and practice. The Western mind has given itself up to the theory and only sees the practical part of religion as good works. Yoga is the practical part of religion and shows that religion is a practical power apart from good works.

At the beginning of the nineteenth century man tried to find God through reason, and Deism was the result. What little was left of God by this process was destroyed by Darwinism and Millism. Men were then thrown back upon historical and comparative religion. They thought, religion was derived from element worship (see Max Muller on the sun myths etc.); others thought that religion was derived from ancestor worship (see Herbert Spencer). But taken as a whole, these methods have proved a failure. Man cannot get at Truth by external methods.

"If I know one lump of clay, I know the whole mass of clay." The universe is all built on the same plan. The individual is only a part, like the lump of clay. If we know the human soul--which is one atom--its beginning and general history, we know the whole of nature. Birth, growth, development, decay, death--this is the sequence in all nature and is the same in the plant and the man. The difference is only in time. The whole cycle may be completed in one case in a day, in the other in three score years and ten; the methods are the same. The only way to reach a sure analysis of the universe is by the analysis of our own minds. A proper psychology is essential to the understanding of religion. To reach Truth by reason alone is impossible, because imperfect reason cannot study its own fundamental basis. Therefore the only way to study the mind is to get at facts, and then intellect will arrange them and deduce the principles. The intellect has to build the house; but it cannot do so without bricks, and it cannot make bricks. Jnana-Yoga is the surest way of arriving at facts.

First we have the physiology of mind. We have organs of the senses, which are divided into organs of action and organs of perception. By organs I do not mean the external sense-instruments. The ophthalmic centre in the brain is the organ of sight, not the eye alone. So with every organ, the function is internal. Only when the mind reacts, is the object truly perceived. The sensory and motor nerves are necessary to perception.

Then there is the mind itself. It is like a smooth lake which when struck, say by a stone, vibrates. The vibrations gather together and react on the stone, and all through the lake they will

1 spread and be felt. The mind is like the lake; it is constantly being 2 set in vibrations, which leave an impression on the mind; and the 3 idea of the Ego, or personal self, the "I", is the result of these 4 impressions. This "I" therefore is only the very rapid transmission of 5 force and is in itself no reality.

6 The mind-stuff is a very fine material instrument used for 7 taking up the Prana. When a man dies, the body dies; but a little bit 8 of the mind, the seed, is left when all else is shattered; and this is 9 the seed of the new body called by St. Paul "the spiritual body". This 10 theory of the materiality of the mind accords with all modern 11 theories. The idiot is lacking in intelligence because his mind-stuff 12 is injured. Intelligence cannot be in matter nor can it be produced 13 by any combinations of matter. Where then is intelligence? It is 14 behind matter; it is the Jiva, the real Self, working through the 15 instrument of matter. Transmission of force is not possible without 16 matter, and as the Jiva cannot travel alone, some part of mind is left 17 as a transmitting medium when all else is shattered by death.

18 How are perceptions made? The wall opposite sends an 19 impression to me, but I do not see the wall until my mind reacts, 20 that is to say, the mind cannot know the wall by mere sight. The 21 reaction that enables the mind to get a perception of the wall is an 22 intellectual process. In this way the whole universe is seen through 23 our eyes plus mind (or perceptive faculty); it is necessarily coloured 24 by our own individual tendencies. The real wall, or the real 25 universe, is outside the mind, and is unknown and unknowable. Call 26 this universe X, and our statement is that the seen universe is X 27 plus mind.

28 What is true of the external must also apply to the internal 29 world. Mind also wants to know itself, but this Self can only be 30 known through the medium of the mind and is, like the wall, 31 unknown. This self we may call Y, and the statement would then be, 32 Y plus mind is the inner self. Kant was the first to arrive at this 33 analysis of mind, but it was long ago stated in the Vedas. We have 34 thus, as it were, mind standing between X and Y and reacting on 35 both.

36 If X is unknown, then any qualities we give to it are only 37 derived from our own mind. Time, space, and causation are the 38 three conditions through which mind perceives. Time is the 39 condition for the transmission of thought, and space for the 40 vibration of grosser matter. Causation is the sequence in which 41 vibrations come. Mind can only cognise through these. Anything 42 therefore, beyond mind must be beyond time, space, and causation.

43 To the blind man the world is perceived by touch and sound.
44 To us with five senses it is another world. If any of us developed an 45 electric sense and the faculty of seeing electric waves, the world 46 would appear different. Yet the world, as the X to all of these, is still 47 the same. As each one brings his own mind, he sees his own world.
48 There is X plus one sense; X plus two senses, up to five, as we know 49 humanity. The result is constantly varied, yet X remains always 50 unchanged. Y is also beyond our minds and beyond time, space, and 51 causation.

1 But, you may ask, "How do we know there are two things (X 2 and Y) beyond time, space, and causation?" Quite true, time makes 3 differentiation, so that, as both are really beyond time, they must be 4 really one. When mind sees this one, it calls it variously--X, when it
5 is the outside world, and Y, when it is the inside world. This unit 6 exists and is looked at through the lens of mind.

7 The Being of perfect nature, universally appearing to us, is 8 God, is Absolute. The undifferentiated is the perfect condition; all 9 others must be lower and not permanent.

10 What makes the undifferentiated appear differentiated to 11 mind? This is the same kind of question as what is the origin of evil 12 and free will? The question itself is contradictory and impossible, 13 because the question takes for granted cause and effect. There is 14 no cause and effect in the undifferentiated; the question assumes 15 that the undifferentiated is in the same condition as the 16 differentiated. "Whys" and "wherefores" are in mind only. The Self 17 is beyond causation, and It alone is free. Its light it is which 18 percolates through every form of mind. With every action I assert I 19 am free, and yet every action proves that I am bound. The real Self 20 is free, yet when mixed with mind and body, It is not free. The will is 21 the first manifestation of the real Self; the first limitation therefore 22 of this real Self is the will. Will is a compound of Self and mind.
23 Now, no compound can be permanent, so that when we will to live, 24 we must die. Immortal life is a contradiction in terms, for life, being 25 a compound, cannot be immortal. True Being is undifferentiated 26 and eternal. How does this Perfect Being become mixed up with 27 will, mind, thought--all defective things? It never has become 28 mixed. You are the real you (the Y of our former statement); you 29 never were will; you never have changed; you as a person never 30 existed; It is illusion. Then on what, you will say, do the phenomena 31 of illusion rest? This is a bad question. Illusion never rests on Truth, 32 but only on illusion. Everything struggles to go back to what was 33 before these illusions, to be free in fact. What then is the value of 34 life? It is to give us experience. Does this view do away with the 35 evolution? On the contrary, it explains it. It is really the process of 36 refinement of matter allowing the real Self to manifest Itself. It is as 37 if a screen or a veil were between us and some other object. The 38 object becomes clear as the screen is gradually withdrawn. The 39 question is simply one of manifestation of the higher Self.

THE VEDANTA PHILOSOPHY AND CHRISTIANITY

Between all great religions of the world there are many points of similarity; and so startling is this likeness, at times, as to suggest the idea that in many particulars the different religions have copied from one another.

This act of imitation has been laid at the door of different religions; but that it is a superficial charge is evident from the following facts:

Religion is fundamental in the very soul of humanity; and as all life is the evolution of that which is within, it, of necessity, expresses itself through various peoples and nations.

The language of the soul is one, the languages of nations are many; their customs and methods of life are widely different. Religion is of the soul and finds expression through various nations, languages, and customs. Hence it follows that the difference between the religions of the world is one of expression and not of substance; and their points of similarity and unity are of the soul, are intrinsic, as the language of the soul is one, in whatever peoples and under whatever circumstances it manifests itself. The same sweet harmony is vibrant there also, as it is on many and diverse instruments.

The first thing in common in all great religions of the world is the possession of an authentic book. When religious systems have failed to have such a book, they have become extinct. Such was the fact of the religions of Egypt. The authentic book is the hearthstone, so to speak, of each great religious system, around which its adherents gather, and from which radiates the energy and life of the system.

Each religion, again, lays the claim that its particular book is the only authentic word of God; that all other sacred books are false and are impositions upon poor human credulity; and that to follow another religion is to be ignorant and spiritually blind.

Such bigotry is characteristic of the orthodox element of all religions. For instance, the orthodox followers of the Vedas claim that the Vedas are the only authentic word of God in the world; that God has spoken to the world only through the Vedas; not only that, but that the world itself exists by virtue of the Vedas. Before the world was, the Vedas were. Everything in the world exists because it is in the Vedas. A cow exists because the name cow is in the Vedas; that is, because the animal we know as cow is mentioned in the Vedas. The language of the Vedas is the original language of God, all other languages are mere dialects and not of God. Every word and syllable in the Vedas must be pronounced correctly, each sound must be given its true vibration, and every departure from this rigid exactness is a terrible sin and unpardonable.

1 Thus, this kind of bigotry is predominant in the orthodox 2 element of all religions. But this fighting over the letter is indulged 3 in only by the ignorant, the spiritually blind. All who have actually 4 attained any real religious nature never wrangle over the form in 5 which the different religions are expressed. They know that the life 6 of all religions is the same, and, consequently, they have no quarrel 7 with anybody because he does not speak the same tongue.

8 The Vedas are, in fact, the oldest sacred books in the world.
9 Nobody knows anything about the time when they were written or 10 by whom. They are contained in many volumes, and I doubt that 11 any one man ever read them all.

12 The religion of the Vedas is the religion of the Hindus, and the 13 foundation of all Oriental religions; that is, all other Oriental 14 religions are offshoots of the Vedas; all Eastern systems of religion 15 have the Vedas as authority.

16 It is an irrational claim to believe in the teachings of Jesus 17 Christ and at the same time to hold that the greater part of his 18 teachings have no application at the present time. If you say that 19 the reason why the powers do not follow them that believe (as 20 Christ said they would) is because you have not faith enough and 21 are not pure enough--that will be all right. But to say that they have 22 no application at the present time is to be ridiculous.

23 I have never seen the man who was not at least my equal. I
24 have travelled all over the world; I have been among the very worst 25 kind of people--among cannibals--and I have never seen the man 26 who is not at least my equal. I have done as they do--when I was a 27 fool. Then I did not know any better; now I do. Now they do not 28 know any better; after a while they will. Every one acts according to 29 his own nature. We are all in process of growth. From this 30 standpoint one man is not better than another.

WORSHIPPER AND WORSHIPPED

(Delivered in San Francisco area, April 9, 1900)

We have been taking up the more analytical side of human nature. In this course we [shall] study the emotional side. . . . The former deals with man as unlimited being, [as] principle, the latter with man as limited being. . . . The one has no time to stop for a few tear-drops or pangs; the other cannot proceed without wiping the tear-drop, without healing that misery. One is great, so great and grand that sometimes we are staggered by the magnitude; the other [is] commonplace, and yet most beautiful and dear to us. One gets hold of us, takes us up to the heights where our lungs almost burst. We cannot breathe [in] that atmosphere. The other leaves us where we are and tries to see the objects of life, [takes the limited] view. One will accept nothing until it has the shining seal of reason; the other has faith, and what it cannot see it believes. Both are necessary. A bird cannot fly with only one wing. . . .

What we want is to see the man who is harmoniously developed . . . great in heart, great in mind, [great in deed]. . . . We want the man whose heart feels intensely the miseries and sorrows of the world. . . . And [we want] the man who not only can feel but can find the meaning of things, who delves deeply into the heart of nature and understanding. [We want] the man who will not even stop there, [but] who wants to work out [the feeling and meaning by actual deeds]. Such a combination of head, heart, and hand is what we want. There are many teachers in this world, but you will find [that most of them] are one-sided. [One] sees the glorious midday sun of intellect [and] sees nothing else. Another hears the beautiful music of love and can hear nothing else. Another is [immersed] in activity, and has neither time to feel nor time to think. Why not [have] the giant who is equally active, equally knowing, and equally loving? Is it impossible? Certainly not. This is the man of the future, of whom there are [only a] few at present. [The number of such will increase] until the whole world is humanised.

I have been talking to you so long about intellect [and] reason. We have heard the whole of Vedanta. The veil of Maya breaks: wintry clouds vanish, and the sunlight shines on us. I have been trying to climb the heights of the Himalayas, where the peaks disappear beyond the clouds. I propose to study with you the other side: the most beautiful valleys, the most marvellous exquisiteness in nature. [We shall study the] love that holds us here in spite of all the miseries of the world, [the] love that has made us forge the chain of misery, this eternal martyrdom which man is suffering willingly, of his own accord. We want to study that for which man has forged the chain with his own hands, that for which he suffers, that eternal love. We do not mean to forget the other. The glacier of the Himalayas must join hands with the rice fields of Kashmir. The thunderbolt must blend its bass note with the warbling of the birds.

This course will have to do with everything exquisite and

1 beautiful. Worship is everywhere, in every soul. Everyone worships 2 God. Whatever be the name, they are all worshipping God. The 3 beginnings of worship--like the beautiful lotus, like life itself--are in 4 the dirt of the earth. . . . There is the element of fear. There is the 5 hungering for this world's gain. There is the worship of the beggar.
6 These are the beginnings of [the] world worshipping, [culminating 7 in] loving God and worshipping God through man.

8 Is there any God? Is there anyone to be loved, any such one 9 capable of being loved? Loving the stone would not be much good.
10 We only love that which understands love, that which draws our 11 love. So with worship. Never say [that] there is a man in this world 12 of ours who worshipped a piece of stone [as stone]. He always 13 worshipped [the omnipresent being in the stone].

14 We find out that the omnipresent being is in us. [But] how can 15 we worship, unless that being is separate from us? I can only 16 worship Thee, and not me. I can only pray to Thee, and not me. Is 17 there any "Thou"?

18 The One becomes many. When we see the One, any 19 limitations reflected through Maya disappear; but it is quite true 20 that the manifold is not valueless. It is through the many that we 21 reach the one. . . .

22 Is there any Personal God--a God who thinks, who 23 understands, a God who guides us? There is. The Impersonal God 24 cannot have any one of these attributes. Each one of you is an 25 individual: you think, you love, [you] hate, [you] are angry, sorry, 26 etc.; yet you are impersonal, unlimited. [You are] personal and 27 impersonal in one. You have the personal and the impersonal 28 aspects. That [impersonal reality] cannot be angry, [nor] sorry, [nor] 29 miserable--cannot even think misery. It cannot think, cannot know.
30 It is knowledge itself. But the personal [aspect] knows, thinks, and 31 dies, etc. Naturally the universal Absolute must have two aspects:
32 the one [representing the] infinite reality of all things; the other, a 33 personal aspect, the Soul of our souls, Lord of all lords. [It is] He 34 who creates this universe. Under [His] guidance this universe 35 exists. . . .

36 He, the Infinite, the Ever-Pure, the Ever-[Free]. . . . He is no 37 judge, God cannot be [a] judge. He does not sit upon a throne and 38 judge between the good and the wicked. . . . He is no magistrate, 39 [no] general, [nor] master. Infinitely merciful, infinitely loving is the 40 Personal [God].

41 Take it from another side. Every cell in your body has a soul 42 conscious of the cell. It is a separate entity. It has a little will of its 43 own, a little sphere of action of its own. All [cells] combined make 44 up an individual. [In the same way,] the Personal God of the 45 universe is made up of all these [many individuals].

46 Take it from another side. You, as I see you, are as much of 47 your absolute nature as has been limited and perceived by one. I 48 have limited you in order to see you through the power of my eyes, 49 my senses. As much of you as my eyes can see, I see. As much of 50 you as my mind can grasp is what I know to be you, and nothing

1 more. In the same way, I am reading the Absolute, the Impersonal
2 [and see Him as Personal]. As long as we have body and mind, we 3 always see this triune being: God, nature, and soul. There must 4 always be the three in one, inseparable. . . . There is nature. There 5 are human souls. There is again That in which nature and the 6 human souls [are contained].

7 The universal soul has become embodied. My soul itself is a
8 part of God. He is the eye of our eyes, the life of our life, the mind 9 of our mind, the soul of our soul. This is the highest ideal of the 10 Personal God we can have.

11 If you are not a dualist, [but are] a monist, you can still have 12 the Personal God. . . . There is the One without a second. That One 13 wanted to love Himself. Therefore, out of that One, He made 14 [many]. . . . It is the big Me, the real Me, that that little me is 15 worshipping. Thus in all systems you can have the Personal [God].

16 Some people are born under circumstances that make them 17 happier than others; why should this be in the reign of a just being?
18 There is mortality in this world. These are the difficulties in the way.
19 [These problems] have never been answered. They cannot be 20 answered from any dualistic plane. We have to go back to 21 philosophy to treat things as they are. We are suffering from our 22 own Karma. It is not the fault of God. What we do is our own fault, 23 nothing else. Why should God be blamed? . . .

24 Why is there evil? The only way you can solve [the problem] is 25 [by saying that God is] the cause of both good and evil. The great 26 difficulty in the theory of the Personal God is that if you say He is 27 only good and not evil, you will be caught in the trap of your own 28 argument. How do you know there is [a] God? You say [that He is] 29 the Father of this universe, and you say He is good; and because 30 there is [also] evil in the world, God must be evil. . . . The same 31 difficulty!

32 There is no good, and there is no evil. God is all there is. . . .
33 How do you know what is good? You feel [it]. [How do you know 34 what is evil? If] evil comes, you feel it. . . . We know good and evil 35 by our feelings. There is not one man who feels only good, happy 36 feelings. There is not one who feels only unhappy feelings. . . .

37 Want and anxiety are the causes of all unhappiness and 38 happiness too. Is want increasing or decreasing? Is life becoming 39 simple or complex? Certainly complex. Wants are being multiplied.
40 Your great-grandfathers did not want the same dress or the same 41 amount of money [you do]. They had no electric cars, [nor] 42 railroads, etc. That is why they had to work less. As soon as these 43 things come, the want arises, and you have to work harder. More 44 and more anxiety, and more and more competition.

45 It is very have to work to get money. It is harder work to keep 46 it. You fight the whole world to get a little money together [and] 47 fight all your life to protect it. [Therefore] there is more anxiety for 48 the rich man than for the poor. . . . This is the way it is. . . .

49 There are good and evil everywhere in this world. Sometimes 50 evil becomes good, true; but other times good becomes evil also. All

1 our senses produce evil some time or other. Let a man drink wine. It 2 is not bad [at first], but let him go on drinking, [and] it will produce
3 evil. . . . A man is born of rich parents; good enough. He becomes a 4 fool, never exercises his body or brain. That is good producing evil.
5 Think of this love of life: We go away and jump about and live a few 6 moments; we work hard. We are born babies, entirely incapable. It 7 takes us years to understand things again. At sixty or seventy we 8 open our eyes, and then comes the word, "Get out!" And there you 9 are.

10 We have seen that good and evil are relative terms. The thing 11 [that is] good for me is bad for you. If you eat the dinner that I eat, 12 you will begin to weep, and I shall laugh. . . . We [may] both dance, 13 but I with joy and you with pain. . . . The same thing is good at one 14 part of our life and bad at another part. How can you say [that] 15 good and evil are all cut and dried--[that] this is all good and that is 16 all evil?

17 Now, who is responsible for all this good and evil, if God is 18 ever the good? The Christians and the Mohammedans say there is a 19 gentleman called Satan. How can you say there are two gentlemen 20 working? There must be one. . . . The fire that burns the child also 21 cooks the meal. How can you call the fire good or bad, and how can 22 you say it was created by two different persons? Who creates all 23 [so-called] evil? God. There is no other way out. He sends death and 24 life, plague and epidemics, and everything. If such is God, He is the 25 good; He is the evil; He is the beautiful; He is the terrible; He is 26 life; and He is death.

27 How can such a God be worshipped? We shall come to 28 [understand] how the soul can really learn to worship the terrible; 29 then that soul will have peace. . . . Have you peace? Do you get rid 30 of anxieties? Turn around, first of all, and face the terrible. Tear 31 aside the mask and find the same [God]. He is the personal--all that 32 is [apparently] good and all that is [apparently] bad. There is none 33 else. If there were two Gods, nature could not stand a moment.
34 There is not another one in nature. It is all harmony. If God played 35 one side and the devil the other, the whole [of] nature would be [in 36 chaos]. Who can break the law? If I break this glass, it will fall 37 down. If anyone succeeds in throwing one atom out of place, every 38 other atom will go out of balance. . . . The law can never be broken.
39 Each atom is kept in its place. Each is weighed and measured and 40 fulfills its [purpose] and place. Through His command the winds 41 blow, the sun shines. Through His rule the worlds are kept in place.
42 Through His orders death is sporting upon the earth. Just think of 43 two or three Gods having a wrestling match in this world! It cannot 44 be.

45 We now come to see that we can have the Personal God, the 46 creator of this universe, who is merciful and also cruel. . . . He is 47 the good, He is the evil. He smiles, and He frowns. And none can go 48 beyond His law. He is the creator of this universe.

49 What is meant by creation, something coming out of nothing?
50 Six thousand years ago God woke up from His dream and created 51 the world [and] before that there was nothing? What was God doing

1 then, taking a good nap? God is the cause of the universe, and we 2 can know the cause through the effect. If the effect is not present, 3 the cause is not [the] cause. The cause is always known in and 4 through the effect. . . . Creation is infinite. . . . You cannot think of 5 the beginning in time or in space.

6 Why does He create it? Because He likes to; because He is 7 free. . . . You and I are bound by law, because we can work [only] in 8 certain ways and not in others. "Without hands, He can grasp 9 everything.

10 Without feet, [He moves fast]." Without body, He is 11 omnipotent. "Whom no eyes can see, but who is the cause of sight 12 in every eye, know Him to be the Lord." You cannot worship 13 anything else. God is the omnipotent supporter of this universe.
14 What is called "law" is the manifestation of His will. He rules the 15 universe by His laws.

16 So far [we have discussed] God and nature, eternal God and 17 eternal nature. What about souls? They also are eternal. No soul 18 was [ever] created; neither can [the] soul die. Nobody can even 19 imagine his own death. The soul is infinite, eternal. How can it die?
20 It changes bodies. As a man takes off his old, worn-out garments 21 and puts on new and fresh ones, even so the worn-out body is 22 thrown away and [a] fresh body is taken.

23 What is the nature of the soul? The soul is also [omnipotent] 24 and omnipresent. Spirit has neither length, nor breadth, nor 25 thickness. . . . How can it be said to be here and there? This body 26 falls; [the soul] works [through] another body. The soul is a circle of 27 which the circumference is nowhere, but the centre is in the body.
28 God is a circle whose circumference is nowhere, but whose centre 29 is everywhere. The soul by its [very] nature is blessed, pure, and 30 perfect; it could never be pure if its nature was impure. . . . The 31 soul's nature is purity; that is why souls [can] become pure. It is 32 blessed [by nature]; that is why it [can] become blessed. It is peace; 33 [that is why it can become peaceful]. . . .

34 All of us who find ourselves in this plane, attracted to the 35 body, work hard for a living, with jealousies and quarrels and 36 hardships, and then death. That shows we are not what we should 37 be. We are not free, perfectly pure, and so on. The soul, as it were, 38 has become degraded. Then what the soul requires is 39 expansion. . . .

40 How can you do it? Can you work it out yourself? No. If a 41 man's face is dusty, can you wash it out with dust? If I put a seed in 42 the ground, the seed produces a tree, the tree produces a seed, the 43 seed another tree, etc. Hen and egg, egg and hen. If you do 44 something good, you will have to reap the result of that, be born 45 again and be sorry. Once started in this infinite chain, you cannot 46 stop. You go on, . . . up and down, [to] heavens and earths, and all 47 these [bodies]. . . . There is no way out.

48 Then how can you get out of all this, and what are you here 49 for? One idea is to get rid of misery. We are all struggling day and 50 night to get rid of misery. . . . We cannot do it by work. Work will

1 produce more work. It is only possible if there is someone who is 2 free himself and lends us a hand. "Hear, ye children of immortality, 3 all those that reside in this plane and all those that reside in the 4 heavens above, I have found the secret", says the great sage. "I
5 have found Him who is beyond all darkness. Through His mercy 6 alone we cross this ocean of life".

7 In India, the idea of the goal is this: There are heavens, there 8 are hells, there are earths, but they are not permanent. If I am sent 9 to hell, it is not permanent. The same struggle goes on and on 10 wherever I am . How to get beyond all this struggle is the problem.
11 If I go to heaven, perhaps there will be a little bit of rest. If I get 12 punished for my misdeeds, that cannot last [for ever either]. . . .
13 The Indian ideal is not to go to heaven. Get out of this earth, get out 14 of hell, and get out of heaven! What is the goal? It is freedom. You 15 must all be free. The glory of the soul is covered up. It has to be 16 uncovered again. The soul exists. It is everywhere. Where shall it 17 go? . . . Where can it go? It can only go where it is not. If you 18 understand [that] it is ever present, [there will be] perfect 19 happiness for ever afterwards. No more births and deaths. . . . No 20 more disease, no body. [The] body itself is the biggest disease. . . .

21 The soul shall stand [as] soul. Spirit shall live as spirit. How is 22 this to be done? By worshipping [the Lord in] the soul, who, by his 23 [very] nature is ever present, pure, and perfect. There cannot be 24 two almighty beings in this world. [Imagine having] two or three 25 Gods; one will create the world, another says, "I will destroy the 26 world". It [can] never happen. There must be one God. The soul 27 attains to perfection; [it becomes] almost omnipotent [and] 28 omniscient. This is the worshipper. Who is the worshipped? He, the 29 Lord God Himself, the Omnipresent, the Omniscient, and so on. And 30 above all, He is Love. How is [the soul] to attain this perfection? By 31 worship.

FORMAL WORSHIP

(Delivered in San Francisco area, April 10, 1900)

All of you who are students of the Bible . . . understand that the whole [of] Jewish history and Jewish thought have been produced by two [types of] teachers--priests and prophets, the priests representing the power of conservatism, the prophets the power of progress. The whole thing is that a conservative ritualism creeps in; formality gets hold of everything. This is true of every country and every religion. Then come some new seers with new visions; they preach new ideals and ideas and give a new push to society. In a few generations the followers become so faithful to their masters' ideas that they cannot see anything else. The most advanced, liberal preachers of this age within a few years will be the most conservative priests. The advanced thinkers, in their turn, will begin to hinder the man who goes a little farther. They will not let anyone go farther than what they themselves have attained. They are content to leave things as they are.

The power which works through the formative principles of every religion in every country is manifested in the forms of religion. . . . Principles and books, certain rules and movements--standing up, sitting down--all these belong to the same category of worship. Spiritual worship becomes materialised in order that the majority of mankind can get hold of it. The vast majority of mankind in every country are never [seen] to worship spirit as spirit. It is not yet possible. I do not know if there ever will be a time when they can. How many thousands in this city are ready to worship God as spirit? Very few. They cannot; they live in the senses. You have to give them cut and dried ideas. Tell them to do something physical: Stand up twenty times; sit down twenty times. They will understand that. Tell them to breathe in through one nostril and breathe out through the other. They will understand that. All this idealism about spirit they cannot accept at all. It is not their fault. . . . If you have the power to worship God as spirit, good! But there was a time when you could not. . . . If the people are crude, the religious conceptions are crude, and the forms are uncouth and gross. If the people are refined and cultured, the forms are more beautiful. There must be forms, only the forms change according to the times.

It is a curious phenomenon that there never was a religion started in this world with more antagonism . . . [to the worship of forms] than Mohammedanism. . . . The Mohammedans can have neither painting, nor sculpture, nor music. . . . That would lead to formalism. The priest never faces his audience. If he did, that would make a distinction. This way there is none. And yet it was not two centuries after the Prophet's death before saint worship [developed]. Here is the toe of the saint! There is the skin of the saint! So it goes. Formal worship is one of the stages we have to pass through.

1 Therefore, instead of crusading against it, let us take the best
2 in worship and study its underlying principles.

3 Of course, the lowest form of worship is what is known as 4 [tree and stone worship]. Every crude, uncultured man will take up 5 anything and add to it some idea [of his own]; and that will help 6 him. He may worship a bit of bone, or stone--anything. In all these 7 crude states of worship man has never worshipped a stone as 8 stone, a tree as tree. You know that from common sense. Scholars 9 sometimes say that men worshipped stones and trees. That is 10 nonsense. Tree worship is one of the stages through which the 11 human race passed. Never, really, was there ever worship of 12 anything but the spirit by man.

13 He is spirit [and] can feel nothing but spirit. Divine mind 14 could never make such a gross mistake as [to worship spirit as 15 matter]. In this case, man conceived the stone as spirit or the tree 16 as spirit. He [imagined] that some part of that Being resides in [the 17 stone] or the tree, that [the stone or] the tree has a soul.

18 Tree worship and serpent worship always go together. There 19 is the tree of knowledge. There must always be the tree, and the 20 tree is somehow connected with the serpent. These are the oldest 21 [forms of worship]. Even there you find that some particular tree or 22 some particular stone is worshipped, not all the [trees or] stones in 23 the world.

24 A higher state in [formal worship is that of] images [of 25 ancestors and God]. People make images of men who have died and 26 imaginary images of God. Then they worship those images.

27 Still higher is the worship of saints, of good men and women 28 who have passed on. Men worship their relics. [They feel that] the 29 presence of the saints is somehow in the relics, and that they will 30 help them. [They believe that] if they touch the saint's bone, they 31 will be healed--not that the bone itself heals, but that the saint who 32 resides there does. . . .

33 These are all low states of worship and yet worship. We all 34 have to pass through them. It is only from an intellectual standpoint 35 that they are not good enough. In our hearts we cannot get rid of 36 them. [If] you take from a man all the saints and images and do not 37 allow him to go into a temple, [he will still] imagine all the gods. He 38 has to. A man of eighty told me he could not conceive God except as 39 an old man with a long beard sitting on a cloud. What does that 40 show? His education is not complete. There has not been any 41 spiritual education, and he is unable to conceive anything except in 42 human terms.

43 There is still a higher order of formal worship--the world of 44 symbolism. The forms are still there, but they are neither trees, nor 45 [stones], nor images, nor relics of saints. They are symbols. There 46 are all sorts [of symbols] all over the world. The circle is a great 47 symbol of eternity. . . . There is the square; the well-known symbol 48 of the cross; and two figures like S and Z crossing each other.

49 Some people take it into their heads to see nothing in 50 symbols. . . . [Others want] all sorts of abracadabra. If you tell them

1 plain, simple truths, they will not accept them. . . . Human nature 2 being [what it is], the less they understand the better--the greater 3 man [they think] you are. In all ages in every country such 4 worshippers are deluded by certain diagrams and forms. Geometry
5 was the greatest science of all. The vast majority of the people
6 knew nothing [of it. They believed that if] the geometrist just drew 7 a square and said abracadabra at the four corners, the whole world
8 would begin to turn, the heavens would open, and God would come 9 down and jump about and be a slave. There is a whole mass of 10 lunatics today poring over these things day and night. All this is a 11 sort of disease. It is not for the metaphysician at all; it is for the 12 physician.

13 I am making fun, but I am so sorry. I see this problem so 14 [grave] in India. These are signs of the decay of the race, of 15 degradation and duress. The sign of vigour, the sign of life, the sign 16 of hope, the sign of health, the sign of everything that is good, is 17 strength. As long as the body lives, there must be strength in the 18 body, strength in the mind, [and strength] in the hand. In wanting to 19 get spiritual power through [all this abracadabra] there is fear, fear 20 of life. I do not mean that sort of symbolism.

21 But there is some truth in symbolism. There cannot be any 22 falsehood without some truth behind it. There cannot be any 23 imitation without something real.

24 There is the symbolic form of worship in the different 25 religions. There are fresh, vigorous, poetic, healthy symbols. Think 26 of the marvelous power the symbol of the cross has had upon 27 millions of people! Think of the symbol of the crescent! Think of the 28 magnetism of this one symbol! Everywhere there are good and 29 great symbols in the world. They interpret the spirit and bring 30 [about] certain conditions of the mind; as a rule we find [they 31 create] a tremendous power of faith and love.

32 Compare the Protestant with the Catholic [Church]. Who has 33 produced more saints, more martyrs within the last four hundred 34 years [during which] both have been in existence? The tremendous 35 appeal of Catholic ceremonialism--all those lights, incense, candles, 36 and the robes of the priests--has a great effect in itself.
37 Protestantism is quite austere and unpoetic. The Protestants have 38 gained many things, have granted a great deal more freedom in 39 certain lines than the Catholics have, and so have a clear, more 40 individualistic conception. That is all right, but they have lost a 41 good deal. . . . Take the paintings in the churches. That is an 42 attempt at poetry. If we are hungry for poetry, why not have it? Why 43 not give the soul what it wants? We have to have music. They are 44 the "Mohammedans" of the Christians. Down with all poetry! Down 45 with all ceremonials! Then they produce music. It appeals to the 46 senses. I have seen how collectively they strive for the ray of light 47 there over the pulpit.

48 Let the soul have its fill of poetry and religion represented on 49 the external plane. Why not. . . ? You cannot fight [formal worship].
50 It will conquer again and again. . . . If you do not like what the 51 Catholics do, do better. But we will neither do anything better nor 1 have the poetry that already exists. That is a terrible state of things!

2 Poetry is absolutely necessary. You may be the greatest philosopher
3 in the world. But philosophy is the highest poetry. It is not dry 4 bones. It is essence of things. The Reality itself is more poetic than 5 any dualism. . . .

6 Learning has no place in religion; for the majority learning is 7 a block in the way. . . . A man may have read all the libraries in the 8 world and may not be religious at all, and another, who cannot 9 perhaps write his own name, senses religion and realises it. The 10 whole of religion is our own inner perception. When I use the words 11 "man-making religion", I do not mean books, nor dogmas, nor 12 theories. I mean the man who has realised, has fully perceived, 13 something of that infinite presence in his own heart.

14 The man at whose feet I sat all my life--and it is only a few 15 ideas of his that I try to teach--could [hardly] write his name at all.
16 All my life I have not seen another man like that, and I have 17 travelled all over the world. When I think of that man, I feel like a 18 fool, because I want to read books and he never did. He never 19 wanted to lick the plates after other people had eaten. That is why 20 he was his own book. All my life I am repeating what Jack said and 21 John said, and never say anything myself. What glory is it that you 22 know what John said twenty-five years ago and what Jack said five 23 years ago? Tell me what you have to say.

24 Mind you, there is no value in learning. You are all mistaken 25 in learning. The only value of knowledge is in the strengthening, the 26 disciplining, of the mind. By all this eternal swallowing it is a 27 wonder that we are not all dyspeptics. Let us stop, and burn all the 28 books, and get hold of ourselves, and think. You all talk [about] and 29 get distracted over losing your "individuality". You are losing it 30 every moment of your lives by this eternal swallowing. If any one of 31 you believes what I teach, I will be sorry. I will only be too glad if I 32 can excite in you the power of thinking for yourselves. . . . My 33 ambition is to talk to men and women, not to sheep. By men and 34 women, I mean individuals. You are not little babies to drag all the 35 filthy rags from the street and bind them up into a doll!

36 "This is a place for learning! That man is placed in the 37 university! He knows all about what Mr. Blank said!" But Mr. Blank 38 said nothing! If I had the choice, I would . . . say to the professor, 39 "Get out! You are nobody!" Remember this individualism at any 40 cost! Think wrong if you will, no matter whether you get truth or 41 not. The whole point is to discipline the mind. That truth which you 42 swallow from others will not be yours. You cannot teach truth from 43 my mouth; neither can you learn truth from my mouth. None can 44 teach another. You have to realise truth and work it out for yourself 45 according to your own nature. . . . All must struggle to be 46 individuals--strong, standing on your own feet, thinking your own 47 thoughts, realising your own Self. No use swallowing doctrines 48 others pass on--standing up together like soldiers in jail, sitting 49 down together, all eating the same food, all nodding their heads at 50 the same time. Variation is the sign of life. Sameness is the sign of 51 death.

1 Once I was in an Indian city, and an old man came to me. He 2 said, "Swami, teach me the way." I saw that that man was as dead
3 as this table before me. Mentally and spiritually he was really dead.
4 I said, "Will you do what I ask you to do? Can you steal? Can you 5 drink wine? Can you eat meat?"

6 The man [exclaimed], "What are you teaching!"

7 I said to him, "Did this wall ever steal? Did the wall ever drink 8 wine?"

9 "No, sir."

10 Man steals, and he drinks wine, and becomes God. "I know 11 you are not the wall, my friend. Do something! Do something!" I 12 saw that if that man stole, his soul would be on the way to salvation.

13 How do I know that you are individuals--all saying the same 14 thing, all standing up and sitting down together? That is the road to 15 death! Do something for your souls! Do wrong if you please, but do 16 something! You will understand me by and by, if you do not just 17 now. Old age has come upon the soul, as it were. It has become 18 rusty. The rust must be [rubbed off], and then we go on. Now you 19 understand why there is evil in the world. Go home and think of 20 that, just to take off that rustiness!

21 We pray for material things. To attain some end we worship 22 God with shopkeeping worship. Go on and pray for food and 23 clothes! Worship is good. Something is always better than nothing.
24 "A blind uncle is better than no uncle at all." A very rich young man 25 becomes ill, and then to get rid of his disease he begins to give to 26 the poor. That is good, but it is not religion yet, not spiritual 27 religion. It is all on the material plane. What is material, and what is 28 not? When the world is the end and God the means to attain that 29 end, that is material. When God is the end and the world is only the 30 means to attain that end, spirituality has begun.

31 Thus, to the man who wants this [material] life enough, all his 32 heavens are a continuance of this life. He wants to see all the 33 people who are dead, and have a good time once more.

34 There was one of those ladies who brings the departed spirits
35 down to us--a medium. She was very large, yet she was called a 36 medium. Very good! This lady liked me very much and invited me to 37 come. The spirits were all very polite to me. I had a very peculiar 38 experience. You understand, it was a [seance], midnight. The 39 medium said, ". . . I see a ghost standing here. The ghost tells me 40 that there is a Hindu gentleman on that bench." I stood up and said, 41 "It required no ghost to tell you that."

1 There was a young man present who was married, intelligent,
2 and well educated. He was there to see his mother. The medium
3 said. "So-and-so's mother is here." This young man had been telling 4 me about his mother. She was very thin when she died, but the 5 mother that came out of the screen! You ought to have seen her! I 6 wanted to see what this young man would do. To my surprise he 7 jumped up and embraced this spirit and said, "Oh mother, how 8 beautiful you have grown in the spirit land!" I said, "I am blessed 9 that I am here. It gives me insight into human nature!"

10 Going back to formal worship. . . . it is a low state of worship 11 when you worship God as a means to the end, which is this life and 12 this world. . . . The vast majority of [people] have never had any 13 conception of anything higher than this lump of flesh and the joys of 14 the senses. Even in this life, all the pleasures these poor souls have 15 are the same as the beasts. . . . They eat animals. They love their 16 children. Is that all the glory of man? And we worship God 17 Almighty! What for? Just to give us these material things and 18 defend them all the time. . . . It means we have not gone beyond the 19 [animals and] birds. We are no better. We do not know any better.
20 And woe unto us, we should know better! The only difference is that 21 they do not have a God like ours. . . . We have the same five senses 22 [as the animals], only theirs are better. We cannot eat a morsel of 23 food with the relish that a dog chews a bone. They have more 24 pleasure in life than we; so we are a little less than animals.

25 Why should you want to be something that any power in 26 nature can operate better? This is the most important question for 27 you to think about. What do you want--this life, these senses, this 28 body, or something infinitely higher and better, something from 29 which there is no more fall, no more change?

30 So what does it mean . . . ? You say, "Lord, give me my bread, 31 my money! Heal my diseases! Do this and that!" Every time you say 32 that, you are hypnotising yourselves with the idea, "I am matter, 33 and this matter is the goal." Every time you try to fulfil a material 34 desire, you tell yourselves that you are [the] body, that you are not 35 spirit. . . .

36 Thank God, this is a dream! Thank God, for it will vanish!
37 Thank God, there is death, glorious death, because it ends all this 38 delusion, this dream, this fleshiness, this anguish. No dream can be 39 eternal; it must end sooner or later. There is none who can keep his 40 dream for ever. I thank God that it is so! Yet this form of worship is 41 all right. Go on! To pray for something is better than nothing. These 42 are the stages through which we pass. These are the first lessons.
43 Gradually, the mind begins to think of something higher than the 44 senses, the body, the enjoyments of this world.

45 How does [man] do it? First he becomes a thinker. When you 46 think upon a problem, there is no sense-enjoyment there, but [the] 47 exquisite delight of thought. . . . It is that that makes the man. . . .
48 Take one great idea! It deepens. Concentration comes. You no
49 longer feel your body. Your senses have stopped. You are above all 50 physical senses. All that was manifesting itself through the senses
51 is concentrated upon that one idea. That moment you are higher

1 than the animal. You get the revelation none can take from you--a 2 direct perception of something higher than the body. . . . Therein is 3 the gold of mind, not upon the plane of the senses.

4 Thus, working through the plane of the senses, you get more
5 and more entry into the other regions, and then this world falls 6 away from you. You get one glimpse of that spirit, and then your 7 senses and your sense-enjoyments, your clinging to the flesh, will 8 all melt away from you. Glimpse after glimpse will come from the 9 realm of spirit. You will have finished Yoga, and spirit will stand 10 revealed as spirit. Then you will begin the worship of God

1 as spirit. Then you will begin to understand that worship is 2 not to gain something. At heart, our worship was that infinite-finite
3 element, love, which [is] an eternal sacrifice at the feet of the Lord
4 by the soul. "Thou and not I. I am dead. Thou art, and I am not. I do 5 not want wealth, nor beauty, no, nor even learning. I do not want 6 salvation. If it be Thy will, let me go into twenty million hells. I only 7 want one thing: Be Thou my love!"

DIVINE LOVE

(Delivered in San Francisco area, April 12, 1900)

[Love may be symbolised by a triangle. The first angle is,] love questions not. It is not a beggar. . . . Beggar's love is no love at all. The first sign of love is when love asks nothing, [when it] gives everything. This is the real spiritual worship, the worship through love. Whether God is merciful is no longer questioned. He is God; He is my love. Whether God is omnipotent and almighty, limited or unlimited, is no longer questioned. If He distributes good, all right; if He brings evil, what does it matter? All other attributes vanish except that one--infinite love.

There was an old Indian emperor who on a hunting expedition came across a great sage in the forest. He was so pleased with this sage that he insisted that the latter come to the capital to receive some presents. [At first] the sage refused. [But] the emperor insisted, and at last the sage consented. When he arrived [at the palace], he was announced to the emperor who said, "Wait a minute until I finish my prayer." The emperor prayed, "Lord, give me more wealth, more [land, more health], more children." The sage stood up and began to walk out of the room. The emperor said, "You have not received my presents." The sage replied, "I do not beg from beggars. All this time you have been praying for more land, [for] more money, for this and that. What can you give me? First satisfy your own wants!"

Love never asks; it always gives. . . . When a young man goes to see his sweetheart, . . . there is no business relationship between them; theirs is a relationship of love, and love is no beggar. [In the same way], we understand that the beginning of real spiritual worship means no begging. We have finished all begging: "Lord, give me this and that." Then will religion begin.

The second [angle of the triangle of love] is that love knows no fear. You may cut me to pieces, and I [will] still love you. Suppose one of you mothers, a weak woman, sees a tiger in the street snatching your child. I know where you will be: you will face the tiger. Another time a dog appears in the street, and you will fly. But you jump at the mouth of the tiger and snatch your child away. Love knows no fear. It conquers all evil. The fear of God is the beginning of religion, but the love of God is the end of religion. All fear has died out.

The third [angle of the love-triangle is that] love is its own end. It can never be the means. The man who says, "I love you for such and such a thing", does not love. Love can never be the means; it must be the perfect end. What is the end and aim of love? To love God, that is all. Why should one love God? [There is] no why, because it is not the means. When one can love, that is salvation, that is perfection, that is heaven. What more? What else can be the end? What can you have higher than love?

1 I am not talking about what every one of us means by love.
2 Little namby-pamby love is lovely. Man falls in love with a woman,
3 and woman goes to die for man. The chances are that in five 4 minutes John kicks Jane, and Jane kicks John. This is a materialism
5 and no love at all. If John could really love Jane, he would be perfect 6 that moment. [His true] nature is love; he is perfect in himself. John 7 will get all the powers of Yoga simply by loving Jane, [although] he 8 may not know a word about religion, psychology, or theology. I 9 believe that if a man and woman can really love, [they can acquire] 10 all the powers the Yogis claim to have, for love itself is God.

11 That God is omnipresent, and [therefore] you have that love, 12 whether you know it or not.

13 I saw a boy waiting for a girl the other evening. . . . I thought 14 it a good experiment to study this boy. He developed clairvoyance 15 and clairsaudience through the intensity of his love. Sixty or seventy 16 times he never made a mistake, and the girl was two hundred miles 17 away. [He would say], "She is dressed this way." [Or], "There she 18 goes." I have seen that with my own eyes.

19 This is the question: Is not your husband God, your child God?
20 If you can love your wife, you have all the religion in the world. You 21 have the whole secret of religion and Yoga in you. But can you love?
22 This is the question. You say, "I love . . . Oh Mary, I die for you!"
23 [But if you] see Mary kissing another man, you want to cut his 24 throat. If Mary sees John talking to another girl, she cannot sleep at 25 night, and she makes life hell for John. This is not love. This is 26 barter and sale in sex. It is blasphemy to talk of it as love. The 27 world talks day and night of God and religion--so of love. Making a 28 sham of everything, that is what you are doing! Everybody talks of 29 love, [yet in the] columns in the newspapers [we read] of divorces 30 everyday. When you love John, do you love John for his sake or for 31 your sake? [If you love him for your sake], you expect something 32 from John. [If you love him for his sake], you do not want anything 33 from John. He can do anything he likes, [and] you [will] love him 34 just the same.

35 These are the three points, the three angles that constitute 36 the triangle [of love]. Unless there is love, philosophy becomes dry 37 bones, psychology becomes a sort of [theory], and work becomes 38 mere labor. [If there is love], philosophy becomes poetry, 39 psychology becomes [mysticism], and work the most delicious thing 40 in creation. [By merely] reading books [one] becomes barren. Who 41 becomes learned? He who can feel even one drop of love. God is 42 love, and love is God. And God is everywhere. After seeing that God 43 is love and God is everywhere, one does not know whether one 44 stands on one's head or [on one's] feet--like a man who gets a bottle 45 of wine and does not know where he stands. . . . If we weep ten 46 minutes for God, we will not know where we are for the next two 47 months. . . . We will not remember the times for meals. We will not 48 know what we are eating. [How can] you love God and always be so 49 nice and businesslike? . . . The . . . all-conquering omnipotent 50 power of love--how can it come? . . .

51 Judge people not. They are all mad. Children are [mad] after 1 their games, the young after the young, the old [are] chewing the 2 cud of their past years; some are mad after gold. Why not some 3 after God? Go crazy over the love of God as you go crazy over Johns

4 and Janes. Who are they? [People] say, "Shall I give up this? Shall I 5 give up that?" One asked, "Shall I give up marriage?" Do not give 6 up anything! Things will give you up. Wait, and you will forget them.

7 [To be completely] turned into love of God--there is the real 8 worship! You have a glimpse of that now and then in the Roman 9 Catholic Church--some of those wonderful monks and nuns going 10 mad with marvelous love. Such love you ought to have! Such should 11 be the love of God--without asking anything, without seeking 12 anything. . . .

13 The question was asked: How to worship? Worship Him as 14 dearer than all your possessions, dearer than all your relatives, 15 [dearer than] your children. [Worship Him as] the one you love as 16 Love itself. There is one whose name is infinite Love. That is the 17 only definition of God. Do not care if this . . . universe is destroyed.
18 What do we care as long as He is infinite love? [Do you] see what 19 worship means? All other thoughts must go. Everything must vanish 20 except God. The love the father or mother has for the child, [the 21 love] the wife [has] for the husband, the husband for the wife, the 22 friend for the friend--all these loves concentrated into one must be 23 given to God. Now, if the woman loves the man, she cannot love 24 another man. If the man loves the woman, he cannot love another 25 [woman]. Such is the nature of love.

26 My old Master used to say, "Suppose there is a bag of gold in 27 this room, and in the next room there is a robber. The robber is well 28 aware that there is a bag of gold. Would the robber be able to 29 sleep? Certainly not. All the time he would be crazy thinking how to 30 reach the gold." . . . [Similarly], if a man loves God, how can he love 31 anything else? How can anything else stand before the mighty love 32 of God? Everything else vanishes [before it]. How can the mind stop 33 without going crazy to find [that love], to realise, to feel, to live in 34 that?

35 This is how we are to love God: "I do not want wealth, nor 36 [friends, nor beauty], nor possessions, nor learning, nor even 37 salvation. If it be Thy will, send me a thousand deaths. Grant me, 38 this--that I may love Thee and that for love's sake. That love which 39 materialistic persons have for their worldly possessions, may that 40 strong love come into my heart, but only for the Beautiful. Praise to 41 God! Praise to God the Lover!" God is nothing else than that. He 42 does not care for the wonderful things many Yogis can do. Little 43 magicians do little tricks. God is the big magician; He does all the 44 tricks. Who cares how many worlds [there are]? . . .

45 There is another [way. It is to] conquer everything, [to] 46 subdue everything--to conquer the body [and] the mind. . . . "What 47 is the use of conquering everything? My business is with God!"
48 [says the devotee.]

49 There was one Yogi, a great lover. He was dying of cancer of 50 the throat. He [was] visited [by] another Yogi, who was a 51 philosopher. [The latter] said, "Look here, my friend, why don't you

1 concentrate your mind on that sore of yours and get it cured?" The 2 third time this question was asked [this great Yogi] said, "Do you 3 think it possible that the [mind] which I have given entirely to the 4 Lord [can be fixed upon this cage of flesh and blood]?" Christ
5 refused to bring legions of angels to his aid. Is this little body so 6 great that I should bring twenty thousand angels to keep it two or 7 three days more?

8 [From the worldly standpoint,] my all is this body. My world is 9 this body. My God is this body. I am the body. If you pinch me, I am 10 pinched. I forget God the moment I have a headache. I am the 11 body! God and everything must come down for this highest goal-- 12 the body. From this standpoint, when Christ died on the cross and 13 did not bring angels [to his aid], he was a fool. He ought to have 14 brought down angels and gotten himself off the cross! But from the 15 standpoint of the lover, to whom this body is nothing, who cares for 16 this nonsense? Why bother thinking about this body that comes and 17 goes? There is no more to it than the piece of cloth the Roman 18 soldiers cast lots for.

19 There is a whole gamut of difference between [the worldly 20 standpoint] and the lover's standpoint. Go on loving. If a man is 21 angry, there is no reason why you should be angry; if he degrades 22 himself, that is no reason why you should degrade yourself. . . .
23 "Why should I become angry just because another man has made a 24 fool of himself? Do thou resist not evil!" That is what the lovers of 25 God say. Whatever the world does, wherever it goes, has no 26 influence [on them].

27 One Yogi had attained supernatural powers. He said, "See my 28 power! See the sky; I will cover it with clouds." It began to rain.
29 [Someone] said, "My lord, you are wonderful. But teach me that, 30 knowing which, I shall not ask for anything else." . . . To get rid 31 even of power, to have nothing, not to want power! [What this 32 means] cannot be understood simply by intellect. . . . You cannot 33 understand by reading thousands of books. . . . When we begin to 34 understand, the whole world opens before us. . . . The girl is playing 35 with her dolls, getting new husbands all the time; but when her real 36 husband comes, all the dolls will be put away [for ever]. . . . So 37 [with] all these goings-on here. [When] the sun of love rises, all 38 these play-suns of power and these [cravings] all pass [away]. What 39 shall we do with power? Thank God if you can get rid of the power 40 that you have. Begin to love. Power must go. Nothing must stand 41 between me and God except love. God is only love and nothing 42 else--love first, love in the middle, and love at the end.

43 [There is the] story of a queen preaching [the love of God] in 44 the streets. Her enraged husband persecuted her, and she was 45 hunted up and down the country. She used to sing songs describing 46 her [love]. Her songs have been sung everywhere. "With tears in 47 my eyes I [nourished the everlasting creeper] of love. . . ." This is 48 the last, the great [goal]. What else is there? [People] want this and 49 that. They all want to have and possess. That is why so few 50 understand [love], so few come to it. Wake them and tell them! They 51 will get a few more hints.

1 Love itself is the eternal, endless sacrifice. You will have to 2 give up everything. You cannot take possession of anything. Finding 3 love, you will never [want] anything [else]. . . . "Only be Thou my 4 love for ever!" That is what love wants. "My love, one kiss of those 5 lips! [For him] who has been kissed by Thee, all sorrows vanish.
6 Once kissed by Thee, man becomes happy and forgets love of 7 everything else. He praises Thee alone and he sees Thee alone." In 8 the nature of human love even, [there lurk divine elements. In] the 9 first moment of intense love the whole world seems in tune with 10 your own heart. Every bird in the universe sings your love; the 11 flowers bloom for you. It is infinite, eternal love itself that [human] 12 love comes from.

13 Why should the lover of God fear anything--fear robbers, fear
14 distress, fear even for his life? . . . The lover [may] go to the utmost 15 hell, but would it be hell? We all have to give up these ideas of 16 heaven [and hell] and get greater [love]. . . . Hundreds there are 17 seeking this madness of love before which everything [but God 18 vanishes].

19 At last, love, lover, and beloved become one. That is the goal. .
20 . . Why is there any separation between soul and man, between soul 21 and God? . . . Just to have this enjoyment of love. He wanted to love 22 Himself, so He split Himself into many. . . . "This is the whole reason 23 for creation", says the lover. "We are all one. 'I and my Father are 24 one.' Just now I am separate in order to love God. . . . Which is 25 better--to become sugar or to eat sugar? To become sugar, what fun 26 is that? To eat sugar--that is infinite enjoyment of love."

27 All the ideals of love--[God] as [our] father, mother, friend, 28 child--[are conceived in order to strengthen devotion in us and 29 make us feel nearer and dearer to God.] The intensest love is that 30 between the sexes. God must be loved with that sort of love. The 31 woman loves her father; she loves her mother; she loves her child; 32 she loves her friend. But she cannot express herself all to the 33 father, nor to the mother, nor to the child, nor to the friend. There is 34 only one person from whom she does not hide anything. So with the 35 man. . . . The [husband-] wife relationship is the all-rounded 36 relationship. The relationship of the sexes [has] all the other loves 37 concentrated into one. In the husband, the woman has the father, 38 the friend, the child. In the wife, the husband has mother, daughter, 39 and something else. That tremendous complete love of the sexes
40 must come [for God]--that same love with which a woman opens 41 herself to a man without any bond of blood--perfectly, fearlessly, 42 and shamelessly. No darkness! She would no more hide anything 43 from her lover than she would from her own self. That very love 44 must come [for God]. These things are hard and difficult to 45 understand. You will begin to understand by and by, and all idea of 46 sex will fall away. "Like the water drop on the sand of the river bank 47 on a summer day, even so is this life and all its relations."

48 All these ideas [like] "He is the creator", are ideas fit for 49 children. He is my love, my life itself--that must be the cry of my 50 heart! . . .

51 I have one hope. They call Thee the Lord of the world, and --

1 good or evil, great or small--I am part of the world, and Thou art
2 also my love. My body, my mind, and my soul are all at Thy altar.
3 Love, refuse these gifts not!"

RELIGION AND SCIENCE

Experience is the only source of knowledge. In the world, religion is the only source where there is no surety, because it is not taught as a science of experience. This should not be. There is always, however, a small group of men who teach religion from experience. They are called mystics, and these mystics in every religion speak the same tongue and teach the same truth. This is the real science of religion. As mathematics in every part of the world does not differ, so the mystics do not differ. They are all similarly constituted and similarly situated. Their experience is the same; and this becomes law.

In the church, religionists first learn a religion, then begin to practise it; they do not take experience as the basis of their belief. But the mystic starts out in search of truth, experiences it first, and then formulates his creed. The church takes the experience of others; the mystic has his own experience. The church goes from the outside in; the mystic goes from the inside out.

Religion deals with the truths of the metaphysical world just as chemistry and the other natural sciences deal with the truths of the physical world. The book one must read to learn chemistry is the book of nature. The book from which to learn religion is your own mind and heart. The sage is often ignorant of physical science, because he reads the wrong book--the book within; and the scientist is too often ignorant of religion, because he too reads the wrong book--the book without.

All science has its particular methods; so has the science of religion. It has more methods also, because it has more material to work upon. The human mind is not homogeneous like the external world. According to the different nature, there must be different methods. As some special sense predominates in a person--one person will see most, another will hear most--so there is a predominant mental sense; and through this gate must each reach his own mind. Yet through all minds runs a unity, and there is a science which may be applied to all. This science of religion is based on the analysis of the human soul. It has no creed.

No one form of religion will do for all. Each is a pearl on a string. We must be particular above all else to find individuality in each. No man is born to any religion; he has a religion in his own soul. Any system which seeks to destroy individuality is in the long run disastrous. Each life has a current running through it, and this current will eventually take it to God. The end and aim of all religions is to realise God. The greatest of all training is to worship God alone. If each man chose his own ideal and stuck to it, all religious controversy would vanish.

RELIGION IS REALISATION

1 The greatest name man ever gave to God is Truth. Truth is 2 the fruit of realisation; therefore seek it within the soul. Get away 3 from all books and forms and let your soul see its Self. "We are 4 deluded and maddened by books", Shri Krishna declares. Be 5 beyond the dualities of nature. The moment you think creed and 6 form and ceremony the "be-all" and "end-all", then you are in 7 bondage. Take part in them to help others, but take care they do not 8 become a bondage. Religion is one, but its application must be 9 various. Let each one, therefore, give his message; but find not the 10 defects in other religions. You must come out from all form if you 11 would see the Light. Drink deep of the nectar of the knowledge of 12 God. The man who realises, "I am He", though clad in rags, is 13 happy. Go forth into the Eternal and come back with eternal energy.
14 The slave goes out to search for truth; he comes back free.

16 RELIGION IS SELF-ABNEGATION

18 One cannot divide the rights of the universe. To talk of "right" 19 implies limitation. It is not "right" but "responsibility". Each is 20 responsible for the evil anywhere in the world. No one can separate 21 himself from his brother. All that unites with the universal is virtue; 22 all that separates is sin. You are a part of the Infinite. This is your 23 nature. Hence you are your brother's keeper.

24 The first end of life is knowledge; the second end of life is 25 happiness. Knowledge and happiness lead to freedom. But not one 26 can attain liberty until every being (ant or dog) has liberty. Not one 27 can be happy until all are happy. When you hurt anyone you hurt 28 yourself, for you and your brother are one. He is indeed a Yogi who 29 sees himself in the whole universe and the whole universe in 30 himself. Self-sacrifice, not self-assertion, is the law of the highest 31 universe. The world is so evil because Jesus' teaching, "Resist not 32 evil", has never been tried. Selflessness alone will solve the 33 problem. Religion comes with intense self-sacrifice. Desire nothing 34 for yourself. Do all for others. This is to live and move and have 35 your being in God.

37 UNSELFISH WORK IS TRUE RENUNCIATION

39 This world is not for cowards. Do not try to fly. Look not for 40 success or failure. Join yourself to the perfectly unselfish will and 41 work on. Know that the mind which is born to succeed joins itself to 42 a determined will and perseveres. You have the right to work, but 43 do not become so degenerate as to look for results. Work 44 incessantly, but see something behind the work. Even good deeds 45 can find a man in great bondage. Therefore be not bound by good 46 deeds or by desire for name and fame. Those who know this secret 47 pass beyond this round of birth and death and become immortal.

48 The ordinary Sannyasin gives up the world, goes out, and 49 thinks of God. The real Sannyasin lives in the world, but is not of it.

1 Those who deny themselves, live in the forest, and chew the cud of 2 unsatisfied desires are not true renouncers. Live in the midst of the 3 battle of life. Anyone can keep calm in a cave or when asleep. Stand
4 in the whirl and madness of action and reach the Centre. If you 5 have found the Centre, you cannot be moved.

6 7 FREEDOM OF THE SELF

8
9 As we cannot know except through effects that we have eyes, 10 so we cannot see the Self except by Its effects. It cannot be brought 11 down to the low plane of sense-perception. It is the condition of 12 everything in the universe, though Itself unconditioned. When we 13 know that we are the Self, then we are free. The Self can never 14 change. It cannot be acted on by a cause, because It is Itself the 15 cause. It is self-caused. If we can find in ourself something that is 16 not acted on by any cause, then we have known the Self.

17 Freedom is inseparably connected with immortality. To be 18 free one must be above the laws of nature. Law exists so long as we 19 are ignorant. When knowledge comes, then we find that law 20 nothing but freedom in ourselves. The will can never be free, 21 because it is the slave of cause and effect. But the "I" behind the 22 will is free; and this is the Self. "I am free"--that is the basis on 23 which to build and live. And freedom means immortality.

24 25 26 NOTES ON VEDANTA

28 The cardinal features of the Hindu religion are founded on 29 the meditative and speculative philosophy and on the ethical 30 teachings contained in the various books of the Vedas, which assert 31 that the universe is infinite in space and eternal in duration. It 32 never had a beginning, and it never will have an end. Innumerable 33 have been the manifestations of the power of the Spirit in the realm 34 of matter, of the force of the Infinite in the domain of the finite, but 35 the Infinite Itself is self-existent, eternal, and unchangeable. The 36 passage of time makes no mark whatever on the dial of eternity. In 37 its supersensuous region, which cannot be comprehended at all by 38 the human understanding, there is no past and there is no future.

39 The Vedas teach that the soul of man is immortal. The body is 40 subject to the law of growth and decay; what grows must of 41 necessity decay. But the indwelling spirit is related to the infinite 42 and eternal life; it never had a beginning, and it will never have an 43 end. One of the chief distinctions between the Vedic and the 44 Christian religion is that the Christian religion teaches that each 45 human soul had its beginning at its birth into this world; whereas 46 the Vedic religion asserts that the spirit of man is an emanation of 47 the Eternal Being and had no more a beginning than God Himself.
48 Innumerable have been and will be its manifestations in its passage

1 from one personality to another, subject to the great law of spiritual 2 evolution, until it reaches perfection, when there is no more 3 change.

4 5 HINDU AND GREEK

6
7 Three mountains stand as typical of progress--the Himalayas
8 of Indo-Aryan, Sinai of Hebrew, and Olympus of Greek civilisation.
9 When the Aryans reached India, they found the climate so hot that 10 they could not work incessantly, so they began to think; thus they 11 became introspective and developed religion. They discovered that 12 there was no limit to the power of mind; they therefore sought to 13 master that; and through it they learnt that there was something 14 infinite coiled up in the frame we call man, which was seeking to 15 become kinetic. To evolve this became their chief aim. Another 16 branch of the Aryans went into the smaller and more picturesque 17 country of Greece, where the climate and natural conditions were 18 more favorable; so their activity turned outwards, and they 19 developed the external arts and outward liberty. The Greek sought 20 political liberty. The Hindu has always sought spiritual liberty. Both 21 are one-sided. The Indian cares not enough for national protection 22 or patriotism, he will defend only his religion; while with the Greek 23 and in Europe (where the Greek civilisation finds its continuation) 24 the country comes first. To care only for spiritual liberty and not for 25 social liberty is a defect, but the opposite is a still greater defect.
26 Liberty of both soul and body is to be striven for.

27 28 THOUGHTS ON THE VEDAS AND UPANISHADS

29
30 The Vedic sacrificial altar was the origin of Geometry.

31 The invocation of the Devas, or bright ones, was the basis of 32 worship. The idea is that one invoked is helped and helps.

33 Hymns are not only words of praise but words of power, being 34 pronounced with the right attitude of mind.

35 Heaven are only other states of existence with added senses 36 and heightened powers.

37 All higher bodies also are subject to disintegration as is the 38 physical. Death comes to all forms of bodies in this and other lives.
39 Devas are also mortal and can only give enjoyment.

40 Behind all Devas there is the Unit Being--God, as behind this 41 body there is something higher that feels and sees.

42 The powers of creation, preservation, and destruction of the 43 Universe, and the attributes, such as omnipresence, omniscience, 44 and omnipotence, make God of gods.

45 "Hear ye children of Immortality! Hear ye Devas who live in 46 higher spheres!" (Shvetashvatara, II.5). "I have found out a ray 47 beyond all darkness, beyond all doubt. I have found the Ancient

1 One" (ibid. III.8). The way to this is contained in the Upanishads.

2 On earth we die. In heaven we die. In the highest heaven we 3 die. It is only when we reach God that we attain life and become 4 immortal.

5 The Upanisads treat of this alone. The path of the Upanishads
6 is the pure path. Many manners, customs, and local allusions
7 cannot be understood today. Through them, however, truth becomes 8 clear. Heavens and Earth are all thrown off in order to come to 9 Light.

10 The Upanisads declare:

11 "He the Lord has interpenetrated the universe. It is all His."

12 "He the Omnipresent, the One without a second, the One 13 without a body, pure, the great poet of the universe, whose metre is 14 the suns and stars, is giving to each what he deserves" (Isha 15 Upanishad, 8, adapted).

16 "They are groping in utter darkness who try to reach the 17 Light by ceremonials. And they who think this nature is all are in 18 darkness. They who wish to come out of nature through this 19 thought are groping in still deeper darkness" (Isha, 9).

20 Are then ceremonials bad? No, they will benefit those who 21 are coming on.

22 In one of the Upanishads (i.e. Katha) this question is asked by 23 Nachiketa, a youth: "Some say of a dead man, he is gone; others, he 24 is still living. You are Yama, Death.

25 You know the truth; do answer me." Yama replied, "Even the 26 Devas, many of them, know not--much less men. Boy, do not ask of 27 me this answer." But Nachiketa persists. Yama again replies, "The 28 enjoyments of the gods, even these I offer you. Do not insist upon 29 your query." But Nachiketa was firm as a rock. Then the god of 30 death said, "My boy, you have declined, for the third time, wealth, 31 power, long life, fame, family. You are brave enough to ask the 32 highest truth. I will teach you. There are two ways, one of truth, one 33 of enjoyment. You have chosen the former."

34 Now note here the conditions of imparting the truth. First, 35 the purity--a boy, a pure, unclouded soul, asking the secret of the 36 universe. Second, that he must take truth for truth's sake alone.

37 Until the truth has come through one who has had realisation, 38 from one who has perceived it himself, it cannot become fruitful.
39 Books cannot give it, argument cannot establish it. Truth comes 40 unto him who knows the secret of it.

41 After you have received it, be quiet. Be not ruffled by vain
42 argument. Come to your own realisation. You alone can do it.

43 Neither happiness nor misery, vice nor virtue, knowledge nor 44 non-knowledge is it. You must realise it. How can I describe it to 45 you?

1 He who cries out with his whole heart, "O Lord, I want but 2 Thee"--to him the Lord reveals Himself. Be pure, be calm; the mind 3 when ruffled cannot reflect the Lord.

4 "He whom the Vedas declare, He, to reach whom, we serve 5 with prayer and sacrifice, Om is the sacred name of that 6 indescribable One. This word is the holiest of all words. He who 7 knows the secret of this word receives that which he desires." Take 8 refuge in this word. Whoso takes refuge in this word, to him the 9 way opens.

11 ON RAJA-YOGA

13 The first stage of Yoga is Yama.

14 To master Yama five things are necessary:

15 (1) Non-injuring any being by thought, word, and deed.

16 (2) Speaking the truth in thought, word, and deed.

17 (3) Non-covetousness in thought, word, and deed.

18 (4) Perfect chastity in thought, word, and deed.

19 (5) Perfect sinlessness in thought, word, and deed.

20 Holiness is the greatest power. Everything else quails before 21 it.

22 Then comes Asana, or posture, of a devotee. The seat must be 23 firm, the head, ribs, and body in a straight line, erect. Say to 24 yourself that you are firmly seated, and that nothing can move you.
25 Then mention the perfection of the body, bit by bit, from head to 26 foot. Think of it as being clear as crystal, and as a perfect vessel to 27 sail over the sea of life.

28 Pray to God and to all the prophets and saviors of the world 29 and holy spirits in the universe to help you.

30 Then for half an hour practice Pranayama or the suspending, 31 restraining, and controlling of the breath, mentally repeating the 32 word Om as you inhale and exhale the breath. Words charged with 33 spirit have wonderful power.

34 The other stages of Yoga are: (1) Pratyahara or the restraint
35 of the organs of sense from all outward things, and directing them
36 entirely to mental impressions; (2) Dharana or steadfast
37 concentration; (3) Dhyana or meditation; (4) Samadhi or abstract 38 meditation. It is the highest and last stage of Yoga. Samadhi is 39 perfect absorption of thought into the Supreme Spirit, when one 40 realises, "I and my Father are one."

41 Do one thing at a time and while doing it put your whole soul 42 into it to the exclusion of all else.

43

ON BHAKTI-YOGA

Bhakti-Yoga is the path of systematised devotion for the attainment of union with the Absolute. It is the easiest and surest path to religion or realisation.

Love to God is the one essential to be perfect in this path.

There are five stages of love.

First, man wants help and has a little fear.

Second, when God is seen as Father.

Third, when God is seen as Mother. Then all women are looked upon as reflections of the Mother-God. With the idea of Mother-God real love begins.

Fourth, love for love's sake. Love for love's sake transcends all qualities.

Fifth, love in Divine-union. It leads to oneness or superconsciousness.

God is both Personal and Impersonal as we are personal and impersonal.

Prayer and praise are the first means of growth. Repeating the names of God has wonderful power.

Mantra is a special word, or sacred text, or name of God chosen by the Guru for repetition and reflection by the disciple. The disciple must concentrate on a personality for prayer and praise, and that is his Ishta.

These words (Mantras) are not sounds of words but God Himself, and we have them within us. Think of Him, speak of Him. No desire for the world! Buddhas's Sermon on the Mount was, "As thou thinkest, so art thou."

After attaining superconsciousness the Bhakta descends again to love and worship.

Pure love has no motive. It has nothing to gain.

After prayer and praise comes meditation. Then comes reflection on the name and on the Ishta of the individual.

Pray that that manifestation which is our Father, our Mother, may cut our bonds.

Pray, "Take us by the hand as a father takes his son, and leave us not."

Pray, "I do not want wealth or beauty, this world or another, but Thee, O God! Lord! I have become weary. Oh, take me by the hand, Lord, I take shelter with Thee. Make me Thy servant. Be Thou my refuge."

Pray, "Thou our Father, our Mother, our dearest Friend! Thou who bearest this universe, help us to bear the little burden of this our life. Leave us not. Let us never be separated from Thee. Let us always dwell in Thee."

1 When love to God is revealed and is all, this world appears 2 like a drop.

3 Pass from non-existence to existence, from darkness to light.

5 ON JNANA-YOGA

7 First, meditation should be of a negative nature. Think away 8 everything. Analyse everything that comes in the mind by the sheer 9 action of the will.

10 Next, assert what we really are--existence, knowledge, and 11 bliss--being, knowing, and loving.

12 Meditation is the means of unification of the subject and 13 object. Meditate:

14 Above, it is full of me; below, it is full of me; in the middle, it 15 is full of me. I am in all beings, and all beings are in me. Om Tat 16 Sat, I am It. I am existence above mind. I and the one spirit of the 17 universe. I am neither pleasure nor pain.

18 The body drinks, eats, and so on. I am not the body. I am not 19 mind. I am He.

20 I am the witness. I look on. When health comes I am the 21 witness. When disease comes I am the witness.

22 I am Existence, Knowledge, Bliss.

23 I am the essence and nectar of knowledge. Through eternity I 24 change not. I am calm, resplendent, and unchanging.

27 THE REALITY AND SHADOW

29 That which differentiates one thing from another is time, 30 space, and causation.

31 The differentiation is in the form, not in the substance. You 32 may destroy the form and it disappears for ever; but the substance 33 remains the same. You can never destroy the substance.

34 Evolution is in nature, not in the soul--evolution of nature, 35 manifestation of the soul.

36 Maya is not illusion as it is popularly interpreted. Maya is 37 real, yet it is not real. It is real in that the Real is behind it and 38 gives it its appearance of reality. That which is real in Maya is the 39 Reality in and through Maya. Yet the Reality is never seen ; and 40 hence that which is seen is unreal, and it has no real independent 41 existence of itself, but is dependent upon the Real for its existence.

42 Maya then is a paradox--real, yet not real, an illusion, yet not 43 an illusion.

1 He who knows the Real sees in Maya not illusion, but reality.
2 He who knows not the Real sees in Maya illusion and thinks it real.

3 4 5 HOW TO BECOME FREE

6
7 All things in nature work according to law. Nothing is 8 excepted. The mind as well as everything in external nature is 9 governed and controlled by law.

10 Internal and external nature, mind and matter, are in time 11 and space, and are bound by the law of causation.

12 The freedom of the mind is a delusion. How can the mind be 13 free when it is controlled and bound by law?

14 The law of Karma is the law of causation.

15 We must become free. We are free; the work is to know it. We 16 must give up all slavery, all bondage of whatever kind. We must not 17 only give up our bondage to earth and everything and everybody on 18 earth, but also to all ideas of heaven and happiness.

19 We are bound to earth by desire and also to God, heaven, and 20 the angels. A slave is a slave whether to man, to God, or to angels.

21 The idea of heaven must pass away. The idea of heaven after 22 death where the good live a life of eternal happiness is a vain
23 dream, without a particle of meaning or sense in it. Wherever there 24 is happiness there must follow unhappiness sometime. Wherever 25 there is pleasure there must be pain. This is absolutely certain, 26 every action has its reaction somehow.

27 The idea of freedom is the only true idea of salvation-- 28 freedom from everything, the senses, whether of pleasure or pain, 29 from good as well as evil.

30 More than this even, we must be free from death; and to be 31 free from death, we must be free from life. Life is but a dream of 32 death. Where there is life, there will be death; so get away from life 33 if you would be rid of death.

34 We are ever free if we would only believe it, only have faith
35 enough. You are the soul, free and eternal, ever free, ever blessed.
36 Have faith enough and you will be free in a minute.

37 Everything in time, space, and causation is bound. The soul is 38 beyond all time, all space, all causation. That which is bound is 39 nature, not the soul.

40 Therefore proclaim your freedom and be what you are--ever 41 free, ever blessed.

42 Time, space, and causation we call Maya.

43

SOUL AND GOD

Anything that is in space has form. Space itself has form. Either you are in space, or space is in you. The soul is beyond all space. Space is in the soul, not the soul in space.

Form is confined to time and space and is bound by the law of causation. All time is in us, we are not in time. As the soul is not in time and space, all time and space are within the soul. The soul is therefore omnipresent.

Our idea of God is the reflection of ourselves.

Old Persian and Sanskrit have affinities.

The primitive idea of God was identifying God with different forms of nature--nature-worship. The next stage was the tribal God. The next stage, the worship of kings.

The idea of God in heaven is predominant in all nations except in India. The idea is very crude.

The idea of the continuity of life is foolish. We can never get rid of death until we get rid of life.

THE GOAL

Dualism recognises God and nature to be eternally separate: the universe and nature eternally dependent upon God.

The extreme monists make no such distinction. In the last analysis, they claim, all is God: the universe becomes lost in God; God is the eternal life of the universe.

With them infinite and finite are mere terms. The universe, nature, etc. exist by virtue of differentiation. Nature is itself differentiation.

Such questions as, "Why did God create the universe?" "Why did the All-perfect create the imperfect?" etc., can never be answered, because such questions are logical absurdities. Reason exists in nature; beyond nature it has no existence. God is omnipotent, hence to ask why He did so and so is to limit Him; for it implies that there is a purpose in His creating the universe. If He has a purpose, it must be a means to an end, and this would mean that He could not have the end without the means. The questions, why and wherefore, can only be asked of something which depends upon something else.

ON PROOF OF RELIGION

1 The great question about religion is: What makes it so
2 unscientific? If religion is a science, why is it not as certain as other 3 sciences? All beliefs in God, heaven, etc., are mere conjectures, 4 mere beliefs. There seems to be nothing certain about it. Our ideas
5 concerning religion are changing all the time. The mind is in a 6 constant state of flux.

7 Is man a soul, an unchanging substance, or is he a constantly
8 changing quantity? All religions, except primitive Buddhism, believe 9 that man is a soul, an identity, a unit that never dies but is 10 immortal.

11 The primitive Buddhists believe that man is a constantly 12 changing quantity, and that his consciousness consists in an almost 13 infinite succession of incalculably rapid changes, each change, as it 14 were, being unconnected with the others, standing alone, thus 15 precluding the theory of the law of sequence or causation.

16 If there is a unit, there is a substance. A unit is always simple.
17 A simple is not a compound of anything. It does not depend on 18 anything else. It stands alone and is immortal.

19 Primitive Buddhists contend that everything is unconnected; 20 nothing is a unit; and that the theory of man being a unit is a mere 21 belief and cannot be proved.

22 Now the great question is : Is man a unit, or is he a constantly 23 changing mass?

24 There is but one way to prove this, to answer this question.
25 Stop the gyrations of the mind, and the theory that a man is a unit, 26 a simple, will be demonstrated. All changes are in me, in the Chitta, 27 the mind-substance. I am not the changes. If I were, I could not 28 stop them.

29 Everyone is trying to make himself and everybody else 30 believe that this world is all very fine, that he is perfectly happy. But 31 when man stops to question his motives in life, he will see that the 32 reason he is struggling after this and that is because he cannot help 33 himself. He must move on. He cannot stop, so he tries to make 34 himself believe that he really wants this and that. The one who 35 actually succeeds in making himself believe that he is having a good 36 time is the man of splendid physical health. This man responds to 37 his desires instantly, without question. He acts in response to that 38 power within him, urging him on without a thought, as though he 39 acted because he wanted to. But when he has been knocked about 40 a good deal by nature, when he has received a good many wounds 41 and bruises, he begins to question the meaning of all this; and as he 42 gets hurt more and thinks more, he sees that he is urged on by a 43 power beyond his control and that he acts simply because he must.
44 Then he begins to rebel, and the battle begins.

45 Now if there is a way out of all this trouble, it is within 46 ourselves. We are always trying to realise the Reality. Instinctively 47 we are always trying to do that. It is creation in the human soul that 48 covers up God; that is why there is so much difference in God-49 ideals. Only when creation stops can we find the Absolute. The 50 Absolute is in the soul, not in creation. So by stopping creation, we 1 come to know the Absolute. When we think of ourselves, we think of 2 the body; and when we think of God, we think of Him as body. To 3 stop the gyrations of the mind, so that the soul may become 4 manifested, is the work. Training begins with the body. Breathing 5 trains the body, gets it into a harmonious condition. The object of 6 the breathing exercises is to attain meditation and concentration. If 7 you can get absolutely still for just one moment, you have reached 8 the goal. The mind may go on working after that; but it will never 9 be the same mind again. You will know yourself as you are--your 10 true Self. Still the mind but for one moment, and the truth of your 11 real nature will flash upon you, and freedom is at hand: no more 12 bondage after that. This follows from the theory that if you can 13 know an instant of time, you know all time, as the whole is the rapid 14 succession of one. Master the one, know thoroughly one instant-- 15 and freedom is reached.

16 All religions believe in God and the soul except the primitive
17 Buddhist. The modern Buddhists believe in God and the soul.
18 Among the primitive Buddhists are the Burmese, Siamese, Chinese, 19 etc.

20 Arnold's book, The Light of Asia, represents more of 21 Vedantism than Buddhism.

24 THE DESIGN THEORY

26 The idea that nature in all her orderly arrangements shows
27 design on the part of the Creator of the universe is good as a 28 kindergarten teaching to show the beauty, power, and glory of God, 29 in order to lead children in religion up to a philosophical conception 30 of God; but apart from that, it is not good, and perfectly illogical. As 31 a philosophical idea, it is entirely without foundation, if God is taken 32 to be omnipotent.

33 If nature shows the power of God in creating the universe, 34 (then) to have a design in so doing also shows His weakness. If God 35 is omnipotent, He needs no design, no scheme, to do anything. He 36 has but to will it, and it is done. No question, no scheme, no plan, of 37 God in nature.

38 The material universe is the result of the limited
39 consciousness of man. When man becomes conscious of his divinity, 40 all matter, all nature, as we know it, will cease to exist.

41 The material world, as such, has no place in the 42 consciousness of the All-Presence as a necessity of any end. If it 43 had, God would be limited by the universe. To say that nature exists 44 by His permission is not to say that it exists as a necessity for Him 45 to make man perfect, or for any other reason.

46 It is a creation for man's necessity, not God's. There is no 47 scheme of God in the plan of the universe. How could there be any 48 if He is omnipotent? Why should He have need of a plan, or a

1 scheme, or a reason to do anything? To say that He has is to limit
2 Him and to rob Him of His character of omnipotence.

3 For instance, if you came to a very wide river, so wide that 4 you could not get across it except by building a bridge, the very fact 5 that you would have to build the bridge to get across the river 6 would show your limitation, would show your weakness, even if the 7 ability to build the bridge did show your strength. If you were not 8 limited but could just fly or jump across, you would not be under the 9 necessity of building a bridge; and to build the bridge just to exhibit 10 your power to do so would show your weakness again by showing 11 your vanity, more than it would show anything else.

12 Monism and dualism are essentially the same. The difference
13 consists in the expression. As the dualists hold the Father and Son 14 to be two, the monists hold them to be really one. Dualism is in 15 nature, in manifestation, and monism is pure spirituality in the 16 essence.

17 The idea of renunciation and sacrifice is in all religions as a 18 means to reach God.

21 SPIRIT AND NATURE

23 Religion is the realisation of Spirit as Spirit; not Spirit as 24 matter.

25 Religion is a growth. Each one must experience it himself.
26 The Christians believe that Jesus Christ died to save man. With you 27 it is belief in a doctrine, and this belief constitutes your salvation.
28 With us doctrine has nothing whatever to do with salvation. Each 29 one may believe in whatever doctrine he likes; or in no doctrine.

30 What difference does it make to you whether Jesus Christ
31 lived at a certain time or not? What has it to do with you that Moses 32 saw God in the burning bush? The fact that Moses saw God in the 33 burning bush does not constitute your seeing Him, does it? If it 34 does, then the fact that Moses ate is enough for you; you ought to 35 stop eating. One is just as sensible as the other. Records of great 36 spiritual men of the past do us no good whatever except that they 37 urge us onward to do the same, to experience religion ourselves.
38 Whatever Christ or Moses or anybody else did does not help us in 39 the least, except to urge us on.

1 Each one has a special nature peculiar to himself, which he 2 must follow and through which he will find his way to freedom. Your 3 teacher should be able to tell you what your particular path in 4 nature is and to put you in it. He should know by your face where 5 you belong and should be able to indicate it to you. You should 6 never try to follow another's path, for that is his way, not yours.
7 When that path is found, you have nothing to do but fold your arms, 8 and the tide will carry you to freedom. Therefore when you find it, 9 never swerve from it. Your way is the best for you, but that is no sign 10 that it is the best for others.

11 The truly spiritual see Spirit as Spirit, not as matter. It is 12 Spirit that makes nature move; It is the reality in nature. So action 13 is in nature; not in the Spirit. Spirit is always the same, changeless, 14 eternal. Spirit and matter are in reality the same; but Spirit, as 15 such, never becomes matter; and matter, as such, never becomes 16 Spirit.

17 The Spirit never acts. Why should it? It merely is, and that is 18 sufficient. It is pure existence absolute and has no need of action.

19 You are not bound by law. That is in your nature. The mind is 20 in nature and is bound by law. All nature is bound by law, the law of 21 its own action; and this law can never be broken. If you could break 22 a law of nature, all nature would come to an end in an instant.
23 There would be no more nature. He who attains freedom breaks the 24 law of nature, and for him nature fades away and has no more 25 power over him. Each one will break the law but once and for ever; 26 and that will end his trouble with nature.

27 Governments, societies, etc. are comparative evils. All 28 societies are based on bad generalisation. The moment you form 29 yourselves into an organisation, you begin to hate everybody 30 outside of that organisation. When you join an organisation, you are 31 putting bounds upon yourself, you are limiting your own freedom.
32 The greatest goodness is the highest freedom. Our aim should be to 33 allow the individual to move towards this freedom. More of 34 goodness, less of artificial laws. Such laws are not laws at all. If it 35 were a law, it could not be broken. The fact that these so-called 36 laws are broken, shows clearly that they are not laws. A law is that 37 which cannot be broken.

38 Whenever you suppress a thought, it is simply pressed down 39 out of sight, in a coil like a spring, only to spring out again at a 40 moment's notice, with all the pent-up force resulting from the 41 suppression, and do in a few moments what it would have done in a 42 much longer period.

43 Every ounce of pleasure brings its pound of pain. It is the 44 same energy that at one time manifests itself as pleasure, at 45 another time as pain. As soon as one set of sensations stops, 46 another begins. But in some cases, in more advanced persons, one 47 may have two, yea, even a hundred different thoughts entering into 48 active operation at the same time.

49 Mind is action of its own nature. Mind-activity means 50 creation. The thought is followed by the word, and the word by the 1 form. All of this creating will have to stop, both mental and physical, 2 before the mind can reflect the soul.

3 4 5 THE PRACTICE OF RELIGION

6 (At Alameda, Calif., March 18, 1900)
7

8 We read many books, but that does not bring us knowledge.
9 We may read all the Bibles in the world, but that will not give us 10 religion. Theoretical religion is easy enough to get, any one may get 11 that. What we want is practical religion.

12 The Christian idea of a practical religion is in doing good 13 works--worldly utility.

14 What good is utility? Judged from a utilitarian standpoint, 15 religion is a failure. Every hospital is a prayer that more people may 16 come there. What is meant by charity? Charity is not fundamental.
17 It is really helping on the misery of the world, not eradicating it.
18 One looks for name and fame and covers his efforts to obtain them 19 with the enamel of charity and good works. He is working for 20 himself under the pretext of working for others. Every so-called 21 charity is an encouragement of the very evil it claims to operate 22 against.

23 Men and women go to balls and dance all night in honor of 24 some hospital or other charitable institution, then go home, behave 25 like beasts, and bring devils into the world to fill jails, insane
26 asylums, and hospitals. So it goes on, and it is called good works-- 27 building hospital, etc. The ideal of good works is to lessen, or 28 eradicate, the misery of the world. The Yogi says, all misery comes 29 from not being able to control the mind. The Yogi's ideal is freedom 30 from nature. Conquest of nature is his standard of work. The Yogi 31 says that all power is in the soul, and by the controlling of the mind 32 and body one conquers nature by the power of the soul.

33 Every ounce of muscle in excess of what is beyond the needs
34 of one's physical work is that much less of brain. Do not exercise 35 too hard; it is injurious. The one who does not work hard will live 36 the longest. Eat less food and work less. Store up brain food.

37 Household work is enough for women.

38 Do not make the lamp burn fast; let it burn slowly.

39 Proper diet means simple diet, not highly spiced.

42 FRAGMENTARY NOTES ON THE RAMAYANA 43

1 Worship Him who alone stands by us, whether we are doing 2 good or are doing evil; who never leaves us even; as love never 3 pulls down, as love knows no barter, no selfishness.

4 Rama was the soul of the old king; but he was a king, and he 5 could not go back on his word.

6 "Wherever Rama goes, there go I", says Lakshmana, the 7 younger brother.

8 The wife of the elder brother to us Hindus is just like a 9 mother.

10 At last he found Sita, pale and thin, like a bit of the moon that 11 lies low at the foot of the horizon.

12 Sita was chastity itself; she would never touch the body of 13 another man except that of her husband.

14 "Pure? She is chastity itself", says Rama.

15 Drama and music are by themselves religion; any song, love 16 song or any song, never mind; if one's whole soul is in that song, he 17 attains salvation, just by that; nothing else he has to do; if a man's 18 whole soul is in that, his soul gets salvation. They say it leads to the 19 same goal.

20 Wife--the co-religionist. Hundreds of ceremonies the Hindu 21 has to perform, and not one can be performed if he has not a wife.
22 You see the priests tie them up together, and they go round temples 23 and make very great pilgrimages tied together.

24 Rama gave up his body and joined Sita in the other world.

25 Sita--the pure, the pure, the all-suffering!

26 Sita is the name in India for everything that is good, pure, 27 and holy; everything that in woman we call woman.

28 Sita--the patient, all-suffering, ever-faithful, ever-pure wife!
29 Through all the suffering she had, there was not one harsh word 30 against Rama.

31 Sita never returned injury.

32 "Be Sita!"

35 NOTES TAKEN DOWN IN MADRAS, 1892-93

36

37 The three essentials of Hinduism are belief in God, in the 38 Vedas as revelation, in the doctrine of Karma and transmigration.

39 If one studies the Vedas between the lines, one sees a religion 40 of harmony.

41 One point of difference between Hinduism and other religions
42 is that in Hinduism we pass from truth to truth--from a lower truth 43 to a higher truth--and never from error to truth.

44 The Vedas should be studied through the eye-glass of 1 evolution. They contain the whole history of the progress of 2 religious consciousness, until religion has reached perfection in 3 unity.

4 The Vedas are Anadi, eternal. The meaning of the statement 5 is not, as is erroneously supposed by some, that the words of the 6 Vedas are Anadi, but that the spiritual laws inculcated by the Vedas 7 are such. These laws which are immutable and eternal have been 8 discovered at various times by great men or Rishis, though some of 9 them are forgotten now, while others are preserved.

10 When a number of people from various angles and distances 11 have a look at the sea, each man sees a portion of it according to 12 his horizon. Though each man may say that what he sees is the real 13 sea, all of them speak the truth, for all of them see portions of the 14 same wide expanse. So the religious scriptures, though they seem 15 to contain varying and conflicting statements, speak the truth, for 16 they are all descriptions of that one infinite Reality.

17 When one sees a mirage for the first time, he mistakes it for a 18 reality, and after vainly trying to quench his thirst in it, learns that it 19 is a mirage. But whenever he sees such a phenomenon in future, in 20 spite of the apparent reality, the idea that he sees a mirage always 21 presents itself to him. So is the world of Maya to a Jivanmukta (the 22 liberated in life).

23 Some of the Vedic secrets were known to certain families 24 only, as certain powers naturally exist in some families. With the 25 extinction of these families, those secrets have died away.

26 Vedic anatomy was no less perfect than the Ayurvedic.

27 There were many names for many parts of the organs, 28 because they had to cut up animals for sacrifice. The sea is 29 described as full of ships. Sea voyage was prohibited later on, 30 partly because there came the fear that people might thereby 31 become Buddhists.

32 Buddhism was the rebellion of newly-formed Kshatriyas
33 against Vedic priestcraft.

34 Hinduism threw away Buddhism after taking its sap. The 35 attempt of all the Southern Acharyas was to effect a reconciliation 36 between the two. Shankaracharya's teaching shows the influence of 37 Buddhism. His disciples perverted his teaching and carried it to 38 such an extreme point that some of the later reformers were right 39 in calling the Acharya's followers "crypto-Buddhists".

40 What is Spencer's unknowable? It is our Maya. Western 41 philosophers are afraid of the unknowable, but our philosophers 42 have taken a big jump into the unknown, and they have conquered.

43 Western philosophers are like vultures soaring high in the 44 sky, but all the while, with their eye fixed on the carrion beneath.
45 They cannot cross the unknown, and they therefore turn back and 46 worship the almighty dollar.

47 There have been two lines of progress in this world--political 48 and religious. In the former the Greeks are everything, the modern 49 political institutions being only the development of the Grecian; in

1 the latter the Hindus are everything.

2 My religion is one of which Christianity is an offshoot and 3 Buddhism a rebel child.

4 Chemistry ceases to improve when one element is found from 5 which all others are deductible. Physics ceases to progress when 6 one force is found of which all others are manifestations. So 7 religion ceases to progress when unity is reached, which is the case 8 with Hinduism.

9 There is no new religious idea preached anywhere which is 10 not found in the Vedas.

11 In everything, there are two kinds of development--analytical 12 and synthetical. In the former the Hindus excel other nations. In the 13 latter they are nil.

14 The Hindus have cultivated the power of analysis and 15 abstraction. No nation has yet produced a grammar like that of 16 Panini.

17 Ramanuja's important work is the conversion of Jains and 18 Buddhists to Hinduism. He is a great advocate of image-worship.
19 He introduced love and faith as potent means of salvation.

20 Even in the Bhagavata, twenty-four Avatars are mentioned 21 corresponding to the twenty-four Tirthankaras of the Jains, the 22 name of Rishabhadeva being common to both.

23 The practice of Yoga gives the power of abstraction. The 24 superiority of a Siddha over others consists in his being able to 25 separate attributes from objects and think of them independently, 26 giving them objective reality.

27

28 The opposite extremes always meet and resemble each other.
29 The greatest self-forgotten devotee whose mind is absorbed in the 30 contemplation of the infinite Brahman and the most debased, 31 drunken maniac present the same externals. At times we are 32 surprised with the analogical transition from one to the other.

33 Extremely nervous men succeed as religious men. They 34 become fervent over whatever they take into their head.

35 "All are mad in this world; some are mad after gold, others 36 after women, and some are after God; if drowning is to be the fate
37 of man, it is better to be drowned in an ocean of milk than in a pool 38 of dung", a devotee replied who was charged with madness.

39 The God of Infinite Love and the object of Love sublime and 40 infinite are painted blue. Krishna is painted blue, so also Solomon's 41 God of Love. It is a natural law that anything sublime and infinite is 42 associated with blue colour. Take a handful of water, it is absolutely 43 colourless. But look at the deep wide ocean; it is as blue as 44 anything. Examine the space near you; it is colourless. But look at 45 the infinite expanse of the sky; it is blue.

46 That the Hindus, absorbed in the ideal, lacked in realistic 47 observation is evident from this. Take painting and sculpture. What

1 do you see in the Hindu paintings? All sorts of grotesque and 2 unnatural figures. What do you see in a Hindu temple? A 3 Chaturbhanga Narayana or some such thing. But take into 4 consideration any Italian picture or Grecian statue--what a study of 5 nature you find in them! A gentleman for twenty years sat burning a 6 candle in his hand, in order to paint a lady carrying a candle in her 7 hand.

8 The Hindus progressed in the subjective sciences.

9 There are as many different conducts taught in the Vedas as 10 there are differences in human nature. What is taught to an adult 11 cannot be taught to a child.

12 A Guru should be a doctor of men. He should understand the 13 nature of his disciple and teach him the method which suits him 14 best.

15 There are infinite ways of practicing Yoga. Certain methods 16 have produced successful result with certain men. But two are of 17 general importance with all: (1) Reaching the reality by negating 18 every known experience, (2) Thinking that you are everything, the 19 whole universe. The second method, though it leads to the goal 20 sooner than the first, is not the safest one. It is generally attended 21 with great dangers which may lead a man astray and deter him 22 from obtaining his aim.

23 There is this difference between the love taught by 24 Christianity and that taught by Hinduism: Christianity teaches us to 25 love our neighbours as we should wish them to love us; Hinduism 26 asks us to love them as ourselves, in fact to see ourselves in them.

27 A mongoose is generally kept in a glass-case with a long 28 chain attached to it, so that it may go about freely. When its scents 29 danger as it wanders about, with one jump it goes into the glass 30 case. So is a Yogi in this world.

31 The whole universe is one chain of existence, of which matter
32 forms one pole and God the other; the doctrine of Vishishtadvaitism 33 may be explained by some such ideas.

34 The Vedas are full of passages which prove the existence of a 35 Personal God. The Rishis, who through long devotion saw God, had 36 a peep into the unknown and threw their challenge to the world. It 37 is only presumptuous men, who have not walked in the path
38 described by the Rishis and who have not followed their teachings, 39 that criticise them and oppose them. No man has yet come forward 40 who would dare to say that he has properly followed their 41 directions and has not seen anything and that these men are liars.
42 There are men who have been under trial at various times and have 43 felt that they have not been forsaken by God. The world is such that 44 if faith in God does not offer us any consolation, it is better to 45 commit suicide.

46 A pious missionary went out on business. All of a sudden his 47 three sons died of cholera. His wife covered the three dead bodies 48 of her beloved children with a sheet and was awaiting her husband 49 at the gate. When he returned, she detained him at the gate and

1 put him the question, "My dear husband, some one entrusts 2 something to you and in your absence suddenly takes it back. Will 3 you feel sorry?" He replied, "Certainly I would not". Then she took 4 him in, removed the sheet and showed the three corpses. He bore 5 this calmly and buried the bodies. Such is the strength of mind of 6 those who hold firm faith in the existence of an all-merciful God 7 who disposes of everything in the universe.

8 The Absolute can never be thought of. We can have no idea of 9 a thing unless it is finite. God the infinite can only be conceived and 10 worshipped as the finite.

11 John the Baptist was an Essene--a sect of Buddhists. The 12 Christian cross is nothing but the Shivalinga converted into two 13 across. Remnants of Buddhist worship are still to be found among 14 the relics of ancient Rome.

15 In South India, some of the Ragas (tunes) are sung and 16 remembered as independent Ragas, whereas they are derivations 17 of the six primary ones. In their music, there is very little of 18 Murchhana, or oscillating touches of sound.

19 Even the use of the perfect instrument of music is rare. The 20 Vina of the South is not the real Vina. We have no martial music, no 21 martial poetry either. Bhavabhuti is a little martial.

22 Christ was a Sannyasin, and his religion is essentially fit for 23 Sannyasins only. His teachings may be summed up as: "Give up"; 24 nothing more--being fit for the favoured few.

25 "Turn the other cheek also!"--impossible, impracticable! The 26 Westerners know it. It is meant for those who hunger and thirst 27 after righteousness, who aim at perfection.

28 "Stand on your rights", is the rule for the ordinary men. One 29 set of moral rules cannot be preached to all--Sadhus and 30 householders.

31 All sectarian religions take for granted that all men are equal.
32 This is not warranted by science. There is more difference between 33 minds than between bodies. One fundamental doctrine of Hinduism
34 is that all men are different, there being unity in variety. Even for a 35 drunkard, there are some Mantras--even for a man going to a 36 prostitute!

37 Morality is a relative term. Is there anything like absolute 38 morality in this world? The idea is a superstition. We have no right 39 to judge every man in every age by the same standard.

40 Every man, in every age, in every country is under peculiar 41 circumstances. If the circumstances change, ideas also must 42 change. Beef-eating was once moral. The climate was cold, and the 43 cereals were not much known. Meat was the chief food available.
44 So in that age and clime, beef was in a manner indispensable. But 45 beef-eating is held to be immoral now.

46 The one thing unchangeable is God. Society is moving.

47 Jagat (world) means that which is moving. God is Achala 48 (immovable).

1 What I say is not, "Reform", but, "Move on". Nothing is too
2 bad to reform. Adaptability is the whole mystery of life--the 3 principle underneath which serves to unfold it. Adjustment or 4 adaptation is the outcome of the Self pitted against external forces 5 tending to suppress It. He who adjusts himself best lives the 6 longest. Even if I do not preach this, society is changing, it must 7 change. It is not Christianity nor science, it is necessity, that is 8 working underneath, the necessity that people must have to live or 9 starve.

10 The best scenery in the world can be seen on the sublime 11 heights of the Himalayas. If one lives there for a time, he is sure to 12 have mental calmness, however restless he might have been before.

13 God is the highest form of generalised law. When once this 14 law is known, all others can be explained as being subordinate to it.
15 God is to religion what Newton's law of gravity is to falling bodies.

16 Every worship consists of prayer in the highest form. For a 17 man who cannot make Dhyana or mental worship, Puja or 18 ceremonial worship is necessary. He must have the thing concrete.

19 The brave alone can afford to be sincere. Compare the lion 20 and the fox.

21 Loving only the good in God and nature--even a child does 22 that. You should love the terrible and the painful as well. A father 23 loves the child, even when he is giving him trouble.

24 Shri Krishna was God, incarnated to save mankind. Gopi-Lila
25 (his disport with cowherd maids) is the acme of the religion of love 26 in which individuality vanishes and there is communion. It is in this 27 Lila that Shri Krishna shows what he preaches in the Gita: "Give up 28 every other tie for me." Go and take shelter under Vrindavana-Lila 29 to understand Bhakti. On this subject a great number of books is 30 extant. It is the religion of India. The larger number of Hindus 31 follow Shri Krishna.

32 Shri Krishna is the God of the poor, the beggar, the sinner, the 33 son, the father, the wife, and of everyone. He enters intimately into 34 all our human relations and makes everything holy and in the end 35 brings us to salvation. He is the God who hides himself from the 36 philosopher and the learned and reveals himself to the ignorant and 37 the children. He is the God of faith and love and not of learning.
38 With the Gopis, love and God were the same thing--they knew Him 39 to be love incarnate.

40 In Dwaraka, Shri Krishna teaches duty; in Vrindavana, love.
41 He allowed his sons to kill each other, they being wicked.

42 God, according to the Jewish and Mohammedan idea, is a big 43 Session Judge. Our God is rigorous on the surface, but loving and 44 merciful at heart.

45 There are some who do not understand Advaitism and make a 46 travesty of its teachings. They say, "What is Shuddha and Ashuddha 47 (pure and impure)--what is the difference between virtue and vice?
48 It is all human superstition", and observe no moral restraint in their 49 actions. It is downright roguery; and any amount of harm is done by

1 the preaching of such things.

2 This body is made up of two sorts of Karma consisting of 3 virtue and vice--injurious vice and non-injurious virtue. A thorn is 4 pricking my body, and I take another thorn to take it out and then 5 throw both away. A man desiring to be perfect takes a thorn of 6 virtue and with it takes off the thorn of vice. He still lives, and 7 virtue alone being left, the momentum of action left to him must be 8 of virtue. A bit of holiness is left to the Jivanmukta, and he lives, but 9 everything he does must be holy.

10 Virtue is that which tends to our improvement, and vice to 11 our degeneration. Man is made up of three qualities--brutal, human, 12 and godly. That which tends to increase the divinity in you is virtue, 13 and that which tends to increase brutality in you is vice. You must 14 kill the brutal nature and become human, that is, loving and 15 charitable. You must transcend that too and become pure bliss, 16 Sachchidananda, fire without burning, wonderfully loving, but 17 without the weakness of human love, without the feeling of misery.

18 Bhakti is divided into Vaidhi and Raganuga Bhakti.

19 Vaidhi Bhakti is implicit belief in obedience to the teachings 20 of the Vedas.

21 Raganuga Bhakti is of five kinds:

22 (1) Shanta as illustrated by the religion of Christ;

23 (2) Dasya as illustrated by that of Hanuman to Rama;

24 (3) Sakhya as illustrated by that of Arjuna to Shri
25 Krishna;

26 (4) Vatsalya as illustrated by that of Vasudeva to Shri
27 Krishna;

28 (5) Madhura (that of the husband and wife) in the lives
29 of Shri Krishna and the Gopikas.

30 Keshab Chandra Sen compared society to an ellipse. God is 31 the central sun. Society is sometimes in the aphelion and 32 sometimes in the perihelion. An Avatar comes and takes it to the 33 perihelion. Then it goes back again. Why should it be so? I cannot 34 say. What necessity for an Avatara? What necessity was there to 35 create? Why did He not create us all perfect? It is Lila (sport), we 36 do not know.

37 Men can become Brahman but not God. If anybody becomes 38 God, show me his creation. Vishvamitra's creation is his own 39 imagination. It should have obeyed Vishvamitra's law. If anybody 40 becomes a Creator, there would be an end of the world, on account 41 of the conflict of laws. The balance is so nice that if you disturb the 42 equilibrium of one atom, the whole world will come to an end.

43 There were great men--so great that no number nor human 44 arithmetic could state the difference between them and us. But 45 compared with God, they were geometrical points. In comparison 46 with the Infinite, everything is nothing. Compared with God, what is 47 Vishvamitra but a human moth?

1 Patanjali is the father of the theory of evolution, spiritual and 2 physical.

3 Generally the organism is weaker than the environment. It is 4 struggling to adjust itself. Sometimes it over-adjusts itself. Then the 5 whole body changes into another species. Nandi was a man whose 6 holiness was so great that the human body could not contain it. So 7 those molecules changed into a god-body.

8 The tremendous engine of competition will destroy 9 everything. If you are to live at all, you must adjust yourself to the 10 times. If we are to live at all, we must be a scientific nation.
11 Intellectual power is the force. You must learn the power of 12 organisation of the Europeans. You must become educated and 13 must educate your women. You must abolish child marriage.

14 All these ideas are floating over society. You all know it, yet 15 dare not act. Who is to bell the cat? In the fullness of time a 16 wonderful man will come. Then all the rats will be made bold.

17 Whenever a great man comes, the circumstances are ready 18 under his feet. He is the last straw to break the camel's back. He is 19 the spark of the cannon. There is something in the talking--we are 20 preparing for him.

21 Was Krishna cunning? No, he was not cunning. He tried his 22 best to prevent war. It was Duryodhana who forced the war. But, 23 when once in the thing, you should not recede--that is the man of 24 duty. Do not run away, it is cowardice. When in the thing, you must 25 do it. You should not budge an inch--of course not for a wrong thing; 26 this was a righteous war.

27 The devil comes in many guises--anger in the form of justice-- 28 passion in the form of duty. When it first comes, the man knows and 29 then he forgets. Just as your pleaders' conscience; at first they 30 know it is all Badmashi (roguery), then it is duty to their clients; at 31 last they get hardened.

32 Yogis live on the banks of the Narmada--the best place for 33 them, because the climate is very even. Bhaktas live in Vrindavana.

34 Sipahis (sepoys) die soon--nature is full of defect--the athletes 35 die soon. The gentlemen class are the strongest, while the poor are 36 the hardest. Fruit diet may agree with a costive man. Civilised man 37 needs rest for intellectual work. For food he has to take spices and 38 condiments. The savage walks forty or fifty miles a day. He relishes 39 the blandest foods.

40 Our fruits are all artificial, and the natural mango is a poor 41 affair. Wheat also is artificial.

42 Save the spiritual store in your body by observing continence.

43 The rule for a householder about the expenditure of his 44 income is, one-fourth of the income for his family, one-fourth for 45 charity, one-fourth to be saved, one-fourth for self.

46 Unity in variety is the plan of creation, individuality in 47 universality.

48 Why deny the cause only? Deny the effect also. The cause

1 must contain everything that is in the effect.

2 Christ's public life extended only over eighteen months, and 3 for this he had silently been preparing himself for thirty-two years.
4 Mohammed was forty years old before he came out.

5 It is true that the caste system becomes essential in the 6 ordinary course of nature. Those that have aptitudes for a 7 particular work form a class. But who is to settle the class of a 8 particular individual? If a Brahmin thinks that he has a special 9 aptitude for spiritual culture, why should he be afraid to meet a 10 Shudra in an open field? Will a horse be afraid of running a race 11 with a jade?

12 Refer to the life of the author of Krishna-karnamrita, 13 Vilvamangala--a devotee who plucked his eyes out because he could 14 not see God. His life illustrates the principle that even misdirected 15 love leads in the end to love proper.

16 Too early religious advancement of the Hindus and that 17 superfineness in everything which made them cling to higher 18 alternatives, have reduced them to what they are. The Hindus have 19 to learn a little bit of materialism from the West and teach them a 20 little bit of spirituality.

21 Educate your women first and leave them to themselves; then 22 they will tell you what reforms are necessary for them. In matters 23 concerning them, who are you?

24 Who reduced the Bhangis and the Pariahs to their present
25 degraded condition? Heartlessness in our behavior and at the same 26 time preaching wonderful Advaitism--is it not adding insult to 27 injury?

28 Form and formless are intertwined in this world. The formless 29 can only be expressed in form and form can only be thought with 30 the formless. The world is a form of our thoughts. The idol is the 31 expression of religion.

32 In God all natures are possible. But we can see Him only 33 through human nature. We can love Him as we love a man--as 34 father, son. The strongest love in the world is that between man and 35 woman, and that also when it is clandestine. This is typified in the 36 love between Krishna and Radha.

37 Nowhere is it said in the Vedas that man is born a sinner. To 38 say so is a great libel on human nature.

39 It is not an easy task to reach the state of seeing the Reality
40 face to face. The other day one could not find the hidden cat in a 41 whole picture, though it occupied the major portion of the picture.

42 You cannot injure anybody and sit quietly. It is a wonderful 43 machinery--you cannot escape God's vengeance.

44 Kama (lust) is blind and leads to hell. Prema is love, it leads to 45 heaven.

46 There is no idea of lust or sympathy in the love of Krishna and 47 Radha. Radha says to Krishna, "If you place your feet on my heart, 48 all lust will vanish."

1 When abstraction is reached lust dies and there is only love.

2 A poet loved a washerwoman. Hot Dal fell upon the feet of 3 the woman and the feet of the poet were scalded.

4 Shiva is the sublime aspect of God, Krishna the beautiful 5 aspect of God. Love crystallises into blueness. Blue colour is 6 expressive of intense love. Solomon saw "Krishna". Here Krishna 7 came to be seen by all.

8 Even now, when you get love, you see Radha. Become Radha
9 and be saved. There is no other way, Christians do not understand 10 Solomon's song. They call it prophecy symbolising Christ's love for 11 the Church. They think it nonsense and father some story upon it.

12 Hindus believe Buddha to be an Avatara.

13 Hindus believe in God positively. Buddhism does not try to 14 know whether He is or not.

15 Buddha came to whip us into practice. Be good, destroy the 16 passions. Then you will know for yourself whether Dvaita or Advaita 17 philosophy is true--whether there is one or there are more than one.

18 Buddha was a reformer of Hinduism.

19 In the same man the mother sees a son, while the wife at the 20 same time sees differently with different results. The wicked see in 21 God wickedness. The virtuous see in Him virtue. He admits of all 22 forms. He can be moulded according to the imagination of each 23 person. Water assumes various shapes in various vessels. But water 24 is in all of them. Hence all religions are true.

25 God is cruel and not cruel. He is all being and not being at 26 the same time. Hence He is all contradictions. Nature also is 27 nothing but a mass of contradictions.

28

29 Freedom of the will--it is as you feel you are free to act. But 30 this freedom is a species of necessity. There is one infinite link 31 before, after, and between the thought and the action, but the latter 32 takes the name of freedom--like a bird flitting through a bright 33 room. We feel the freedom and feel it has no other cause. We 34 cannot go beyond consciousness, therefore we feel we are free. We 35 can trace it no further than consciousness. God alone feels the real 36 freedom. Mahapurushas (saints) feel themselves identified with 37 God; hence they also feel the real freedom.

1 You may stop the water flowing out of the fountain by closing 2 that part of the stream and gathering it all in the fountain; you have 3 no liberty beyond it. But the source remains unchanged. Everything 4 is predestination--and a part of that predestination is that you shall 5 have such feeling--the feeling of freedom. I am shaping my own
6 action. Responsibility is the feeling of reaction. There is no absolute 7 power. Power here is the conscious feeling of exercising any faculty 8 which is created by necessity. Man has the feeling "I act"; what he 9 means by power of freedom is the feeling. The power is attended 10 with responsibility. Whatever may be done through us by 11 predestination, we feel the reaction. A ball thrown by one, itself 12 feels the reaction.

13 But this innate necessity which comes to us as our freedom 14 does not affect also the conscious relations we form with our 15 surroundings. The relativity is not changed. Either everybody is free 16 or everybody is under necessity. That would not matter. The 17 relations would be the same. Vice and virtue would be the same. If 18 a thief pleads that he was under the necessity of stealing, the 19 magistrate would say that he was under the necessity to punish. We 20 are seated in a room, and the whole room is moving--the relation 21 between us is unchanged. To get out of this infinite chain of 22 causation is Mukti (freedom). Muktas (free souls) are not actuated 23 by necessity, they are like god. They begin the chain of cause and 24 effect. God is the only free being--the first source of their will--and 25 is always experienced by them as such.

26 The feeling of want is the real prayer, not the words. But you 27 must have patience to wait and see if your prayers are answered.

28 You should cultivate a noble nature by doing your duty. By 29 doing our duty we get rid of the idea of duty; and then and then 30 only we feel everything as done by God. We are but machines in His 31 hand. This body is opaque, God is the lamp. Whatever is going out 32 of the body is God's. You do not feel it. You feel "I". This is delusion.
33 You must learn calm submission to the will of God. Duty is the best 34 school for it. This duty is morality. Drill yourself to be thoroughly 35 submissive. Get rid of the "I". No humbuggism. Then you can get rid 36 of the idea of duty; for all is His. Then you go on naturally, forgiving, 37 forgetting, etc.

38 Our religion always presents different gradations of duty and 39 religion to different people.

40 Light is everywhere visible only in the men of holiness. A 41 Mahapurusha is like crystal glass--full rays of God passing and 42 repassing through. Why not worship a Jivanmukta?

43 Contact with holy men is good. If you go near holy men, you 44 will find holiness overflowing unconsciously in everything there.

45 Resist not evil done to yourself, but you may resist evil done 46 to others.

47 If you wish to become a saint, you should renounce all kinds 48 of pleasures. Ordinarily, you may enjoy all, but pray to God for 49 guidance, and He will lead you on.

1 The universe fills only a small portion of the heart which 2 craves for something beyond and above the world.

3 Selfishness is the devil incarnate in every man. Every bit of 4 self, bit by bit, is devil. Take off self by one side and God enters by 5 the other. When the self is got rid of, only God remains. Light and 6 darkness cannot remain together.

7 Forgetting the little "I" is a sign of healthy and pure mind. A 8 healthy child forgets its body.

9 Sita--to say that she was pure is a blasphemy. She was purity 10 itself embodied--the most beautiful character that ever lived on 11 earth.

12 A Bhakta should be like Sita before Rama. He might be 13 thrown into all kinds of difficulties. Sita did not mind her sufferings; 14 she centred herself in Rama.

15 Buddhism proves nothing about the Absolute Entity. In a 16 stream the water is changing; we have no right to call the stream 17 one. Buddhist deny the one, and say, it is many. We say it is one 18 and deny the many. What they call Karma is what we call the soul.
19 According to Buddhism, man is a series of waves. Every wave dies, 20 but somehow the first wave causes the second. That the second 21 wave is identical with the first is illusion. To get rid of illusion good 22 Karma is necessary. Buddhists do not postulate anything beyond the 23 world. We say, beyond the relative there is the Absolute. Buddhism 24 accepts that there is misery, and sufficient it is that we can get rid 25 of this Duhkha (misery); whether we get Sukha (happiness) or not, 26 we do not know. Buddha preached not the soul preached by others.
27 According to the Hindus, soul is an entity or substance, and God is 28 absolute. Both agree in this, that they destroy the relative. But 29 Buddhists do not give what is the effect of that destruction of the 30 relative.

31 Present-day Hinduism and Buddhism were growths from the 32 same branch. Buddhism degenerated, and Shankara lopped it off!

33 Buddha is said to have denied the Vedas because there is so 34 much Himsa (killing) and other things. Every page of Buddhism is a 35 fight with the Vedas (the ritualistic aspect). But he had no authority 36 to do so.

37 Buddha is expressly agnostic about God; but God is 38 everywhere preached in our religion. The Vedas teach God--both 39 personal and impersonal. God is everywhere preached in the Gita.
40 Hinduism is nothing without God. The Vedas are nothing without 41 Him. That is the only way to salvation. Sannyasins have to repeat 42 the following, several times: I, wishing for Mukti, take refuge in 43 God, who created the world, who breathed out the Vedas.

44 Buddha, we may say now, ought to have understood the 45 harmony of religions. He introduced sectarianism.

46 Modern Hinduism, modern Jainism, and Buddhism branched
47 off at the same time. For some period, each seemed to have wanted 48 to outdo the others in grotesqueness and humbuggism.

49 We cannot imagine anything which is not God. He is all that

1 we can imagine with our five senses, and more. He is like a 2 chameleon; each man, each nation, sees one face of Him and at 3 different times, in different forms. Let each man see and take of 4 God whatever is suitable to him. Compare each animal absorbing 5 from nature whatever food is suitable to it.

6 The fault with all religions like Christianity is that they have 7 one set of rules for all. But Hindu religion is suited to all grades of 8 religious aspiration and progress. It contains all the ideals in their 9 perfect form. For example, the ideal of Shanta or blessedness is to 10 be found in Vasishtha; that of love in Krishna; that of duty in Rama 11 and Sita; and that of intellect in Shukadeva. Study the characters of 12 these and of other ideal men. Adopt one which suits you best.

13 Follow truth wherever it may lead you; carry ideas to their 14 utmost logical conclusions. Do not be cowardly and hypocritical.
15 You must have a great devotion to your ideal, devotion not of the 16 moment, but calm, persevering, and steady devotion, like that of a 17 Chataka (a kind of bird) which looks into the sky in the midst of 18 thunder and lightening and would drink no water but from the 19 clouds. Perish in the struggle to be holy; a thousand times welcome 20 death. Be not disheartened. When good nectar is unattainable, it is 21 no reason why we should eat poison. There is no escape. This 22 world is as unknown as the other.

23 Charity never faileth; devotion to an ideal never fails in 24 sympathy, never becomes weary of sympathising with others. Love 25 to enemies is not possible for ordinary men: they drive out others in 26 order to live themselves. Only a very few men lived in the world 27 who practised both. King Janaka was one of them. Such a man is 28 superior even to Sannyasins. Shukadeva, who was purity and 29 renunciation embodied, made Janaka his Guru; and Janaka said to 30 him, "You are a born Siddha; whatever you know and your father 31 taught you, is true. I assure you of this."

32 Individuality in universality is the plan of creation. Each cell 33 has its part in bringing about consciousness. Man is individual and 34 at the same time universal. It is while realising our individual 35 nature that we realise even our national and universal nature. Each 36 is an infinite circle whose centre is everywhere and circumference 37 nowhere. By practice one can feel universal Selfhood which is the 38 essence of Hinduism. He who sees in every being his own Self is a 39 Pandita (sage).

40 Rishis are discoverers of spiritual laws.

41 In Advaitism, there is no Jivatma; it is only a delusion. In 42 Dvaitism, there is Jiva infinitely distinct from God. Both are true.
43 One went to the fountain, another to the tank. Apparently we are all 44 Dvaitists as far as our consciousness goes. But beyond? Beyond that 45 we are Advaitists. In reality, this is the only truth. According to 46 Advaitism, love every man as your own Self and not as your brother 47 as in Christianity. Brotherhood should be superseded by universal 48 Selfhood. Not universal brotherhood, but universal Selfhood is our 49 motto. Advaitism may include also the "greatest happiness" theory.

50 So'ham--I am He. Repeat the idea constantly, voluntarily at 1 first; then it becomes automatic in practice. It percolates to the 2 nerves. So this idea, by rote, by repetition, should be driven even 3 into the nerves.

4 Or, first begin with Dvaitism that is in your consciousness;
5 second stage, Vishishtadvaitism--"I in you, you in me, and all is 6 God." This is the teaching of Christ.

7 The highest Advaitism cannot be brought down to practical 8 life. Advaitism made practical works from the plane of 9 Vishishtadvaitism. Dvaitism--small circle different from the big 10 circle, only connected by Bhakti; Vishishtadvaitism--small circle
11 within big circle, motion regulated by the big circle; Advaitism-- 12 small circle expands and coincides with the big circle. In Advaitism 13 "I" loses itself in God. God is here, God is there, God is "I".

14 One way for attaining Bhakti is by repeating the name of God 15 a number of times. Mantras have effect--the mere repetition of 16 words. Jalagiman Chetti's powers are due to the repetition of the 17 Mantra--repetition of certain words with certain ceremonies. The 18 powers of the Astras or Banas (missiles, arrows, etc.) of ancient 19 war were due to Mantra. This is taken for granted throughout our 20 Shastras. That we should take all these Shastras to be imagination 21 is superstition.

22 To obtain Bhakti, seek the company of holy men who have 23 Bhakti, and read books like the Gita and the Imitation of Christ;
24 always think of the attributes of God.

25 The Vedas contain not only the means how to obtain Bhakti 26 but also the means for obtaining any earthly good or evil. Take 27 whatever you want.

28 Bengal is a land of Bhakti or Bhaktas. The stone on which 29 Chaitanya used to stand in the temple of Jagannatha to see the 30 image was worn by his tears of love and devotion. When he took 31 Sannyasa, he showed his fitness for it to his Guru by keeping sugar 32 on his tongue for some time without its being dissolved. He 33 discovered Vrindavana by the power of insight he had acquired 34 through devotion.

35 I will tell you something for your guidance in life. Everything 36 that comes from India take as true, until you find congruent reasons 37 for disbelieving it. Everything that comes from Europe take as false, 38 until you find congruent reasons for believing it. Do not be carried 39 away by European fooleries. Think for yourselves. Only one thing is 40 lacking: you are slaves; you follow whatever Europeans do. That is 41 simply an impotent state of mind. Society may take up materials 42 from any quarter but should grow in its own way.

43 To be shocked by a new custom is the father of all 44 superstition, the first road to hell. It leads to bigotry and fanaticism.
45 Truth is heaven. Bigotry is hell.

Concentration is the essence of all knowledge; nothing can be done without it. Ninety per cent of thought force is wasted by the ordinary human being, and therefore he is constantly committing blunders; the trained man or mind never makes a mistake. When the mind is concentrated and turned backward on itself, all within us will be our servants, not our masters. The Greeks applied their concentration to the external world, and the result was perfection in art, literature, etc. The Hindu concentrated on the internal world, upon the unseen realms in the Self, and developed the science of Yoga. Yoga is controlling the senses, will and mind. The benefit of its study is that we learn to control instead of being controlled. Mind seems to be layer on layer. Our real goal is to cross all these intervening strata of our being and find God. The end and aim of Yoga is to realise God. To do this we must go beyond relative knowledge, go beyond the sense-world. The world is awake to the senses, the children of the Lord are asleep on that plane. The world is asleep to the Eternal, the children of the Lord are awake in that realm. These are the sons of God. There is but one way to control the senses--to see Him who is the Reality in the universe. Then and only then can we really conquer our senses.

Concentration is restraining the mind into smaller and smaller limits. There are eight processes for thus restraining the mind. The first is Yama, controlling the mind by avoiding externals. All morality is included in this. Beget no evil. Injure no living creature. If you injure nothing for twelve years, then even lions and tigers will go down before you. Practise truthfulness. Twelve years of absolute truthfulness in thought, word, and deed gives a man what he wills. Be chaste in thought, word, and action. Chastity is the basis of all religions. Personal purity is imperative. Next in Niyama, not allowing the mind to wander in any direction. Then Asana, posture. There are eighty-four postures: but the best is that most natural to each one; that is, which can be kept longest with the greatest ease.

After this comes Pranayama, restraint of breath. Then Pratyahara, drawing in of the organs from their objects. Then Dharana, concentration. Then Dhyana, contemplation or meditation. (This is the kernel of the Yoga system.) And last, Samadhi, superconsciousness. The purer the body and mind, the quicker the desired result will be obtained. You must be perfectly pure. Do not think of evil things, such thoughts will surely drag you down. If you are perfectly pure and practise faithfully, your mind can finally be made a searchlight of infinite power. There is no limit to its scope. But there must be constant practice and non-attachment to the world. When a man reaches the superconscious state, all feeling of body melts away. Then alone does he become free and immortal. To all external appearances, unconsciousness and superconsciousness are the same; but they differ as a lump of clay from a lump of gold. The one whose whole soul is given up to God has reached the superconscious plane.

THE POWER OF THE MIND

The cause becomes the effect. The cause is not one thing and the effect something else that exists as a result. The effect is always the cause worked out. Always, the cause becomes the effect. The popular idea is that the effect is the result of the operation of a cause which is something independent and aloof from the effect. This is not so. The effect is always the cause worked out into another condition.

The universe is really homogeneous. Heterogeneity is only in appearance. There seem to be different substances, different powers, etc. throughout nature. But take two different substances, say a piece of glass and a piece of wood, grind them up together fine enough, reduce them till there is nothing more to reduce, and the substance remaining appears homogeneous. All substances in the last analysis are one. Homogeneity is the substance, the reality; heterogeneity is the appearance of many things as though they were many substances. The One is homogeneity; the appearance of the One as many is heterogeneity.

Hearing, seeing, or tasting, etc. is the mind in different states of action.

The atmosphere of a room may be hypnotised so that everybody who enters it will see all sorts of things--men and objects flying through the air.

Everybody is hypnotised already. The work of attaining freedom, of realising one's real nature, consists in de-hypnotisation.

One thing to be remembered is that we are not gaining powers at all. We have them already. The whole process of growth is de-hypnotisation.

The purer the mind, the easier it is to control. Purity of the mind must be insisted upon if you would control it. Do not think covetously about mere mental powers. Let them go. One who seeks the powers of the mind succumbs to them. Almost all who desire powers become ensnared by them.

Perfect morality is the all in all of complete control over mind. The man who is perfectly moral has nothing more to do; he is free. The man who is perfectly moral cannot possibly hurt anything or anybody. Non-injuring has to be attained by him who would be free. No one is more powerful than he who has attained perfect non-injuring. No one could fight, no one could quarrel, in his presence. Yes, his very presence, and nothing else, means peace, means love wherever he may be. Nobody could be angry or fight in his presence. Even the animals, ferocious animals, would be peaceful before him.

I once knew a Yogi, a very old man, who lived in a hole in the ground all by himself. All he had was a pan or two to cook his meals

1 in. He ate very little, and wore scarcely anything, and spent most of 2 his time meditating.

3 With him all people were alike. He had attained to non-4 injuring. What he saw in everything, in every person, in every 5 animal, was the Soul, the Lord of the Universe. With him, every 6 person and every animal was "my Lord". He never addressed any 7 person or animal in any other way. Well, one day a thief came his 8 way and stole one of his pans. He saw him and ran after him. The 9 chase was a long one. At last the thief from exhaustion had to stop, 10 and the Yogi, running up to him, fell on his knees before him and 11 said, "My Lord, you do me a great honour to come my way. Do me 12 the honour to accept the other pan. It is also yours." This old man is 13 dead now. He was full of love for everything in the world. He would 14 have died for an ant. Wild animals instinctively knew this old man to 15 be their friend. Snakes and ferocious animals would go into his hold 16 and sleep with him. They all loved him and never fought in his 17 presence.

18 Never talk about the faults of others, no matter how bad they 19 may be. Nothing is ever gained by that. You never help one by 20 talking about his fault; you do him an injury, and injure yourself as 21 well.

22 All regulations in eating, practising, etc., are all right so long 23 as they are complementary to a spiritual aspiration, but they are 24 not ends in themselves; they are only helps.

25 Never quarrel about religion. All quarrels and disputation 26 concerning religion simply show that spirituality is not present.
27 Religious quarrels are always over the husks. When purity, when 28 spirituality goes, leaving the soul dry, quarrels begin, and not 29 before.

32 LESSONS ON RAJA-YOGA

33 Prana

34
35 The theory of creation is that matter is subject to five 36 conditions: ether, luminous ether, gaseous, liquid, and solid. They 37 are all evoked out of one primal element, which is very finest ether.

38 The name of the energy in the universe is Prana, which is the 39 force residing in these elements. Mind is the great instrument for 40 using the Prana. Mind is material. Behind the mind is Atman which 41 takes hold of the Prana. Prana is the driving power of the world, 42 and can be seen in every manifestation of life. The body is mortal 43 and the mind is mortal; both, being compounds, must die. Behind 44 all is the Atman which never dies. The Atman is pure intelligence 45 controlling and directing Prana. But the intelligence we see around 46 us is always imperfect. When intelligence is perfect, we get the 47 Incarnation--the Christ. Intelligence is always trying to manifest 48 itself, and in order to do this it is creating minds and bodies of 1 different degrees of development. In reality, and at the back of all 2 things, every being is equal.

3 Mind is very fine matter; it is the instrument for manifesting
4 Prana. Force requires matter for manifestation.

5 The next point is how to use this Prana. We all use it, but how 6 sadly we waste it! The first doctrine in the preparatory stage is that 7 all knowledge is the outcome of experience. Whatever is beyond the 8 five senses must also be experienced in order to become true to us.

9 Our mind is acting on three planes: the subconscious, 10 conscious, and superconscious. Of men, the Yogi alone is 11 superconscious. The whole theory of Yoga is to go beyond the mind.
12 These three planes can be understood by considering the vibrations 13 of light or sound. There are certain vibrations of light too slow to 14 become visible; then as they get faster, we see them as light; and 15 then they get too fast for us to see them at all. The same with 16 sound.

17 How to transcend the senses without disturbing the health is 18 what we want to learn. The Western mind has stumbled into 19 acquiring some of the psychic gifts which in them are abnormal and 20 are frequently the sign of disease. The Hindu has studied and made 21 perfect this subject of science, which all may now study without 22 fear or danger.

23 Mental healing is a fine proof of the superconscious state; for 24 the thought which heals is a sort of vibration in the Prana, and it 25 does not go as a thought but as something higher for which we 26 have no name.

27 Each thought has three states. First, the rising or beginning, 28 of which we are unconscious; second, when the thought rises to the 29 surface; and third, when it goes from us. Thought is like a bubble 30 rising to the surface. When thought is joined to will, we call it 31 power. That which strikes the sick person whom you are trying to 32 help is not thought, but power. The self-man running through it all 33 is called in Sanskrit Sutratma, the "Thread-self".

34 The last and highest manifestation of Prana is love. The 35 moment you have succeeded in manufacturing love out of Prana, 36 you are free. It is the hardest and the greatest thing to gain. You 37 must not criticise others; you must criticise yourself. If you see a 38 drunkard, do not criticise him; remember he is you in another 39 shape. He who has not darkness sees no darkness in others. What 40 you have inside you is that you see in others. This is the surest way 41 of reform. If the would-be reformers who criticise and see evil 42 would themselves stop creating evil, the world would be better.
43 Beat this idea into yourself.

46 The Practice of Yoga

48 The body must be properly taken care of. The people who

1 torture their flesh are demoniacal. Always keep your mind joyful; if 2 melancholy thoughts come, kick them out. A Yogi must not eat too 3 much, but he also must not fast; he must not sleep too much, but he 4 must not go without any sleep. In all things only the man who holds 5 the golden mean can become a Yogi.

6 What is the best time for practice in Yoga? The junction time 7 of dawn and twilight, when all nature becomes calm. Take help of 8 nature. Take the easiest posture in sitting. Have the three parts 9 straight--the ribs, the shoulders, and the head--leaving the spine
10 free and straight, no leaning backwards or forwards. Then mentally 11 hold the body as perfect, part by part. Then send a current of love 12 to all the world; then pray for enlightenment. And lastly, join your 13 mind to your breath and gradually attain the power of 14 concentrating your attention on its movements. The reason for this 15 will be apparent by degrees.

16 17 The Ojas

18
19 The "Ojas" is that which makes the difference between man
20 and man. The man who has much Ojas is the leader of men. It gives 21 a tremendous power of attraction. Ojas is manufactured from the 22 nerve-currents. It has this peculiarity: it is most easily made from 23 that force which manifests itself in the sexual powers. If the powers 24 of the sexual centres are not frittered away and their energies 25 wasted (action is only thought in a grosser state), they can be 26 manufactured into Ojas. The two great nerve currents of the body 27 start from the brain, go down on each side of the spinal cord, but 28 they cross in the shape of the figure 8 at the back of the head. Thus 29 the left side of the body is governed by the right side of the head. At 30 the lowest point of the circuit is the sexual centre, the Sacral 31 Plexus. The energy conveyed by these two currents of nerves comes 32 down, and a large amount is continually being stored in the Sacral 33 Plexus. The last bone in the spine is over the Sacral Plexus and is 34 described in symbolic language as a triangle; and as the energy is 35 stored up beside it, this energy is symbolised by a serpent.
36 Consciousness and subconsciousness work through these two 37 nerve-currents. But superconsciousness takes off the nerve-current 38 when it reaches the lower end of the circuit, and instead of allowing 39 it to go up and complete the circuit, stops and forces it up the spinal 40 cord as Ojas from the Sacral Plexus. The spinal cord is naturally 41 closed, but it can be opened to form a passage for this Ojas. As the 42 current travels from one centre of the spinal cord to another, you 43 can travel from one plane of existence to another. This is why the 44 human being is greater than others, because all planes, all 45 experiences, are possible to the spirit in the human body. We do not 46 need another; for man can, if he likes, finish in his body his 47 probation and can after that become pure spirit. When the Ojas has 48 gone from centre to centre and reaches the Pineal Gland (a part of 49 the brain to which science can assign no function), man then 50 becomes neither mind nor body, he is free from all bondage.

51 The great danger of psychic powers is that man stumbles, as

1 it were, into them, and knows not how to use them rightly. He is 2 without training and without knowledge of what has happened to 3 him. The danger is that in using these psychic powers, the sexual 4 feelings are abnormally roused as these powers are in fact 5 manufactured out of the sexual centre. The best and safest way is 6 to avoid psychic manifestations, for they play the most horrible 7 pranks on their ignorant and untrained owners.

8 To go back to symbols. Because this movement of the Ojas up 9 the spinal cord feels like a spiral one, it is called the "snake". The 10 snake, therefore, or the serpent, rests on the bone or triangle.
11 When it is roused, it travels up the spinal cord; and as it goes from 12 centre to centre, a new natural world is opened inside us--the 13 Kundalini is roused.

14 15 PRANAYAMA

16
17 The practice of Pranayama is the training of the 18 superconscious mind. The physical practice is divided into three 19 parts and deals entirely with the breath. It consists of drawing in, 20 holding, and throwing out the breath. The breath must be drawn in 21 by one nostril whilst you count four, then held whilst you count 22 sixteen, and thrown away by the other nostril whilst you count
23 eight. Then reverse the process closing the other nostril while you 24 breathe in. You will have to begin by holding one nostril with your 25 thumb; but in time your breathing will obey your mind. Make four 26 of these Pranayamas morning and evening.

27 28 METAGNOSTICISM

30 "Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." The word 31 "repent" is in Greek "metanoete" ("meta" means behind, after, 32 beyond) and means literally "go beyond knowledge"--the knowledge 33 of the (five) senses--"and look within where you will find the 34 kingdom of heaven".

35 Sir William Hamilton says at the end of a philosophical work, 36 "Here philosophy ends, here religion begins". Religion is not, and 37 never can be, in the field of intellect. Intellectual reasoning is based 38 on facts evident to the senses. Now religion has nothing to do with 39 the senses. The agnostics say they cannot know God, and rightly, 40 for they have exhausted the limits of their senses and yet get no
41 further in knowledge of God. Therefore in order to prove religion-- 42 that is, the existence of God, immortality, etc.--we have to go 43 beyond the knowledge of the senses. All great prophets and seers 44 claim to have "seen God", that is to say, they have had direct 45 experience. There is no knowledge without experience, and man 46 has to see God in his own soul. When man has come face to face 47 with the one great fact in the universe, then alone will doubts
48 vanish and crooked things become straight. This is "seeing God".
49 Our business is to verify, not to swallow. Religion, like other

1 sciences, requires you to gather facts, to see for yourself, and this is 2 possible when you go beyond the knowledge which lies in the 3 region of the five senses. Religious truths need verification by 4 everyone. To see God is the one goal. Power is not the goal. Pure 5 Existence-Knowledge-and-Love is the goal; and Love is God.

6 7 8 THOUGHT, IMAGINATION, AND 9 MEDITATION

11 The same faculty that we employ in dreams and thoughts, 12 namely, imagination, will also be the means by which we arrive at 13 Truth. When the imagination is very powerful, the object becomes 14 visualised. Therefore by it we can bring our bodies to any state of 15 health or disease. When we see a thing, the particles of the brain 16 fall into a certain position like the mosaics of a kaleidoscope.
17 Memory consists in getting back this combination and the same 18 setting of the particles of the brain. The stronger the will, the 19 greater will be the success in resetting these particles of the brain.
20 There is only one power to cure the body, and that is in every man.
21 Medicine only rouses this power. Disease is only the manifest 22 struggle of that power to throw off the poison which has entered 23 the body. Although the power to overthrow poison may be roused by 24 medicine, it may be more permanently roused by the force of 25 thought. Imagination must hold to the thought of health and 26 strength in order that in case of illness the memory of the ideal of 27 health may be roused and the particles re-arranged in the position 28 into which they fell when healthy. The tendency of the body is then 29 to follow the brain.

30 The next step is when this process can be arrived at by 31 another's mind working on us. Instances of this may be seen every 32 day. Words are only a mode of mind acting on mind. Good and evil 33 thoughts are each a potent power, and they fill the universe. As 34 vibration continues, so thought remains in the form of thought until 35 translated into action. For example, force is latent in the man's arm 36 until he strikes a blow, when he translates it into activity. We are 37 the heirs of good and evil thought. If we make ourselves pure and 38 the instruments of good thoughts, these will enter us. The good soul 39 will not be receptive to evil thoughts. Evil thoughts find the best 40 field in evil people; they are like microbes which germinate and 41 increase only when they find a suitable soil. Mere thoughts are like 42 little wavelets; fresh impulses to vibration come to them 43 simultaneously, until at last one great wave seems to stand up and 44 swallow up the rest. These universal thoughtwaves seem to recur 45 every five hundred years, when invariably the great wave typifies 46 and swallows up the others. It is this which constitutes a prophet.
47 He focuses in his own mind the thought of the age in which he is 48 living and gives it back to mankind in concrete form. Krishna, 49 Buddha, Christ, Mohammed, and Luther may be instanced as the 50 great waves that stood up above their fellows (with a probable lapse of five hundred years between them). Always the wave that is backed by the greatest purity and the noblest character is what breaks upon the world as movement of social reform. Once again in our day there is a vibration of the waves of thought and the central idea is that of the Immanent God, and this is everywhere cropping up in every form and every sect. In these waves, construction alternates with destruction; yet the construction always makes an end of the work of destruction. Now, as a man dives deeper to reach his spiritual nature, he feels no longer bound by superstition. The majority of sects will be transient, and last only as bubbles because the leaders are not usually men of character. Perfect love, the heart never reacting, this is what builds character. There is no allegiance possible where there is no character in the leader, and perfect purity ensures the most lasting allegiance and confidence.

Take up an idea, devote yourself to it, struggle on in patience, and the sun will rise for you.

To return to imagination:

We have to visualise the Kundalini. The symbol is the serpent coiled on the triangular bone.

Then practice the breathing as described before, and, while holding the breath, imagine that breath like the current which flows down the figure 8; when it reaches the lowest point, imagine that it strikes the serpent on the triangle and causes the serpent to mount up the channel within the spinal cord. Direct the breath in thought to this triangle.

We have now finished the physical process and from this point it becomes mental.

The first exercise is called the "gathering-in". The mind has to be gathered up or withdrawn from wandering.

After the physical process, let the mind run on and do not restrain it; but keep watch on your mind as a witness watching its action. This mind is thus divided into two--the player and the witness. Now strengthen the witnessing part and do not waste time in restraining your wanderings. The mind must think; but slowly and gradually, as the witness does its part, the player will come more and more under control, until at last you cease to play or wander.

2nd Exercise: Meditation--which may be divided into two. We are concrete in constitution and the mind must think in forms. Religion admits this necessity and gives the help of outward forms and ceremonies. You cannot meditate on God without some form. One will come to you, for thought and symbol are inseparable. Try to fix your mind on that form.

3rd Exercise: This is attained by practicing meditation and is really "one-pointedness". The mind usually works in a circle; make it remain on one point.

The last is the result. When the mind has reached this, all is gained--healing, clairvoyance, and all psychic gifts. In a moment you can direct this current of thought to anyone, as Jesus did, with 1 instantaneous result.

2 People have stumbled upon these gifts without previous 3 training, but I advise you to wait and practise all these steps slowly;
4 then you will get everything under your control. You may practise 5 healing a little if love is the motive, for that cannot hurt. Man is 6 very short-sighted and impatient. All want power, but few will wait
7 to gain it for themselves. He distributes but will not store up. It 8 takes a long time to earn and but a short time to distribute.
9 Therefore store up your powers as you acquire them and do not 10 dissipate them.

11 Every wave of passion restrained is a balance in your favor. It 12 is therefore good policy not to return anger for anger, as with all 13 true morality. Christ said, "Resist not evil", and we do not 14 understand it until we discover that it is not only moral but actually 15 the best policy, for anger is loss of energy to the man who displays 16 it. You should not allow your minds to come into those brain-17 combinations of anger and hatred.

18 When the primal element is discovered in chemical science, 19 the work of the chemist will be finished. When unity is discovered, 20 perfection in the science of religion is reached, and this was 21 attained thousands of years ago. Perfect unity is reached when man 22 says, "I and my Father are one".

23 24 LESSONS ON BHAKTI-YOGA

25 The Yoga Through Devotion

26
27 We have been considering Raja-Yoga and the physical 28 exercises. Now we shall consider Yoga through devotion. But you 29 must remember that no one system is necessary (for all). I want to 30 set before you many systems, many ideals, in order that you may 31 find one that will suit you; if one does not, perhaps another may.

32 We want to become harmonious beings, with the psychical, 33 spiritual, intellectual, and working (active) sides of our nature
34 equally developed. Nations and individuals typify one of these sides 35 or types and cannot understand more than that one. They get so 36 built up into one ideal that they cannot see any other. The ideal is 37 really that we should become many-sided. Indeed the cause of the 38 misery of the world is that we are so one-sided that we cannot 39 sympathise with one another. Consider a man looking at the sun 40 from beneath the earth, up the shaft of a mine; he sees one aspect 41 of the sun. Then another man sees the sun from the earth's level, 42 another through mist and fog, another from the mountain top. To 43 each the sun has a different appearance. So there are many 44 appearances, but in reality there is only one sun. There is diversity 45 of vision, but one object; and that is the sun.

46 Each man, according to his nature, has a peculiar tendency 47 and takes to certain ideals and a certain path by which to reach 48 them. But the goal is always the same to all. The Roman Catholic is 1 deep and spiritual, but he has lost breadth. The Unitarian is wide, 2 but he has lost spirituality and considers religion as of divided 3 importance. What we want is the depth of the Roman Catholic and 4 the breadth of the Unitarian. We must be as broad as the skies, as 5 deep as the ocean; we must have the zeal of the fanatic, the depth 6 of the mystic, and the width of the agnostic. The word "toleration" 7 has acquired an unpleasant association with the conceited man 8 who, thinking himself in a high position, looks down on his fellow-9 creatures with pity. This is a horrible state of mind. We are all 10 travelling the same way, towards the same goal, but by different 11 paths made by the necessities of the case to suit diverse minds. We 12 must become many-sided, indeed we must become protean in 13 character, so as not only to tolerate, but to do what is much more 14 difficult, to sympathise, to enter into another's path, and feel with 15 him in his aspirations and seeking after God. There are two 16 elements in every religion--a positive and a negative. In 17 Christianity, for instance, when you speak of the Incarnation, of the 18 Trinity, of salvation through Jesus Christ, I am with you. I say, "Very 19 good, that I also hold true." But when you go on to say, "There is no 20 other true religion, there is no other revelation of God", then I say, 21 "Stop, I cannot go with you when you shut out, when you deny."

22 Every religion has a message to deliver, something to teach man; 23 but when it begins to protest, when it tries to disturb others, then it 24 takes up a negative and therefore a dangerous position, and does 25 not know where to begin or where to end.

26 Every force completes a circuit. The force we call man starts 27 from the Infinite God and must return to Him. This return to God 28 must be accomplished in one of two ways--either by slowly drifting 29 back, going with nature, or by our own inward power, which causes 30 us to stop on our course, which would, if left alone, carry us in a 31 circuit back to God, and violently turn round and find God, as it 32 were, by a short cut. This is what the Yogi does.

1 I have said that every man must choose his own ideal which is 2 in accord with his nature. This ideal is called a man's Ishta. You 3 must keep it sacred (and therefore secret) and when you worship 4 God, worship according to your Ishta. How are we to find out the 5 particular method? It is very difficult, but as you persevere in your 6 worship, it will come of itself. Three things are the special gifts of 7 God to man--the human body, the desire to be free, and the blessing
8 of help from one who is already free. Now, we cannot have devotion 9 without a Personal God. There must be the lover and the beloved.
10 God is an infinitised human being. It is bound to be so, for so long 11 as we are human, we must have a humanised God, we are forced to 12 see a Personal God and Him only. Consider how all that we see in 13 this world is not the object pure and simple, but the object plus our 14 own mind. The chair plus the chair's reaction on your mind is the 15 real chair. You must colour everything with your mind, and then 16 alone you can see it. (Example: The white, square, shiny, hard box, 17 seen by the man with three senses, then by the man with four 18 senses, then by him with five senses. The last alone sees it with all 19 the enumerated qualities, and each one before has seen an 20 additional one to the previous man. Now suppose a man with six 21 senses sees the same box, he would see still another quality added.)

22 Because I see love and knowledge, I know the universal cause
23 is manifesting that love and knowledge. How can that be loveless 24 which causes love in me? We cannot think of the universal cause 25 without human qualities. To see God as separate from ourselves in 26 the universe is necessary as a first step. There are three visions of 27 God: the lowest vision, when God seems to have a body like 28 ourselves (see Byzantine art); a higher vision when we invest God 29 with human qualities; and then on and on, till we come to the 30 highest vision, when we see God.

31 But remember that in all these steps we are seeing God and 32 God alone; there is no illusion in it, no mistake. Just as when we 33 saw the sun from different points, it was still the sun and not the 34 moon or anything else.

35 We cannot help seeing God as we are--infinitised, but still as 36 we are. Suppose we tried to conceive God as the Absolute, we 37 should have again to come back to the relative state in order to 38 enjoy and love.

39 The devotion to God as seen in every religion is divided into 40 two parts: the devotion which works through forms and ceremonies 41 and through words, and that which works through love. In this 42 world we are bound by laws, and we are always striving to break 43 through these laws, we are always trying to disobey, to trample on 44 nature. For instance, nature gives us no houses, we build them.
45 Nature made us naked, we clothe ourselves. Man's goal is to be 46 free, and just in so far as we are incompetent to break nature's laws 47 shall we suffer. We only obey nature's law in order to be outlawed-- 48 beyond law. The whole struggle of life is not to obey. (That is why I 49 sympathise with Christian Scientists, for they teach the liberty of 50 man and the divinity of soul.) The soul is superior to all 51 environment. "The universe is my father's kingdom; I am the heir-52 apparent"--that is the attitude for man to take. "My own soul can

1 subdue all."

2 We must work through law before we come to liberty.
3 External helps and methods, forms, ceremonies, creeds, doctrines, 4 all have their right place and are meant to support and strengthen 5 us until we become strong. Then they are no more necessary. They 6 are our nurses, and as such indispensable in youth. Even books are 7 nurses, medicines are nurses. But we must work to bring about the 8 time when man shall recognise his mastery over his own body.
9 Herbs and medicines have power over us as long as we allow them; 10 when we become strong, these external methods are no more
11 necessary.

12 13 14 Worships Through Words and Love

15
16 Body is only mind in a grosser form, mind being composed of 17 finer layers and the body being the denser layers; and when man 18 has perfect control over his mind, he will also have control over his 19 body. Just as each mind has its own peculiar body, so to each word 20 belongs a particular thought. We talk in double consonants when 21 we are angry--"stupid", "fool", "idiot", etc.; in soft vowels when we 22 are sad--"Ah me!" These are momentary feelings, of course; but 23 there are eternal feelings, such as love, peace, calmness, joy, 24 holiness; and these feelings have their word-expression in all 25 religions, the word being only the embodiment of these, man's 26 highest feelings. Now the thought has produced the word, and in 27 their turn these words may produce the thoughts or feelings. This is 28 where the help of words come in. Each of such words covers one 29 ideal. These sacred mysterious words we all recognise and know, 30 and yet if we merely read them in books, they have no effect on us.
31 To be effective, they must be charged with spirit, touched and used 32 by one who has himself been touched by the Spirit of God and who 33 now lives. It is only he who can set the current in motion. The 34 "laying on of hands" is the continuation of that current which was 35 set in motion by Christ. The one who has the power of transmitting 36 this current is called a Guru. With great teachers the use of words 37 is not necessary--as with Jesus. But the "small fry" transmit this 38 current through words.

39 Do not look on the faults of others. You cannot judge a man by 40 his faults. (Example: Suppose we were to judge of an apple tree by 41 the rotten, unripe, unformed apples we find on the ground. Even so 42 do the faults of a man not show what the man's character is.) 43 Remember, the wicked are always the same all over the world. The 44 thief and the murderer are the same in Asia and Europe and 45 America. They form a nation by themselves. It is only in the good 46 and the pure and the strong that you find variety. Do not recognise 47 wickedness in others. Wickedness is ignorance, weakness. What is 48 the good of telling people they are weak?

49 Criticism and destruction are of no avail. We must give them 50 something higher; tell them of their own glorious nature, their

1 birthright. Why do not more people come to God? The reason is that 2 so few people have any enjoyments outside their five senses. The 3 majority cannot see with their eyes nor hear with their ears in the 4 inner world.

5 We now come to Worship through Love.

6 It has been said, "It is good to be born in a church, but not to 7 die in it." The tree receives support and shelter from the hedge that 8 surrounds it when young; but unless the hedge is removed, the 9 growth and strength of that tree will be hindered. Formal worship, 10 as we have seen, is a necessary stage, but gradually by slow growth 11 we outgrow it and come to a higher platform. When love to God 12 becomes perfect, we think no more of the qualities of God--that He 13 is omnipotent, omnipresent, and all those big adjectives. We do not 14 want anything of God, so we do not care to notice these qualities.
15 Just all we want is love of God. But anthropomorphism still follows 16 us. We cannot get away from our humanity, we cannot jump out of 17 our bodies; so we must love God as we love one another.

18 There are five steps in human love.

19 1. The lowest, most commonplace, "peaceful" love, 20 when we look up to our Father for all we want--protection, food, etc.

21 2. The love which makes us want to serve. Man wants 22 to serve God as his master, the longing to serve dominating every 23 other feeling; and we are indifferent whether the master is good or 24 bad, kind or unkind.

25 3. The love of a friend, the love of equals--companions, 26 playmates. Man feels God to be his companion.

27 4. Motherly love. God is looked upon as a child. In India 28 this is considered a higher love than the foregoing, because it has 29 absolutely no element of fear.

30 5. The love of husband and wife; love for love's sake--
31 God the perfect, beloved one.

32 It has been beautifully expressed: "Four eyes meet, a change 33 begins to come into two souls; love comes in the middle between 34 these two souls and makes them one."

35 When a man has this last and most perfect form of love, then 36 all desires vanish, forms and doctrines and churches drop away, 37 even the desire for freedom (the end and aim of all religions is 38 freedom from birth and death and other things) is given up. The 39 highest love is the love that is sexless, for it is perfect unity that is 40 expressed in the highest love, and sex differentiates bodies. It is 41 therefore only in spirit that union is possible. The less we have of 42 the physical idea, the more perfect will be our love; at last all 43 physical thought will be forgotten, and the two souls will become 44 one. We love, love always. Love comes and penetrates through the 45 forms and sees beyond. It has been said, "The lover sees Helen's 46 beauty in an Ethiopian's brow." The Ethiopian is the suggestion and 47 upon that suggestion the man throws his love. As the oyster throws 48 over the irritants, it finds in its shell, the substance that turns the 49 irritants into beautiful pearls, so man throws out love, and it is

1 always man's highest ideal that he loves, and the highest ideal is 2 always selfless; so man loves love. God is love, and we love God--or 3 love love. We only see love, love cannot be expressed. "A dumb 4 man eating butter" cannot tell you what butter is like. Butter is 5 butter, and its qualities cannot be expressed to those who have not 6 tasted it. Love for love's sake cannot be expressed to those who 7 have not felt it.

8 Love may be symbolised by a triangle. The first angle is, love 9 never begs, never asks for anything; the second, love knows no 10 fear; the third and the apex, love for love's sake.

11 Through the power of love the senses become finer and 12 higher. The perfect love is very rare in human relation, for human 13 love is almost always interdependent and mutual. But God's love is 14 a constant stream, nothing can hurt or disturb it. When man loves 15 God as his highest ideal, as no beggar, wanting nothing, then is love 16 carried to the extreme of evolution, and it becomes a great power in 17 the universe. It takes a long time to get to these things, and we 18 have to begin by that which is nearest to our nature; some are born 19 to service, some to be mothers in love. Anyhow, the result is with 20 God. We must take advantage of nature.

21 22 On Doing Good to the World 23

24 We are asked: What good is your Religion to society? Society 25 is made a test of truth. Now this is very illogical. Society is only a 26 stage of growth through which we are passing. We might just as 27 well judge the good or utility of a scientific discovery by its use to 28 the baby. It is simply monstrous. If the social state were permanent, 29 it would be the same as if the baby remained a baby. There can be 30 no perfect man-baby; the words are a contradiction in terms, so 31 there can be no perfect society. Man must and will grow out of such 32 early stages. Society is good at a certain stage, but it cannot be our 33 ideal; it is a constant flux. The present mercantile civilisation must 34 die, with all its pretensions and humbug--all a kind of "Lord Mayor's 35 Show". What the world wants is thought-power through individuals.
36 My Master used to say, "Why don't you help your own lotus flower 37 to bloom? The bees will then come of themselves." The world needs 38 people who are mad with love of God. You must believe in yourself, 39 and then you will believe in God. The history of the world is that of 40 six men of faith, six men of deep pure character. We need to have 41 three things; the heart to feel, the brain to conceive, the hand to 42 work. First we must go out of the world and make ourselves fit 43 instruments. Make yourself a dynamo. Feel first for the world. At a 44 time when all men are ready to work, where is the man of feeling?
45 Where is the feeling that produced an Ignatius Loyola? Test your 46 love and humility. That man is not humble or loving who is jealous.
47 Jealousy is a terrible, horrible sin; it enters a man so mysteriously.
48 Ask yourself, does your mind react in hatred or jealousy? Good 49 works are continually being undone by the tons of hatred and anger 50 which are being poured out on the world. If you are pure, if you are 51 strong, you, one man, are equal to the whole world.

1 The brain to conceive the next condition of doing good works
2 is only a dry Sahara after all; it cannot do anything alone unless it 3 has the feeling behind it. Take love, which has never failed; and 4 then the brain will conceive, and the hand will work righteousness.
5 Sages have dreamed of and have seen the vision of God. "The pure 6 in heart shall see God." All the great ones claim to have seen God.
7 Thousands of years ago has the vision been seen, and the unity 8 which lies beyond has been recognised; and now the only thing we 9 can do is to fill in these glorious outlines.

MOTHER-WORSHIP

13 The two conjoint facts of perception we can never get rid of 14 are happiness and unhappiness--things which bring us pain also 15 bring pleasure. Our world is made up of these two. We cannot get 16 rid of them; with every pulsation of life they are present. The world 17 is busy trying to reconcile these opposites, sages trying to find 18 solution of this commingling of the opposites. The burning heat of 19 pain is intermitted by flashes of rest, the gleam of light breaking the 20 darkness in intermittent flashes only to make the gloom deeper.

21 Children are born optimists, but the rest of life is a 22 continuous disillusionment; not one ideal can be fully attained, not 23 one thirst can be quenched. So on they go trying to solve the riddle, 24 and religion has taken up the task.

25 In religions of dualism, among the Persians, there was a God 26 and a Satan. This through the Jews has gone all over Europe and 27 America. It was a working hypothesis thousands of years ago; but 28 now we know, that is not tenable. There is nothing absolutely good 29 or evil; it is good to one and evil to another, evil today, good 30 tomorrow, and vice versa. . . .

31 God was first of course a clan-god, then He became God of 32 gods. With ancient Egyptians and Babylonians, this idea (of a dual 33 God and Satan) was very practically carried out. Their Moloch 34 became God of gods and the captured gods were forced to do 35 homage in His temple.

36 Yet the riddle remains: Who presides over this Evil? Many are 37 hoping against hope that all is good and that we do not understand.
38 We are clutching at a straw, burying our heads in the sand. Yet we 39 all follow morality and the gist of morality is sacrifice--not I but 40 thou. Yet how it clashes with the great good God of the universe!
41 He is so selfish, the most vengeful person that we know, with 42 plagues, famines, war!

43 We all have to get experiences in this life. We may try to fly 44 bitter experiences, but sooner or later they catch us. And I pity the 45 man who does not face the whole.

46 Manu Deva of the Vedas, was transformed in Persia as 47 Ahriman. So the mythological explanation of the question was dead; 48 but the question remained, and there was no reply, no solution.

1 But there was the other idea in the old Vedic hymn to the 2 Goddess: "I am the light. I am the light of the sun and moon; I am 3 the air which animates all beings." This is the germ which 4 afterwards develops into Mother-worship. By Mother-worship is not 5 meant difference between father and mother. The first idea 6 connoted by it is that of energy--I am the power that is in all beings.

7 The baby is a man of nerves. He goes on and on till he is a
8 man of power. The idea of good and evil was not at first 9 differentiated and developed. An advancing consciousness showed 10 power as the primal idea. Resistance and struggle at every step is 11 the law. We are the resultant of the two--energy and resistance, 12 internal and external power. Every atom is working and resisting 13 every thought in the mind. Everything we see and know is but the 14 resultant of these two forces.

15 This idea of God is something new. In the Vedic hymns Varuna
16 and Indra shower the choicest gifts and blessings on devotees, a 17 very human idea, more human than man himself.

18 This is the new principle. There is one power behind all 19 phenomena. Power is power everywhere, whether in the form of 20 evil or as Saviour of the world. So this is the new idea; the old idea 21 was man-God. Here is the first opening out of the idea of one 22 universal power.

23 "I stretch the bows of Rudra when He desires to destroy evil" 24 (Rig-Veda, X.125, Devi-Sukta).

25 Very soon in the Gita (IX.19, also X.4-5) we find, "O Arjuna, I
26 am the Sat and I am the Asat, I am the good and I am the bad, I am 27 the power of saints, I am the power of the wicked." But soon the 28 speaker patches up truth, and the idea goes to sleep. I am power in 29 good so long as it is doing good works.

30 In the religion of Persia, there was the idea of Satan, but in 31 India, no conception of Satan. Later books began to realise this new 32 idea. Evil exists, and there is no shirking the fact. The universe is a 33 fact; and if a fact, it is a huge composition of good and evil.
34 Whoever rules must rule over good and evil. If that power makes us 35 live, the same makes us die. Laughter and tears are kin, and there 36 are more tears than laughter in this world. Who made flowers, who 37 made the Himalayas?--a very good God. Who made my sins and 38 weaknesses?--Karma, Satan, self. The result is a lame, one-legged 39 universe, and naturally the God of the universe, a one-legged God.

40 The view of the absolute separation of good and evil, two cut 41 and dried and separate existences, makes us brutes of 42 unsympathetic hearts. The good woman jumps aside from the 43 streetwalker. Why? She may be infinitely better than you in some 44 respects. This view brings eternal jealousy and hatred in the world, 45 eternal barrier between man and man, between the good man and 46 the comparatively less good or evil man. Such brutal view is pure 47 evil, more evil than evil itself. Good and evil are not separate 48 existences, but there is an evolution of good, and what is less good 49 we call evil.

50 Some are saints and some sinners. The sun shines on good

1 and evil alike. Does he make any distinction?

2 The old idea of the fatherhood of God is connected with the 3 sweet notion of God presiding over happiness. We want to deny
4 facts. Evil is non-existent, is zero. The "I" is evil. And the "I" exists 5 only too much. Am I zero? Every day I try to find myself so and fail.

6 All these ideas are attempts to fly evil. But we have to face it.
7 Face the whole! Am I under contract to anyone to offer partial love
8 to God only in happiness and good, not in misery and evil?

9 The lamp by the light of which one forges a name and another 10 writes a cheque for a thousand dollars for famine, shines on both, 11 knows no difference. Light knows no evil; you and I make it good or 12 evil.

13 This idea must have a new name. It is called Mother, because 14 in a literal sense it began long ago with a feminine writer elevated 15 to a goddess. Then came Samkhya, and with it all energy is female.
16 The magnet is still, the iron filings are active.

17 The highest of all feminine types in India is mother, higher
18 than wife. Wife and children may desert a man, but his mother 19 never. Mother is the same or loves her child perhaps a little more.
20 Mother represents colourless love that knows no barter, love that 21 never dies. Who can have such love?--only mother, not son, nor 22 daughter, nor wife.

23 "I am the Power that manifests everywhere", says the 24 Mother--She who is bringing out this universe, and She who is 25 bringing forth the following destruction. No need to say that 26 destruction is only the beginning of creation. The top of a hill is only 27 the beginning of a valley.

28 Be bold, face facts as facts. Do not be chased about the 29 universe by evil. Evils are evils. What of that?

30 After all, it is only Mother's play. Nothing serious after all.
31 What could move the Almighty? What made Mother create the 32 universe? She could have no goal. Why? Because the goal is 33 something that is not yet attained. What is this creation for? Just 34 fun. We forget this and begin to quarrel and endure misery. We are 35 the playmates of the Mother.

36 Look at the torture the mother bears in bringing up the baby.
37 Does she enjoy it? Surely. Fasting and praying and watching. She 38 loves it better than anything else. Why? Because there is no 39 selfishness.

40 Pleasure will come--good: who forbids? Pain will come:
41 welcome that too. A mosquito was sitting on a bull's horn; then his 42 conscience troubled him and he said, "Mr. Bull, I have been sitting 43 here a long time. Perhaps I annoy you. I am sorry, I will go away." 44 But the bull replied, "Oh, no, not at all! Bring your whole family and 45 live on my horn; what can you do to me?"

46 Why can we not say that to misery? To be brave is to have 47 faith in the Mother!

48 "I am Life, I am Death." She it is whose shadow is life and

1 death. She is the pleasure in all pleasure. She is the misery in all 2 misery. If life comes, it is the Mother; if death comes, it is the 3 Mother. If heaven comes, She is. If hell comes, there is the Mother; 4 plunge in. We have not faith, we have not patience to see this. We 5 trust the man in the street; but there is one being in the universe 6 we never trust and that is God. We trust Him when He works just 7 our way. But the time will come when, getting blow after blow, the 8 self-sufficient mind will die. In everything we do, the serpent ego is 9 rising up. We are glad that there are so many thorns on the path.
10 They strike the hood of the cobra.

11 Last of all will come self-surrender. Then we shall be able to 12 give ourselves up to the Mother. If misery comes, welcome; if 13 happiness comes, welcome. Then, when we come up to this love, all 14 crooked things shall be straight. There will be the same sight for 15 the Brahmin, the Pariah, and the dog. Until we love the universe 16 with samesightedness, with impartial, undying love, we are missing 17 again and again. But then all will have vanished, and we shall see in 18 all the same infinite eternal Mother.

20 NARADA-BHAKTI-SUTRAS

21 (A free translation dictated by Swamiji in America)

22 Chapter I

- 24 1. Bhakti is intense love for God.
- 25 2. It is the nectar of love;
- 26 3. Getting which man becomes perfect, immortal, and 27 satisfied for ever;
- 28 4. Getting which man desires no more, does not become 29 jealous of anything, does not take pleasure in vanities:
- 30 5. Knowing which man becomes filled with spirituality, 31 becomes calm, and finds pleasure only in God.
- 32 6. It cannot be used to fill any desire, itself being the check to 33 all desires.
- 34 7. Sannyasa is giving up both the popular and the scriptural 35 forms of worship.
- 36 8. The Bhakti-Sannyasin is the one whose whole soul goes 37 unto God, and whatever militates against love to God, he rejects.
- 38 9. Giving up all other refuge, he takes refuge in God.
- 39 10. Scriptures are to be followed as long as one's life has not 40 become firm;
- 41 11. Or else there is danger of doing evil in the name of liberty.
- 42 12. When love becomes established, even social forms are 43 given up, except those which are necessary for the preservation of 44 life.
- 45 13. There have been many definitions of love, but Narada

1 gives these as the signs of love: When all thoughts, all words, and 2 all deeds are given up unto the Lord, and the least forgetfulness of 3 God makes one intensely miserable, then love has begun.

4 14. As the Gopis had it--

5 15. Because, although worshipping God as their lover, they 6 never forgot his God-nature;

7 16. Otherwise they would have committed the sin of 8 unchastity.

9 17. This is the highest form of love, because there is no desire 10 of reciprocity, which desire is in all human love.

11 12 Chapter II

14 1. Bhakti is greater than Karma, greater than Jnana, greater 15 than Yoga (Raja-Yoga), because Bhakti itself is its result, because 16 Bhakti is both the means and the end (fruit).

17 2. As a man cannot satisfy his hunger by simple knowledge or 18 sight of food, so a man cannot be satisfied by the knowledge or 19 even the perception of God until love comes; therefore love is the 20 highest.

21 22 Chapter III

23
24 1. These, however, the Masters have said about Bhakti:

25 2. One who wants this Bhakti must give up sense-enjoyments 26 and even the company of people.

27 3. Day and night he must think about Bhakti and nothing else.

28 4. (He must) go where they sing or talk of God.

29 5. The principle cause of Bhakti is the mercy of a great (or 30 free) soul.

31 6. Meeting with a great soul is hard to obtain, and never fails 32 to save the soul.

33 7. Through the mercy of God we get such Gurus.

34 8. There is no difference between Him and His (own) ones.

35 9. Seek, therefore, for this.

36 10. Evil company is always to be shunned;

37 11. Because it leads to lust and anger, illusion, forgetfulness 38 of the goal, destruction of the will (lack of perseverance), and 39 destruction of everything.

40 12. These disturbances may at first be like ripples, but evil 41 company at last makes them like the sea.

42 13. He gets across Maya who gives up all attachment, serves 43 the great ones, lives alone, cuts the bondages of this world, goes beyond the qualities of nature, and depends upon the Lord for even his living.

14. He who gives up the fruits of work, he who gives up all work and the dualism of joy and misery, who gives up even the scriptures, gets that unbroken love for God;

15. He crosses this river and helps others to cross it.

Chapter IV

1. The nature of love is inexpressible.

2. As the dumb man cannot express what he tastes, but his actions betray his feelings, so man cannot express this love in words, but his actions betray it.

3. In some rare persons it is expressed.

4. Beyond all qualities, all desires, ever increasing, unbroken, the finest perception is love.

5. When a man gets this love, he sees love everywhere, he hears love everywhere, he talks love everywhere, he thinks love everywhere.

6. According to the qualities or conditions, this love manifests itself differently.

7. The qualities are: Tamas (dullness, heaviness), Rajas (restlessness, activity), Sattva (serenity, purity); and the conditions are: Arta (afflicted), Artharthi (wanting something), Jijnasu (searching truth), Jnani (knower).

8. Of these the latter are higher than the preceding ones.

9. Bhakti is the easiest way of worship.

10. It is its own proof and does not require any other.

11. Its nature is peace and perfect bliss.

12. Bhakti never seeks to injure anyone or anything, not even the popular modes of worship.

13. Conversation about lust, or doubt of God or about one's enemies must not be listened to.

14. Egotism, pride, etc. must be given up.

15. If those passions cannot be controlled, place them upon God, and place all your actions on Him.

16. Merging the trinity of Love, Lover, and Beloved, worship God as His eternal servant, His eternal bride--thus love is to be made unto God.

Chapter V

1. That love is highest which is concentrated upon God.

1 2. When such speak of God, their voices stick in their throats, 2 they cry and weep; and it is they who give holy places their 3 holiness; they make good works, good books better, because they 4 are permeated with God.

5 3. When a man loves God so much, his forefathers rejoice, the 6 gods dance, and the earth gets a Master!

7 4. To such lovers there is no difference of caste, sex, 8 knowledge, form, birth, or wealth;

9 5. Because they are all God's.

10 6. Arguments are to be avoided;

11 7. Because there is no end to them, and they lead to no
12 satisfactory result.

13 8. Read books treating of this love, and do deeds which 14 increase it.

15 9. Giving up all desires of pleasure and pain, gain and loss, 16 worship God day and night. Not a moment is to be spent in vain.

17 10. Ahimsa (non-killing), truthfulness, purity, mercy, and 18 godliness are always to be kept.

19 11. Giving up all other thoughts, the whole mind should day 20 and night worship God. Thus being worshipped day and night, He 21 reveals Himself and makes His worshippers feel Him.

22 12. In past, present, and future, Love is greatest !

23 Thus following the ancient sages, we have dared to preach
24 the doctrine of Love, without fearing the jeers of the world.

HISTORICAL EVOLUTION OF INDIA

Om Tat Sat

Om Namo Bhagavate Ramakrishnaya

{Sanskrit}--Existence cannot be produced by non-existence.

Non-existence can never be the cause of what exists. Something cannot come out of nothing. That the law of causation is omnipotent and knows no time or place when it did not exist is a doctrine as old as the Aryan race, sung by its ancient poet-seers, formulated by its philosophers, and made the corner-stone upon which the Hindu man even of today builds his whole scheme of life.

There was an inquisitiveness in the race to start with, which very soon developed into bold analysis, and though, in the first attempt, the work turned out might be like the attempts with shaky hands of the future master-sculptor, it very soon gave way to strict science, bold attempts, and startling results.

Its boldness made these men search every brick of their sacrificial altars; scan, cement, and pulverise every word of their scriptures; arrange, re-arrange, doubt, deny, or explain the ceremonies. It turned their gods inside out, and assigned only a secondary place to their omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent Creator of the universe, their ancestral Father-in-heaven; or threw Him altogether overboard as useless, and started a world-religion without Him with even now the largest following of any religion. It evolved the science of geometry from the arrangements of bricks to build various altars, and startled the world with astronomical knowledge that arose from the attempts accurately to time their worship and oblations. It made their contribution to the science of mathematics the largest of any race, ancient or modern, and to their knowledge of chemistry, of metallic compounds in medicine, their scale of musical notes, their invention of the bow-instruments--(all) of great service in the building of modern European civilisation. It led them to invent the science of building up the child-mind through shining fables, of which every child in every civilised country learns in a nursery or a school and carries an impress through life.

Behind and before this analytical keenness, covering it as in a velvet sheath, was the other great mental peculiarity of the race--poetic insight. Its religion, its philosophy, its history, its ethics, its politics were all inlaid in a flower-bed of poetic imagery--the miracle of language which was called Sanskrit or "perfected", lending itself to expressing and manipulating them better than any other tongue. The aid of melodious numbers was invoked even to express the hard facts of mathematics.

This analytical power and the boldness of poetical visions which urged it onward are the two great internal causes in the make-up of the Hindu race. They together formed, as it were, the keynote to the national character. This combination is what is always making the race press onwards beyond the senses--the

1 secret of those speculations which are like the steel blades the 2 artisans used to manufacture--cutting through bars of iron, yet 3 pliable enough to be easily bent into a circle.

4 They wrought poetry in silver and gold; the symphony of 5 jewels, the maze of marble wonders, the music of colours, the fine 6 fabrics which belong more to the fairyland of dreams than to the 7 real--have back of them thousands of years of working of this 8 national trait.

9 Arts and sciences, even the realities of domestic life, are 10 covered with a mass of poetical conceptions, which are pressed 11 forward till the sensuous touches the supersensuous, and the real 12 gets the rose-hue of the unreal.

13 The earliest glimpses we have of this race show it already in 14 the possession of this characteristic, as an instrument of some use 15 in its hands. Many forms of religion and society must have been left 16 behind in the onward march, before we find the race as depicted in 17 the scriptures, the Vedas.

18 An organised pantheon, elaborate ceremonials, divisions of 19 society into hereditary classes necessitated by a variety of 20 occupations, a great many necessities and a good many luxuries of 21 life are already there.

22 Most modern scholars are agreed that surroundings as to 23 climate and conditions, purely Indian, were not yet working on the 24 race.

25 Onwards through several centuries, we come to a multitude 26 surrounded by the snows of Himalayas on the north and the heat of 27 the south--vast plains, interminable forests, through which mighty 28 rivers roll their tides. We catch a glimpse of different races-- 29 Dravidians, Tartars, and Aborigines pouring in their quota of blood, 30 of speech, of manners and religions. And at last a great nation
31 emerges to our view--still keeping the type of the Aryan--stronger, 32 broader, and more organised by the assimilation. We find the 33 central assimilative core giving its type and character to the whole 34 mass, clinging on with great pride to its name of "Aryan", and, 35 though willing to give other races the benefits of its civilisation, it 36 was by no means willing to admit them within the "Aryan" pale.

37 The Indian climate again gave a higher direction to the genius
38 of the race. In a land where nature was propitious and yielded easy 39 victories, the national mind started to grapple with and conquer the 40 higher problems of life in the field of thought. Naturally the thinker, 41 the priest, became the highest class in the Indian society, and not 42 the man of the sword. The priests again, even at that dawn of 43 history, put most of their energy in elaborating rituals; and when 44 the nation began to find the load of ceremonies and lifeless rituals 45 too heavy--came the first philosophical speculations, and the royal 46 race was the first to break through the maze of killing rituals.

47 On the one hand, the majority of the priests impelled by 48 economical considerations were bound to defend that form of 49 religion which made their existence a necessity of society and 50 assigned them the highest place in the scale of caste; on the other

1 hand, the king-caste, whose strong right hand guarded and guided 2 the nation and who now found itself as leading in the higher 3 thoughts also, were loath to give up the first place to men who only 4 knew how to conduct a ceremonial. There were then others, 5 recruited from both the priests and king-castes, who ridiculed 6 equally the ritualists and philosophers, declared spiritualism as 7 fraud and priestcraft, and upheld the attainment of material
8 comforts as the highest goal of life. The people, tired of ceremonials 9 and wondering at the philosophers, joined in masses the 10 materialists. This was the beginning of that caste question and that 11 triangular fight in India between ceremonials, philosophy, and 12 materialism which has come down unsolved to our own days.

13 The first solution of the difficulty attempted was by applying 14 the eclecticism which from the earliest days had taught the people 15 to see in differences the same truth in various garbs. The great 16 leader of this school, Krishna--himself of royal race--and his sermon, 17 the Gita, have after various vicissitudes, brought about by the 18 upheavals of the Jains, the Buddhists, and other sects, fairly 19 established themselves as the "Prophet" of India and the truest 20 philosophy of life. Though the tension was toned down for the time, 21 it did not satisfy the social wants which were among the causes--the 22 claim of the king-race to stand first in the scale of caste and the 23 popular intolerance of priestly privilege. Krishna had opened the 24 gates of spiritual knowledge and attainment to all irrespective of 25 sex or caste, but he left undisturbed the same problem on the social 26 side. This again has come down to our own days, in spite of the 27 gigantic struggle of the Buddhists, Vaishnavas, etc. to attain social 28 equality for all.

29 Modern India admits spiritual equality of all souls--but strictly 30 keeps the social difference.

31 Thus we find the struggle renewed all along the line in the 32 seventh century before the Christian era and finally in the sixth, 33 overwhelming the ancient order of things under Shakya Muni, the 34 Buddha. In their reaction against the privileged priesthood, 35 Buddhists swept off almost every bit of the old ritual of the Vedas, 36 subordinated the gods of the Vedas to the position of servants to 37 their own human saints, and declared the "Creator and Supreme 38 Ruler" as an invention of priestcraft and superstition.

39 But the aim of Buddhism was reform of the Vedic religion by 40 standing against ceremonials requiring offerings of animals, against 41 hereditary caste and exclusive priesthood, and against belief in 42 permanent souls. It never attempted to destroy that religion, or 43 overturn the social order. It introduced a vigorous method by 44 organising a class of Sannyasins into a strong monastic 45 brotherhood, and the Brahnavadinis into a body of nuns--by 46 introducing images of saints in the place of altar-fires.

47 It is probable that the reformers had for centuries the 48 majority of the Indian people with them. The older forces were 49 never entirely pacified, but they underwent a good deal of 50 modification during the centuries of Buddhistic supremacy.

51 In ancient India the centres of national life were always the

1 intellectual and spiritual and not political. Of old, as now, political 2 and social power has been always subordinated to spiritual and 3 intellectual. The outburst of national life was round colleges of 4 sages and spiritual teachers. We thus find the Samitis of the 5 Panchalas, of the Kashyas (of Varanasi), the Maithilas standing out 6 as great centres of spiritual culture and philosophy, even in the 7 Upanisads. Again these centres in turn became the focus of political 8 ambition of the various divisions of the Aryans.

9 The great epic Mahabharata tells us of the war of the Kurus 10 and Panchalas for supremacy over the nation, in which they 11 destroyed each other. The spiritual supremacy veered round and 12 centred in the East among the Magadhas and Maithilas, and after 13 the Kuru-Panchala war a sort of supremacy was obtained by the 14 kings of Magadha.

15 The Buddhist reformation and its chief field of activity were 16 also in the same eastern region; and when the Maurya kings, forced 17 possibly by the bar sinister on their escutcheon, patronised and led 18 the new movement, the new priest power joined hands with the 19 political power of the empire of Pataliputra. The popularity of 20 Buddhism and its fresh vigour made the Maurya kings the greatest 21 emperors that India ever had. The power of the Maurya sovereigns 22 made Buddhism that world-wide religion that we see even today.

23 The exclusiveness of the old form of Vedic religions debarred
24 it from taking ready help from outside. At the same time it kept it 25 pure and free from many debasing elements which Buddhism in its 26 propagandist zeal was forced to assimilate.

27 This extreme adaptability in the long run made Indian 28 Buddhism lose almost all its individuality, and extreme desire to be 29 of the people made it unfit to cope with the intellectual forces of the 30 mother religion in a few centuries. The Vedic party in the 31 meanwhile got rid of a good deal of its most objectionable features, 32 as animal sacrifice, and took lessons from the rival daughter in the 33 judicious use of images, temple processions, and other impressive 34 performances, and stood ready to take within her fold the whole 35 empire of Indian Buddhism, already tottering to its fall.

36 And the crash came with the Scythian invasions and the total 37 destruction of the empire of Pataliputra.

38 The invaders, already incensed at the invasion of their central 39 Asiatic home by the preachers of Buddhism, found in the sun-40 worship of the Brahmins a great sympathy with their own solar 41 religion--and when the Brahminist party were ready to adapt and 42 spiritualise many of the customs of the new-comers, the invaders
43 threw themselves heart and soul into the Brahminic cause.

44 Then there is a veil of darkness and shifting shadows; there 45 are tumults of war, rumors of massacres; and the next scene rises 46 upon a new phase of things.

47 The empire of Magadha was gone. Most of northern India
48 was under the rule of petty chiefs always at war with one another.
49 Buddhism was almost extinct except in some eastern and 50 Himalayan provinces and in the extreme south; and the nation after

1 centuries of struggle against the power of hereditary priesthood 2 awoke to find itself in the clutches of a double priesthood of 3 hereditary Brahmins and exclusive monks of the new regime, with 4 all the powers of the Buddhistic organisation and without their 5 sympathy for the people.

6 A renascent India, bought by the valour and blood of the 7 heroic Rajputs, defined by the merciless intellect of a Brahmin from 8 the same historical thought-centre of Mithila, led by a new 9 philosophical impulse organised by Shankara and his bands of 10 Sannyasins, and beautified by the arts and literature of the courts
11 of Malava--arose on the ruins of the old.

12 The task before it was profound, problems vaster than any 13 their ancestors had ever faced. A comparatively small and compact 14 race of the same blood and speech and the same social and 15 religious aspiration, trying to save its unity by unscalable walls 16 around itself, grew huge by multiplication and addition during the 17 Buddhistic supremacy; and (it) was divided by race, colour, speech, 18 spiritual instinct, and social ambitions into hopelessly jarring
19 factions. And this had to be unified and welded into one gigantic 20 nation. This task Buddhism had also come to solve, and had taken it 21 up when the proportions were not so vast.

22 So long it was a question of Aryanising the other types that 23 were pressing for admission and thus, out of different elements, 24 making a huge Aryan body. In spite of concessions and 25 compromises, Buddhism was eminently successful and remained 26 the national religion of India. But the time came when the 27 allurements of sensual forms of worship, indiscriminately taken in 28 along with various low races, were too dangerous for the central 29 Aryan core, and a longer contact would certainly have destroyed 30 the civilisation of the Aryans. Then came a natural reaction for self-31 preservation, and Buddhism as a separate sect ceased to live in 32 most parts of its land of birth.

33 The reaction-movement, led in close succession by Kumarila 34 in the north, and Shankara and Ramanuja in the south, has become 35 the last embodiment of that vast accumulation of sects and 36 doctrines and rituals called Hinduism. For the last thousand years 37 or more, its great task has been assimilation, with now and then an 38 outburst of reformation. This reaction first wanted to revive the 39 rituals of the Vedas--failing which, it made the Upanishads or the 40 philosophic portions of the Vedas its basis. It brought Vyasa's 41 system of Mimamsa philosophy and Krishna's sermon, the Gita, to 42 the forefront; and all succeeding movements have followed the 43 same. The movement of Shankara forced its way through its high 44 intellectuality; but it could be of little service to the masses, 45 because of its adherence to strict caste-laws, very small scope for 46 ordinary emotion, and making Sanskrit the only vehicle of 47 communication. Ramanuja on the other hand, with a most practical 48 philosophy, a great appeal to the emotions, an entire denial of 49 birthrights before spiritual attainments, and appeals through the 50 popular tongue completely succeeded in bringing the masses back 51 to the Vedic religion.

1 The northern reaction of ritualism was followed by the fitful
2 glory of the Malava empire. With the destruction of that in a short 3 time, northern India went to sleep as it were, for a long period, to 4 be rudely awakened by the thundering onrush of Mohammedan 5 cavalry across the passes of Afghanistan. In the south, however, the 6 spiritual upheaval of Shankara and Ramanuja was followed by the 7 usual Indian sequence of united races and powerful empires. It was 8 the home of refuge of Indian religion and civilisation, when 9 northern India from sea to sea lay bound at the feet of Central 10 Asiatic conquerors. The Mohammedan tried for centuries to 11 subjugate the south, but can scarcely be said to have got even a 12 strong foothold; and when the strong and united empire of the 13 Moguls was very near completing its conquest, the hills and 14 plateaus of the south poured in their bands of fighting peasant
15 horsemen, determined to die for the religion which Ramdas 16 preached and Tuka sang; and in a short time the gigantic empire of 17 the Moguls was only a name.

18 The movements in northern India during the Mohammedan 19 period are characterised by their uniform attempt to hold the 20 masses back from joining the religion of the conquerors--which 21 brought in its train social and spiritual equality for all.

22 The friars of the orders founded by Ramananda, Kabir, Dadu, 23 Chaitanya, or Nanak were all agreed in preaching the equality of 24 man, however differing from each other in philosophy. Their energy 25 was for the most part spent in checking the rapid conquest of Islam 26 among the masses, and they had very little left to give birth to new 27 thoughts and aspirations. Though evidently successful in their 28 purpose of keeping the masses within the fold of the old religion, 29 and tempering the fanaticism of the Mohammedans, they were 30 mere apologists, struggling to obtain permission to live.

31 One great prophet, however, arose in the north, Govind 32 Singh, the last Guru of the Sikhs, with creative genius; and the 33 result of his spiritual work was followed by the well-known political 34 organisation of the Sikhs. We have seen throughout the history of 35 India, a spiritual upheaval is almost always succeeded by a political 36 unity extending over more or less area of the continent, which in its 37 turn helps to strengthen the spiritual aspiration that brings it to 38 being. But the spiritual aspiration that preceded the rise of the 39 Mahratta or the Sikh empire was entirely reactionary. We seek in 40 vain to find in the court of Poona or Lahore even a ray of reflection 41 of that intellectual glory which surrounded the courts of the 42 Moguls, much less the brilliance of Malava or Vidyanagara. It was 43 intellectually the darkest period of Indian history; and both these 44 meteoric empires, representing the upheaval of mass-fanaticism 45 and hating culture with all their hearts, lost all their motive power 46 as soon as they had succeeded in destroying the rule of the hated 47 Mohammedans.

48 Then there came again a period of confusion. Friends and 49 foes, the Mogul empire and its destroyers, and the till then peaceful 50 foreign traders, French and English, all joined in a melee of fight.
51 For more than half a century there was nothing but war and pillage
52 and destruction. And when the smoke and dust cleared, England

1 was stalking victorious over the rest. There has been half a century
2 of peace and law and order under the sway of Britain. Time alone 3 will prove if it is the order of progress or not.

4 There have been a few religious movements amongst the 5 Indian people during the British rule, following the same line that 6 was taken up by northern Indian sects during the sway of the 7 empire of Delhi. They are the voices of the dead or the dying--the 8 feeble tones of a terrorised people, pleading for permission to live.
9 They are ever eager to adjust their spiritual or social surroundings 10 according to the tastes of the conquerors--if they are only left the 11 right to live, especially the sects under the English domination, in 12 which social differences with the conquering race are more glaring 13 than the spiritual. The Hindu sects of the century seem to have set 14 one ideal of truth before them--the approval of their English 15 masters. No wonder that these sects have mushroom lives to live.
16 The vast body of the Indian people religiously hold aloof from them, 17 and the only popular recognition they get is the jubilation of the 18 people when they die.

19 But possibly, for some time yet, it cannot be otherwise.

22 THE STORY OF THE BOY GOPALA

24 "O mother! I am so afraid to go to school through the woods 25 alone; other boys have servants or somebody to bring them to 26 school or take them home--why cannot I have someone to bring me 27 home?"--thus said Gopala, a little Brahmin boy, to his mother one 28 winter afternoon when he was getting ready for school. The school 29 hours were in the morning and afternoon. It was dark when the 30 school closed in the afternoon, and the path lay through the woods.

31 Gopala's mother was a widow. His father who had lived as a 32 Brahmin should--never caring for the goods of the world, studying 33 and teaching, worshipping and helping others to worship--died 34 when Gopala was a baby. And the poor widow retired entirely from 35 the concerns of the world--even from that little she ever had--her 36 soul given entirely to God, and waiting patiently with prayers, 37 fasting, and discipline, for the great deliverer death, to meet in 38 another life, him who was the eternal companion of her joys and 39 sorrows, her partner in the good and evil of the beginningless chain 40 of lives. She lived in her little cottage. A small rice-field her 41 husband received as sacred gift to learning brought her sufficient 42 rice; and the piece of land that surrounded her cottage, with its 43 clumps of bamboos, a few cocoanut palms, a few mangoes and 44 lichis, with the help of the kindly village folk, brought forth 45 sufficient vegetables all the year round. For the rest, she worked 46 hard every day for hours at the spinning-wheel.

47 She was up long before the rosy dawn touched the tufted 48 heads of the palms, long before the birds had begun to warble in 49 their nests, and sitting on her bed--a mat on the ground covered

1 with a blanket--repeated the sacred names of the holy women of the 2 past, saluted the ancient sages, recited the sacred names of 3 Narayana the Refuge of mankind, of Shiva the merciful, of Tara the 4 Saviour Mother; and above all, (she) prayed to Him whom her heart
5 most loved, Krishna, who had taken the form of Gopala, a cowherd, 6 to teach and save mankind, and rejoiced that by one day she was 7 nearer to him who had gone ahead, and with him nearer by day to 8 Him, the Cowherd.

9 Before the light of the day, she had her bath in the 10 neighbouring stream, praying that her mind might be made as 11 clean by the mercy of Krishna, as her body by the water. Then she 12 put on her fresh-washed white cotton garment, collected some 13 flowers, rubbed a piece of sandalwood on a circular stone with a 14 little water to make a fragrant paste, gathered a few sweet-scented 15 Tulasi leaves, and retired into a little room in the cottage, kept 16 apart for worship. In this room she kept her Baby Cowherd; on a 17 small wooden throne under a small silk canopy, on a small velvet 18 cushion, almost covered with flowers, was placed a bronze image of 19 Krishna as a baby. Her mother's heart could only be satisfied by 20 conceiving God as her baby. Many and many a time her learned 21 husband had talked to her of Him who is preached in the Vedas, the 22 formless, the infinite, the impersonal. She listened with all 23 attention, and the conclusion was always the same--what is written 24 in the Vedas must be true; but, oh! it was so immense, so far off, 25 and she, only a weak, ignorant woman; and then, it was also 26 written: "In whatsoever form one seeks Me, I reach him in that 27 form, for all mankind are but following the paths I laid down for 28 them"--and that was enough. She wanted to know no more. And 29 there she was--all of the devotion, of faith, of love her heart was 30 capable of, was there in Krishna, the Baby Cowherd, and all that 31 heart entwined round the visible Cowherd, this little bronze image.

32 Then again she had heard: "Serve Me as you would a being of 33 flesh and blood, with love and purity, and I accept that all." So she 34 served as she would a master, a beloved teacher, above all, as she 35 would serve the apple of her eye, her only child, her son.

36 So she bathed and dressed the image, burned incense before 37 it, and for offering?--oh, she was so poor!--but with tears in her eyes 38 she remembered her husband reading from the books: "I accept 39 with gladness even leaves and flowers, fruits and water, whatever is 40 offered with love", and she offered: "Thou for whom the world of 41 flowers bloom, accept my few common flowers. Thou who feedest 42 the universe, accept my poor offerings of fruits. I am weak, I am 43 ignorant. I do not know how to approach Thee, how to worship 44 Thee, my God, my Cowherd, my child; let my worship be pure, my 45 love for Thee selfless; and if there is any virtue in worship, let it be 46 Thine, grant me only love, love that never asks for anything--'never 47 seeks for anything but love'." Perchance the mendicant in his 48 morning call was singing in the little yard:

49 Thy knowledge, man! I value not,

50 It is thy love I fear;

51 It is thy love that shakes My throne,

1 Brings God to human tear.
2 For love behold the Lord of all,
3 The formless, ever free,
4 Is made to take the human form
5 To play and live with thee.
6 What learning, they of Vrinda's groves,
7 The herdsmen, ever got?
8 What science, girls that milked the kine?
9 They loved, and Me they bought.

10 Then, in the Divine, the mother-heart found her earthly son 11 Gopala (lit. cowherd), named after the Divine Cowherd. And the 12 soul which would almost mechanically move among its earthly 13 surroundings--which, as it were, was constantly floating in a 14 heavenly ether ready to drift away from contact of things material 15 found its earthly moorings in her child. It was the only thing left to 16 her to pile all her earthly joys and love on. Were not her 17 movements, her thoughts, her pleasures, her very life for that little 18 one that bound her to life?

19 For years she watched over the day-to-day unfolding of that 20 baby life with all a mother's care; and now that he was old enough 21 to go to school, how hard she worked for months to get the 22 necessities for the young scholar!

23 The necessities however were few. In a land where men 24 contentedly pass their lives poring over books in the light of a mud 25 lamp, with an ounce of oil in which is a thin cotton wick--a rush mat 26 being the only furniture about them--the necessities of a student 27 are not many. Yet there were some, and even those cost many a day 28 of hard work to the poor mother.

29 How for days she toiled over her wheel to buy Gopala a new 30 cotton Dhoti and a piece of cotton Chadar, the under and upper 31 coverings, the small mat in which Gopala was to put his bundle of 32 palm leaves for writing and his reed pens, and which he was to 33 carry rolled up under his arm to be used as his seat at school--and 34 the inkstand. And what joy to her it was, when on a day of good 35 omen Gopal attempted to write his first letters, only a mother's 36 heart, a poor mother's, can know!

37 But today there is a dark shadow in her mind. Gopala is 38 frightened to go alone through the wood. Never before had she felt 39 her widowhood, her loneliness, her poverty so bitter. For a moment 40 it was all dark, but she recalled to her mind what she had heard of 41 the eternal promise: "Those that depend on Me giving up all other 42 thoughts, to them I Myself carry whatever is necessary." And she 43 was one of the souls who could believe.

44 So the mother wiped her tears and told her child that he need 45 not fear. For in those woods lived another son of hers tending cattle, 46 and also called Gopala; and if he was ever afraid passing through 47 them, he had only to call on brother Gopala!

1 The child was that mother's son, and he believed.

2 That day, coming home from school through the wood, Gopala
3 was frightened and called upon his brother Gopala, the cowherd:
4 "Brother cowherd, are you here? Mother said you are, and I am to 5 call on you: I am frightened being alone." And a voice came from 6 behind the trees: "Don't be afraid, little brother, I am here; go home 7 without fear."

8 Thus every day the boy called, and the voice answered. The 9 mother heard of it with wonder and love; and she instructed her 10 child to ask the brother of the wood to show himself the next time.

11 The next day the boy, when passing through the woods, called 12 upon his brother. The voice came as usual, but the boy asked the 13 brother in the woods to show himself to him. The voice replied, "I 14 am busy today, brother, and cannot come." But the boy insisted, and 15 out of the shade of the trees came the Cowherd of the woods, a boy 16 dressed in the garb of cowherds, with a little crown on his head in 17 which were peacock's feathers, and the cowherd's flute in his 18 hands.

19 And they were so happy: they played together for hours in the 20 woods, climbing trees, gathering fruits and flowers--the widow's 21 Gopala and the Gopala of the woods, till it was almost late for 22 school. Then the widow's Gopala went to school with a reluctant 23 heart, and nearly forgot all his lesson, his mind eager to return to 24 the woods and play with his brother.

25 Months passed this wise. The poor mother heard of it day by 26 day and, in the joy of this Divine mercy, forgot her widowhood, her 27 poverty, and blessed her miseries a thousand times.

28 Then there came some religious ceremonies which the 29 teacher had to perform in honour of his ancestors. These village 30 teachers, managing alone a number of boys and receiving no fixed 31 fees from them, have to depend a great deal upon presents when 32 the occasion requires them.

33 Each pupil brought in his share, in goods or money. And 34 Gopala, the orphan, the widow's son!--the other boys smiled a smile 35 of contempt on him when they talked of the present they were 36 bringing.

37 That night Gopala's heart was heavy, and he asked his mother 38 for some present for the teacher, and the poor mother had nothing.

39 But she determined to do what she had been doing all her 40 life, to depend on the Cowherd, and told her son to ask from his 41 brother Gopala in the forest for some presents for the teacher.

42 The next day, after Gopala had met the Cowherd boy in the 43 woods as usual and after they had some games together, Gopala 44 told his brother of the forest the grief that was in his mind and 45 begged him to give him something to present his teacher with.

46 "Brother Gopala," said the cowherd, "I am only a cowherd you 47 see, and have no money, but take this pot of cream as from a poor 48 cowherd and present it to your teacher."

1 Gopala, quite glad that he now had something to give his 2 teacher, more so because it was a present from his brother in the 3 forest, hastened to the home of the teacher and stood with an eager 4 heart behind a crowd of boys handing over their presents to the 5 teacher. Many and varied were the presents they had brought, and 6 no one thought of looking even at the present of the orphan.

7 The neglect was quite disheartening; tears stood in the eyes
8 of Gopala, when by a sudden stroke of fortune the teacher
9 happened to take notice of him. He took the small pot of cream 10 from Gopala's hand, and poured the cream into a big vessel, when 11 to his wonder the pot filled up again! Again he emptied the contents 12 into a bigger vessel, again it was full; and thus it went on, the small 13 pot filling up quicker than he could empty it.

14 Then amazement took hold of everyone; and the teacher took 15 the poor orphan in his arms and inquired about the pot of cream.

16 Gopala told his teacher all about his brother Cowherd in the 17 forest, how he answered his call, how he played with him, and how 18 at last he gave him the pot of cream.

19 The teacher asked Gopala to take him to the woods and show 20 him his brother of the woods, and Gopala was only too glad to take 21 his teacher there.

22 The boy called upon his brother to appear, but there was no 23 voice even that day. He called again and again. No answer. And 24 then the boy entreated his brother in the forest to speak, else the 25 teacher would think he was not speaking the truth. Then came the 26 voice as from a great distance:

27 "Gopala, thy mother's and thy love and faith brought Me to 28 thee; but tell thy teacher, he will have to wait a long while yet."

31 MY PLAY IS DONE

32 (Written in the Spring of 1895 in New York)

34 Ever rising, ever falling with the waves of time,
35 still rolling on I go

36 From fleeting scene to scene ephemeral, 37 with life's currents' ebb and flow.

38 Oh! I am sick of this unending force;
39 these shows they please no more.

40 This ever running, never reaching,
41 nor e'en a distant glimpse of shore!

42 From life to life I'm waiting at the gates, 43 alas, they open not.

44 Dim are my eyes with vain attempt

1 to catch one ray long sought.
2 On little life's high, narrow bridge
3 I stand and see below
4 The struggling, crying, laughing throng.
5 For what? No one can know.
6 In front yon gates stand frowning dark,
7 and say: "No farther way,
8 This is the limit; tempt not Fate,
9 bear it as best you may;
10 Go, mix with them and drink this cup 11 and be as mad as they.
12 Who dares to know but comes to grief;
13 stop then, and with them stay."
14 Alas for me, I cannot rest.
15 This floating bubble, earth--
16 Its hollow form, its hollow name,
17 its hollow death and birth--
18 For me is nothing. How I long
19 to get beyond the crust
20 Of name and form! Ah! ope the gates; 21 to me they open must.
22 Open the gates of light, O Mother, to me Thy tired son.
23 I long, oh, long to return home!
24 Mother, my play is done.
25 You sent me out in the dark to play,
26 and wore a frightful mask;
27 Then hope departed, terror came,
28 and play became a task.
29 Tossed to and fro, from wave to wave
30 in this seething, surging sea
31 Of passions strong and sorrows deep, 32 grief is, and joy to be,
33 Where life is living death, alas! and death-- 34 who knows but 'tis
35 Another start, another round of this old wheel 36 of grief and bliss?
37 Where children dream bright, golden dreams,

1 too soon to find them dust,
2 And aye look back to hope long lost
3 and life a mass of rust!
4 Too late, the knowledge age doth gain;
5 scarce from the wheel we're gone
6 When fresh, young lives put their strength 7 to the wheel, which thus goes on 8 From day to day and year to year.
9 'Tis but delusion's toy,
10 False hope its motor; desire, nave;
11 its spokes are grief and joy.
12 I go adrift and know not whither.
13 Save me from this fire!
14 Rescue me, merciful Mother, from floating with desire!
15 Turn not to me Thy awful face,
16 'tis more than I can bear.
17 Be merciful and kind to me,
18 to chide my faults forbear.
19 Take me, O Mother, to those shores
20 where strifes for ever cease;
21 Beyond all sorrows, beyond tears,
22 beyond e'en earthly bliss;
23 Whose glory neither sun, nor moon,
24 nor stars that twinkle bright,
25 Nor flash of lightning can express.
26 They but reflect its light.
27 Let never more delusive dreams
28 veil off Thy face from me.
29 My play is done, O Mother,
30 break my chains and make me free!

31
32

33 THE CUP

34
35
36
37

This is your cup--the cup assigned to you from the beginning.
Nay, My child, I know how much

1 of that dark drink is your own brew
2 Of fault and passion, ages long ago,
3 In the deep years of yesterday, I know.

4
5 This is your road--a painful road and drear.
6 I made the stones that never give you rest.
7 I set your friend in pleasant ways and clear,
8 And he shall come like you, unto My breast.
9 But you, My child, must travel here.

10
11 This is your task. It has no joy nor grace, 12 But it is not meant for any other hand,
13 And in My universe hath measured place,
14 Take it. I do not bid you understand.
15 I bid you close your eyes to see My face.

18 A BENEDICTION

20 The mother's heart, the hero's will,
21 The sweetness of the southern breeze,
22 The sacred charm and strength that dwell
23 On Aryan altars, flaming, free;
24 All these be yours, and many more
25 No ancient soul could dream before--
26 Be thou to India's future son
27 The mistress, servant, friend in one.

30 THE HYMN OF CREATION

31
32 Existence was not then, nor non-existence,
33 The world was not, the sky beyond was neither.
34 What covered the mist? Of whom was that?
35 What was in the depths of darkness thick?
36
37 Death was not then, nor immortality,

1 The night was neither separate from day,
2 But motionless did That vibrate
3 Alone, with Its own glory one--
4 Beyond That nothing did exist.
5
6 At first in darkness hidden darkness lay,
7 Undistinguished as one mass of water,
8 Then That which lay in void thus covered
9 A glory did put forth by Tapah !
10
11 First desire rose, the primal seed of mind, 12 (The sages have seen all this in their hearts 13 Sifting existence from non-existence.)
14 Its rays above, below and sideways spread.
15
16 Creative then became the glory,
17 With self-sustaining principle below.
18 And Creative Energy above.
19
20 Who knew the way? Who there declared
21 Whence this arose? Projection whence?
22 For after this projection came the gods.
23 Who therefore knew indeed, came out this whence?
24
25 This projection whence arose,
26 Whether held or whether not,
27 He the ruler in the supreme sky, of this 28 He, O Sharman! knows, or knows not 29 He perchance!

33 ON THE SEA'S BOSOM

34
35 In blue sky floats a multitude of clouds-- 36 White, black, of many shades and thicknesses;
37 An orange sun, about to say farewell,

1 Touches the massed cloud-shapes with streaks of red.

2

3 The wind blows as it lists, a hurricane

4 Now carving shapes, now breaking them apart:

5 Fancies, colours, forms, inert creations--

6 A myriad scenes, though real, yet fantastic.

7

8 There light clouds spread, heaping up spun cotton;

9 See next a huge snake, then a strong lion;

10 Again, behold a couple locked in love.

11 All vanish, at last, in the vapoury sky.

12

13 Below, the sea sings a varied music,

14 But not grand, O India, nor ennobling:

15 Thy waters, widely praised, murmur serene

16 In soothing cadence, without a harsh roar.

17

18

19 HINDUISM AND SHRI RAMAKRISHNA

20

21 By the word "Shastras" the Vedas without beginning or end 22 are meant. In matters of religious duty the Vedas are the only 23 capable authority.

24 The Puranas and other religious scriptures are all denoted by 25 the word "Smriti". And their authority goes so far as they follow the 26 Vedas and do not contradict them.

27 Truth is of two kinds: (1) that which is cognisable by the five 28 ordinary senses of man, and by reasonings based thereon; (2) that 29 which is cognisable by the subtle, supersensuous power of Yoga.

30 Knowledge acquired by the first means is called science; and 31 knowledge acquired by the second is called the Vedas.

32 The whole body of supersensuous truths, having no beginning 33 or end, and called by the name of the Vedas, is ever-existent. The 34 Creator Himself is creating, preserving, and destroying the 35 universe with the help of these truths.

36 The person in whom this supersensuous power is manifested 37 is called a Rishi, and the supersensuous truths which he realises by 38 this power are called the Vedas.

39 This Rishihood, this power of supersensuous perception of 40 the Vedas, is real religion. And so long as this does not develop in 41 the life of an initiate, so long is religion a mere empty word to him, 42 and it is to be understood that he has not taken yet the first step in

1 religion.

2 The authority of the Vedas extends to all ages, climes and 3 persons; that is to say, their application is not confined to any 4 particular place, time, and persons.

5 The Vedas are the only exponent of the universal religion.

6 Although the supersensuous vision of truths is to be met with 7 in some measure in our Puranas and Itihasas and in the religious 8 scriptures of other races, still the fourfold scripture known among 9 the Aryan race as the Vedas being the first, the most complete, and 10 the most undistorted collection of spiritual truths, deserve to 11 occupy the highest place among all scriptures, command the 12 respect of all nations of the earth, and furnish the rationale of all 13 their respective scriptures.

14 With regard to the whole Vedic collection of truths discovered 15 by the Aryan race, this also has to be understood that those 16 portions alone which do not refer to purely secular matters and 17 which do not merely record tradition or history, or merely provide 18 incentives to duty, form the Vedas in the real sense.

19 The Vedas are divided into two portions, the Jnana-kanda 20 (knowledge-portion) and the Karma-kanda (ritual-portion). The 21 ceremonies and the fruits of the Karma-kanda are confined within 22 the limits of the world of Maya, and therefore they have been 23 undergoing and will undergo transformation according to the law of 24 change which operates through time, space, and personality.

25 Social laws and customs likewise, being based on this Karma-
26 kanda, have been changing and will continue to change hereafter.
27 Minor social usages also will be recognised and accepted when they 28 are compatible with the spirit of the true scriptures and the conduct 29 and example of holy sages. But blind allegiance only to usages such 30 as are repugnant to the spirit of the Shastras and the conduct of 31 holy sages has been one of the main causes of the downfall of the 32 Aryan race.

33 It is the Jnana-kanda or the Vedanta only that has for all time 34 commanded recognition for leading men across Maya and 35 bestowing salvation on them through the practice of Yoga, Bhakti, 36 Jnana, or selfless work; and as its validity and authority remain 37 unaffected by any limitations of time, place or persons, it is the only 38 exponent of the universal and eternal religion for all mankind.

39 The Samhitas of Manu and other sages, following the lines 40 laid down in the Karma-kanda, have mainly ordained rules of 41 conduct conducive to social welfare, according to the exigencies of 42 time, place, and persons. The Puranas etc. have taken up the truths 43 imbedded in the Vedanta and have explained them in detail in the 44 course of describing the exalted life and deeds of Avatars and 45 others. They have each emphasised, besides, some out of the 46 infinite aspects of the Divine Lord to teach men about them.

47 But when by the process of time, fallen from the true ideals 48 and rules of conduct and devoid of the spirit of renunciation, 49 addicted only to blind usages, and degraded in intellect, the

1 descendants of the Aryans failed to appreciate even the spirit of 2 these Puranas etc. which taught men of ordinary intelligence the 3 abstruse truths of the Vedanta in concrete form and diffuse 4 language and appeared antagonistic to one another on the surface, 5 because of each inculcating with special emphasis only particular 6 aspects of the spiritual ideal--

7 And when, as a consequence, they reduced India, the fair 8 land of religion, to a scene of almost infernal confusion by breaking 9 up piecemeal the one Eternal Religion of the Vedas (Sanatana 10 Dharma), the grand synthesis of all the aspects of the spiritual 11 ideal, into conflicting sects and by seeking to sacrifice one another 12 in the flames of sectarian hatred and intolerance--

13 Then it was that Shri Bhagavan Ramakrishna incarnated
14 himself in India, to demonstrate what the true religion of the Aryan 15 race is; to show where amidst all its many divisions and offshoots, 16 scattered over the land in the course of its immemorial history, lies 17 the true unity of the Hindu religion, which by its overwhelming 18 number of sects discordant to superficial view, quarrelling 19 constantly with each other and abounding in customs divergent in 20 every way, has constituted itself a misleading enigma for our 21 countrymen and the butt of contempt for foreigners; and above all, 22 to hold up before men, for their lasting welfare, as a living 23 embodiment of the Sanatana Dharma, his own wonderful life into 24 which he infused the universal spirit and character of this Dharma, 25 so long cast into oblivion by the process of time.

26 In order to show how the Vedic truths--eternally existent as 27 the instrument with the Creator in His work of creation, 28 preservation, and dissolution--reveal themselves spontaneously in 29 the minds of the Rishis purified from all impressions of worldly 30 attachment, and because such verification and confirmation of the 31 scriptural truths will help the revival, reinstatement, and spread of 32 religion--the Lord, though the very embodiment of the Vedas, in this 33 His new incarnation has thoroughly discarded all external forms of 34 learning.

35 That the Lord incarnates again and again in human form for 36 the protection of the Vedas or the true religion, and of Brahminhood 37 or the ministry of that religion--is a doctrine well established in the 38 Puranas etc.

39 The waters of a river falling in a cataract acquire greater 40 velocity, the rising wave after a hollow swells higher; so after every 41 spell of decline, the Aryan society recovering from all the evils by 42 the merciful dispensation of Providence has risen the more glorious 43 and powerful--such is the testimony of history.

44 After rising from every fall, our revived society is expressing 45 more and more its innate eternal perfection, and so also the 46 omnipresent Lord in each successive incarnation is manifesting
47 Himself more and more.

48 Again and again has our country fallen into a swoon, as it 49 were, and again and again has India's Lord, by the manifestation of 50 Himself, revived her.

1 But greater than the present deep dismal night, now almost 2 over, no pall of darkness had ever before enveloped this holy land of 3 ours. And compared with the depth of this fall, all previous falls 4 appear like little hoof-marks.

5 Therefore, before the effulgence of this new awakening, the 6 glory of all past revivals in her history will pale like stars before the 7 rising sun; and compared with this mighty manifestation of 8 renewed strength, all the many past epochs of such restoration will 9 be as child's play.

10 The various constituent ideals of the Religion Eternal, during 11 its present state of decline, have been lying scattered here and 12 there for want of competent men to realise them--some being 13 preserved partially among small sects and some completely lost.

14 But strong in the strength of this new spiritual renaissance, 15 men, after reorganising these scattered and disconnected spiritual 16 ideals, will be able to comprehend and practise them in their own 17 lives and also to recover from oblivion those that are lost. And as 18 the sure pledge of this glorious future, the all-merciful Lord has 19 manifested in the present age, as stated above, an incarnation 20 which in point of completeness in revelation, its synthetic 21 harmonising of all ideals, and its promoting of every sphere of 22 spiritual culture, surpasses the manifestations of all past ages.

23 So at the very dawn of this momentous epoch, the 24 reconciliation of all aspects and ideals of religious thought and 25 worship is being proclaimed; this boundless, all-embracing idea had 26 been lying inherent, but so long concealed, in the Religion Eternal 27 and its scriptures, and now rediscovered, it is being declared to 28 humanity in a trumpet voice.

29 This epochal new dispensation is the harbinger of great good 30 to the whole world, specially to India; and the inspirer of this 31 dispensation, Shri Bhagavan Ramakrishna, is the reformed and 32 remodelled manifestation of all the past great epoch-makers in 33 religion. O man, have faith in this, and lay it to heart.

34 The dead never return; the past night does not reappear; a 35 spent-up tidal wave does not rise anew; neither does man inhabit
36 the same body over again. So from the worship of the dead past, O 37 man, we invite you to the worship of the living present; from the 38 regretful brooding over bygones, we invite you to the activities of 39 the present; from the waste of energy in retracing lost and 40 demolished pathways, we call you back to broad new-laid highways 41 lying very near. He that is wise, let him understand.

42 Of that power, which at the very first impulse has roused 43 distant echoes from all the four quarters of the globe, conceive in 44 your mind the manifestation in its fullness; and discarding all idle 45 misgivings, weaknesses, and the jealousies characteristic of 46 enslaved peoples, come and help in the turning of this mighty wheel 47 of new dispensation!

48 With the conviction firmly rooted in your heart that you are 49 the servants of the Lord, His children, helpers in the fulfillment of 50 His purpose, enter the arena of work.

THE BENGALI LANGUAGE

(Written for the "Udbodhan")

In our country, owing to all learning being in Sanskrit from the ancient times, there has arisen an immeasurable gulf between the learned and the common folk. All the great personages, from Buddha down to Chaitanya and Ramakrishna, who came for the well-being of the world, taught the common people in the language of the people themselves. Of course, scholarship is an excellent thing; but cannot scholarship be displayed through any other medium than a language that is stiff and unintelligible, that is unnatural and merely artificial? Is there no room for art in the spoken language? What is the use of creating an unnatural language to the exclusion of the natural one? Do you not think out your scholastic researches in the language which you are accustomed to speak at home? Why then do you introduce such a queer and unwieldy thing when you proceed to put them in black and white? The language in which you think out philosophy and science in your mind, and argue with others in public--is not that the language for writing philosophy and science? If it is not, how then do you reason out those truths within yourselves and in company of others in that very language? The language in which we naturally express ourselves, in which we communicate our anger, grief, or love, etc.--there cannot be a fitter language than that. We must stick to that idea, that manner of expression, that diction and all. No artificial language can ever have that force, and that brevity and expressiveness, or admit of being given any turn you please, as that spoken language. Language must be made like pure steel--turn and twist it any way you like, it is again the same--it cleaves a rock in twain at one stroke, without its edge being turned. Our language is becoming artificial by imitating the slow and pompous movement--and only that--of Sanskrit. And language is the chief means and index of a nation's progress.

If you say, "It is all right, but there are various kinds of dialects in different parts of Bengal--which of them to accept?"--the answer is: We must accept that which is gaining strength and spreading through natural laws, that is to say, the language of Calcutta. East or west, from wheresoever people may come, once they breathe in the air of Calcutta, they are found to speak the language in vogue there; so nature herself points out which language to write in. The more railroads and facilities of communication there are, the more will the difference of east and west disappear, and from Chittagong to Baidyanath there will be that one language, viz that of Calcutta. It is not the question which district possesses a language most approaching Sanskrit--you must see which language is triumphing. When it is evident that the language of Calcutta will soon become the language of the whole of Bengal, then, if one has to make the written and spoken language the same, one would, if one is intelligent enough certainly make the

1 language of Calcutta one's foundation. Here local jealousies also 2 should be thrown overboard. Where the welfare of the whole 3 province is concerned, you must overlook the claims to superiority 4 of your own district or village.

5 Language is the vehicle of ideas. It is the ideas that are of 6 prime importance, language comes after. Does it look well to place 7 a monkey on a horse that has trappings of diamonds and pearls?
8 Just look at Sanskrit. Look at the Sanskrit of the Brahmanas, at 9 Shabara Swami's commentary on the Mimamsa philosophy, the 10 Mahabhashya of Patanjali, and, finally, at the great commentary of 11 Acharya Shankara: and look also at the Sanskrit of comparatively 12 recent times. You will at once understand that so long as a man is 13 alive, he talks a living language, but when he is dead, he speaks a 14 dead language. The nearer death approaches, the more does the 15 power of original thinking wane, the more is there the attempt to 16 bury one or two rotten ideas under a heap of flowers and scents.
17 Great God! What a parade they make! After ten pages of big 18 adjectives, all on a sudden you have--"There lived the King!" Oh, 19 what an array of spun-out adjectives, and giant compounds, and 20 skilful puns! They are symptoms of death. When the country began 21 to decay, then all these signs became manifest. It was not merely in 22 language--all the arts began to manifest them. A building now 23 neither expressed any idea nor followed any style; the columns 24 were turned and turned till they had all their strength taken out of 25 them. The ornaments pierced the nose and the neck and converted 26 the wearer into a veritable ogress; but oh, the profusion of leaves 27 and foliage carved fantastically in them! Again, in music, nobody, 28 not even the sage Bharata, the originator of dramatic 29 performances, could understand whether it was singing, or 30 weeping, or wrangling, and what meaning or purpose it sought to 31 convey! And what an abundance of intricacies in that music! What 32 labyrinths of flourishes--enough to strain all one's nerves! Over and 33 above that, that music had its birth in the nasal tone uttered
34 through the teeth compressed, in imitation of the Mohammedan
35 musical experts! Nowadays there is an indication of correcting 36 these; now will people gradually understand that a language, or art, 37 or music that expresses no meaning and is lifeless, is of no good.
38 Now they will understand that the more strength is infused into the 39 national life, the more will language, art, and music, etc. become 40 spontaneously instinct with ideas and life. The volume of meaning 41 that a couple of words of everyday use will convey, you may search 42 in vain in two thousand set epithets. Then every image of the Deity 43 will inspire devotion, every girl decked in ornaments will appear to 44 be a goddess, and every house and room and furniture will be 45 animated with the vibration of life.

46 47 48 MATTER FOR SERIOUS THOUGHT 49

50 A man presented himself to be blessed by a sight of the Deity.
51 He had an excess of joy and devotion at the sight; and perhaps to

1 pay back the good he received, he burst out into a song. In one 2 corner of the hall, reclining against a pillar, was Chobeji dozing. He 3 was the priest in the temple, an athlete, a player on the guitar, was 4 a good hand in swallowing two jugfuls of Bhang, and had various 5 other qualifications besides. All on a sudden, a dreadful noise 6 assailing his tympanum, the fantastic universe conjured up under 7 the influence of the inebriating liquor vanished for a moment from 8 Chobeji's enormous chest of two and forty inches! And casting his 9 crimson-tinged, languid eyes around in search of the cause of 10 disturbance to his tranquil mind, Chobeji discovered that in front of 11 the God was a man singing, overwhelmed with his own feelings, in 12 a tune as touching as the scouring of cauldrons in a festive house, 13 and, in so doing, he was subjecting the shades of the whole host of 14 musical masters like Narada, Bharata, Hanuman, Nayaka, and the 15 rest to ineffable anguish. The mortified Chobeji in a sharp 16 reprimanding tone addressed the man who had been the direct 17 obstacle to his enjoyment of that peculiar bliss of inebriation, 18 "Hallo, my friend, what are you shouting like that for, without 19 caring for time or tune?" Quick came the response, "What need I 20 care for time or tune? I am trying to win the Lord's heart."
21 "Humph!" retorted Chobeji, "do you think the Lord is such a fool?
22 You must be mad! You could not win my heart even--and has the 23 Lord less brains than I?"

24 The Lord has declared unto Arjuna: "Take thou refuge in Me, 25 thou hast nothing else to do. And I shall deliver thee." Bholachand 26 is mighty glad to hear this from some people; he now and then yells 27 out in a trenchant note: "I have taken refuge in the Lord. I shall not 28 have to do anything further." Bholachand is under the impression 29 that it is the height of devotion to bawl out those words repeatedly 30 in the harshest tone possible. Moreover, he does not fail to make it 31 known now and then in the aforesaid pitch that he is ever ready to 32 lay down his life even, for the Lord's sake, and that if the Lord does 33 not voluntarily surrender Himself to this tie of devotion, everything 34 would be hollow and false. And a few foolish satellites of his also 35 share the same opinion. But Bholachand is not prepared to give up 36 a single piece of wickedness for the sake of the Lord. Well, is the 37 Lord really such a fool? Why, this is not enough to hoodwink us 38 even!

39 Bhola Puri an out and out Vedantin--in everything he is 40 careful to trumpet his Brahminhood. If all people are about to 41 starve for food around Bhola Puri, it does not touch him even in the 42 least; he expounds the unsubstantiality of pleasure and pain. If 43 through disease, or affliction, or starvation people die by the 44 thousand, what matters even that to him? He at once reflects on the 45 immortality of the soul! If the strong overpower the weak and even 46 kill them before his very eyes, Bhola Puri is lost in the profound 47 depths of the meaning of the spiritual dictum, "The soul neither kills 48 nor is killed." He is exceedingly averse to action of any kind. If hard 49 pressed, he replies that he finished all actions in his previous births.
50 But Bhola Puri's realisation of unity of the Self suffers a terrible 51 check when he is hurt in one point. When there is some anomaly in 52 the completeness of his Bhiksha, or when the householder is

1 unwilling to offer him worship according to his expectations, then, 2 in the opinion of Puriji, there are no more despicable creatures on 3 earth than householders, and he is at a loss to make out why the 4 village that failed to offer adequate worship to him should, even for 5 a moment, add to the world's burden.

6 He, too, has evidently thought the Lord more foolish than 7 ourselves.

8 "I say, Ram Charan, you have neither education nor the 9 means to set up a trade, nor are you fit for physical labour. Besides, 10 you cannot give up indulging in intoxications, nor do away with your 11 wickednesses. Tell me, how do you manage to make your living?"

12 Ram Charan--"That is an easy job, sir; I preach unto all."

13 What has Ram Charan taken the Lord for?

14 The city of Lucknow is astir with the festivities of the 15 Mohurrum. The gorgeous decorations and illumination in the 16 principal mosque, the Imambara, know no bounds. Countless 17 people have congregated. Hindus, Mohammedans, Christians, 18 Jews--all sorts of people--men, women, and children of all races and 19 creeds have crowded today to witness the Mohurrum. Lucknow is 20 the capital of the Shias, and wailings in the name of the illustrious 21 Hassan and Hossain rend the skies today. Who was there whose 22 heart was not touched by the lamentation and beating of breasts
23 that took place on this mournful occasion? The tale of the Karbala, 24 now a thousand years old, has been renovated today.

25 Among this crowd of spectators were two Rajput gentlemen, 26 who had come from a far-off village to see the festival. The Thakur 27 Sahibs were--as is generally the case with village zemindars 28 (landlords)--innocent of learning. That Mohammedan culture, the 29 shower of euphuistic phraseology with its nice and correct 30 pronunciation, the varieties of fashionable dress--the loose-fitting 31 cloaks and tight trousers and turbans, of a hundred different 32 colours, to suit the taste of the townsfolk--all these had not yet 33 found their way to such a remote village to convert the Thakur
34 Sahibs. The Thakurs were, therefore, simple and straightforward, 35 always fond of hunting, stalwart and hardy, and of exceedingly 36 tough hearts.

37 The Thakurs had crossed the gate and were about to enter 38 the mosque, when the guard interrupted them. Upon inquiring into 39 the reasons, he answered, "Look here, this giant figure that you see 40 standing by the doorway, you must give it five kicks first, and then 41 you can go in." "Whose is the statue, pray?" "It is the statue of the 42 nefarious Yejid who killed the illustrious Hassan and Hossain a 43 thousand years ago. Therefore is this crying and this mourning."
44 The guard thought that after this elaborate explanation the statue 45 of Yejid was sure to merit ten kicks instead of five. But mysterious 46 are the workings of Karma, and everything was sadly
47 misunderstood. The Thakurs reverentially put their scarfs round 48 their neck and prostrated and rolled themselves at the feet of the 49 statue of Yejid, praying with faltering accents: "What is the use of 50 going in any more? What other gods need be seen? Bravo Yejid!

1 Thou alone art the true God. Thou hast thrashed the rascals so well 2 that they are weeping till now!"

3 There is the towering temple of the Eternal Hindu Religion, 4 and how many ways of approaching it! And what can you not find 5 there? From the Absolute Brahman of the Vedantin down to 6 Brahma, Vishnu, Shiva, Shakti, Uncle Sun, the rat-riding Ganesha,
7 and the minor deities such as Shashthi and Makal, and so forth-- 8 which is lacking there? And in the Vedas, in the Vedanta, and the 9 Philosophies, in the Puranas and the Tantras, there are lots of 10 materials, a single sentence of which is enough to break one's chain 11 of transmigration for ever. And oh, the crowd! Millions and millions 12 of people are rushing towards the temple. I, too, had a curiosity to 13 see and join in the rush. But what was this that met my eyes when I 14 reached the spot! Nobody was going inside the temple! By the side 15 of the door, there was a standing figure, with fifty heads, a hundred 16 arms, two hundred bellies, and five hundred legs, and everyone was 17 rolling at the feet of that. I asked one for the reason and got the 18 reply: "Those deities that you see in the interior, it is worship 19 enough for them to make a short prostration, or throw in a few 20 flowers from a distance. But the real worship must be offered to 21 him who is at the gate; and those Vedas, the Vedanta, and the 22 Philosophies, the Puranas and other scriptures that you see--there 23 is no harm if you hear them read now and then; but you must obey 24 the mandate of this one." Then I asked again, "Well, what is the 25 name of this God of gods?" "He is named Popular Custom"--came 26 the reply. I was reminded of the Thakur Sahibs, and exclaimed, 27 "Bravo, Popular Custom! Thou hast thrashed them so well", etc.

28 Gurgure Krishnavyal Bhattacharya is a vastly learned man, 29 who has the knowledge of the whole world at his finger-ends. His 30 frame is a skeleton; his friends say it is through the rigours of his 31 austerities, but his enemies ascribe it to want of food. The wicked, 32 again, are of opinion that such a physique is but natural to one who 33 has a dozen issues every year. However that may be, there is 34 nothing on earth that Krishnavyal does not know; specially, he is 35 omniscient about the flow of electric magnetic currents all over the 36 human body, from the hair-tuft to its furthest nook and corner. And 37 being possessed of this esoteric knowledge, he is incomparably the 38 best authority for giving a scientific explanation of all things--from a 39 certain earth used in the worship of the goddess Durga down to the 40 reasonable age of puberty of a girl being ten, and sundry 41 inexplicable and mysterious rites pertaining to allied matters. And 42 as for adducing precedents, well, he has made the thing so clear 43 that even boys could understand it. There is forsooth no other land 44 for religion than India, and within India itself none but the 45 Brahmins have the qualification for understanding religion and 46 among Brahmins, too, all others excepting the Krishnavyal family 47 are as nothing and, of these latter again, Gurgure has the pre-48 eminent claim! Therefore, whatever Gurgure Krishnavyal says is 49 self-evident truth.

50 Learning is being cultivated to a considerable extent, and 51 people are becoming a bit conscious and active, so that they want 52 to understand and taste everything; so Krishnavyal is assuring everybody: "Discard all fear! Whatever doubts are arising in your minds, I am giving scientific explanations for them. You remain just as you were. Sleep to your heart's content and never mind anything else. Only, don't forget my honorarium." The people exclaimed: "Oh, what a relief! What a great danger did really confront us! We should have had to sit up, and walk, and move--what a pest!" So they said, "Long live Krishnavyal", and turned on one side on the bed once more. The habit of a thousand years was not to go so soon. The body itself would resent it. The inveterate obtuseness of the mind of a thousand years was not to pass away at a moment's notice. And is it not for this that the Krishnavyal class are held in repute? "Bravo, Habit! Thou hast thrashed them so well", etc.

SHIVA'S DEMON

Baron K__ lived in a district of Germany. Born in an aristocratic family, he inherited high rank, honour and, wealth even in early youth; besides, he was highly cultured and endowed with many accomplishments. A good many charming, affluent, and young women of rank craved for his love. And which father or mother does not wish for a son-in-law of such parts, culture, handsomeness, social position, lineage, and youthful age? An aristocratic beauty had attracted Baron K__ also, but the marriage was still far off. In spite of all rank and wealth, Baron K__ had none to call his own, except a sister who was exquisitely beautiful and educated. The Baron had taken a vow that he would marry only after his sister had chosen her fiance and the marriage celebrated with due eclat and rich dowries from him. She had been the apple of her parents' eyes. Baron K__ did not want to enjoy a married life, before her wedding. Besides, the custom in this Western country is that the son does not live in his father's or in any relative's family after marriage; the couple live separately. It may be possible for the husband to live with his wife in his father-in-law's house but a wife will never live in her father-in-law's. So K__ postponed his marriage till his sister's.

For some months K__ had no news of his sister. Foregoing the life of ease, comfort, and happiness in a palace served by a big retinue, and snatching herself from the affection of her only brother, she had absconded. All search had been in vain. That brought K__ untold sorrow. He had no more any relish for the pleasures of life; he was ever unhappy and dejected. His relatives now gave up all hope of the sister's return, and tried to make the Baron cheerful. They were very anxious about him, and his fiancée was ever full of apprehension.

It was the time of the Paris Exhibition. The elite of all countries assembled there. The art-treasures, and artistic products were brought to Paris from all quarters. Baron K__'s relatives advised him to go to Paris where his despondent heart would regain

1 its normal health and buoyancy, once it was in contact with that 2 active, invigorating current of joy. The Baron bowed down to their 3 wishes and started for Paris with his friends.

9 Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

10 Leaving Ayodhya I have reached the holy Vrindaban, and am 11 putting up at Kala Babu's Kunja. In the town the mind feels 12 contracted. Places like Radha-kunda, I have heard, are delightful; 13 but they are at some distance from the town. I have a mind to 14 proceed very shortly to Hardwar. In case you have any 15 acquaintance there, you would be doing me a great favour if you 16 would kindly write him an introduction for me. What about your 17 visiting this place? Please reply early and oblige.

27 Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

28 An aged brother-disciple of mine who has just come back to 29 Vrindaban after visiting Kedarnath and Badrinath met Gangadhar.
30 Twice did Gangadhar ascend up to Tibet and Bhutan. He is in great 31 happiness and felt overwhelmed and wept at the meeting. He spent 32 the winter at Kankhal. The Karoa (waterpot) you gave him, he still 33 keeps with him. He is coming back and is expected at Vrindaban 34 this very month. So in the hope of meeting him, I postpone my 35 going to Hardwar for some days. Please convey my deepest

6 {original in Bengali}

7 Respected Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

8 I have received the two books sent by you and am filled with 9 joy to read your wonderfully affectionate letter which betokens your 10 broad, generous heart. No doubt, it is due to good merit of my 11 previous births that you show, sir, so much kindness to a mendicant
12 like me who lives on begging. By sending your gift of the "Vedanta", 13 you have laid under lifelong obligation not only myself but the 14 whole group of Shri Ramakrishna's Sannyasins. They all bow down
15 to you in respect. It is not for my own sake alone that I asked of you 16 the copy of Panini's grammar; a good deal of study, in fact, is given 17 to Sanskrit scriptures in this Math. The Vedas may well be said to 18 have fallen quite out of vogue in Bengal. Many here in this Math are 19 conversant with Sanskrit, and they have a mind to master the 20 Samhita portions of the Vedas. They are of opinion that what has to 21 be done must be done to a finish. So, believing that a full measure 22 of proficiency in the Vedic language is impossible without first 23 mastering Panini's grammar, which is the best available for the 24 purpose, a copy of the latter was felt to be a necessity. The 25 grammatical work Mugdhabodha , which we studied in our 26 boyhood, is superior in many respects to Laghukaumudi . You are 27 yourself, however, a deeply learned man and, therefore, the best 28 judge we can have in this matter. So if you consider the Ashtadhyayi
29 (Panini's) to be the most suitable in our case, you will lay us under a 30 debt of lifelong gratitude by sending the same (provided you feel it 31 convenient and feel so inclined). This Math is not wanting in men of 32 perseverance, talent, and penetrative intellect. I may hope that by 33 the grace of our Master, they will acquire in a short time Panini's 34 system and then succeed in restoring the Vedas to Bengal. I bet to 35 send you two photographs of my revered Master and two parts of 36 some of his teachings as given in his homely style compiled, and 37 published by a certain gentleman--hoping you will give us the 38 pleasure of your acceptance. My health is now much improved, and 39 I expect the blessings of meeting you within two or three months. . .

10 Kashi and its Lord! I feel now much improved in health. My regards

33 Shri Durga be my Refuge!

34 Baranagore,

37 {original in Bengali}

38 Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

39 For sundry reasons I have been unable to write to you for 40 long, for which please excuse me. I have now obtained news of 41 Gangadhar. He met one of my brother-disciples, and both are now 42 staying in the Uttarakhand (the sacred Himalayas). Four of us 43 from here are in the Himalayas now, and with Gangadhar they are

1 five. One brother-disciple named Shivananda came across 2 Gangadhar at Srinagara on the way to holy Kedarnath, and 3 Gangadhar has sent two letters here. During his first year in the 4 Himalayas, he could not secure permission to enter Tibet, but he 5 got it the next year. The Lamas love him much, and he had picked 6 up the Tibetan language. He says the Lamas form ninety per cent of 7 the population, but they mostly practise Tantrika forms of worship.
8 The country is intensely cold--eatables there are scarcely any--only 9 dried meat; and Gangadhar had to travel and live on that food. My 10 health is passable, but the state of mind is terrible!

21 Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

22 It pleased me highly to know all the news in your letter 23 yesterday. You have asked me to request Gangadhar to write to you, 24 but I see no chance thereof, for though they are sending us letters, 25 they do not stop anywhere for more than two or three days and 26 therefore do not receive any of ours.

27 Some relative of my former life has purchased a bungalow at 28 Simultala (near Baidynath). The place being credited with a healthy 29 climate, I stayed there for some time. But the summer heat growing 30 excessive, I had an attack of acute diarrhoea, and I have just fled 31 away from the place.

32 Words fail to describe how strong is the desire in my mind to 33 go to Varanasi and have my soul blessed by meeting you and 34 sojourning with you in good converse, but everything rests on His 35 will! I wonder what linking of heart existed between us, sir, from 36 some previous incarnation that, receiving as I do the love and 37 affection of not a few men of wealth and position in this city of 38 Calcutta, I am apt to feel so much bored by their society, while only 39 through one day's interview my heart felt charmed enough to 40 accept you as a near relative and friend in spiritual life! One reason 41 is that you are a favoured servant of God. Another perhaps is:

42 {Sanskrit}¹¹⁶

43 I am indebted to you for the advice which comes from you as

1 ¹¹⁶ Kalidasa's Shakuntalam, Act V: "It must be the memories, unwittingly 2 recalled, of affinities firmly established in previous incarnations through depths 3 of heart."
4

1 the outcome of your experience and spiritual practice. It is very 2 true, and I have also found it so very often, that one has to suffer at 3 times for holding in one's brain novel views of all sorts.

4 But with me it is a different malady this time. I have not lost
5 faith in a benign Providence--nor am I going ever to lose it--my faith 6 in the scriptures is unshaken. But by the will of God, the last six or 7 seven years of my life have been full of constant struggles with 8 hindrances and obstacles of all sorts. I have been vouchsafed the 9 ideal Shastra; I have seen the ideal man; and yet fail myself to get 10 on with anything to the end--this is my profound misery.

11 And particularly, I see no chance of success while remaining 12 near Calcutta. In Calcutta live my mother and two brothers. I am 13 the eldest; the second is preparing for the First Arts Examination, 14 and the third is young.

15 They were quite well off before, but since my father's death, 16 it is going very hard with them--they even have to go fasting at 17 times! To crown all, some relatives, taking advantage of their 18 helplessness, drove them away from the ancestral residence.
19 Though a part of it is recovered through suing at the High Court, 20 destitution is now upon them--a matter of course in litigation.

21 Living near Calcutta I have to witness their adversity, and the 22 quality of Rajas prevailing, my egotism sometimes develops into the 23 form of a desire that rises to plunge me into action; in such 24 moments, a fierce fighting ensues in my mind, and so I wrote that 25 the state of my mind was terrible. Now their lawsuit has come to an 26 end. So bless me that after a stay here in Calcutta for a few days 27 more to settle matters, I may bid adieu to this place for ever.

28 {Sanskrit}¹¹⁷

29 Bless me that my heart may wax strong with supreme 30 strength Divine, and that all forms of Maya may drop off from me 31 for aye: "We have taken up the Cross, Thou hast laid it upon us and 32 grant us strength that we bear it unto death. Amen!"--Imitation of 33 Christ .

34 I am now staying in Calcutta. My address is: c/o Balaram

Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

It is more than a week since I received your letter, but having had another attack of fever, I could not send a reply all this time, for which please excuse me. For an interval of a month and a half I kept well, but I have suffered again for the last ten days; now I am doing well.

I have certain questions to put, and you, sir, have a wide knowledge of Sanskrit; so please favour me with answers to the following:

1. Does any narrative occur about Satyakama, son of Jabala, and about Janashruti, anywhere else in the Vedas excepting the Upanishads?¹¹⁸

2. In most cases where Shankaracharya quotes Smriti in his commentary on the Vedanta-Sutras, he cites the authority of the Mahabharata. But seeing that we find clear proofs about caste being based on qualification both in the Bhishmaparva of the Mahabharata and in the stories there of the Ajagara and of Uma and Maheshvara, has he made any mention in his writings of this fact?

3. The doctrine of caste in the Purusha-Sukta of the Vedas does not make it hereditary--so what are those instances in the Vedas where caste has been made a matter of hereditary transmission?

4. The Acharya could not adduce any proof from the Vedas to the effect that the Shudra should not study the Vedas. He only quotes {Sanskrit}¹¹⁹ (Tai. Samhita, VII.i.1.6) to maintain that when he is not entitled to perform Yajnas, he has neither any right to study the Upanishads and the like. But the same Acharya contends with reference to {Sanskrit},¹²⁰ (Vedanta-Sutras, I.i.1) that the word {Sanskrit} here does not mean "subsequent to the study of the Vedas", because it is contrary to proof that the study of the Upanishad is not permissible without the previous study of the Vedic Mantras and Brahmanas and because there is no intrinsic sequence between the Vedic Karma-kanda and Vedic Jnana-kanda. It is evident, therefore, that one may attain to the knowledge of Brahman without having studied the ceremonial parts of the Vedas.

¹¹⁸ ?Shankaracharya in his commentary on the Vedanta-Sutras, I. iii. 34-37, interprets the aphorisms to prove that Upanishadic wisdom was imparted to Janashruti and Satyakama, only because they were not Shudras, as borne out by actual texts. But as these texts are doubtful even after Shankaracharya's explanation, Swamiji wants to be referred to other similar Vedic texts.

¹¹⁹ ?"The Shudra is not conceived of as a performer of Yajna or Vedic sacrifices."

¹²⁰ ?"Now then commences hence the inquiry about Brahman."

1 So if there is no sequence between the sacrificial practices and 2 Jnana, why does the Acharya contradict his own statement when it 3 is a case of the Shudras, by inserting the clause "by force of the 4 same logic"? Why should the Shudra not study the Upanishad?

5 I am mailing you, sir, a book named Imitation of Christ
6 written by a Christian Sannyasin. It is a wonderful book. One is 7 astonished to find that such renunciation, Vairagya, and Dasya-
8 Bhakti have existed even among the Christians. Probably you may 9 have read this book before; if not, it will give me the greatest 10 pleasure if you will kindly read it.

17 17th Aug.,

18 1889

19 {original in Bengali}

20 Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

21 You have expressed embarrassment in your last favour for 22 being addressed reverentially. But the blame attaches not to me but 23 to your own excellent qualities. I wrote in one letter before that 24 from the way I feel attracted by your lofty virtues, it seems we had 25 some affinity from previous births. I make no distinction as to 26 householder or Sannyasin in this, that for all time my head shall 27 bend low in reverence wherever I see greatness, broadness of 28 heart, and holiness--Shantih! Shantih! Shantih! My prayer is that 29 among the many people embracing Sannyasa nowadays, greedy of 30 honour, posing renunciation for the sake of a living, and fallen off 31 from the ideal on both sides, may one in a lakh at least become 32 high-souled like you! To you my Brahmin fellow-disciples who have 33 heard of your noble virtues tender their best prostrations.

34 About one amongst my several questions to which you sent 35 your replies, my wrong idea is corrected. For this I shall remain 36 indebted to you for ever. Another of these questions was: Whether 37 Acharya Shankara gives any conclusion regarding caste based on 38 Gunas as mentioned in Puranas like the Mahabharata. If he does, 39 where is it to be found? I have no doubt that according to the 40 ancient view in this country, caste was hereditary, and it cannot also 41 be doubted that sometimes the Shudras used to be oppressed more 42 than the helots among the Spartans and the negroes among the 43 Americans! As for myself, I have no partiality for any party in this 44 caste question, because I know it is a social law and is based on 45 diversity of Guna and Karma. It also means grave harm if one bent 46 on going beyond Guna and Karma cherishes in mind any caste 47 distinctions. In these matters, I have got some settled ideas through 48 the grace of my Guru but, if I come to know of your views, I may

1 just confirm some points or rectify others in them. One doesn't have 2 honey dripping unless one pokes at the hive--so I shall put you some 3 more questions; and looking upon me as ignorant and as a boy, 4 please give proper replies without taking any offence.

5 1. Is the Mukti, which the Vedanta-Sutras speaks of, one and 6 the same with the Nirvana of the Avadhuta-Gita and other texts?

7 2. What is really meant by Nirvana if, according to the 8 aphorism, "Without the function of creating etc."¹²¹ (ibid., IV.iv.7), 9 none can attain to the fullest Godhead?

10 3. Chaitanya-deva is said to have told Sarvabhauma at Puri, "I 11 understand the Sutras (aphorisms) of Vyasa, they are dualistic; but 12 the commentator makes them, monistic, which I don't understand." 13 Is this true? Tradition says, Chaitanya-deva had a dispute with 14 Prakashananda Sarasvati on the point, and Chaitanya-deva won.
15 One commentary by Chaitanya-deva was rumoured to have been 16 existing in Prakashananda's Math.

17 4. In the Tantra, Acharya Shankara has been called a crypto-
18 Buddhist; views expressed in Prajnaparamita, the Buddhist 19 Mahayana book, perfectly tally with the Vedantic views propounded 20 by the Acharya. The author of Panchadashi also says, "What we call 21 Brahman is the same truth as the Shunya of the Buddhist." What 22 does all this mean?

23 5. Why has no foundation for the authority of the Vedas been 24 adduced in the Vedanta-Sutras? First, it has been said that the 25 Vedas are the authority for the existence of God, and then it has 26 been argued that the authority for the Vedas is the text: "It is the 27 breath of God." Now, is this statement not vitiated by what in 28 Western logic is called an argument in a circle?

29 6. The Vedanta requires of us faith, for conclusiveness cannot 30 be reached by mere argumentation. Then why, has the slightest 31 flaw, detected in the position of the schools of Sankhya and Nyaya, 32 been overwhelmed with a fusillade of dialectics? In whom, 33 moreover, are we to put our faith? Everybody seems to be mad over 34 establishing his own view; if, according to Vyasa, even the great 35 Muni Kapila, "the greatest among perfected souls",¹²² is himself

1 ¹²¹ ?" {Sanskrit} "--"Having regard to the context which ascribes the threefold 2 function relating to the universe only to God, and because the fact of their 3 conscious mental distinction comes between that function and their liberated 4 state, we have to conclude that the state of final liberation or Mukti in the case of 5 men is devoid of the capacity to create, preserve, and dissolve the universe." So if 6 this capacity is reserved only for God, what is meant, Swamiji asks, by saying that 7 in Nirvana the human merges completely into the Divine?

8 We must remember that many of the questions here reflect the intellectual stages 9 through which Swamiji was reaching out in those days towards that plentitude of 10 Vedantic wisdom which was his in future years. We also find a glimpse of those 11 processes through which his intellect was growing towards a fuller 12 understanding of our ancient scriptures and customs.
13

14 ¹²² ?Kapila is so spoken of in Shvetashvatara Upanishad, V.2. In his commentary 15 of Vedanta-Sutras, II. i. 1, Shankara doubts the identity of the Vedic Kapila with 16 the Sankhyan Kapila.
17

1 deeply involved in error, then who would say that Vyasa may not be 2 so involved in a greater measure? Did Kapila fail to understand the 3 Vedas?

4 7. According to the Nyaya, "Shabda or Veda (the criterion of 5 truth), is the word of those who have realised the highest"; so the 6 Rishis as such are omniscient. Then how are they proved, according 7 to the Surya-siddhanta, to be ignorant of such simple astronomical 8 truths? How can we accept their intelligence as the refuge to ferry 9 us across the ocean of transmigratory existence, seeing that they 10 speak of the earth as triangular, of the serpent Vasuki as the 11 support of the earth and so on?

12 8. If in His acts of creation God is dependent on good and evil
13 Karmas, then what does it avail us to worship Him? There is a fine 14 song of Nareshchandra, where occurs the following: "If what lies in 15 one's destiny is to happen anyhow, O Mother, then what good all 16 this invoking by the holy name of Durga?"

17 9. True, it is improper to hold many texts on the same subject 18 to be contradicted by one or two. But why then are the long-19 continued customs of Madhuparka¹²³ and the like repealed by one 20 or two such texts as, "The horse sacrifice, the cow sacrifice, 21 Sannyasa, meat-offerings in Shraddha", etc.? If the Vedas are 22 eternal, then what are the meaning and justification of such 23 specifications as "this rule of Dharma is for the age of Dvapara," 24 "this for the age of Kali", and so forth?

25 10. The same God who gives out the Vedas becomes Buddha
26 again to annul them; which of these dispensations is to be obeyed?
27 Which of these remains authoritative, the earlier or the later one?

28 11. The Tantra says, in the Kali-Yuga the Veda-Mantras are 29 futile. So which behest of God, the Shiva, is to be followed?

30 12. Vyasa makes out in the Vedanta-Sutras that it is wrong to 31 worship the tetrad of divine manifestation, Vasudeva, Sankarshana, 32 etc., and again that very Vyasa expatiates on the great merits of 33 that worship in the Bhagavata ! Is this Vyasa a madman?

34 I have many doubts besides these, and, hoping to have them
35 dispelled from my mind through your kindness, I shall lay them 36 before you in future. Such questions cannot be all set forth except 37 in a personal interview; neither can as much satisfaction be 38 obtained as one expects to. So I have a mind to lay before you all 39 these facts when presenting myself to you, which I expect will be 40 very soon, by the grace of the Guru.

41 I have heard it said that without inner progress in the 42 practice of religion, no true conclusion can be reached concerning

1 ¹²³ Madhuparka was a Vedic ceremony, usually in honour of guest, in which a 2 respectful offering was made consisting, among other dainties, of beef. The text 3 which Swamiji partially quotes forbids such food. The full text means that in the 4 Kali-Yuga the following five customs are to be forsaken: the horse sacrifice, cow-5 killing ceremonies, meat-offerings in Shraddha, Sannyasa, and maintaining the 6 line of progeny through the husband's younger brother in case of failure through 7 the husband.
8

1 these matters, simply by means of reasoning; but satisfaction, at 2 least to some extent, seems to be necessary at the outset.

3 Yours etc.,

4 Vivekananda

14 Some days ago I received your two kind letters. I am very 15 much pleased to find in you a wonderful harmony of Jnana and 16 Bhakti. Your advice to me to give up arguing and disputing is very 17 true indeed, and that is really the goal of life for the 18 individual--"Sundered are the knots of the heart, torn off are all his 19 doubts, and the seeds of his Karma wear off, when the sight of the 20 Transcendent One is gained."¹²⁴ But then, as my Master used to say, 21 when a pitcher is being filled (by immersion), it gurgles, but when 22 full, it is noiseless; know my condition to be the same. Within two or 23 pamphlet written by you. A kind of scientific Advaitism has been 24 spreading in Europe ever since the theory of the conservation of 25 energy was discovered, but all that is Parinamavada, evolution by 26 real modification. It is good you have shown the difference between 27 this and Shankara's Vivartavada (progressive manifestation by 28 unreal superimposition). I can't appreciate your citing Spencer's 29 parody on the German transcendentalists; he himself is fed much

16 Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

17 I wrote in a letter to you that I was to go to Varanasi in a day
18 or two, but who can nullify the decree of Providence? News 19 reached me that a brother-disciple, Yogen by name, had been 20 attacked with smallpox after arriving here from a pilgrimage to 21 Chitrakuta, Omkarnath, etc., and so I came to this place to nurse
22 him. He has now completely recovered. Some Bengali gentlemen 23 here are of a greatly pious and loving disposition. They are very 24 lovingly taking care of me, and their importunate desire is that I 25 should stay here during the month of Magha (Jan.-Feb.) keeping the 26 Kalpa vow. But my mind is very keenly harping on the name of 27 Varanasi and is quite agog to see you. Yes, I am going to try my best 28 to slip away and avoid their importunities in a day or two and 29 betake myself to the holy realm of the Lord of Varanasi. If one of my 30 monastic brother-disciples, Achyutananda Saraswati by name, calls 31 on you to enquire of me, please tell him I am soon coming to 32 Varanasi. He is indeed a very good man and learned. I was obliged 33 to leave him behind at Bankipore. Are Rakhal and Subodh still there 34 in Varanasi? Please inquire and inform me whether the Kumbha fair 35 this year is going to be held at Hardwar or not.

36 Many a man of wisdom, of piety, many a Sadhu (holy man) 37 and Pundit have I met in so many places, and I have been very 38 much favoured by them, but {Sanskrit}--"Men are of varying 39 tastes"--Raghuvamsham. I know not what sort of soul-affinity there 40 is between us, for nowhere else does it seem so pleasing and 41 agreeable as with you. Let me see how the Lord of Kashi disposes.

Salutation to Shri

Ramakrishna!

Allahabad

5th January,

1890

My dear Sir {Sj. Balaram Bose},

I am very sorry to hear of your illness from your kind note. The gist of the letter I wrote to you about your change to Baidyanath was that it would be impossible for a man of weak and extremely delicate physique like you to live in that place unless you spent a good deal of money. If change be really advisable for you, and if you have deferred it so long simply to select a cheaper place and that sort of thing, it is certainly a matter of regret. . . . Baidyanath is excellent so far as the air is concerned, but the water is not good, it upsets the stomach. I used to suffer from acidity every day. I have already written you a letter; have you got it, or finding it a bearing letter, have you left it to its fate? In my opinion, if you have to go away for a change, the sooner the better. But, pardon me, you have a tendency to expect that everything should fit in exactly with your requirements, but unfortunately, such a state of things is very rare in this world. "{Sanskrit}--One must save oneself under any circumstances." "Lord have mercy", is all right, but He helps him who helps himself. If you simply try to save your purse, will the Lord arrange the change for you by drawing on His ancestral capital? If you think you have so much reliance on the Lord, don't call in the doctor, please. . . . If that does not suit you, you should go to Varanasi. I would have already left this place, but the local gentlemen would not give me leave to depart! . . . But let me repeat once more, if change is actually decided upon, please do not hesitate out of miserliness. That would be suicide. And not even God can save a suicide. Please convey my compliments to Tulasi Babu and the rest.

With best regards,

Yours

affectionately,

Vivekananda

{original in Bengali}

Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

1 I reached Ghazipur three days ago. Here I am putting up in 2 the house of Babu Satish Chandra Mukherji, a friend of my early 3 age. The place is very pleasant. Close by flows the Ganga, but 4 bathing there is troublesome, for there is no regular path, and it is 5 hard work wading through sands. Babu Ishan Chandra Mukherji, 6 my friend's father, that noble-hearted man of whom I spoke to you, 7 is here. Today he is leaving for Varanasi whence he will proceed to 8 Calcutta. I again had a great mind to go over to Kashi, but the 9 object of my coming here, namely, an interview with the Babaji, has 10 not yet been realised, and hence the delay of a few days becomes 11 necessary. Everything here appears good. The people are all 12 gentlemen, but very much Westernised; and it is a pity I am so 13 thoroughly against every affectation of the Western idea. Only my 14 friend very little affects such ideals. What a frippery civilisation is it 15 indeed that the foreigners have brought over here! What a 16 materialistic illusion have they created! May Vishvanatha save 17 these weak-hearted! After seeing Babaji, I shall send you a detailed 18 account.

19 Yours etc.,

20 Vivekananda

30 Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

31 It is so very difficult to meet the Babaji. He does not step out 32 of his home; and, when willing to speak at all, he just comes near 33 the door to speak from inside. I have come away with having just a 34 view of his garden-house with chimneys tapering above and 35 encircled by high walls--no means of admittance within! People say 36 there are cave-like rooms within where he dwells; and he only 37 knows what he does there, for nobody has had a peep. I had to 38 come away one day sorely used up with waiting and waiting, but 39 shall take my chance again. On Sunday, I leave for holy Varanasi-- 40 only the Babus here won't let me off; otherwise all my fancy to see 41 the Babaji has flattened down. I am prepared to be off today, but 42 anyhow, I am leaving on Sunday. What of your plan of going to

Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

Received your kind note, and through supreme good fortune, I have obtained an interview with Babaji. A great sage indeed!--It is all very wonderful, and in this atheistic age, a towering representation of marvellous power born of Bhakti and Yoga! I have sought refuge in his grace; and he has given me hope--a thing very few may be fortunate enough to obtain. It is Babaji's wish that I stay on for some days here, and he would do me some good. So following this saint's bidding I shall remain here for some time. No doubt, this will give you also much pleasure. I don't mention them in a letter, but the facts are very strange indeed--to be disclosed when we meet. Unless one is face to face with the life of such men, faith in the scriptures does not grow in all its real integrity.

Yours etc.,
Vivekananda

Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

I feel very happy to hear from you just now. Apparently in his features, the Babaji is a Vaishnava, the embodiment, so to speak, of Yoga, Bhakti, and humility. His dwelling has walls on all sides with a few doors in them. Inside these walls, there is one long underground burrow wherein he lays himself up in Samadhi. He talks to others only when he comes out of the hole. Nobody knows what he eats, and so they call him Pavhari Baba. Once he did not come out of the hole for five years, and people thought he had given up the body. But now again he is out. But this time he does not show himself to people and talks from behind the door. Such sweetness in speech I have never come across! He does not give a direct reply to questions but says, "What does this servant know?" But then fire comes out as the talking goes on. On my pressing him very much he said, "Favour me highly by staying here some days." But he never speaks in this way; so from this I understood he meant to reassure me; and whenever I am importunate, he asks me to stay on. So I wait in hope. He is a learned man no doubt but nothing in

1 the line betrays itself. He performs scriptural ceremonials, for from 2 the full-moon day to the last day of the month, sacrificial oblations 3 go on. So it is sure, he is not retiring into the hole during this 4 period. How can I ask his permission, for he never gives a direct 5 reply; he goes on multiplying such expressions as "this servant",
6 "my fortune", and so on. If you yourself have a mind, then come 7 sharp on receipt of this note. Or after his passing away, the keenest 8 regret will be left in your mind. In two days you may return after an 9 interview--I mean a talk with him ab intra. My friend Satish Babu 10 will receive you most warmly. So, do come up directly you receive 11 this; I shall meanwhile let Babaji know of you.

12 Yours etc.,

23 Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

24 I am in anxiety to hear of your illness. I am also having some 25 sort of a pain in the loins which, being aggravated of late, gives 26 much trouble. For two days I could not go out to meet Babaji, and 27 so a man came from him to inquire about me. For this reason, I go 28 today. I shall convey your countless compliments. "Fire comes out"-- 29 that is, a wonderful devotion to Guru and resignation are revealed; 30 and such amazing endurance and humility I have never seen.
31 Whatever good things I may come by, sure, you have your share in

15 Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

16 I wrote a letter to brother Gangadhar asking him to stop his 17 wandering and settle down somewhere and to send me an account 18 of the various Sadhus he had come across in Tibet and their ways 19 and customs. I enclose the reply that came from him. Brother Kali is 20 having repeated attacks of fever at Hrishikesh. I have sent him a 21 wire from this place. So if from the reply I find I am wanted by him, 22 I shall be obliged to start direct for Hrishikesh from this place, 23 otherwise I am coming to you in a day or two. Well, you may smile, 24 sir, to see me weaving all this web of Maya--and that is no doubt the 25 fact. But then there is the chain of iron, and there is the chain of 26 gold. Much good comes of the latter; and it drops off by itself when 27 all the good is reaped. The sons of my Master are indeed the great 28 objects of my service, and here alone I feel I have some duty left for 29 me. Perhaps I shall send brother Kali down to Allahabad or 30 somewhere else, as convenient. At your feet are laid a hundred and 31 one faults of mine--"I am as thy son, so guide me who have taken 32 refuge in thee {Gita, II.7}".

41 February,

43 {original in Bengali}

44 Beloved Akhandananda,

1 Very glad to receive your letter. What you have written about 2 Tibet is very promising, and I shall try to go there once. In Sanskrit 3 Tibet is called the Uttarakuruvarsha, and is not a land of 4 Mlechchhas. Being the highest tableland in the world, it is 5 extremely cold, but by degrees one may become accustomed to it.
6 About the manners and customs of the Tibetans you have written 7 nothing. If they are so hospitable, why did they not allow you to go 8 on? Please write everything in detail, in a long letter. I am sorry to 9 learn that you will not be able to come, for I had a great longing to 10 see you. It seems that I love you more than all others. However, I 11 shall try to get rid of this Maya too.

12 The Tantrika rites among the Tibetans that you have spoken 13 of arose in India itself, during the decline of Buddhism. It is my 14 belief that the Tantras, in vogue amongst us, were the creation of 15 the Buddhists themselves. Those Tantrika rites are even more 16 dreadful than our doctrine of Vamachara; for in them adultery got a 17 free rein, and it was only when the Buddhists became demoralised 18 through immorality that they were driven away by Kumarila Bhatta.
19 As some Sannyasins speak of Shankara, or the Bauls of Shri 20 Chaitanya, that he was in secret an epicure, a drunkard, and one 21 addicted to all sorts of abominable practices--so the modern 22 Tantrika Buddhists speak of the Lord Buddha as a dire Vamachari 23 and give an obscene interpretation to the many beautiful precepts 24 of the Prajnaparamita, such as the Tattvagatha and the like. The 25 result of all this has been that the Buddhists are divided into two 26 sects nowadays; the Burmese and the Sinhalese have generally set 27 the Tantras at naught, have likewise banished the Hindu gods and 28 goddesses, and at the same time have thrown overboard the 29 Amitabha Buddha held in regard among the Northern School of 30 Buddhists. The long and the short of it is that the Amitabha Buddha 31 and the other gods whom the Northern School worship are not 32 mentioned in books like the Prajnaparamita, but a lot of gods and 33 goddesses are recommended for worship. And the Southern people 34 have willfully transgressed the Shastras and eschewed the gods
35 and goddesses. The phase of Buddhism which declares "Everything 36 for others", and which you find spread throughout Tibet, has greatly 37 struck modern Europe. Concerning that phase, however, I have a 38 good deal to say--which it is impossible to do in this letter. What 39 Buddha did was to break wide open the gates of that very religion 40 which was confined in the Upanishads to a particular caste. What 41 special greatness does his theory of Nirvana confer on him? His 42 greatness lies in his unrivalled sympathy. The high orders of 43 Samadhi etc., that lend gravity to his religion are, almost all there 44 in the Vedas; what are absent there are his intellect and heart, 45 which have never since been paralleled throughout the history of 46 the world.

47 The Vedic doctrine of Karma is the same as in Judaism and all 48 other religions, that is to say, the purification of the mind through 49 sacrifices and such other external means--and Buddha was the first 50 man who stood against it. But the inner essence of the ideas 51 remained as of old--look at that doctrine of mental exercises which 52 he preached, and that mandate of his to believe in the Suttas

1 instead of the Vedas. Caste also remained as of old (caste was not 2 wholly obsolete at the time of Buddha), but it was now determined 3 by personal qualifications; and those that were not believers in his 4 religion were declared as heretics, all in the old style. "Heretic" was 5 a very ancient word with the Buddhists, but then they never had 6 recourse to the sword (good souls!) and had great toleration.
7 Argument blew up the Vedas. But what is the proof of your religion?
8 Well, put faith in it! --the same procedure as in all religions. It was 9 however an imperative necessity of the times; and that was the 10 reason of his having incarnated himself. His doctrine is like that of 11 Kapila. But that of Shankara, how far more grand and rational!
12 Buddha and Kapila are always saying the world is full of grief and 13 nothing but that--flee from it--ay, for your life, do! Is happiness 14 altogether absent here? It is a statement of the nature of what the 15 Brahmos say--the world is full of happiness! There is grief, forsooth, 16 but what can be done? Perchance some will suggest that grief itself 17 will appear as happiness when you become used to it by constant 18 suffering. Shankara does not take this line of argument. He says: 19 This world is and is not --manifold yet one; I shall unravel its 20 mystery--I shall know whether grief be there, or anything else; I do 21 not flee from it as from a bugbear. I will know all about it--as to the 22 infinite pain that attends its search, well, I am embracing it in its 23 fullest measure. Am I a beast that you frighten me with happiness 24 and misery, decay and death, which are but the outcome of the 25 senses? I will know about it--will give up my life for it. There is 26 nothing to know about in this world--therefore, if there be anything 27 beyond this relative existence--what the Lord Buddha has 28 designated as Prajnapara --the transcendental--if such there be, I 29 want that alone. Whether happiness attends it or grief, I do not 30 care. What a lofty idea! How grand! The religion of Buddha has 31 reared itself on the Upanishads, and upon that also the philosophy
32 of Shankara. Only, Shankara had not the slightest bit of Buddha's 33 wonderful heart, dry intellect merely! For fear of the Tantras, for 34 fear of the mob, in his attempt to cure a boil, he amputated the very 35 arm itself!¹²⁵ One has to write a big volume if one has to write about 36 them at all--but I have neither the learning nor the leisure for it.

37 The Lord Buddha is my Ishta--my God. He preached no theory 38 about Godhead--he was himself God, I fully believe it. But no one 39 has the power to put a limit to God's infinite glory. No, not even God 40 Himself has the power to make Himself limited. The translation of 41 the Gandara-Sutta that you have made from the Suttanipata, is 42 excellent. In that book there is another Sutta --the Dhaniya-Sutta -- 43 which has got a similar idea. There are many passages in the 44 Dhammapada too, with similar ideas. But that is at the last stage 45 when one has got perfectly satisfied with knowledge and

1 ¹²⁵ ?In his anxiety to defend the purity of the Vedic religion against the excesses
2 of Tantrikism, which was capturing the rank and file of his countrymen, Shankara 3 neglected the problem of the latter, stigmatised as Shudras by the Vedicists. This 4 is perhaps the meaning of Swamiji. It seems he could never forgive Sankara for 5 applying in his commentary on the Brahma-Sutras the old logic of forbidding 6 Vedic rituals to the Shudras to the more modern question of their right to higher 7 modes of worship (Upasana) and knowledge (Jnana) of the Jnana-kanda.
8

1 realisation, is the same under all circumstances and has gained 2 mastery over his senses--{Sanskrit} (Gita, VI.8.). He who has not 3 the least regard for his body as something to be taken care of--it is 4 he who may roam about at pleasure like the mad elephant caring
5 for naught. Whereas a puny creature like myself should practice 6 devotion, sitting at one spot, till he attains realisation; and then only 7 should he behave like that; but it is a far-off question--very far 8 indeed.

9 {Sanskrit} (Vivekachudmani, 538-40)

10 --To a knower of Brahman food comes of itself, without effort-- 11 he drinks wherever he gets it. He roams at pleasure everywhere--he 12 is fearless, sleeps sometimes in the forest, sometimes in a 13 crematorium and, treads the Path which the Vedas have taken but 14 whose end they have not seen. His body is like the sky; and he is 15 guided, like a child, by others' wishes; he is sometimes naked, 16 sometimes in gorgeous clothes, and at times has only Jnana as his 17 clothing; he behaves sometimes like a child, sometimes like a 18 madman, and at other times again like a ghoul, indifferent to 19 cleanliness.

20 I pray to the holy feet of our Guru that you may have that 21 state, and you may wander like the rhinoceros.

Ghazipur,
3rd March,

1890

Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

Your kind letter comes to hand just now. You know not, sir, I am a very soft-natured man in spite of the stern Vedantic views I hold. And this proves to be my undoing. At the slightest touch I give myself away; for howsoever I may try to think only of my own good, I slip off in spite of myself to think of other peoples' interests. This time it was with a very stern resolve that I set out to pursue my own good, but I had to run off at the news of the illness of a brother at Allahabad! And now comes this news from Hrishikesh, and my mind has run off with me there. I have wired to Sharat, but no reply yet--a nice place indeed to delay even telegrams so much! The lumbago obstinately refuses to leave me, and the pain is very great. For the last few days I haven't been able to go to see Pavhariji, but out of his kindness he sends every day for my report. But now I see the whole matter is inverted in its bearings! While I myself have come, a beggar, at his door, he turns round and wants to learn of me! This saint perhaps is not yet perfected--too much of rites, vows, observances, and too much of self-concealment. The ocean in its fullness cannot be contained within its shores, I am sure. So it is not good, I have decided not to disturb this Sadhu (holy man) for nothing, and very soon I shall ask leave of him to go. No help, you see; Providence has dealt me my death to make me so tender! Babaji does not let me off, and Gagan Babu (whom probably you know--an upright, pious, and kind-hearted man) does not let me off. If the wire in reply requires my leaving this place, I go; if not, I am coming to you at Varanasi in a few days. I am not going to let you off--I must take you to Hrishikesh--no excuse or objections will do. What are you saying about difficulties there of keeping clean? Lack of water in the hills or lack of room!! Tirthas (places of pilgrimage) and Sannyasins of the Kali Yuga--you know what they are. Spend money and the owners of temples will fling away the installed god to make room for you; so no anxiety about a resting-place! No trouble to face there, I say; the summer heat has set in there now, I believe, though not that degree of it as you find at Varanasi--so much the better. Always the nights are quite cool there, from which good sleep is almost a certainty.

Why do you get frightened so much? I stand guarantee that you shall return home safe and that you shall have no trouble anywhere. It is my experience that in this British realm no fakir or householder gets into any trouble.

Is it a mere idle fancy of mine that between us there is some connection from previous birth? Just see how one letter from you sweeps away all my resolution and, I bend my steps towards Varanasi leaving all matters behind! . . .

I have written again to brother Gangadhar and have asked him this time to return to the Math. If he comes, he will meet you.

1 How is the climate at Varanasi now? By my stay here I have been 2 cured of all other symptoms of malaria, only the pain in the loins 3 makes me frantic; day and night it is aching and chafes me very 4 much. I know not how I shall climb up the hills. I find wonderful 5 endurance in Babaji, and that's why I am begging something of him;
6 but no inkling of the mood to give, only receiving and receiving! So 7 I also fly off.

8 Yours etc.,

9 Vivekananda

10 PS. To no big person am I going any longer--"Remain, O mind, 11 within yourself, go not to anybody else's door; whatever you seek, 12 you shall obtain sitting at your ease, only seek for it in the privacy 13 of your heart. There is the supreme Treasure, the philosophers' 14 stone, and He can give whatever you ask for; for countless gems, O 15 mind, lie strewn about the portals of His abode. He is the wishing-16 stone that confers boons at the mere thought." Thus says the poet 17 Kamalakanta.

18 So now the great conclusion is that Ramakrishna has no peer; 19 nowhere else in this world exists that unprecedented perfection, 20 that wonderful kindness for all that does not stop to justify itself, 21 that intense sympathy for man in bondage. Either he must be the 22 Avatara as he himself used to say, or else the ever-perfected divine 23 man, whom the Vedanta speaks of as the free one who assumes a 24 body for the good of humanity. This is my conviction sure and 25 certain; and the worship of such a divine man has been referred to 26 by Patanjali in the aphorism: "Or the goal may be attained by 27 meditating on a saint."¹²⁶

28 Never during his life did he refuse a single prayer of mine; 29 millions of offences has he forgiven me; such great love even my 30 parents never had for me. There is no poetry, no exaggeration in all 31 this. It is the bare truth and every disciple of his knows it. In times 32 of great danger, great temptation, I wept in extreme agony with the 33 prayer, "O God, do save me," but no response came from anybody; 34 but this wonderful saint, or Avatara, or anything else he may be, 35 came to know of all my affliction through his powers of insight into 36 human hearts and lifted it off--in spite of my desire to the contrary-- 37 after getting me brought to his presence. If the soul be deathless, 38 and so, if he still lives, I pray to him again and again: "O Bhagavan 39 Ramakrishna, thou infinite ocean of mercy and my only refuge, do 40 graciously fulfil the desires of my esteemed friend, who is every 41 inch a great man." My he impart to you all good, he whom alone I 42 have found in this world to be like an ocean of unconditioned 43 mercy! Shantih, Shantih, Shantih.

44 Please send a prompt reply.

45 Yours etc.,

46 Vivekananda

1 ¹²⁶ ?Patanjali's aphorism has "Ishvara" in place of "saint". Narda has an 2 aphorism which runs thus: Bhakti (Supreme Love) is attainable chiefly through 3 the grace of a saint, or by a bit of Divine Grace.

Salutation to Bhagavan

Ramakrishna!

Ghazipur,
March, 1890

Beloved Akhandananda,

Very glad to receive your letter yesterday. I am at present staying with the wonderful Yogi and devotee of this place, called Pavhariji. He never comes out of his room and holds conversations with people from behind the door. Inside the room there is a pit in which he lives. It is rumoured that he remains in a state of Samadhi for months together. His fortitude is most wonderful. Our Bengal is the land of Bhakti and of Jnana, where Yoga is scarcely so much as talked of even. What little there is, is but the queer breathing exercises of the Hatha-Yoga--which is nothing but a kind of gymnastics. Therefore I am staying with this wonderful Raja-Yogi--and he has given me some hopes, too. There is a beautiful bungalow in a small garden belonging to a gentleman here; I mean to stay there. The garden is quite close to Babaji's cottage. A brother of the Babaji stays there to look after the comforts of the Sadhus, and I shall have my Bhiksha at his place. Hence, with a view to seeing to the end of this fun, I give up for the present my plan of going to the hills. For the last two months I have had an attack of lumbago in the waist, which also makes it impossible to climb the hills now. Therefore let me wait and see what Babaji will give me.

1 My motto is to learn whatever good things I may come across
2 anywhere. This leads many friends to think that it will take away 3 from my devotion to the Guru. These ideas I count as those of 4 lunatics and bigots. For all Gurus are one and are fragments and 5 radiations of God, the Universal Guru.

6 If you come to Ghazipur, you have but to inquire at Satish 7 Babu's or Gagan Babu's at Gorabazar, and you know my 8 whereabouts. Or, Pavhari Baba is so well-known a person here that 9 everyone will inform you about his Ashrama at the very mention of 10 his name, and you have only to go there and inquire about the 11 Paramahamsa, and they will tell you of me. Near Moghul Sarai 12 there is a station named Dildarnagar, where you have to change to 13 a short branch railway and get down at Tarighat, opposite 14 Ghazipur; then you have to cross the Ganga to reach Ghazipur.

15 For the present, I stay at Ghazipur for some days, and wait 16 and see what the Babaji does. If you come, we shall stay together at 17 the said bungalow for some time, and then start for the hills, or for 18 any other place we may decide upon. Don't, please, write to anyone 19 at Baranagore that I am staying at Ghazipur.

20 With blessings and best wishes,

21 Ever yours,

22 Vivekananda

28 Ghazipur,

29 March, 1890

30 {original in Bengali}

31 Beloved Akhandananda,

32 Received another letter of yours just now, and with great 33 difficulty deciphered the scribblings. I have written everything in 34 detail in my last letter. You start immediately on receipt of this. I 35 know the route to Tibet via Nepal that you have spoken of. As they 36 don't allow anyone to enter Tibet easily, so they don't allow anybody 37 to go anywhere in Nepal, except Katmandu, its capital, and one or 38 two places of pilgrimage. But a friend of mine is now a tutor to His 39 Highness the Maharaja of Nepal, and a teacher in his school, from 40 whom I have it that when the Nepal government send their subsidy 41 to China, they send it via Lhasa. A Sadhu contrived in that way to 42 go to Lhasa, China, Manchuria, and even to the holy seat of Tara 43 Devi in North China. We, too, can visit with dignity and respect 44 Tibet, Lhasa, China, and all, if that friend of mine tries to arrange it.
45 You therefore start immediately for Ghazipur. After a few days' stay 46 here with the Babaji, I shall correspond with my friend, and, 47 everything arranged, I shall certainly go to Tibet via Nepal.

You have to get down at Dildarnagar to come to Ghazipur. It is three or four stations from Moghul Sarai. I would have sent you the passage if I could have collected it here; so you get it together and come. Gagan Babu with whom I am putting up, is an exceedingly courteous, noble, and generous-minded man. No sooner did he come to know of Kali's illness than he sent him the passage at Hrishikesh; he has besides spent much on my account. Under the circumstances it would be violating a Sannyasin's duty to tax him for the passage to Kashmir, and I desist from it. You collect the fare and start as soon as you receive this letter. Let the craze for visiting Amarnath be put back for the present.

Yours

affectionately,

Vivekananda

Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

I haven't been here for the last few days and am again going away today. I have asked brother Gangadhar to come here; and if he comes, we go over to you together. For some special reasons, I shall continue to stay in secret in a village some distance from this place, and there's no facility for writing any letter from that place, owing to which I could not reply to your letter so long. Brother Gangadhar is very likely to come, otherwise the reply to my note would have reached me. Brother Abhedananda is putting up with Doctor Priya at Varanasi. Another brother of mine had been with me, but has left for Abhedananda's place. The news of his arrival has not yet been received, and, his health being bad, I am rather anxious for his sake. I have behaved very cruelly towards him--that is, I have harassed him much to make him leave my company. There's no help, you see; I am so very weak-hearted, so much overmastered by the distractions of love! Bless me that I may harden. What shall I say to you about the condition of my mind! Oh, it is as if the hell-fire is burning there day and night! Nothing, nothing could I do yet! And this life seems muddled away in vain; I feel quite helpless as to what to do! The Babaji throws out honeyed words and keeps me from leaving. Ah, what shall I say? I am committing hundreds of offences against you--please excuse them as so many misdoings of a man driven mad with mental agonies. Abhedananda is suffering from dysentery. I shall be very much obliged if you will kindly inquire about his condition and send him down to our Math in case he wants to go there with our brother who has come from here. My Gurubhais must be thinking me very cruel and selfish. Oh, what can I do? Who will see deep down into my mind? Who will know how much I am suffering day and night?

1 Bless me that I may have the most unflinching patience and 2 perseverance.

3 With countless greetings,

4 Yours etc.,

5 Vivekananda.

6 PS. Abhedananda is staying in Doctor Priya's house at 7 Sonarpura. My lumbago is as before.

17 My Dear Kali {Abhedananda},

18 Glad to receive your letter as well as Pramada Babu's and 19 Baburam's (Premananda's). I am doing pretty well here. You have 20 expressed a desire to see me. I too have a similar longing, and it is 21 this that makes me afraid of going. Moreover, the Babaji forbids me 22 to do so. I shall try to go on a few days' leave from him. But there is 23 this fear that by so doing I shall be drawn up to the hills by the 24 attraction I have for Hrishikesh, and it will be very difficult to shake 25 it off, specially for one weak-minded, you see, like myself. The 26 attack of lumbago, too, will not leave me on any account--a 27 botheration! But then I am getting used to it. Please convey my 28 countless salutations to Pramada Babu; his is a friendship which 29 greatly benefits both my mind and body. And I am particularly 30 indebted to him. Things will turn up some way, anyhow.

31 With best wishes,

15 Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

16 I could not write to you because of various distractions and a 17 relapse of fever. Glad to learn from Abhedananda's letter that you 18 are doing well. Gangadhar (Akhandananda) has probably arrived at 19 Varanasi by this time. King Death happens here to be casting into 20 his jaws these days many of our friends and own people, hence I am 21 very much taken up. Perhaps no letter for me has arrived there 22 from Nepal. I know not how and when Vishvanatha (the Lord of 23 Kashi) would choose to vouchsafe some rest to me. Directly the hot 24 weather relaxes a little, I am off from this place, but I am still at a 25 loss where to go. Do please pray for me to Vishvanatha that He may 26 grant me strength. You are a devotee, and I beseech you with the 27 Lord's words coming to my mind, "Those who are the devoted ones 28 to My devotees, are indeed considered the best of My devotees."

37 26th May, 1890

38 {original in Bengali}

39 Dear Sir {Pramadadas Mitra},

40 I write this to you while caught in a vortex of many untoward 41 circumstances and great agitation of mind; with a prayer to 42 Vishvanatha, please think of the propriety and possibility, or 43 otherwise, of all that I set forth below and then oblige me greatly by 44 a reply.

1 1. I already told you at the outset that I am Ramakrishna's
2 slave, having laid my body at his feet "with Til and Tulasi leaves", I 3 cannot disregard his behest. If it is in failure that that great sage 4 laid down his life after having attained to superhuman heights of 5 Jnana, Bhakti, Love, and powers, and after having practised for 6 forty years stern renunciation, non-attachment, holiness, and great 7 austerities, then where is there anything for us to count on? So I am 8 obliged to trust his words as the words of one identified with truth.

9 2. Now his behest to me was that I should devote myself to 10 the service of the order of all-renouncing devotees founded by him, 11 and in this I have to persevere, come what may, being ready to take 12 heaven, hell, salvation, or anything that may happen to me.

13 3. His command was that his all-renouncing devotees should 14 group themselves together, and I am entrusted with seeing to this.
15 Of course, it matters not if any one of us goes out on visits to this 16 place or that, but these shall be but visits, while his own opinion 17 was that absolute homeless wandering suited him alone who was 18 perfected to the highest point. Before that state, it is proper to 19 settle somewhere to dive down into practice. When all the ideas of 20 body and the like are dissolved of themselves, a person may then 21 pursue whatever state comes to him. Otherwise, it is baneful for a 22 practising aspirant to be always wandering.

23 4. So in pursuance of this his commandment, his group of 24 Sannyasins are now assembled in a dilapidated house at 25 Baranagore, and two of his lay disciples, Babu Suresh Chandra 26 Mitra and Babu Balaram Bose, so long provided for their food and 27 house-rent.

28 5. For various reasons, the body of Bhagavan Ramakrishna 29 had to be consigned to fire. There is no doubt that this act was very 30 blamable. The remains of his ashes are now preserved, and if they 31 be now properly enshrined somewhere on the banks of the Ganga, I 32 presume we shall be able in some measure to expiate the sin lying 33 on our head. These sacred remains, his seat, and his picture are 34 every day worshipped in our Math in proper form; and it is known 35 to you that a brother-disciple of mine, of Brahmin parentage, is 36 occupied day and night with the task. The expenses of the worship 37 used also to be borne by the two great souls mentioned above.

38 6. What greater regret can there be than this that no 39 memorial could yet be raised in this land of Bengal in the very 40 neighbourhood of the place where he lived his life of Sadhana--he 41 by whose birth the race of Bengalees has been sanctified, the land 42 of Bengal has become hallowed, he who came on earth to save the 43 Indians from the spell of the worldly glamour of Western culture 44 and who therefore chose most of his all-renouncing disciples from 45 university men?

46 7. The two gentlemen mentioned above had a strong desire to 47 have some land purchased on the banks of the Ganga and see the 48 sacred remains enshrined on it, with the disciples living there 49 together; and Suresh Babu had offered a sum of Rs. 1,000 for the 50 purpose, promising to give more, but for some inscrutable purpose
51 of God he left this world yesternight! And the news of Balaram

1 Babu's death is already known to you.

2 8. Now there is no knowing as to where his disciples will 3 stand with his sacred remains and his seat (and you know well, 4 people here in Bengal are profuse in their professions, but do not 5 stir out an inch in practice). The disciples are Sannyasins and are 6 ready forthwith to depart anywhere their way may lie. But I, their 7 servant, am in an agony of sufferings, and my heart is breaking to 8 think that a small piece of land could not be had in which to install 9 the remains of Bhagavan Ramakrishna.

10 9. It is impossible with a sum of Rs. 1,000 to secure land and 11 raise a temple near Calcutta. Some such land would at least cost 12 about five to seven thousands.

13 10. You remain now the only friend and patron of Shri 14 Ramakrishna's disciples. In the North-Western Province great 15 indeed is your fame, your position, and your circle of acquaintance.
16 I request you to consider, if you feel like it, the propriety of your 17 getting the affair through by raising subscriptions from well-to-do 18 pious men known to you in your province. If you deem it proper to 19 have some shelter erected on the banks of the Ganga in Bengal for 20 Bhagavan Ramakrishna's sacred remains and for his disciples, I 21 shall with your leave report myself to you, and I have not the 22 slightest qualm to beg from door to door for this noble cause, for 23 the sake of my Lord and his children. Please give this proposal your 24 best thoughts with prayers to Vishvanatha. To my mind, if all these 25 sincere, educated, youthful Sannyasins of good birth fail to live up 26 to the ideals of Sri Ramakrishna owing to want of an abode and 27 help, then alas for our country!

28 11. If you ask, "You are a Sannyasin, so why do you trouble 29 over these desires?" --I would then reply, I am Ramakrishna's 30 servant, and I am willing even to steal and rob, if by doing so I can 31 perpetuate his name in the land of his birth and Sadhana (spiritual 32 struggle) and help even a little his disciples to practise his great 33 ideals. I know you to be my closest in kinship, and I lay my mind 34 bare to you. I returned to Calcutta for this reason. I had told you 35 this before I left, and now I leave it to you to do what you think 36 best.

37 12. If you argue that it is better to have the plan carried out 38 in some place like Kashi, my point is, as I have told you, it would be 39 the greatest pity if the memorial shrine could not be raised in the 40 land of his birth and Sadhana! The condition of Bengal is pitiable.
41 The people here cannot even dream what renunciation truly 42 means--luxury and sensuality have been so much eating into the 43 vitals of the race! May God send renunciation and unworldliness 44 into this land! They have here nothing to speak of, while the people 45 of the North-Western Province, specially the rich there as I believe, 46 have great zeal in noble causes like this. Please send me such reply 47 as you think best. Gangadhar has not yet arrived today, and may do 48 so tomorrow. I am so eager to see him again.

49 Please write to the address given above.

Calcutta

Baghbazar,

July 6, 1890

Dear Sharat {Saradananda} and Kripananda,

Your letters have duly reached us. They say Almora is healthiest at this time of the year, yet you are taken ill! I hope it is nothing malarious. . . .

I find Gangadhar the same pliant child with his turbulence moderated by his wanderings, and with a greater love for us and for our Lord. He is bold, brave, sincere, and steadfast. The only thing needed is a guiding mind to whom he would instinctively submit with reverence, and a fine man would be the result.

I had no wish to leave Ghazipur this time, and certainly not to come to Calcutta, but Kali's illness made me go to Varanasi, and Balaram's sudden death brought me to Calcutta. So Suresh Babu and Balaram Babu are both gone! G.C. Ghosh is supporting the Math. . . . I intend shortly, as soon as I can get my fare, to go up to Almora and thence to some place in Gharwal on the Ganga where I can settle down for a long meditation. Gangadhar is accompanying me. Indeed it was with this desire and intention that I brought him down from Kashmir.

I don't think you ought to be in any hurry about coming down to Calcutta. You have done with roving; that's good, but you have not yet attempted the one thing you should do, that is, be resolved to sit down and meditate. I don't think Jnana is a thing like rousing a maiden suddenly from sleep by saying, "Get up, dear girl, your marriage ceremony is waiting for you!" as we say. I am strongly of opinion that very few persons in any Yuga (age) attain Jnana, and therefore we should go on striving and striving even unto death. That's my old-fashioned way, you know. About the humbug of modern Sannyasins' Jnana I know too well. Peace be unto you and strength! Daksha, who is staying at Vrindaban with Rakhal (Brahmananda), has learnt to make gold and has become a pucca Jnani, so writes Rakhal. God bless him, and you may say, amen!

I am in fine health now, and the good I gained by my stay in Ghazipur will last, I am sure, for some time. I am longing for a flight to the Himalayas. This time I shall not go to Pavhari Baba or any other saint--they divert one from his highest purpose. Straight up!

How do you find the climate at Almora? Neither S__ nor you need come down. What is the use of so many living together in one place and doing no good to one's soul? Don't be fools always wandering from place to place; that's all very good, but be heroes.

{Sanskrit}

1 "Free from pride and delusion, with the evil of attachment
2 conquered, ever dwelling in the Self, with desires completely 3 receded, liberated from the pairs of opposites known as pleasure
4 and pain, the undeluded reach that Goal Eternal" (Gita, XV. 5).

5 Who advises you to jump into fire? If you don't find the 6 Himalayas a place for Sadhana, go somewhere else then. So many 7 gushing inquiries simply betray a weak mind. Arise, ye mighty one, 8 and be strong! Work on and on, struggle on and on! Nothing more 9 to write.

Dear Mother {Shrimati Indumati Mitra},

Very glad to receive your letter and that of dear Haripada. Please do not be sorry that I could not write to you very often. I am always praying to the Lord for your welfare. I cannot go to Belgaum now as arrangements are all ready for my starting for America on the 31st next. The Lord willing, I shall see you on returning from my travels in America and Europe. Always resign yourselves to the Lord Shri Krishna. Always remember that we are but puppets in the Lord's hands. Remain pure always. Please be careful not to become impure even in thought, as also in speech and action; always try to do good to others as far as in you lies. And remember that the paramount duty of a woman is to serve her husband by thought, word, and deed. Please read the Gita every day to the best of your opportunity. Why have you signed yourself as . . . Dasi (maidservant)? The Vaishya and the Shudra should sign as Dasa and Dasi, but the Brahmin and Kshatriya should write Deva and Devi (goddess). Moreover, these distinctions of caste and the like have been the invention of our modern sapient Brahmins. Who is a servant, and to whom? Everyone is a servant of the Lord Hari. Hence a woman should use her patronymic, that is, the surname of her husband. This is the ancient Vedic custom, as for example, such and such Mitra, or the like. It is needless to write much, dear mother; always know that I am constantly praying for your well-being. From America I shall now and then write you letters with descriptions of the wonderful things there. I am now at Bombay, and shall stay here up to the 31st. The private Secretary to the Maharaja of Khetri has come here to see me off.

With blessings,

sincerely,

America

1894

{To the Maharaja of Khetri}

. . . "It is not the building that makes the home, but it is the wife that makes it," says a Sanskrit poet, and how true it is! The

1 roof that affords you shelter from heat and cold and rain is not to be 2 judged by the pillars that support it--the finest Corinthian columns 3 though they be--but by the real spirit-pillar who is the centre, the 4 real support of the home--the woman. Judged by that standard, the 5 American home will not suffer in comparison with any home in the 6 world.

7 I have heard many stories about the American home: of 8 liberty running into licence, of unwomanly women smashing under 9 their feet all the peace and happiness of home-life in their mad
10 liberty-dance, and much nonsense of that type. And now after a 11 year's experience of American homes, of American women, how 12 utterly false and erroneous that sort of judgment appears!
13 American women! A hundred lives would not be sufficient to pay my 14 deep debt of gratitude to you! I have not words enough to express 15 my gratitude to you. "The Oriental hyperbole" alone expresses the 16 depth of Oriental gratitude--"If the Indian Ocean were an inkstand, 17 the highest mountain of the Himalaya the pen, the earth the scroll 18 and time itself the writeress well-to-do, and the camp people are 19 healthy, young, sincere, and holy men and women. I teach them 20 Shivo'ham, Shivo'ham, and they all repeat it, innocent and pure as 21 they are and brave beyond all bounds. And so I am happy and 22 glorified. Thank God for making me poor, thank God for making 23 these children in the tents poor. The Dudes and Dudines are in the 24 Hotel, but iron-bound nerves and souls of triple steel and spirits of 25 fire are in the camp. If you had seen them yesterday, when the rain 26 was falling in torrents and the cyclone was overturning everything, 27 hanging by their tent strings to keep them from being blown down, 28 and standing on the majesty of their souls--these brave ones--it 29 would have done your hearts good. I will go a hundred miles to see 30 the like of them. Lord bless them! I hope you are enjoying your nice 31 village life. Never be anxious for a moment. I will be taken care of, 32 and if not, I will know my time has come and shall pass out.

33 "Sweet One! Many people offer to You many things, I am 34 poor--but I have the body, mind, and soul. I give them over to You.
35 Deign to accept, Lord of the Universe, and refuse them not."--So 36 have I given over my life and soul once for all. One thing--they are a 37 dry sort of people here--and as to that very few in the whole world 38 are there that are not. They do not understand "Madhava", the 39 Sweet One. They are either intellectual or go after faith cure, table 40 turning, witchcraft, etc., etc. Nowhere have I heard so much about 41 "love, life, and liberty" as in this country, but nowhere is it less 42 understood. Here God is either a terror or a healing power, 43 vibration, and so forth. Lord bless their souls! And these parrots 44 talk day and night of love and love and love!

45 Now, good dreams, good thoughts for you. You are good and 46 noble. Instead of materialising the spirit, that is, dragging the 47 spiritual to the material plane as these folks do, convert the matter 48 into spirit, catch a glimpse at least, every day, of that world of 49 infinite beauty and peace and purity--the spiritual, and try to live in 50 it day and night. Seek not, touch not with your toes even, anything 51 that is uncanny. Let your souls ascend day and night like an 52 "unbroken string" unto the feet of the Beloved whose throne is in

1 your own hearts and let the rest take care of themselves, that is the 2 body and everything else. Life is evanescent, a fleeting dream; 3 youth and beauty fade. Say day and night, "Thou art my father, my 4 mother, my husband, my love, my lord, my God--I want nothing but 5 Thee, nothing but Thee, nothing but Thee. Thou in me, I in Thee, I 6 am Thee. Thou art me." Wealth goes, beauty vanishes, life flies, 7 powers fly--but the Lord abideth for ever, love abideth for ever. If 8 here is glory in keeping the machine in good trim, it is more 9 glorious to withhold the soul from suffering with the body--that is 10 the only demonstration of your being "not matter", by letting the 11 matter alone.

12 Stick to God! Who cares what comes to the body or to 13 anything else! Through the terrors of evil, say--my God, my love!
14 Through the pangs of death, say--my God, my love! Through all the 15 evils under the sun, say--my God, my love! Thou art here, I see 16 Thee. Thou art with me, I feel Thee. I am Thine, take me. Do not go 17 for glass beads leaving the mine of diamonds! This life is a great 18 chance. What, seekest thou the pleasures of the world?--He is the 19 fountain of all bliss. Seek for the highest, aim at that highest, and 20 you shall reach the highest.

21 Yours with all
22 blessings,

29 {original in Bengali}

30 Dear Brothers {Brother-disciples of Swamiji},

31 Before this I wrote to you a letter which for want of time was 32 very incomplete. Rakhal (Brahmananda) and Hari (Turiyananda) 33 wrote in a letter from Lucknow that Hindu newspapers were 34 praising me, and that they were very glad that twenty thousand 35 people had partaken of food at Shri Ramakrishna's anniversary. I 36 could do much more work but for the Brahmos and missionaries
37 who have been opposing me unceasingly, and the Hindus of India
38 too did nothing for me. I mean, if the Hindus of Calcutta or Madras 39 had held a meeting and passed a resolution recognising me as their 40 representative, and thanking the American people for receiving me 41 with kindness, things would have progressed appreciably. But it is 42 over a year, and nothing done. Of course I never relied on the 43 Bengalis, but the Madrasis couldn't do anything either. . . .

44 There is no hope for our nation. Not one original idea crosses 45 anyone's brains, all fighting over the same old, threadbare rug--that 46 Ramakrishna Paramahansa was such and such--and cock-and-bull
47 stories--stories having neither head nor tail. My God! Won't you do 48 something to show that you are in any way removed from the 49 common run of men!--Only indulging in madness! . . . Today you

1 have your bell, tomorrow you add a horn, and follow suit with a 2 chowry the day after; or you introduce a cot today, and tomorrow
3 you have its legs silver-mounted, and people help themselves to a 4 rice-porridge, and you spin out two thousand cock-and-bull stories--
5 in short, nothing but external ceremonials. This is called in English 6 imbecility. Those into whose heads nothing but that sort of silliness 7 enters are called imbecile.

8 Those whose heads have a tendency to be troubled day and 9 night over such questions as whether the bell should ring on the 10 right or on the left, whether the sandalpaste mark should be put on 11 the head or anywhere else, whether the light should be waved 12 twice or four times--simply deserve the name of wretches, and it is 13 owing to that sort of notion that we are the outcasts of Fortune, 14 kicked and spurned at, while the people of the West are masters of 15 the whole world. . . . There is an ocean of difference between 16 idleness and renunciation.

17 If you want any good to come, just throw your ceremonials 18 overboard and worship the Living God, the Man-God--every being 19 that wears a human form--God in His universal as well as individual 20 aspect. The universal aspect of God means this world, and 21 worshipping it means serving it--this indeed is work, not indulging 22 in ceremonials. Neither is it work to cogitate as to whether the rice-23 plate should be placed in front of the God for ten minutes or for half 24 an hour--that is called lunacy. Millions of rupees have been spent 25 only that the temple-doors at Varanasi or Vrindaban may play at 26 opening and shutting all day long! Now the Lord is having His 27 toilet, now He is taking His meals, now He is busy on something 28 else we know not what. . . . And all this, while the Living God is 29 dying for want of food, for want of education! The banias of Bombay 30 are erecting hospitals for bugs--while they would do nothing for 31 men even if they die! You have not the brain to understand this 32 simple thing--that it is a plague with our country, and lunatic 33 asylums are rife all over. . . . Let some of you spread like fire, and 34 preach this worship of the universal aspect of the Godhead--a thing 35 that was never undertaken before in our country. No quarrelling 36 with people, we must be friends with all. . . .

37 Spread ideas--go from village to village, from door to door-- 38 then only there will be real work. Otherwise, lying complacently on 39 the bed and ringing the bell now and then is a sort of disease, pure 40 and simple. . . . Be independent, learn to form independent 41 judgments. --That such and such a chapter of such and such a 42 Tantra has prescribed a standard length for the handle of a bell,-- 43 what matters it to me? Through the Lord's will, out of your lips shall 44 come millions of Vedas and Tantras and Puranas. . . . If now you can 45 show this in practice, if you can make three or four hundred 46 thousand disciples in India within a year, then only I may have some 47 hope. . . .

48 By the bye, you know the boy who had his head shaven and 49 went with Brother Tarak from Bombay to Rameswaram? He calls
50 himself a disciple of Ramakrishna Paramahansa! Let Brother Tarak 51 initiate him. . . . He had never even met Shri Ramakrishna in his 52 life, and yet a disciple!--What impudence! Without an unbroken

1 chain of discipleship--Guruparampara--nothing can be done. Is it a
2 child's play? To have no connection whatsoever and call oneself a 3 disciple! The idiot! If that boy refuses to go on in the right way, turn 4 him out. Nothing, I say, can be done without the chain of 5 discipleship, that is, the power that is transmitted from the Guru to 6 the disciple, and from him to his disciple, and so on. Here he comes 7 and proclaims himself a disciple of Ramakrishna--is it tomfoolery?
8 Jagamohan told me of somebody calling himself a brother-disciple
9 of mine. I have now a suspicion that it is that boy. To pose as a 10 brother-disciple! He feels humiliated to call himself a disciple, I 11 dare say, and would fain turn a Guru straightway! Turn him out if 12 he does not follow the established procedure.

13 Talking of the restlessness of Tulasi (Nirmalananda) and 14 Subodh (Subodhananda) it all means that they have got no work to 15 do. . . . Go from village to village, do good to humanity and to the 16 world at large. Go to hell yourself to buy salvation for others. There 17 is no Mukti on earth to call my own. Whenever you think of yourself, 18 you are bound to feel restless. What business have you to do with 19 peace, my boy? You have renounced everything. Come! Now is the 20 turn for you to banish the desire for peace, and that for Mukti too!
21 Don't worry in the least; heaven or hell, or Bhakti or Mukti--don't 22 care for anything, but go, my boy, and spread the name of the Lord
23 from door to door! It is only by doing good to others that one attains 24 to one's own good, and it is by leading others to Bhakti and Mukti 25 that one attains them oneself. Take that up, forget your own self for 26 it, be mad over the idea. As Shri Ramakrishna used to love you, as I 27 love you, come, love the world like that. Bring all together. Where is 28 Gunanidhi? You must have him with you. My infinite love to him.
29 Where is Gupta (Sadananda)? Let him join if he likes. Call him in my 30 name. Remember these few points:

31 1. We are Sannyasins, who have given up everything--Bhakti, 32 and Mukti, and enjoyment, and all.

33 2. To do the highest good to the world, everyone down to the 34 lowest--this is our vow. Welcome Mukti or hell, whichever comes of 35 it.

36 3. Ramakrishna Paramahansa came for the good of the 37 world. Call him a man, or God, or an Incarnation, just as you please.
38 Accept him each in your own light.

39 4. He who will bow before him will be converted into purest 40 gold that very moment. Go with this message from door to door, if 41 you can, my boy, and all your disquietude will be at an end. Never 42 fear--where's the room for fear?--Caring for nothing whatsoever is a 43 part of your life. You have so long spread his name and your 44 character all around, well and good. Now spread them in an 45 organised way. The Lord is with you. Take heart!

46 Whether I live or die, whether I go back to India or not, you 47 go on spreading love, love that knows no bounds. Put Gupta too to 48 this task. But remember one needs weapons to overcome others.
49 "{Sanskrit}"--When death is so certain, it is better to die for a good 50 cause."

1 Yours affly.,
2 Vivekananda

3 PS. Remember my previous letter--we want both men and 4 women. There is no distinction of sex in the soul. It won't do merely 5 to call Shri Ramakrishna an Incarnation, you must manifest power.
6 Where are Gour-Ma, Yogin-Ma, and Golap-Ma? Tell them to spread
7 these ideas. We want thousands of men and thousands of women
8 who will spread like wild fire from the Himalayas to Cape Comorin, 9 from the North Pole to the South Pole--all over the world. It is no 10 use indulging in child's play--neither is there time for it. Let those 11 who have come for child's play be off now, while there is time, or 12 they will surely come to grief. We want an organisation. Off with 13 laziness. Spread! Spread! Run like fire to all places. Do not depend 14 upon me. Whether I live or die, go on spreading, yourselves.

24 Dear Mother Sara {Mrs. Ole Bull},

25 I did not forget you at all. You do not think I will be ever as 26 ungrateful as that! You did not give me your address, still I have 27 been getting news about you from Landsberg through Miss Phillips.
28 Perhaps you have seen the memorial and address sent to me from 29 Madras. I sent some to be sent to you at Landsberg's.

30 A Hindu son never lends to his mother, but the mother has 31 every right over the son and so the son in the mother. I am very 32 much offended at your offering to repay me the nasty few dollars. I 33 can never repay my debts to you.

34 I am at present lecturing in several places in Boston. What I 35 want is to get a place where I can sit down and write down my 36 thoughts. I have had enough of speaking; now I want to write. I 37 think I will have to go to New York for it. Mrs. Guernsey was so 38 kind to me, and she is ever willing to help me. I think I will go to her 39 and sit down and write my book.

40 Yours ever
41 affectionately,

42 Vivekananda

My Dear--, {meant for his brother-disciples}

Glad to receive some letters from you. It gives me great pleasure to learn that Shashi and others are making a stir. We must create a stir, nothing short of this will do. You will be throwing the whole world into convulsion. Victory to the Guru! You know, "{Sanskrit}--Great undertakings are always fraught with many obstacles." It is these obstacles which knock and shape great characters. . . . Is it in the power of missionaries and people of that sort to withstand this shock? . . . Should a fool succeed where scholars have failed? It is no go, my boy, set your mind at ease about that. In every attempt there will be one set of men who will applaud, and another who will pick holes. Go on doing your own work, what need have you to reply to any party? "{Sanskrit}--Truth alone triumphs, not falsehood. Through Truth lies Devayana, the path of gods" (Mundaka, III.i.6). Everything will come about by degrees.

Here in summer they go to the seaside: I also did the same. They have got almost a mania for boating and yachting. The yacht is a kind of light vessel which everyone, young and old, who has the means, possesses. They set sail in them every day to the sea, and return home, to eat and drink and dance--while music continues day and night. Pianos render it a botheration to stay indoors!

I shall now tell you something of the Hales to whose address you direct my letters. He and his wife are an old couple, having two daughters, two nieces, and a son. The son lives abroad where he earns a living. The daughters live at home. In this country, relationship is through the girls. The son marries and no longer belongs to the family, but the daughter's husband pays frequent visits to his father-in-law's house. They say,

"Son is son till he gets a wife;

The daughter is daughter all her life."

All the four are young and not yet married. Marriage is a very troublesome business here. In the first place, one must have a husband after one's heart. Secondly, he must be a moneyed man. . . . They will probably live unmarried; besides, they are now full of renunciation through my contact and are busy with thoughts of Brahman!

The two daughters are blondes, that is, have golden hair, while the two nieces are brunettes, that is, of dark hair. They know all sorts of occupations. The nieces are not so rich, they conduct a kindergarten school; but the daughters do not earn. Many girls of this country earn their living. Nobody depends upon others. Even millionaires' sons earn their living; but they marry and have separate establishments of their own. The daughters call me

1 brother; and I address their mother as mother. All my things are at 2 their place; and they look after them, wherever I may go. Here the 3 boys go in search of a living while quite young; and the girls are 4 educated in the universities. So you will find that in a meeting there 5 will be ninety-nine per cent of girls. The boys are nowhere in 6 comparison with them.

7 There are a good many spiritualists in this country. The 8 medium is one who induces the spirit. He goes behind a screen; and 9 out of this come ghosts of all sizes and all colours. I have witnessed 10 some cases; but they seemed to be a hoax. I shall test some more 11 before I come to a final conclusion. Many of the spiritualists respect 12 me.

13 Next comes Christian Science. They form the most influential 14 party, nowadays, figuring everywhere. They are spreading by leaps 15 and bounds, and causing heart-burn to the orthodox. They are 16 Vedantins; I mean, they have picked up a few doctrines of the 17 Advaita and grafted them upon the Bible. And they cure diseases by 18 proclaiming "So'ham So'ham"--"I am He! I am He!"--through 19 strength of mind. They all admire me highly.

20 Nowadays the orthodox section of this country are crying for 21 help. "Devil worship" is but a thing of the past. They are mortally 22 afraid of me and exclaim, "What a pest? Thousands of men and 23 women follow him! He is going to root out orthodoxy!" Well, the 24 torch has been applied and the conflagration that has set in through 25 the grace of the Guru will not be put out. In course of time the 26 bigots will have their breath knocked out of them. . . .

27 The Theosophists have not much power. But they, too, are 28 dead set against the orthodox section.

29 The Christian Science is exactly like our Kartabhaja sect: Say, 30 "I have no disease", and you are whole; and say, "I am 31 He"--"So'ham"--and you are quits--be at large. This is a thoroughly 32 materialistic country. The people of this Christian land will 33 recognise religion if only you can cure diseases, work miracles, and 34 open up avenues to money; and they understand little of anything 35 else. But there are honourable exceptions. . . .

36 People here have found a new type of man in me. Even the 37 orthodox are at their wit's end. And people are now looking up to 38 me with an eye of reverence. Is there a greater strength than that 39 of Brahmacharya--purity, my boy?

40 I am now busy writing a reply to the Madras Address, which 41 was published in all the newspapers here and created a sensation.
42 If it be cheap, I shall send it in print, but if dear, I shall send a type-43 written copy. To you also I shall send a copy; have it published in 44 the Indian Mirror. The unmarried girls of this country are very good 45 and have a good deal of self-respect. . . . These (the people) are 46 come of Virochana's race. To them ministering to the body is a 47 great thing: they would trim and polish and give their whole 48 attention to that. A thousand instruments for paring nails, ten 49 thousand for hair-cutting, and who can count the varieties of dress 50 and toilet and perfumery? . . . They are good-natured, kind, and

1 truthful. All is right with them, but that enjoyment is their God. It is 2 a country where money flows like a river, with beauty as its ripple
3 and learning its waves, and which rolls in luxury.

4 {Sanskrit}

5 --"Longing for success in action, in this world, (men) worship
6 the deities. For success is quickly attained through action in this 7 world of man" (Gita, IV.12).

8 Here you have a wonderful manifestation of grit and power-- 9 what strength, what practicality, and what manhood! Horses huge 10 as elephants are drawing carriages that are as big as houses. You 11 may take this as a specimen of the gigantic proportions in other 12 things also. Here is a manifestation of tremendous energy. . . . They 13 look with veneration upon women, who play a most prominent part 14 in their lives. Here this form of worship has attained its perfection-- 15 that is the long and the short of it. But to come to the point. Well, I 16 am almost at my wit's end to see the women of this country! They 17 take me to the shops and everywhere, as if I were a child. They do 18 all sorts of work--I cannot do even a sixteenth part of what they do.
19 They are like Lakshmi (the Goddess of Fortune), in beauty, and like 20 Sarasvati (the Goddess of Learning) in virtues--they are the Divine 21 Mother incarnate and worshipping them, one verily attains 22 perfection in everything. Great God! Are we to be counted among 23 men? If I can raise a thousand such Madonnas, Incarnations of the 24 Divine Mother, in our country before I die, I shall die in peace. Then 25 only will your countrymen become worthy of their name. . . .

26 I am really struck with wonder to see the women here. How 27 gracious the Divine Mother is on them! Most wonderful women, 28 these! They are about to corner the men, who have been nearly 29 worsted in the competition. It is all through Thy grace, O Mother! . .
30 . I shall not rest till I root out this distinction of sex. Is there any 31 sex-distinction in the Atman (Self)? Out with the differentiation 32 between man and woman--all is Atman! Give up the identification 33 with the body, and stand up! Say, "Asti, Asti"--"Everything is!"-- 34 cherish positive thoughts. By dwelling too much upon "Nasti, 35 Nasti"--"It is not! It is not!" (negativism), the whole country is going 36 to ruin! "So'ham, So'ham, Shivo'ham"--"I am He! I am He! I am 37 Shiva!" What a botheration! In every soul is infinite strength; and 38 should you turn yourselves into cats and dogs by harbouring
39 negative thoughts? Who dares to preach negativism? Whom do you 40 call weak and powerless? "Shivo'ham, Shivo'ham"--"I am Shiva! I 41 am Shiva!" I feel as if a thunderbolt strikes me on the head when I 42 hear people dwell on negative thoughts. That sort of self-43 depreciating attitude is another name for disease--do you call that 44 humility? It is vanity in disguise! "{Sanskrit}--The external badge 45 does not confer spirituality. It is same-sightedness to all beings 46 which is the test of a liberated soul." "{Sanskrit} (It is, It is)," 47 "{Sanskrit}," "{Sanskrit}"--"I am He!", "I am Shiva, of the essence 48 of Knowledge and Bliss!" "{Sanskrit}--He frees himself from the 49 meshes of this world as a lion from its cage!" "{Sanskrit}--This 50 Atman is not accessible to the weak". . . . Hurl yourselves on the 51 world like an avalanche--let the world crack in twain under your 52 weight! Hara! Hara! Mahadeva! {Sanskrit}--One must save the self

1 by one's own self"--by personal prowess.

2 . . . Will such a day come when this life will go for the sake of 3 other's good? The world is not a child's play--and great men are 4 those who build highways for others with their heart's blood. This 5 has been taking place through eternity, that one builds a bridge by 6 laying down his own body, and thousands of others cross the river
7 through its help. "{Sanskrit}--Be it so! Be it so! I am Shiva! I am 8 Shiva!"

9 It is welcome news that Madras is in a stir.

10 Were you not going to start a paper or something of that sort, 11 what about that? We must mix with all, and alienate none. All the 12 powers of good against all the powers of evil--this is what we want.
13 Do not insist upon everybody's believing in our Guru. . . . You shall 14 have to edit a magazine, half Bengali and half Hindi--and if possible, 15 another in English. . . . It won't do to be roaming aimlessly.
16 Wherever you go, you must start a permanent preaching centre.
17 Then only will people begin to change. I am writing a book. As soon 18 as it is finished, I run for home! . . . Always remember that Shri 19 Ramakrishna came for the good of the world--not for name or fame.
20 Spread only what he came to teach. Never mind his name--it will 21 spread of itself. Directly you insist on everybody's accepting your 22 Guru, you will be creating a sect, and everything will fall to the 23 ground--so beware! Have a kind word for all--it spoils work to show 24 temper. Let people say whatever they like, stick to your own 25 convictions, and rest assured, the world will be at your feet. They 26 say, "Have faith in this fellow or that fellow", but I say, "Have faith 27 in yourself first", that's the way. Have faith in yourself--all power is 28 in you--be conscious and bring it out. Say, "I can do everything."
29 "Even the poison of a snake is powerless if you can firmly deny it."
30 Beware! No saying "nay", no negative thoughts! Say, "Yea, Yea," 31 "So'ham, So'ham"--"I am He! I am He!"

32 {Sanskrit}

33 --"What makes you weep, my friend? In you is all power.
34 Summon up your all-powerful nature, O mighty one, and this whole 35 universe will lie at your feet. It is the Self alone that predominates, 36 and not matter."

37 To work, with undaunted energy! What fear! Who is powerful 38 enough to thwart you! "{Sanskrit}--We shall crush the stars to 39 atoms, and unhinge the universe. Don't you know who we are? We 40 are the servants of Shri Ramakrishna." Fear?

41 Whom to fear, forsooth?

42 {Sanskrit}

43 --"It is those foolish people who identify themselves with their 44 bodies, that piteously cry, 'We are weak, we are low.' All this is 45 atheism. Now that we have attained the state beyond fear, we shall 46 have no more fear and become heroes. This indeed is theism which 47 we, the servants of Shri Ramakrishna, will choose.

48 "Giving up the attachment for the world and drinking 49 constantly the supreme nectar of immortality, for ever discarding

1 that self-seeking spirit which is the mother of all dissension, and 2 ever meditating on the blessed feet of our Guru which are the 3 embodiment of all well-being, with repeated salutations we invite 4 the whole world to participate in drinking the nectar.

5 "That nectar which has been obtained by churning the infinite 6 ocean of the Vedas, into which Brahma, Vishnu, Shiva, and the 7 other gods have poured their strength, which is charged with the 8 life-essence of the Avataras--Gods Incarnate on earth--Shri 9 Ramakrishna holds that nectar in his person, in its fullest measure!"

10 We must work among the English educated young men.
11 "{Sanskrit}--Through renunciation alone some (rare ones) attained 12 immortality." Renunciation!--Renunciation!--you must preach this 13 above everything else. There will be no spiritual strength unless 14 one renounces the world. . . .

15 Why are Baburam and Yogen suffering so much? It is owing to 16 their negative, their self-abasing spirit. Tell them to brush aside 17 their illness by mental strength, and in an hour it will disappear! I 18 the Atman smitten with disease! Off with it! Tell them to meditate 19 for an hour at a stretch, "I am the Atman, how can I be affected by 20 disease!"--and everything will vanish. Think all of you that you are 21 the infinitely powerful Atman, and see what strength comes out. . . .
22 Self-depreciation! What is it for? I am the child of the Infinite, the 23 all-powerful Divine Mother. What means disease, or fear, or want to 24 me? Stamp out the negative spirit as if it were a pestilence, and it 25 will conduce to your welfare in every way. No negative, all positive, 26 affirmative. I am , God is , everything is in me. I will manifest 27 health, purity, knowledge, whatever I want. Well, these foreign 28 people could grasp my teachings, and you are suffering from illness 29 owing to your negative spirit! Who says you are ill--what is disease 30 to you? Brush it aside! "{Sanskrit}

31 {Sanskrit}--Thou art Energy, impart energy unto me. Thou 32 art Strength, impart strength unto me. Thou art Spirituality, impart 33 spirituality unto me. Thou art Fortitude, impart fortitude unto me!"
34 The ceremony of steadying the seat (Asana-Pratishtha) that you 35 perform every day when you sit down to worship the 36 Lord--"{Sanskrit}--One must think of oneself as strong and 37 invulnerable," and so forth--what does it all mean? Say, "Everything 38 is in me, and I can manifest it at will." Repeat to yourself that such 39 and such are Atman, that they are infinite, and how can they have 40 any disease? Repeat this an hour or so, on a few successive days, 41 and all disease and trouble will vanish into nought.

42 Yours ever,

1 Dear Mrs. Bull,

2 I have received both of your kind notes. I will have to go back
3 to Melrose on Saturday and remain there till Monday. On Tuesday I
4 will come over to your place. But I have forgotten the exact
5 location. If you kindly write me that, I cannot express my gratitude 6 for your kindness. For that is exactly what I wanted, a quiet place to 7 write. Of course, much less space will suffice me than what you
8 have kindly proposed to put at my disposal, I can bundle myself up 9 anywhere and feel quite comfortable.

10 Yours very

19 Dear--{Swami Ramakrishnananda},

20 Glad to receive your letter and go through the contents. I 21 received today a letter of Akshay Kumar Ghosh from London, which 22 also gives me some information. . . .

23 Now you have come to know your own powers. Strike the iron 24 while it is hot. Idleness won't do. Throw overboard all idea of 25 jealousy and egotism, once for all. Come on to the practical field 26 with tremendous energy; to work, in the fullness of strength! As to 27 the rest, the Lord will point out the way. The whole world will be 28 deluged by a tidal wave. Work, work, work--let this be your motto. I 29 cannot see anything else. There is no end of work here--I am 30 careering all over the country. Wherever the seed of his power will 31 find its way, there it will fructify--"{Sanskrit}--be it today, or in a 32 hundred years." You must work in sympathy with all, then only it 33 will lead to quick results. . . .

34 Our object is to do good to the world, and not the trumpeting
35 of our own names. Why doesn't Niranjan (Niranjanananda) learn 36 Pali in Ceylon, and study Buddhist books? I cannot make out what 37 good will come of aimless rambling. . . . Those that have come 38 under his protection, have virtue, wealth, desires, and freedom 39 lying at their feet. {Sanskrit}--Courage! Everything will come about 40 by degrees. From all of you I want this that you must discard for 41 ever self-aggrandisement, faction-mongering, and jealousy. You 42 must be all-forbearing, like Mother Earth. If you can achieve this, 43 the world will be at your feet. . . .

44 Try to give less of material food in the anniversary 45 celebrations, and give some food for the brain instead. . . .

47 affectionately,

Vivekananda

Dear Mrs. Bull,

Many thanks for your kindness in sending me the introduction to Mr. Frederic Douglas. You need not be sorry on account of the ill-treatment I received at the hands of a low class hotel-keeper at Baltimore. It was the fault of the Vrooman brothers. Why should they take me to a low hotel?

And then the American women, as everywhere, came to my rescue, and I had a very good time.

In Washington I am the guest of Mrs. E. Totten who is an influential lady here and a metaphysician. She is moreover the niece of one of my Chicago friends. So everything is going on all right. I also saw Mrs. Colville and Miss Young here.

With my eternal love and gratitude for you,

I remain,

Dear and Beloved {Dr. Nanjunda Rao},

Your beautiful letter just came to hand. I am so glad that you have come to know Shri Ramakrishna. I am very glad at the strength of your Vairagya. It is the one primary necessity in reaching God. I had always great hopes for Madras, and still I have the firm belief that from Madras will come the spiritual wave that will deluge India. I can only say Godspeed to your good intentions; but here, my son, are the difficulties. In the first place, no man ought to take a hasty step. In the second place, you must have some respect for the feelings of your mother and wife. True, you may say that we, the disciples of Ramakrishna, had not always shown great deference to the opinions of our parents. I know, and know for sure, that great things are done only by great sacrifices. I know for certain that India requires the sacrifice of her highest and best, and I sincerely hope that it will be your good fortune to be one of them.

1 Throughout the history of the world you find great men make 2 great sacrifices and the mass of mankind enjoy the benefit. If you
3 want to give up everything for your own salvation, it is nothing. Do 4 you want to forgo even your own salvation for the good of the 5 world? You are God, think of that. My advice to you is to live the life 6 of a Brahmacharin, i.e. giving up all sexual enjoyment for a certain 7 time live in the house of your father; this the "Kutichaka" stage. Try 8 to bring your wife to consent to your great sacrifice for the good of 9 the world. And if you have burning faith and all-conquering love and 10 almighty purity, I do not doubt that you will shortly succeed. Give 11 yourself body and soul to the work of spreading the teachings of 12 Shri Ramakrishna, for work (Karma) is the first stage. Study 13 Sanskrit diligently as well as practise devotion. For you are to be a 14 great teacher of mankind, and my Guru Maharaja used to say, "A 15 penknife is sufficient to commit suicide with, but to kill others one 16 requires guns and swords." And in the fullness of time it will be 17 given unto you when to go forth out of the world and preach His 18 sacred name. Your determination is holy and good. Godspeed to 19 you, but do not take any hasty step. First purify yourself by work 20 and devotion. India has suffered long, the Religion Eternal has 21 suffered long. But the Lord is merciful. Once more He has come to 22 help His children, once more the opportunity is given to rise to 23 fallen India. India can only rise by sitting at the feet of Shri 24 Ramakrishna. His life and his teachings are to be spread far and 25 wide, are to be made to penetrate every pore of Hindu society. Who 26 will do it? Who are to take up the flag of Ramakrishna and march 27 for the salvation of the world? Who are to stem the tide of 28 degeneration at the sacrifice of name and fame, wealth and 29 enjoyment--nay of every hope of this or other worlds? A few young 30 men have jumped in the breach, have sacrificed themselves. They 31 are a few; we want a few thousands of such as they, and they will 32 come. I am glad that our Lord has put it in your mind to be one of 33 them. Glory unto him on whom falls the Lord's choice. Your 34 determination is good, your hopes are high, your aim is the noblest 35 in the world--to bring millions sunk in darkness to the light of the 36 Lord.

37 But, my son, here are the drawbacks. Nothing shall be done
38 in haste. Purity, patience, and perseverance are the three essentials 39 to success and, above all, love. All time is yours, there is no 40 indecent haste. Everything will come right if you are pure and 41 sincere. We want hundreds like you bursting upon society and 42 bringing new life and vigour of the Spirit wherever they go.
43 Godspeed to you.

44 Yours with all
45 blessings,

46 Vivekananda

5 Dear Govinda Sahay,

6 Do you keep any correspondence with my Gurubhais of 7 Calcutta? Are you progressing morally, spiritually, and in your 8 worldly affairs? . . . Perhaps you have heard how for more than a 9 year I have been preaching Hindu religion in America. I am doing 10 very well here. Write to me as soon as you can and as often as you 11 like.

12 Yours with
13 love,

21 Dear Govinda Sahay,

22 . . . Honesty is the best policy, and a virtuous man must gain 23 in the end. . . You must always bear in mind, my son, that however 24 busy or however distant, or living with men however high in 25 position I may be, I am always praying, blessing, and remembering everyone of my friends, even the humblest.

40 My Dear__, {Swami Ramakrishnananda}

41 Very glad to receive your letter. I am very sorry to hear of 42 Mazoomdar's doings. One always behaves thus in trying to push 43 oneself before all others. I am not much to blame. M-- came here ten years ago, and got much reputation and honour; now I am in

1 flying colours. Such is the will of the Guru, what shall I do? It is 2 childishness on M--'s part to be annoyed at this. Never mind,
3 {Sanskrit}

4 {Sanskrit}--Great men like you should pay no heed to what he 5 says. Shall we, children of Shri Ramakrishna, nourished with his 6 heart's blood, be afraid of worm-bites? "The wicked criticise the 7 conduct of the magnanimous, which is extraordinary and whose 8 motives are difficult to fathom"--remember all this and forgive this 9 fool. It is the will of the Lord that people of this land have their 10 power of introspection roused, and does it lie in anybody to check 11 His progress? I want no name--I want to be a voice without a form. I 12 do not require anybody to defend me--{Sanskrit}--who am I to 13 check or to help the course of His march? And who are others also?
14 Still, my heartfelt gratitude to them. "{Sanskrit}--Established in 15 which state a man is not moved even by great misfortune" (Gita)-- 16 that state he has not reached; think of this and look upon him with 17 pity. Through the Lord's will, the desire for name and fame has not 18 yet crept into my heart, and I dare say never will. I am an 19 instrument, and He is the operator. Through this instrument He is 20 rousing the religious instinct in thousands of hearts in this far-off 21 country. Thousands of men and women here love and revere me. . . .
22 "{Sanskrit}--He makes the dumb eloquent and makes the lame 23 cross mountains." I am amazed at His grace. Whichever town I visit, 24 it is in an uproar. They have named me "the cyclonic Hindu".
25 Remember, it is His will--I am a voice without a form.

26 The Lord knows whether I shall go to England or any other 27 blessed place. He will arrange everything. Here a cigar costs one 28 rupee. Once you get into a cab, you have to pay three rupees; a coat 29 costs a hundred rupees; the hotel charge is nine rupees a day. The 30 Lord provides everything. . . . The Lord be praised, I know nothing.
31 "{Sanskrit}--Truth alone triumphs, not falsehood. Through Truth 32 alone lies the path of Devayana." You must be fearless. It is the 33 coward who fears and defends himself. Let no one amongst us come 34 forward to defend me. I get all news of Madras and Rajputana from 35 time to time. . . . There are eyes that can see at a distance of 36 fourteen thousand miles. It is quite true. Keep quiet now, everything 37 will see the light in time, as far as He wills it. Not one word of His 38 proves untrue. My brother, do men grieve over the fight of cats and 39 dogs? So the jealousy, envy, and elbowing of common men should 40 make no impression on your mind. For the last six months I have 41 been saying, the curtain is going up, the sun is rising. Yes, the 42 curtain is lifting by degrees, slow but sure; you will come to know it 43 in time. He knows. One cannot speak out one's mind. These are 44 things not for writing. . . . Never let go your hold of the rudder, 45 grasp it firm. We are steering all right, no mistaking that, but 46 landing on the other shore is only a question of time. That's all. Can 47 a leader be made my brother? A leader is born. Do you understand?
48 And it is a very difficult task to take on the role of a leader. --One 49 must be {Sanskrit}--a servant of servants, and must accommodate 50 a thousand minds. There must not be a shade of jealousy or 51 selfishness, then you are a leader. First, by birth, and secondly, 52 unselfish--that's a leader. Everything is going all right, everything

1 will come round. He casts the net all right, and winds it up likewise
2 {Sanskrit}--ours is but to follow; love is the best instrument. Love
3 conquers in the long run. It won't do to become impatient--wait, 4 wait--patience is bound to give success. . .

5 I tell you brother, let everything go on as it is, only take care 6 that no form becomes necessary--unity in variety--see that 7 universality be not hampered in the least. Everything must be 8 sacrificed, if necessary, for that one sentiment, universality.
9 Whether I live or die, whether I go back to India or not, remember 10 this specially, that universality--perfect acceptance, not tolerance 11 only--we preach and perform. Take care how you trample on the 12 least rights of others. Many a huge ship has foundered in that 13 whirlpool. Remember, perfect devotion minus its bigotry--this is 14 what we have got to show. Through His grace everything will go all 15 right. . . . Everybody wants to be a leader, but it is the failure to 16 grasp that he is born, that causes all this mischief. . . .

17 Our matrons are all hale and hearty, I hope? Where is Gour-
18 Ma? We want a thousand such Mothers with that noble stirring 19 spirit. . . . We want all. It is not at all necessary that all should have 20 the same faith in our Lord as we have, but we want to unite all the 21 powers of goodness against all the powers of evil. . . . A besetting 22 sin with Sannyasins is the taking pride in their monastic order. That 23 may have its utility during the first stages, but when they are full-24 grown, they need it no more. One must make no distinction 25 between householders and Sannyasins--then only one is a true
26 Sannyasin. . . .

27 A movement which half a dozen penniless boys set on foot 28 and which now bids fair to progress in such an accelerated motion-- 29 it is a humbug or the Lord's will? If it is, then let all give up party-30 spirit and jealousy, and unite in action. A universal religion cannot 31 be set up through party faction. . . .

32 If all understand one day for one minute that one cannot 33 become great by the mere wish, that he only rises whom He raises, 34 and he falls whom He brings down, then all trouble is at an end. But 35 there is that egotism--hollow in itself, and without the power to 36 move a finger: how ludicrous of it to say, "I won't let anyone rise!"
37 That jealousy, that absence of conjoint action is the very nature of 38 enslaved nations. But we must try to shake it off. The terrible 39 jealousy is characteristic of us. . . . You will be convinced of this if 40 you visit some other countries. Our fellows in this respect are the 41 enfranchised negroes of this country--if but one amongst them rises 42 to greatness, all the others would at once set themselves against 43 him and try to level him down by making a common cause with the 44 whites. . . .

45 At any cost, any price, any sacrifice, we must never allow that 46 to creep in among ourselves. Whether we be ten or two, do not 47 care, but those few must be perfect characters. . . . "It is not good 48 to ask of one's father if the Lord keeps His promise (to look after 49 His devotees)." And the Lord will do so, set your minds easy on 50 that score. . . . We must spread his name in Rajputana, Punjab, U.P., 51 Madras, and such other provinces--yes, in Rajputana, where still

1 there are people who can say, "Such has ever been the custom with 2 Raghu's line that they keep their word even at the cost of life."

3 A bird, in the course of its flight, reaches a spot whence it
4 looks on the ground below with supreme calmness. Have you 5 reached that spot? He who has not reached there has no right to 6 teach others. Relax your limbs and float with the current, and you 7 are sure to reach your destination.

8 Cold is making itself scarce by degrees, and I have been 9 almost through the winter. Here in winter the whole body becomes 10 charged with electricity. In shaking hands one feels a shock, 11 accompanied by a sound. You can light the gas with your finger. And 12 about the cold I have written to you already. I am coursing through 13 the length and breadth of the country, but Chicago is my "Math"
14 (monastery), where I always return after my wanderings. I am now 15 making for the east. He knows where the bark will reach the 16 shore. . . .

17 Has Dashu the same sort of love for you? Does he see you 18 frequently? How is Bhavanath, and what is he doing? Do you visit 19 him, and look upon him with an eye of regard? Yes, brother, the 20 distinction between Sannyasin and layman is a fiction. "{Sanskrit}" 21 etc.--"He makes the dumb fluent," etc. My friend, it is difficult to 22 judge what is in a particular individual. Shri Ramakrishna has 23 spoken highly of him; and he deserves our respect. Fie upon you if 24 you have no faith even after so much experience. Does he love you?
25 Please convey to him my hearty love and esteem. My love to 26 Kalikrishna Babu, he is a very noble soul. How is Ramlal? He has 27 got a little faith and devotion? My love and greetings to him. Sanyal 28 is moving all right with the mill, I suppose? Ask him to have 29 patience, and the mill will go on all right.

30 My heart's love to all.

31 32 love, Ever yours in

42 My dear Akhandananda,

43 I am very glad to receive your letter. It is a great pleasure to 44 me to learn that you have regained your health to a great extent by 45 your stay at Khetri.

46 Brother Tarak (Shivananda) has done a good deal of work in 47 Madras. Very agreeable news indeed! I heard much praise of him

1 from the people of Madras. . . .

2 Try to develop spirituality and philanthropy amongst the 3 Thakurs in the different places of Rajputana. We must work, and 4 this cannot be done by merely sitting idle. Make a trip now and 5 then to Malsisar, Alsisar, and all the other "sars" that are there. And 6 carefully learn Sanskrit and English. Gunanidhi is in the Punjab, I 7 presume. Convey my special love to him and bring him to Khetri.
8 Learn Sanskrit with his help, and teach him English. Let me have 9 his address by all means. . . .

10 Go from door to door amongst the poor and lower classes of 11 the town of Khetri and teach them religion. Also, let them have oral 12 lessons on geography and such other subjects. No good will come of 13 sitting idle and having princely dishes, and saying "Ramakrishna, O 14 Lord!"--unless you can do some good to the poor. Go to other 15 villages from time to time, and teach the people the arts of life as 16 well as religion. Work, worship, and Jnana (knowledge)--first work, 17 and your mind will be purified; otherwise everything will be 18 fruitless like pouring oblations on a pile of ashes instead of in the 19 sacred fire. When Gunanidhi comes, move from door to door of the 20 poor and the destitute in every village of Rajputana. If people object 21 to the kind of food you take, give it up immediately. It is preferable 22 to live on grass for the sake of doing good to others. The Gerua 23 robe is not for enjoyment. It is the banner of heroic work. You must 24 give your body, mind, and speech to "the welfare of the world". You 25 have read--"{Sanskrit}--Look upon your mother as God, look upon 26 your father as God"--but I say "{Sanskrit}--The poor, the illiterate, 27 the ignorant, the afflicted--let these be your God." Know that 28 service to these alone is the highest religion.

29 Ever yours, with
30 blessings,

31 Vivekananda

39 Dear and Beloved {brother-disciples at Alambazar
40 monastery},

41 Your letter gives me all the news over there. I am grieved to 42 hear of the bereavement Balaram Babu's wife has sustained. Such 43 is the Lord's will. This is a place for action, not enjoyment, and 44 everyone will go home when his task is done--some earlier, and 45 some later, that is all. Fakir has gone--well, such is the will of the 46 Lord!

47 It is a welcome news that Shri Ramakrishna's festival has 48 come off with great eclat; the more his name is spread, the better it

1 is. But there is one thing to know: Great sages come with special 2 messages for the world, and not for name; but their followers throw 3 their teachings overboard and fight over their names--this is verily 4 the history of the world. I do not take into any consideration
5 whether people accept his name or not, but I am ready to lay down 6 my life to help his teachings, his life, and his message spread all 7 over the world. What I am most afraid of is the worship room. It is 8 not bad in itself, but there is a tendency in some to make this all in 9 all and set up that old-fashioned nonsense over again--this is what 10 makes me nervous. I know why they busy themselves with those 11 old, effete ceremonials. Their spirit craves for work, but having no 12 outlet they waste their energy in ringing bells and all that.

13 I am giving you a new idea. If you can work it out, then I shall 14 know you are men and will be of service. . . . Make an organised 15 plan. A few cameras, some maps, globes, and some chemicals, etc., 16 are needed. The next thing you want is a big hut. Then you must get 17 together a number of poor, indigent folk. Having done all this, show 18 them pictures to teach them astronomy, geography, etc., and preach 19 Shri Ramakrishna to them. Try to have their eyes opened as to what 20 has taken place or is taking place in different countries, what this 21 world is like, and so forth. You have got lots of poor and ignorant 22 folk there. Go to their cottages, from door to door, in the evening, at 23 noon, any time--and open their eyes. Books etc., won't do--give them 24 oral teaching. Then slowly extend your centres. Can you do all this?
25 Or only bell-ringing?

26 I have heard everything about Brother Tarak from Madras.
27 They are highly pleased with him. Dear Brother Tarak, if you go to 28 Madras and live there for some time, a lot of work will be done. But 29 before you go, start this work there first. Can't the lady devotees 30 convert some widows into disciples? And can't you put a bit of 31 learning into their heads? And can't you then send them out to 32 preach Shri Ramakrishna from door to door, and impart education 33 along with it? . . .

34 Come! Apply yourselves heart and soul to it. The day of gossip
35 and ceremonials is gone, my boy, you must work now. Now, let me 36 see how far a Bengali's religion will go. Niranjan writes that Latu 37 (Adbhutananda) wants some warm clothing. The people here import 38 winter clothing from Europe and India. You will get a woollen wrap 39 in Calcutta at one-fourth of the price at which I might buy it here. . .
40 . I don't know when I shall go to Europe, everything is uncertain 41 with me--I am getting on somehow in this country, that is all.

42 This is a very funny country. It is now summer; this morning it 43 was as hot as April in Bengal, but now it is as cold as February at 44 Allahabad! So much fluctuation within four hours! The hotels of this 45 country beggar description. For instance, there is a hotel in New 46 York where a room can be hired for up to Rs. 5,000 a day, excluding 47 boarding charges. Not even in Europe is there a country like this in 48 point of luxury. It is indeed the richest country in the world, where 49 money is drained off like water. I seldom live in hotels, but am 50 mostly the guest of big people here. To them I am a widely known 51 man. The whole country knows me now; so wherever I go they 52 receive me with open arms into their homes. Mr. Hale's home is my

1 centre in Chicago. I call his wife mother, and his daughters call me
2 brother. I scarcely find a family so highly pure and kind. Or why 3 should God shower His blessings on them in such abundance, my 4 brother? Oh, how wonderfully kind they are! If they chance to learn 5 that a poor man is in a strait at such and such a place, there they 6 will go, ladies and gentlemen, to give him food and clothing, and 7 find him some job! And what do we do!

8 In summer they leave their homes to go to foreign lands, or to 9 the seaside. I, too, shall go somewhere, but have not yet fixed a 10 place. In other points, they are just as you see Englishmen. They 11 have got books and things of that sort, but very dear. You can have 12 five times those things in Calcutta for the same price. In other 13 words, these people will not let foreign goods be imported into the 14 country. They set a heavy tax on them, and as a result, the market 15 goes up enormously. Besides, they are not much in the way of 16 manufacturing clothing etc. They construct tools and machinery, 17 and grow wheat, rice, cotton, etc., which are fairly cheap.

18 By the bye, nowadays we have plenty of Hilsa fish here. Eat 19 your fill, but everything digests. There are many kinds of fruits; 20 plantain, lemon, guava, apple, almond, raisin, and grape are in 21 abundance; besides many other fruits come from California. There 22 are plenty of pineapples but there are no mangoes or lichis, or 23 things of that sort.

24 There is a kind of spinach, which, when cooked, tastes just 25 like our Note of Bengal, and another class, which they call 26 asparagus, tastes exactly like the tender Dengo herb, but you can't 27 have our Charchari made of it here.

28 There is no Kalai or any other pulse; they do not even know of 29 them. There is rice, and bread, and numerous varieties of fish and 30 meat, of all descriptions. Their menu is like that of the French.
31 There is your milk, rarely curd, but plenty of whey. Cream is an 32 article of everyday use. In tea and coffee and everything there is 33 that cream--not the hardened crust of boiled milk, mind you-- and 34 there is your butter, too, and ice-water--no matter whether it is 35 summer or winter, day or night, whether you have got a bad cold or 36 fever--you have ice-water in abundance. These are scientific people 37 and laugh when they are told that ice-water aggravates cold. The 38 more you take, the better. And there is plenty of ice-cream, of all 39 sorts of shapes. I have seen the Niagara Falls seven or eight times, 40 the Lord be praised! Very grand no doubt, but not quite as you have 41 heard them spoken of. One day, in winter, we had the aurora 42 borealis.

43 . . . Only childish prattle! I have not much time to listen to 44 that sort of thing in this life; it will be time enough to see if I can do 45 that in the next. Yogen has completely rallied by this time, I hope?
46 The vagabond spirit of Sarada (Trigunatita) is not yet at an end, I 47 see. What is wanted is a power of organisation--do you understand 48 me? Have any of you got that much brain in your head? If you do, 49 let your mind work. Brother Tarak, Sharat, and Hari will be able to 50 do it. --has got very little originality, but is a very good workman and 51 persevering--which is an essential necessity, and Shashi

1 (Ramakrishnananda) is executive to a degree. . . . We want some 2 disciples--fiery young men--do you see?--intelligent and brave, who 3 dare to go to the jaws of Death, and are ready to swim the ocean
4 across. Do you follow me? We want hundreds like that, both men
5 and women. Try your utmost for that end alone. Make converts 6 right and left, and put them into our purity-drilling machine.

7 . . . What made you communicate to the Indian Mirror that 8 Paramahansa Deva used to call Narendra such and such, and all 9 sorts of nonsense?--As if he had nothing else to do but that! Only 10 thought-reading and nonsensical mystery-mongering! . . . It is 11 excellent that Sanyal is visiting you often. Do you write letters to 12 Gupta? Convey to him my love, and take kind care of him.
13 Everything will come right by degrees. I don't find much time to 14 write heaps of letters. As for lectures and so forth, I don't prepare 15 them beforehand. Only one I wrote out, which you have printed.
16 The rest I deliver off-hand, whatever comes to my lips--Gurudeva 17 backs me up. I have nothing to do with pen and paper. Once at 18 Detroit I held forth for three hours at a stretch. Sometimes I myself 19 wonder at my own achievement--to think that there was such stuff 20 in this pate! They ask me here to write a book. Well, I think I must 21 do something that way, this time. But that's the botheration; who 22 will take the trouble of putting things in black and white and all 23 that! . . . We must electrify society, electrify the world. Idle gossip 24 and barren ceremonials won't do. Ceremonials are meant for 25 householders, your work is the distribution and propagation of 26 thought-currents. If you can do that, then it is all right. . . .

27 Let character be formed and then I shall be in your midst. Do 28 you see? We want two thousand Sannyasins, nay ten, or even 29 twenty thousand--men and women, both. What are our matrons 30 doing? We want converts at any risk. Go and tell them, and try 31 yourselves, heart and soul. Not householder disciples, mind you, we 32 want Sannyasins. Let each one of you have a hundred heads 33 tonsured--young educated men, not fools. Then you are heroes. We 34 must make a sensation. Give up your passive attitude, gird your 35 loins, and stand up. Let me see you make some electric circuits 36 between Calcutta and Madras. Start centres at places, go on always 37 making converts. Convert everyone into the monastic order 38 whoever seeks for it, irrespective of sex, and then I shall be in your 39 midst. A huge spiritual tidal wave is coming--he who is low shall 40 become noble, and he who is ignorant shall become the teacher of 41 great scholars--through HIS grace. "{Sanskrit}--Arise! Awake! and 42 stop not till the goal is reached." Life is ever expanding, contraction 43 is death. The self-seeking man who is looking after his personal 44 comforts and leading a lazy life--there is no room for him even in 45 hell. He alone is a child of Shri Ramakrishna who is moved to pity 46 for all creatures and exerts himself for them even at the risk of 47 incurring personal damnation, {Sanskrit}--others are vulgar people.
48 Whoever, at this great spiritual juncture, will stand up with a 49 courageous heart and go on spreading from door to door, from 50 village to village, his message, is alone my brother, and a son of his.
51 This is the test, he who is Ramakrishna's child does not seek his 52 personal good. "{Sanskrit}--They wish to do good to others even

1 when at the point of death." Those that care for their personal 2 comforts and seek a lazy life, who are ready to sacrifice all before 3 their personal whims, are none of us; let them pack off, while yet 4 there is time. Propagate his character, his teaching, his religion.
5 This is the only spiritual practice, the only worship, this verily is the 6 means, and this the goal. Arise! Arise! A tidal wave is coming!
7 Onward! Men and women, down to the Chandala (Pariah)--all are 8 pure in his eyes. Onward! Onward! There is no time to care for 9 name, or fame, or Mukti, or Bhakti! We shall look to these some 10 other time. Now in this life let us infinitely spread his lofty 11 character, his sublime life, his infinite soul. This is the only work-- 12 there is nothing else to do. Wherever his name will reach, the 13 veriest worm will attain divinity, nay, is actually attaining it; you 14 have got eyes, and don't you see it? Is it a child's play? Is it silly 15 prattle? Is it foolery? "{Sanskrit}--Arise! Awake!" Great Lord! He is 16 at our back. I cannot write anymore. --Onward! I only tell you this, 17 that whoever reads this letter will imbibe my spirit! Have faith!
18 Onward! Great Lord! . . . I feel as if somebody is moving my hand to 19 write in this way. Onward! Great Lord! Everyone will be swept 20 away! Take care, he is coming! Whoever will be ready to serve him-- 21 no, not him but his children--the poor and the downtrodden, the 22 sinful and the afflicted, down to the very worm--who will be ready to 23 serve these, in them he will manifest himself. Through their tongue
24 the Goddess of Learning Herself will speak, and the Divine Mother-- 25 the Embodiment of all Power--will enthrone Herself in their hearts.
26 Those that are atheists, unbelievers, worthless, and foppish, why do 27 they call themselves as belonging to his fold. . . .

40 Dear Mrs. Bull,

41 I arrived safely in New York where Landsberg met me at the 42 depot. I proceeded at once to Brooklyn where I arrived in time.

43 We had a nice evening. Several gentlemen belonging to the 44 Ethical Culture Society came to see me.

Next Sunday we shall have a lecture. Dr. Janes was as usual very kind and good, and Mr. Higgins is as practical as ever. Here alone in New York I find more men interested in religion than in any other city, and do not know why here the interest is more amongst men than women. . . .

Herewith I send a copy of that pamphlet Mr. Higgins has published about me. Hope to send more in the future.

With my love to Miss Farmer and all the holy family,
I remain yours
obediently,

Vivekananda

Dear Sarada {Swami Trigunatita},

Your two letters are to hand, as also the two of Ramdayal Babu. I have got the bill of lading; but it will be long before the goods arrive. Unless one arranges for the prompt despatch of goods they take about six months to come. It is four months since Haramohan wrote that the Rudraksha beads and Kusha mats had been despatched, but there is no news of their whereabouts yet. The thing is, when the goods reach England, the agent of the company here gives me notice; and about a month later, the goods arrive. I received your bill of lading about three weeks ago, but no sign of the notice! Only the goods sent by Raja of Khetri arrive quickly. Most probably he spends a lot of money for them. However it is a matter of congratulation that goods do arrive without fail in this region of Patala, at the other end of the globe. I shall let you know as soon as the goods come. Now keep quiet for at least three months.

Now is the time for you to apply yourself to start the magazine. Tell Ramdayal Babu that though the gentleman of whom he speaks be a competent person, I am not in a position to have anybody in America at present. . . . What about your article on Tibet? When it is published in the Mirror, send me a copy. . . .

Come, here is a task for you, conduct that magazine. Thrust it on people and make them subscribe to it, and don't be afraid. What work do you expect from men of little hearts?--Nothing in the world! You must have an iron will if you would cross the ocean. You must be strong enough to pierce mountains. I am coming next winter. We shall set the world on fire--let those who will, join us and be blessed, and those that won't come, will lag behind for ever and 1 ever; let them do so. You gird up your loins and keep yourself ready.

2 . . . Never mind anything! In your lips and hands the Goddess of 3 Learning will make Her seat; the Lord of infinite power will be 4 seated on your chest; you will do works that will strike the world
5 with wonder. By the bye, can't you shorten your name a bit, my boy?
6 What a long, long name--a single name enough to fill a volume!
7 Well, you hear people say that the Lord's name keeps away death!
8 It is not the simple name Hari, mind you. It is those deep and 9 sonorous names, such as {Sanskrit} (Destroyer of Agha, Bhaga, 10 and Naraka) {Sanskrit} (Subduer of the pride of Tripura, demon of 11 the "three cities"), and {Sanskrit} (Giver of infinite and endless 12 blessings), and so forth--that put to rout King Death and his whole 13 party. Won't it look nice if you simplify yours a little? But it is too 14 late, I am afraid, as it has already been abroad. But, believe me, it 15 is a world-entrancing, death-defying name that you have got!¹²⁸

19 PS. Throw the whole of Bengal and, for the matter of that, the 20 whole of India into convulsion! Start centres at different places.

21 The Bhagavata has reached me--a very nice edition indeed; 22 but people of this country have not the least inclination for studying 23 Sanskrit; hence there is very little hope for its sale. There may be a 24 little in England, for there many are interested in the study of 25 Sanskrit. Give my special thanks to the editor. I hope his noble 26 attempt will meet with complete success. I shall try my best to push 27 his book here. I have sent his prospectus to different places. Tell 28 Ramdayal Babu that a flourishing trade can be set on foot with 29 England and America in Mung Dal, Arhar Dal, etc. Dal soup will 30 have a go if properly introduced. There will be a good demand for 31 these things if they be sent from house to house, in small packets, 32 with directions for cooking on them and a depot started for storing 33 a quantity of them. Similarly Badis too will have a good market. We 34 want an enterprising spirit. Nothing is done by leading idle lives. If 35 anyone forms a company and exports Indian goods here and into 36 England, it will be a good trade. But they are a lazy set, enamoured 37 of child marriage and nothing else.

1 Dear Sanyal,

2 . . . Paramahansa Deva was my Guru, and whatever I may 3 think of him in point of greatness, why should the world think like 4 me? And if you press the point hard, you will spoil everything. The 5 idea of worshipping the Guru as God is nowhere to be met with 6 outside Bengal, for other people are not yet ready to take up that 7 ideal. . . . Many would fain associate my name with themselves--"I 8 belong to them!" But when it comes to doing something I want, they 9 are nowhere. So selfish is the whole world!

10 I shall consider myself absolved from a debt of obligation 11 when I succeed in purchasing some land for Mother. I don't care for 12 anything after that.

13 In this dire winter I have travelled across mountains and over 14 snows at dead of night and collected a little fund; and I shall have 15 peace of mind when a plot is secured for Mother.

16 Henceforth address my letters as above, which is to be my 17 permanent seat from now. Try to send me an English translation of 18 the Yogavasishtha Ramayana. . . . Don't forget those books I asked 19 for before, viz Sanskrit Narada and Shandilya Sutras.

21 bliss lies in giving up hope."

31 Dear Mrs. Bull,

32 Accept my heartfelt gratitude for your motherly advice. I hope 33 I will be able to carry out them in life.

34 How can I express my gratitude to you for what you have 35 already done for me and my work, and my eternal gratitude to you 36 for your offering to do something more this year. But I sincerely 37 believe that you ought to turn all your help to Miss Farmer's 38 Greenacre work this year. India can wait as she is waiting centuries 39 and an immediate work at hand should always have the preference.

40 Again, according to Manu, collecting funds even for a good 41 work is not good for a Sannyasin, and I have begun to feel that the 42 old sages were right. "Hope is the greatest misery, despair is the 43 greatest happiness." It appears like a hallucination. I am getting out 44 of them. I was in these childish ideas of doing this and doing that.

45 "Give up all desire and be at peace. Have neither friends nor 46 foes, and live alone. Thus shall we travel having neither friends nor

1 foes, neither pleasure nor pain, neither desire nor jealousy, injuring 2 no creatures, being the cause of injury to no creatures--from 3 mountain to mountain, from village to village, preaching the name
4 of the Lord."

5 "Seek no help from high or low, from above or below. Desire 6 nothing--and look upon this vanishing panorama as a witness and 7 let it pass."

8 Perhaps these mad desires were necessary to bring me over 9 to this country. And I thank the Lord for the experience.

10 I am very happy now. Between Mr. Landsberg and me, we 11 cook some rice and lentils or barley and quietly eat it, and write 12 something or read or receive visits from poor people who want to 13 learn something, and thus I feel I am more a Sannyasin now than I 14 ever was in America.

15 "In wealth is the fear of poverty, in knowledge the fear of 16 ignorance, in beauty the fear of age, in fame the fear of backbiters, 17 in success the fear of jealousy, even in body is the fear of death.
18 Everything in this earth is fraught with fear. He alone is fearless 19 who has given up everything" (Vairagya-Shatakam , 31).

20 I went to see Miss Corbin the other day, and Miss Farmer and 21 Miss Thursby were also there. We had a nice half-hour and she 22 wants me to hold some classes in her home from next Sunday.

23 I am no more seeking for these things. If they come, the Lord 24 be blessed, if not, blessed more be He.

25 Again accept my eternal gratitude.

36 Dear Mrs. Bull,

1 I am astonished to hear the scandals the Ramabai circles are 2 indulging in about me. Don't you see, Mrs. Bull, that however a man 3 may conduct himself, there will always be persons who invent the 4 blackest lies about him? At Chicago I had such things every day 5 against me. And these women are invariably the very Christian of 6 Christians! . . . I am going to have a series of paid lectures in my 7 rooms (downstairs), which will seat about a hundred persons, and 8 that will cover the expenses. I am in no great hurry about the 9 money to be sent to India. I will wait. Is Miss Farmer with you? Is 10 Mrs. Peake at Chicago? Have you seen Josephine Locke? Miss 11 Hamlin has been very kind to me and does all she can to help me.

12 My master used to say that these names, as Hindu, Christian, 13 etc., stand as great bars to all brotherly feelings between man and 14 man. We must try to break them down first. They have lost all their 15 good powers and now only stand as baneful influences under whose 16 black magic even the best of us behave like demons. Well, we will 17 have to work hard and must succeed.

18 That is why I desire so much to have a centre. Organisation 19 has its faults, no doubt, but without that nothing can be done. And 20 here, I am afraid, I will have to differ from you--that no one ever 21 succeeded in keeping society in good humour and at the same time 22 did great works. One must work as the dictate comes from within, 23 and then if it is right and good, society is bound to veer round, 24 perhaps centuries after one is dead and gone. We must plunge 25 heart and soul and body into the work. And until we be ready to 26 sacrifice everything else to one Idea and to one alone, we never, 27 never will see the light.

28 Those that want to help mankind must take their own 29 pleasure and pain, name and fame, and all sorts of interests, and 30 make a bundle of them and throw them into the sea, and then come 31 to the Lord. This is what all the Masters said and did.

32 I went to Miss Corbin's last Saturday and told her that I 33 should not be able to come to hold classes any more. Was it ever in 34 the history of the world that any great work was done by the rich?
35 It is the heart and the brain that do it ever and ever and not the 36 purse.

37 My idea and all my life with it--and to God for help; to none 38 else! This is the only secret of success. I am sure you are one with 39 me here. My love to Mrs. Thursby and Mrs. Adams.

40 Ever yours in grateful
41 affection,

1 Dear Mrs. Bull,

2 . . . I am going away to the country tomorrow to see Mr.
3 Leggett for a few days. A little fresh air will do me good, I hope.

4 I have given up the project of removing from this house just 5 now, as it will be too expensive, and moreover it is not advisable to 6 change just now. I am working it up slowly.

7 . . . I send you herewith the letter from H. H. the Maharaja of 8 Khetri; also enclose the slip on Gurjun oil for leprosy. Miss Hamlin 9 has been helping me a good deal. I am very grateful to her. She is 10 very kind and, I hope, sincere. She wants me to be introduced to 11 the "right kind of people". This is the second edition of the "Hold 12 yourself steady" business, I am afraid. The only "right sort of 13 people" are those whom the Lord sends--that is what I understand 14 in my life's experience. They alone can and will help me. As for the 15 rest, Lord help them in a mass and save me from them.

16 Every one of my friends thought it would end in nothing, this 17 my getting up quarters all by myself, and that no ladies would ever
18 come here . Miss Hamlin especially thought that "she" or "her right 19 sort of people" were way up from such things as to go and listen to 20 a man who lives by himself in a poor lodging. But the "right kind" 21 came for all that, day and night, and she too. Lord! how hard it is 22 for man to believe in Thee and Thy mercies! Shiva! Shiva! Where is 23 the right kind and where is the bad, mother? It is all He ! In the 24 tiger and in the lamb, in the saint and sinner all He ! In Him I have 25 taken my refuge, body, soul, and Atman. Will He leave me now after 26 carrying me in His arms all my life? Not a drop will be in the ocean, 27 not a twig in the deepest forest, not a crumb in the house of the god 28 of wealth, if the Lord is not merciful. Streams will be in the desert 29 and the beggar will have plenty, if He wills it. He seeth the 30 sparrow's fall. Are these but words, mother, or literal, actual life?

31 Truce to this "right sort of presentation". Thou art my right, 32 Thou my wrong, my Shiva. Lord, since a child I have taken refuge in 33 Thee. Thou wilt be with me in the tropics or at the poles, on the 34 tops of mountains or in the depth of oceans. My stay--my guide in 35 life--my refuge--my friend--my teacher--my God--my real Self, Thou 36 wilt never leave me, never . I know it for sure. Sometimes I become 37 weak, being alone and struggling against odds, my God; and I think 38 of human help. Save Thou me for ever from these weaknesses, and 39 may I never, never seek for help from any being but Thee. If a man 40 puts his trust in another good man, he is never betrayed, never 41 forsaken. Wilt Thou forsake me, Father of all good, Thou who 42 knowest that all my life I am Thy servant and Thine alone? Wilt 43 Thou give me over to be played upon by others, or dragged down by 44 evil?

45 He will never leave me, I am sure, mother.

46

My Dear Shashi {Ramakrishnananda},

. . . You write that you have recovered from your illness; but you must henceforth be very careful. Late dinners, or unwholesome food, or living in a stinking place may bring on a relapse, and make it hard to escape the clutches of malaria. First of all you should hire a small garden-house--you may get one for thirty or forty rupees. Secondly, see that cooking and drinking water be filtered--a bamboo filter of a big size will do. Water is the cause of all sorts of disease. It is not the clearness or dirtiness of water, but its being full of disease germs, that causes disease. Let the water be boiled and filtered. You must all pay attention to your health first. A cook, a servant, clean beds, and timely meals--these are absolutely necessary. Please see that all these suggestions be carried out in toto The success of your undertakings depends wholly upon your mutual love. There is no good in store so long as malice and jealousy and egotism will prevail. . . . Kali's pamphlet is very well written and has no exaggerations. Know that talking ill of others in private is a sin. You must wholly avoid it. Many things may occur to the mind, but it gradually makes a mountain of a molehill if you try to express them. Everything is ended if you forgive and forget. It is welcome news that Shri Ramakrishna's festival was celebrated with great eclat. You must try so that there is a muster of a hundred thousand people next year. Put your energies together to start a magazine. Shyness won't do any more. . . . He who has infinite patience and infinite energy at his back, will alone succeed. You must pay special attention to study. Do you understand? You must not huddle together too many fools. I shall be glad if you bring together a few real men. Why, I don't hear even a single one opening his lips. You distributed sweets at the festival, and there was singing by some parties, mostly idlers. True, but I don't hear what spiritual food you have given. So long as that nil admirari attitude is not gone, you will not be able to do anything, and none of you will have courage. Bullies are always cowards.

Take up everyone with sympathy, whether he believes in Shri Ramakrishna or not. If anybody comes to you for vain dispute, politely withdraw yourselves. . . . You must express your sympathy with people of all sects. When these cardinal virtues will be manifested in you, then only you will be able to work with great energy. Otherwise, mere taking the name of the Guru will not do. However, there is no doubt that this year's festival has been a great success, and you deserve special thanks for it; but you must push forward, do you see? What is Sharat doing? Never shall you be able to know anything if you persist in pleading ignorance. . . . We want something of a higher tone--that will appeal to the intellect of the 1 learned. It won't do merely to get up musical parties and all that.

2 Not only will this festival be his memorial, but also the central union
3 of an intense propaganda of his doctrines. . . . All will come in good 4 time. But at times I fret and stamp like a leashed hound. Onward
5 and forward, my old watchword. I am doing well.

6 No use going back to India in a hurry. Summon all your 7 energies and set yourselves to work heart and soul; that will really 8 be heroic.

10 affectionately,

18 Dear Mrs. Bull,

19 The day before yesterday I received a kind note from Miss 20 Farmer including a cheque for a hundred dollars for the Barbar 21 House lectures. She is coming to New York next Saturday. I will of 22 course tell her to put my name in her circulars; and what is more, I 23 cannot go to Greenacre now; I have arranged to go to the Thousand 24 Islands, wherever that may be. There is a cottage belonging to Miss 25 Dutcher, one of my students, and a few of us will be there in rest 26 and peace and seclusion. I want to manufacture a few "Yogis" out of 27 the materials of the classes, and a busy farm like Greenacre is the 28 last place for that, while the other is quite out of the way, and none 29 of the curiosity-seekers will dare go there.

30 I am very glad that Miss Hamlin took down the names of the 31 130 persons who come to the Jnana-Yoga class. There are 50 more 32 who come to the Wednesday Yoga class and about 50 more to the 33 Monday class. Mr. Landsberg had all the names; and they will come 34 anyhow, names or no names. . . . If they do not, others will, and so it 35 will go on--the Lord be praised.

36 Taking down names and giving notices is a big task, no doubt, 37 and I am very thankful to both of them for doing that for me. But I 38 am thoroughly persuaded that it is laziness on my part, and 39 therefore immoral, to depend on others, and always evil comes out 40 of laziness. So henceforth I will do it all myself. . . .

41 However, I will be only too glad to take in any one of Miss 42 Hamlin's "right sort of persons", but unfortunately for me, not one 43 such has as yet turned up. It is the duty of the teacher always to 44 turn the "right sort" out of the most "unrighteous sort" of persons.
45 After all, though I am very, very grateful to the young lady, Miss 46 Hamlin, for the great hope and encouragement she gave me of 47 introducing me to the "right sort of New Yorkers" and for the 48 practical help she has given me, I think I had better do my little

1 work with my own hands. . . .

2 I am only glad that you have such a great opinion about Miss 3 Hamlin. I for one am glad to know that you will help her, for she 4 requires it. But, mother, through the mercy of Ramakrishna, my 5 instinct "sizes up" almost infallibly a human face as soon as I see it, 6 and the result is this: you may do anything you please with my 7 affairs, I will not even murmur ;--I will be only too glad to take Miss 8 Farmer's advice, in spite of ghosts and spooks. Behind the spooks I 9 see a heart of immense love, only covered with a thin film of 10 laudable ambition--even that is bound to vanish in a few years.
11 Even I will allow Landsberg to "monkey" with my affairs from time
12 to time; but here I put a full stop. Help from any other persons 13 besides these frightens me. That is all I can say. Not only for the 14 help you have given me, but from my instinct (or, as I call it, 15 inspiration of my Master), I regard you as my mother and will 16 always abide by any advice you may have for me--but only 17 personally . When you select a medium, I will beg leave to exercise 18 my choice. That is all.

19 Herewith I send the English gentleman's letter. I have made a 20 few notes on the margin to explain Hindustani words.

31 Dear Mrs. Bull,

32 . . . I had a newspaper from India with a publication in it of 33 Dr. Barrows' short reply to the thanks sent over from India. Miss 34 Thursby will send it to you. Yesterday I received another letter from 35 India from the President of Madras meeting to thank the Americans 36 and to send me an Address. . . . This gentleman is the chief citizen 37 of Madras and a Judge of the Supreme Court, a very high position
38 in India.

39 I am going to have two public lectures more in New York in 40 the upper hall of the Mott's Memorial Building. The first one will be 41 on Monday next, on the Science of Religion. The next, on the 42 Rationale of Yoga. . . . Has Miss Hamlin sent you the book on the 43 financial condition of India? I wish your brother will read it and 44 then find out for himself what the English rule in India means.

Dear Mrs. Bull,

The classes are going on; but I am sorry to say, though the attendance is large, it does not even pay enough to cover the rent. I will try this week and then give up.

I am going this summer to the Thousand Islands to Miss Dutcher's, one of my students. The different books on Vedanta are now being sent over to me from India. I expect to write a book in English on the Vedanta Philosophy in its three stages when I am at Thousand Islands, and I may go to Greenacre later on. Miss Farmer wants me to lecture there this summer.

I am rather busy just now in writing a promised article for the Press Association on Immortality.

Yours,

Dear Mrs. Bull,

I am here at last with Mr. Leggett. This is one of the most beautiful spots I have ever seen. Imagine a lake, surrounded with hills covered with a huge forest, with nobody but ourselves. So lovely, so quiet, so restful! And you may imagine how glad I am to be here after the bustle of cities.

It gives me a new lease of life to be here. I go into the forest alone and read my Gita and am quite happy. I will leave this place in about ten days and go to the Thousand Island Park. I will meditate by the hour there and be all alone to myself. The very idea is ennobling.

5 Dear Mrs. Bull,

6 I have just arrived home. The trip did me good, and I enjoyed 7 the country and the hills, and especially Mr. Leggett's country-
8 house in New York State. Poor Landsberg has gone from this house.
9 Neither has he left one his address. May the Lord bless Landsberg 10 wherever he goes! He is one of the few sincere souls I have had the privilege in this life to come across.

11 All is for good. All conjunctions are for subsequent 12 disjunction. I hope I shall be perfectly able to work alone. The less 13 help from men, the more from the Lord! Just now I received a letter 14 from an Englishman in London who had lived in India in the 15 Himalayas with two of my brethren. He asks me to come to London.

16 Yours,

23 Dear Shashi {Ramakrishnananda},

24 . . . I am quite in agreement with what Sarada is doing, but it 25 is not necessary to preach that Ramakrishna Paramahansa was an 26 Incarnation, and things of that sort. He came to do good to the 27 world; not to trumpet his own name--you must always remember 28 this. Disciples pay their whole attention to the preservation of their 29 master's name and throw overboard his teachings; and 30 sectarianism etc., are the result. Alasinga writes of Charu; but I do 31 not recollect him. Write all about him and convey him my thanks.
32 Write in detail about all; I have no time to spare for idle gossip. . . .
33 Try to give up ceremonials. They are not meant for Sannyasins; and 34 one must work only so long as one does not attain to illumination. . .
35 . I have nothing to do with sectarianism, or party-forming and 36 playing the frog-in-the-well, whatever else I may do. . . . It is 37 impossible to preach the catholic ideas of Ramakrishna 38 Paramahansa and form sects at the same time. . . . Only one kind of 39 work I understand, and that is doing good to others; all else is doing 40 evil. I therefore prostrate myself before the Lord Buddha. . . . I am 41 a Vedantist; Sachchidananda--Existence-Knowledge-Bliss Absolute-- 42 is my God. I scarcely find any other God than the majestic form of 43 my own Self. By the word "Incarnation" are meant those who have 44 attained that Brahmanhood, in other words, the Jivanmuktas--those 45 who have realised this freedom in this very life. I do not find any 46 speciality in Incarnations: all beings from Brahma down to a clump 47 of grass will attain to liberation-in-life in course of time, and our 48 duty lies in helping all to reach that state. This help is called

1 religion; the rest is irreligion. This help is work; the rest is evil-
2 doing--I see nothing else. Other kinds of work, for example, the 3 Vaidika or the Tantrika, may produce results; but resorting to them 4 is simply waste of life, for that purity which is the goal of work is 5 realisable only through doing good to others. Through works such 6 as sacrifices etc., one may get enjoyments, but it is impossible to 7 have the purity of soul. . . . Everything exists already in the Self of 8 all beings. He who asserts he is free, shall be free. He who says he 9 is bound, bound he shall remain. To me, the thought of oneself as 10 low and humble is a sin and ignorance. "{Sanskrit}--This Atman is 11 not to be attained by one who is weak." "{Sanskrit}--If you say 12 Brahman is , existence will be the result; if you say Brahman is not , 13 non-existent It shall verily become." He who always thinks of 14 himself as weak will never become strong, but he who knows 15 himself to be a lion, "{Sanskrit}--rushes out from the world's 16 meshes, as a lion from its cage." Another point, it was no new truth 17 that Ramakrishna Paramahansa came to preach, though his advent 18 brought the old truths to light. In other words, he was the 19 embodiment of all the past religious thoughts of India. His life alone 20 made me understand what the Shastras really meant, and the 21 whole plan and scope of the old Shastras.

22 Missionaries and others could not do much against me in this 23 country. Through the Lord's grace the people here like me greatly 24 and are not to be tricked by the opinions of any particular class.
25 They appreciate my ideas in a manner my own countrymen cannot 26 do, and are not selfish. I mean, when it comes to practical work 27 they will give up jealousy and all those ideas of self-sufficiency.
28 Then all of them agree and act under the direction of a capable 29 man. That is what makes them so great. But then they are a nation
30 of Mammon-worshippers. Money comes before everything. People 31 of our country are very liberal in pecuniary matters, but not so 32 much these people. Every home has a miser. It is almost a religion 33 here. But they fall into the clutches of the priests when they do 34 something bad, and then buy their passage to heaven with money.
35 These things are the same in every country--priestcraft. I can say 36 nothing as to whether I shall go back to India and when. There also 37 I shall have to lead a wandering life as I do here; but here 38 thousands of people listen to and understand my lectures, and 39 these thousands are benefited. But can you say the same thing
40 about India? . . . I am perfectly at one with what Sarada is doing. A 41 thousand thanks to him. . . . In Madras and Bombay I have lots of 42 men who are after my heart. They are learned and understand 43 everything. Moreover they are kind-hearted and can therefore 44 appreciate the philanthropic spirit. . . . I have printed neither books 45 nor anything of the kind. I simply go on lecturing tours. . . . When I 46 take a retrospective view of my past life, I feel no remorse. From 47 country to country I have travelled teaching something, however 48 little, to people, and in exchange for that have partaken of their 49 slices of bread. If I had found I had done no work, but simply 50 supported myself by imposing upon people, I would have committed 51 suicide today. Why do those who think themselves unfit to teach 52 their fellow-beings, wear the teacher's garb and earn their bread by 53 cheating them? Is not that a deadly sin? . . .

Dear Alberta {Sturges},

I am sure you are engrossed in your musical studies now. Hope you have found out all about the scales by this time. I will be so happy to take a lesson on the scales from you next time we meet.

We had such jolly good time up there at Percy with Mr. Leggett--isn't he a saint?

Hollister is also enjoying Germany greatly, I am sure, and I hope none of you have injured your tongues in trying to pronounce German words--especially those beginning with sch, tz, tsz, and other sweet things.

I read your letter to your mother from on board. Most possibly I am going over to Europe next September. I have never been to Europe yet. It will not be very much different from the United States after all. And I am already well drilled in the manners and customs of this country.

We had a good deal of rowing at Percy and I learnt a point or two in rowing. Aunt Joe Joe had to pay for her sweetness, for the flies and mosquitoes would not leave her for a moment. They rather gave me a wide berth, I think, because they were very orthodox sabbatarian flies and would not touch a heathen. Again, I think, I used to sing a good deal at Percy, and that must have frightened them away. We had such fine birch trees. I got up an idea of making books out of the bark, as was used to be done in ancient times in our country, and wrote Sanskrit verses for your mother and aunt.

I am sure, Alberta, you are going to be a tremendously learned lady very soon.

With love and blessings for both of you,

affectionate, Ever your

Vivekananda Swami

Salutation to Bhagavan
Ramakrishna!

{original in Bengali}

Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

I have now got lots of newspapers etc., and you need not send any more. Let the movement now confine itself to India. . . .

It isn't much use getting up a sensation every day. But avail yourselves of this stir that is rife all over the country, and scatter yourselves in all quarters. In other words, try to start branches at different places. Let it not be an empty sound merely. You must join the Madrasis and start associations etc., at different places. What about the magazine which I heard was going to be started? Why are you nervous about conducting it? . . . Come? Do something heroic! Brother, what if you do not attain Mukti, what if you suffer damnation a few times? Is the saying untrue?--

"{Sanskrit} --There are some saints who full of holiness in thought, word, and deed, please the whole world by their numerous beneficent acts, and who develop their own hearts by magnifying an atom of virtue in others as if it were as great as a mountain" (Bhartrihari, Nitishataka).

What if you don't get Mukti? What childish prattle! Lord! They say even the venom of a snake loses its power by firmly denying it. Isn't it true? What queer humility is this to say, "I know nothing!" "I am nothing!" This is pseudo-renunciation and mock-modesty, I tell you. Off with such a self-debasing spirit! "If I do not know, who on earth does!" What have you been doing so long if you now plead ignorance? These are the words of an atheist--the humility of a vagabond wretch. We can do everything, and will do everything! He who is fortunate enough will heroically join us, letting the worthless mew like cats from their corner. A saint writes, "Well, you have had enough of blazoning. Now come back home." I would have called him a man if he could build a house and call me. Ten years' experience of such things has made me wiser. I am no more to be duped by words. Let him who has courage in his mind and love in his heart come with me. I want none else. Through Mother's grace, single-handed I am worth a hundred thousand now and will be worth two millions. . . . There is no certainty about my going back to India. I shall have to lead a wandering life there also, as I am doing here. But here one lives in the company of scholars, and there one must live among fools--there is this difference as of the poles. People of this country organise and work, while our undertakings all come to dust clashing against laziness--miscalled "renunciation"--and jealousy, etc. __writes me big letters now and then, half of which I cannot decipher, which is a blessing to me. For a great part of the news is of the following description--that in such and such a place such and such a man was speaking ill of me, and that he, being unable to bear the same, had a quarrel with him, and so forth. Many thanks for his kind defence of me. But what seriously hinders me from listening to what particular people may be saying about me is--"{Sanskrit}--Time is short, but the obstacles are many." . . .

1 An organised society is wanted. Let Shashi look to the 2 household management, Sanyal take charge of money matters and 3 marketing, and Sharat act as secretary, that is, carry on 4 correspondence etc. Make a permanent centre--it is no use making 5 random efforts as you are doing now. Do you see my point? I have 6 quite a heap of newspapers, now I want you to do something. If you 7 can build a Math, I shall say you are heroes; otherwise you are 8 nothing. Consult the Madras people when you work. They have a 9 great capacity for work. Celebrate this year's Shri Ramakrishna
10 festival with such eclat as to make it a record. The less the feeding 11 propaganda is, the better. It is enough if you distribute Prasada in 12 earthen cups to the devotees standing in rows. . . .

13 I am going to write a very short sketch of Shri Ramakrishna's 14 life in English, which I shall send you. Have it printed and 15 translated into Bengali and sell it at the festival--people do not read 16 books that are distributed free. Fix some nominal price. Have the 17 festival done with great pomp. . . .

18 You must have an all-sided intellect to do efficient work. In 19 any towns or villages you may visit, start an association wherever 20 you find a number of people revering Shri Ramakrishna. Have you 21 travelled through so many villages all for nothing? We must slowly 22 absorb the Hari-Sabhas and such other associations. Well, I cannot 23 tell you all--if I could but get another demon like me! The Lord will 24 supply me everything in time. . . . If one has got power, one must 25 manifest it in action. . . . Off with your ideas of Mukti and Bhakti!
26 There is only one way in the world, "{Sanskrit}", "{Sanskrit}"--"The 27 good live for others alone", "The wise man should sacrifice himself 28 for others". I can secure my own good only by doing you good.
29 There is no other way, none whatsoever. . . . You are God, I am God, 30 and man is God. It is this God manifested through humanity who is 31 doing everything in this world. Is there a different God sitting high 32 up somewhere? To work, therefore!

33 Bimala has sent me a book written by Shashi (Sanyal). . . .
34 From a perusal of that work Bimala has come to know that all the 35 people of this world are impure and that they are by their very 36 nature debarred from having a jot of religion; that only the handful 37 of Brahmins that are in India have the sole right to it, and among 38 these again, Shashi (Sanyal) and Bimala are the sun and moon, so 39 to speak. Bravo! What a powerful religion indeed! In Bengal
40 specially, that sort of religion is very easy to practise. There is no 41 easier way than that. The whole truth about austerities and 42 spiritual exercises is, in a nutshell, that I am pure and all the rest 43 are impure! A beastly, demoniac, hellish religion this! If the 44 American people are unfit for religion, if it is improper to preach
45 religion here, why then ask their help? . . . What can remedy such a 46 disease? Well, tell Shashi (Sanyal) to go to Malabar. The Raja there 47 has taken his subjects' land and offered it at the feet of Brahmins.
48 There are big monasteries in every village where sumptuous 49 dinners are given, supplemented by presents in cash. . . . There is 50 no harm in touching the non-Brahmin classes when it serves one's 51 purpose; and when you have done with it, you bathe, for the non-52 Brahmins are as a class unholy and must never be touched on other

1 occasions! Monks and Sannyasins and Brahmins of a certain type 2 have thrown the country into ruin. Intent all the while on theft and 3 wickedness, these pose as preachers of religion! They will take gifts 4 from the people and at the same time cry, "Don't touch me!" And 5 what great things they have been doing!--"If a potato happens to 6 touch a brinjal, how long will the universe last before it is deluged?" 7 "If they do not apply earth a dozen times to clean their hands, will 8 fourteen generations of ancestors go to hell, or twenty-four?"--For 9 intricate problems like these they have been finding out scientific 10 explanations for the last two thousand years--while one fourth of 11 the people are starving. A girl of eight is married to a man of thirty, 12 and the parents are jubilant over it. . . . And if anyone protests 13 against it, the plea is put forward, "Our religion is being 14 overturned." What sort of religion have they who want to see their 15 girls becoming mothers before they attain puberty even and offer
16 scientific explanations for it? Many, again, lay the blame at the door 17 of the Mohammedans. They are to blame, indeed! Just read the 18 Grihya-Sutras through and see what is given as the marriageable 19 age of a girl. . . . There it is expressly stated that a girl must be 20 married before attaining puberty. The entire Grihya-Sutras enjoin 21 this. And in the Vedic Ashvamedha sacrifice worse things would be 22 done. . . . All the Brahmanas mention them, and all the 23 commentators admit them to be true. How can you deny them?

24 What I mean by mentioning all this is that there were many 25 good things in the ancient times, but there were bad things too. The 26 good things are to be retained, but the India that is to be, the future 27 India, must be much greater than ancient India. From the day Shri 28 Ramakrishna was born dates the growth of modern India and of the 29 Golden Age. And you are the agents to bring about this Golden Age.
30 To work, with this conviction of heart!

31 Hence, when you call Shri Ramakrishna an Incarnation and in 32 the same breath plead your ignorance unhesitatingly, I say, "You are 33 false to the backbone!" If Ramakrishna Paramahansa be true, you 34 also are true. But you must show it. . . . In you all there is 35 tremendous power. The atheist has nothing but rubbish in him.
36 Those who are believers are heroes. They will manifest tremendous 37 power. The world will be swept before them. "Sympathy and help to 38 the poor"; "Man is God, he is Narayana"; "In Atman there is no 39 distinction of male or female, of Brahmin or Kshatriya, and the 40 like"; "All is Narayana from the Creator down to a clump of grass." 41 The worm is less manifested, the Creator more manifested. Every 42 action that helps a being manifest its divine nature more and more 43 is good, every action that retards it is evil.

44 The only way of getting our divine nature manifested is by 45 helping others to do the same.

46 If there is inequality in nature, still there must be equal 47 chance for all--or if greater for some and for some less--the weaker 48 should be given more chance than the strong.

49 In other words, a Brahmin is not so much in need of 50 education as a Chandala. If the son of a Brahmin needs one teacher, 51 that of a Chandala needs ten. For greater help must be given to him

1 whom nature has not endowed with an acute intellect from birth. It 2 is a madman who carries coals to Newcastle. The poor, the 3 downtrodden, the ignorant, let these be your God.

4 A dreadful slough is in front of you--take care; many fall into it 5 and die. The slough is this, that the present religion of the Hindus is 6 not in the Vedas, nor in the Puranas, nor in Bhakti, nor in Mukti-- 7 religion has entered into the cooking-pot. The present religion of 8 the Hindus is neither the path of knowledge nor that of reason--it is 9 "Don't-touchism". "Don't touch me!" "Don't touch me!"--that 10 exhausts its description. See that you do not lose your lives in this 11 dire irreligion of "Don't-touchism". Must the teaching, "{Sanskrit}-- 12 Looking upon all beings as your own self"--be confined to books 13 alone? How will they grant salvation who cannot feed a hungry
14 mouth with a crumb of bread? How will those who become impure 15 at the mere breath of others purify others? Don't-touchism is a form 16 of mental disease. Beware! All expansion is life, all contraction is 17 death. All love is expansion, all selfishness is contraction. Love is 18 therefore the only law of life. He who loves lives, he who is selfish is 19 dying. Therefore love for love's sake, because it is the only law of 20 life, just as you breathe to live. This is the secret of selfless love, 21 selfless action and the rest. . . . Try to help Shashi (Sanyal) if you 22 can, in any way. He is a very good and pious man, but of a narrow 23 heart. It does not fall to the lot of all to feel for the misery of others.
24 Good Lord! Of all Incarnations Lord Chaitanya was the greatest, 25 but he was comparatively lacking in knowledge; in the Ramakrishna
26 Incarnation there is knowledge, devotion and love--infinite 27 knowledge, infinite love, infinite work, infinite compassion for all 28 beings. You have not yet been able to understand him. "{Sanskrit}-- 29 Even after hearing about Him, most people do not understand 30 Him." What the whole Hindu race has thought in ages, he lived in 31 one life. His life is the living commentary to the Vedas of all 32 nations. People will come to know him by degrees. My old 33 watchword--struggle, struggle up to light! Onward!

34 Yours in 35 service,

Beloved Akhandananda,

47 I am glad to go through the contents of your letter. Your idea 48 is grand but our nation is totally lacking in the faculty of 1 organisation. It is this one drawback which produces all sorts of 2 evil. We are altogether averse to making a common cause for 3 anything. The first requisite for organisation is obedience. I do a 4 little bit of work when I feel so disposed, and then let it go to the 5 dogs--this kind of work is of no avail. We must have plodding

6 industry and perseverance. Keep a regular correspondence, I mean, 7 make it a point to write to me every month, or twice a month, what 8 work you are doing and what has been its outcome. We want here 9 (in England) a Sannyasin well-versed in English and Sanskrit. I shall 10 soon go to America again, and he is to work here in my absence.
11 Except Sharat and Shashi--I find no one else for this task. I have 12 sent money to Sharat and written to him to start at once. I have 13 requested Rajaji that his Bombay agent may help Sharat in 14 embarking. I forgot to write--but if you can take the trouble to do it, 15 please send through Sharat a bag of Mung, gram, and Arhar Dal, 16 also a little of the spice called Methi. Please convey my love to 17 Pundit Narayan Das, Mr. Shankar Lal, Ojhaji, Doctor, and all. Do 18 you think you can get the medicine for Gopi's eyes here?-- 19 Everywhere you find patent medicines, which are all humbug.
20 Please give my blessings to him and to the other boys. Yajneswar 21 has founded a certain society at Meerut and wants to work 22 conjointly with us. By the bye, he has got a certain paper too; send 23 Kali there, and let him start a Meerut centre, if he can and, try to 24 have the paper in Hindi. I shall help a little now and then. I shall 25 send some money when Kali goes to Meerut and reports to me
26 exactly how matters stand. Try to open a centre at Ajmer. . . .
27 Pundit Agnihotri has started some society at Saharanpur. They 28 wrote me a letter. Please keep in correspondence with them. Live 29 on friendly terms with all. Work! Work! Go on opening centres in 30 this way. We have them already in Calcutta and Madras, and it will 31 be excellent if you can start new ones at Meerut and Ajmer. Go on 32 slowly starting centres at different places like that. Here all my 33 letters etc., are to be addressed in care of E. T. Sturdy, Esq., High 34 View, Caversham, Reading, England, and those for America, C/o 35 Miss Phillips, 19 W. 38 Street, New York. By degrees we must 36 spread the world over. The first thing needed is obedience. You 37 must be ready to plunge into fire--then will work be done. . . . Form 38 societies like that at different villages in Rajputana. There you have 39 a hint.

40 affectionately,

Yours

Vivekananda

{original in Bengali}

1 My Dear--{Brother-disciples at the Math},
2 The books that Sanyal sent have arrived. I forgot to mention
3 this. Please inform him about it.

4 Let me write down something for you all:

5 1. Know partiality to be the chief cause of all evil. That is to 6 say, if you show towards any one more love than towards somebody 7 else, rest assured, you will be sowing the seeds of future troubles.

8 2. If anybody comes to you to speak ill of any of his brothers, 9 refuse to listen to him in toto . It is a great sin to listen even. In that 10 lies the germ of future troubles.

11 3. Moreover, bear with everyone's shortcomings. Forgive 12 offences by the million. And if you love all unselfishly, all will by 13 degrees come to love one another. As soon as they fully understand 14 that the interests of one depend upon those of others, everyone of 15 them will give up jealousy. To do something conjointly is not in our 16 very national character. Therefore you must try to inaugurate that 17 spirit with the utmost care, and wait patiently. To tell you the truth, 18 I do not find among you any distinction of great or small: everyone 19 has the capacity to manifest, in times of need, the highest energy. I 20 see it. Look for instance how Shashi will remain always constant to 21 his spot; his steadfastness is a great foundation-rock. How 22 successfully Kali and Jogen brought about the Town Hall meeting; it 23 was indeed a momentous task! Niranjan has done much work in 24 Ceylon and elsewhere. How extensively has Sarada travelled and 25 sown seeds of gigantic future works! Whenever I think of the 26 wonderful renunciation of Hari, about his steadiness of intellect and 27 forbearance, I get a new access of strength! In Tulasi, Gupta, 28 Baburam, Sharat, to mention a few, in every one of you there is 29 tremendous energy. If you still entertain any doubt as to Shri 30 Ramakrishna's being a jewel-expert, what then is the difference
31 between you and a madman! Behold, hundreds of men and women 32 of this country are beginning to worship our Lord as the greatest of 33 all Avataras! Steady! Every great work is done slowly. . . .

34 He is at the helm, what fear! You are all of infinite strength-- 35 how long does it take you to keep off petty jealousy or egoistic 36 ideas! The moment such propensity comes, resign yourselves to the 37 Lord! Just make over your body and mind to His work, and all 38 troubles will be at an end for ever.

39 There will not be room enough, I see, in the house where you 40 are at present living. A commodious building is needed. That is to 41 say, you need not huddle together in one room. If possible, not more 42 than two should live in the same room. There should be a big hall, 43 where the books may be kept.

44 Every morning there should be a little reading from the 45 scriptures, which Kali and others may superintend by turns. In the 46 evening there should be another class, with a little practice in 47 meditation and Sankirtanas etc. You may divide the work, and set 48 apart one day for Yoga, a day for Bhakti, another for Jnana, and so 49 forth: It will be excellent if you fix a routine like this, so that outside 50 people also may join in the evening classes. And every Sunday, from 1 ten in the morning up till night, there should be a continuous 2 succession of classes and Sankirtanas etc. That is for the public. If 3 you take the trouble to continue this kind of routine work for some 4 time, it will gradually make itself easy and smooth. There should be 5 no smoking in that hall, for which another place must be set apart.

6 If you can take trouble to bring about this state of things by 7 degrees, I shall think a great advance is made.

8 What about a certain magazine that Haramohan was trying to 9 publish? If you can manage to start one, it will indeed be nice.

10 affectionately, Yours
11

20 My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

21 Just now I got your letter and was glad to go through it. No 22 matter whether there is any work done in India or not, the real 23 work lies here. I do not want anybody to come over now. On my 24 return to India I shall train a few men, and after that there will be 25 no danger for them in the West. Yes, it was of Gunanidhi that I 26 wrote. Give my special love and blessings to Hari Singh and others.
27 Never take part in quarrels and disputes. Who on earth possesses 28 the power to put the Raja of Khetri down?--The Divine Mother is at 29 his elbow! I have received Kali's letter too. It will be very good 30 indeed if you can start a centre in Kashmir. Wherever you can, open 31 a centre. . . . Now I have laid the foundations firm here and in 32 England, and nobody has the power to shake them. New York is in a 33 commotion this year. Next year will come the turn of London. Even 34 big giants will give way, who counts your pigmies! Gird up your 35 loins and set yourselves to work! We must throw the world into 36 convulsions with our triumphal shouts. This is but the beginning, 37 my boy. Do you think there are men in our country, it is a Golgotha
38 ! There is some chance if you can impart education to the masses.
39 Is there a greater strength than that of Knowledge? Can you give 40 them education? Name me the country where rich men ever helped 41 anybody! In all countries it is the middle classes that do all great 42 works. How long will it take to raise the money? Where are the men 43 ? Are there any in our country? Our countrymen are boys, and we 44 must treat them as such. . . . There are some few religious and 45 philosophical books left--the remnants of the mansion that has been 46 burnt down; take them with you, quick and come over to this 47 country. . . .

48 Never fear! The Divine Mother is helping me! This year such

1 work is going to be turned out that you will be struck dumb to hear 2 of it!

3 What fear! Whom to fear! Steel your hearts and set 4 yourselves to work!

6 affectionately,

7 Vivekananda

8 PS. Sarada is talking of bringing out a Bengali magazine.
9 Help it with all your might. It is not a bad idea. You must not throw 10 cold water on anybody's project. Give up criticism altogether. Help 11 all as long as you find they are doing all right, and in cases where 12 they seem to be going wrong, show them their mistakes gently. It is 13 criticising each other that is at the root of all mischief. That is the 14 chief factor in breaking down organisations. . . .

21 {original in Bengali}

22 My Dear Shashi {Ramakrishnananda},

23 Yesterday I received a letter from you in which there was a 24 smattering of news, but nothing in detail. I am much better now.
25 Through the grace of the Lord I am proof against the severe cold 26 for this year. Oh, the terrible cold! But these people keep all down 27 through scientific knowledge. Every house has its cellar 28 underground, in which there is a big boiler whence steam is made 29 to course day and night through every room. This keeps all the 30 rooms warm, but it has one defect, that while it is summer indoors, 31 it is 30 to 40 degrees below zero outside! Most of the rich people of 32 this country make for Europe during the winter, which is 33 comparatively warm.

34 Now, let me give you some instructions. This letter is meant 35 for you. Please go through these instructions once a day and act up 36 to them. I have got Sarada's letter--he is doing good work--but now 37 we want organisation. To him, Brother Tarak, and others please 38 give my special love and blessings. The reason why I give you these 39 few instructions is that there is an organising power in you--the 40 Lord has made this known to me--but it is not yet fully developed.
41 Through His blessings it will soon be. That you never lose your 42 centre of gravity is an evidence of this, but it must be both intensive 43 and extensive.

44 1. All the Shastras hold that the threefold misery that there is 45 in this world is not natural, hence it is removable.

46 2. In the Buddha Incarnation the Lord says that the root of 47 the Adhibhautika misery, or misery arising from other terrestrial

1 beings, is the formation of classes (Jati); in other words, every form 2 of class-distinction, whether based on birth, or acquirements, or 3 wealth is at the bottom of this misery. In the Atman there is no 4 distinction of sex, or Varna or Ashrama, or anything of the kind, and 5 as mud cannot be washed away by mud, it is likewise impossible to 6 bring about oneness by means of separative ideas.

7 3. In the Krishna Incarnation He says that the root of all sorts 8 of misery is Avidya (Nescience) and that selfless work purifies the 9 mind. But "{Sanskrit}--Even sages are bewildered to decide what is 10 work and what is no-work" (Gita).

11 4. Only that kind of work which develops our spirituality is 12 work. Whatever fosters materiality is no-work.

13 5. Therefore work and no-work must be regulated by a 14 person's aptitude, his country, and his age.

15 6. Works such as sacrifices were suited to the olden times but 16 are not for the modern times.

17 7. From the date that the Ramakrishna Incarnation was born, 18 has sprung the Satya-Yuga (Golden Age). . . .

19 8. In this Incarnation atheistic ideas . . . will be destroyed by 20 the sword of Jnana (knowledge), and the whole world will be unified 21 by means of Bhakti (devotion) and Prema (Divine Love). Moreover, 22 in this Incarnation, Rajas, or the desire for name and fame etc., is 23 altogether absent. In other words, blessed is he who acts up to His 24 teachings; whether he accepts Him or not, does not matter.

25 9. The founders of different sects, in the ancient or modern 26 times, have not been in the wrong. They have done well, but they 27 must do better. Well-better--best.

28 10. Therefore we must take all up where they are, that is, we 29 must lead them on to higher and higher ideals, without upsetting 30 their own chosen attitude. As to social conditions, those that prevail 31 now are good, but they shall be better--best.

32 11. There is no chance for the welfare of the world unless the 33 condition of women is improved. It is not possible for a bird to fly on 34 only one wing.

35 12. Hence, in the Ramakrishna Incarnation, the acceptance of 36 a woman as the Guru, hence His practising in the woman's garb 37 and frame of mind,¹²⁹ hence too His preaching the motherhood of 38 women as representations of the Divine Mother.

39 13. Hence it is that my first endeavour is to start a Math for 40 women. This Math shall be the origin of Gargis and Maitreyis, and 41 women of even higher attainments than these. . . .

42 14. No great work can be achieved by humbug. It is through 43 love, a passion for truth, and tremendous energy, that all 44 undertakings are accomplished. {Sanskrit}--Therefore, manifest 45 your manhood.

1 ¹²⁹ ?For some time Shri Ramakrishna dressed himself as a woman and 2 practised Sadhana conceiving himself to be a woman to get rid of the sex-idea.
3

1 15. There is no need for quarrel or dispute with anybody. Give 2 your message and leave others to their own thoughts. "{Sanskrit}-- 3 Truth alone triumphs, not falsehood." {Sanskrit}--Why then fight?

4 . . . Combine seriousness with childlike naivete . Live in 5 harmony with all. Give up all idea of egoism, and entertain no
6 sectarian views. Useless wrangling is a great sin.

7 . . . From Sarada's letter I came to know that N__ Ghosh has 8 compared me with Jesus Christ, and the like. That kind of thing may 9 pass muster in our country, but if you send such comments here in 10 print, there is a chance of my being insulted! I mean, I do not like to 11 hamper anybody's freedom of thought--am I a missionary? If Kali 12 has not sent those papers to this country, tell him not to do it. Only 13 the Address will do, I do not want the proceedings. Now many 14 respectable ladies and gentlemen of this country hold me in 15 reverence. The missionaries and others of that ilk have tried their 16 utmost to put me down, but finding it useless have now become 17 quiet. Every undertaking must pass through a lot of obstacles.
18 Truth triumphs if only one pursues a peaceful course. I have no 19 need to reply to what a Mr. Hudson has spoken against me. In the 20 first place, it is unnecessary, and secondly, I shall be bringing 21 myself down to the level of people of Mr. Hudson's type. Are you 22 mad? Shall I fight from here with one Mr. Hudson? Through the 23 Lord's grace, people who are far above Mr. Hudson in rank listen to 24 me with veneration. Please do not send any more papers. Let all 25 that go on in India, it will do no harm. For the Lord's work at one 26 time there was need for that kind of newspaper blazoning. When 27 that is done, there is no more need for it. . . . It is one of the 28 attendant evils of name and fame that you can't have anything 29 private. . . . Before you begin any undertaking, pray to Shri 30 Ramakrishna, and he will show you the right way. We want a big 31 plot of land to begin with, then building and all will come. Slowly 32 our Math is going to raise itself, don't worry about it. . . .

33 Kali and all others have done good work. Give my love and 34 best wishes to all. Work in unison with the people of Madras, and 35 let someone or other amongst you go there at intervals. Give up for 36 ever the desire for name and fame and power. While I am on earth, 37 Shri Ramakrishna is working through me. So long as you believe in 38 this there is no danger of any evil for you.

39 The Ramakrishna Punthi (Life of Shri Ramakrishna in 40 Bengali verse) that Akshaya has sent is very good, but there is no 41 glorification of the Shakti at the opening which is a great defect.
42 Tell him to remedy it in the second edition. Always bear this in mind 43 that we are now standing before the gaze of the world, and that 44 people are watching every one of our actions and utterances.
45 Remember this and work.

46 . . . Be on the look-out for a site for our Math. . . . If it be at 47 some little distance from Calcutta, no harm. Wherever we shall 48 build our Math, there we shall have a stir made. Very glad to learn 49 about Mahim Chakravarty. The Andes have turned into the holy 50 Gaya, I see! Where is he? Please give him, Sj. Bijoy Goswami, and 51 our other friends my cordial greetings. . . . To beat an opponent one

1 needs a sword and buckler, so carefully learn English and Sanskrit.
2 Kali's English is getting nicer every day, while that of Sarada is 3 deteriorating. Tell Sarada to give up the flowery style. It is 4 extremely difficult to write a flowery style in a foreign tongue.
5 Please convey to him a hundred thousand bravos from me! There's 6 a hero indeed. . . . Well done, all of you! Bravo, lads! The beginning 7 is excellent. Go on in that way. If the adder of jealousy does not 8 come in, there is no fear! {Sanskrit}--Cheer up! "{Sanskrit}--Those 9 who serve My devotees are My best devotees." Have all of you a 10 little grave bearing. I am not writing any book on Hinduism at 11 present. But I am jotting down my thoughts. Every religion is an 12 expression, a language to express the same truth, and we must 13 speak to each in his own language. That Sarada has grasped this, is 14 all right. It will be time enough to look to Hinduism later on. Do you 15 think people in this country would be much attracted if I talk of 16 Hinduism?--The very name of narrowness in ideas will scare them
17 away! The real thing is--the Religion taught by Shri Ramakrishna, 18 let the Hindus call it Hinduism--and others call it in their own way.
19 Only you must proceed slowly. "{Sanskrit}--One must make 20 journeys slowly." Give my blessings to Dinanath, the new recruit. I 21 have very little time to write--always lecture, lecture, lecture.
22 Purity, Patience, Perseverance. . . . You must ask those numerous 23 people who are now paying heed to Shri Ramakrishna's teachings, 24 to help you pecuniarily to a certain extent. How can the Math be 25 maintained unless they help you? You must not be shy of making 26 this plain to all. . . .

27 There is no gain in hastening my return from this country. In 28 the first place, a little sound made here will resound there a great 29 deal. Then, the people of this country are immensely rich and are 30 bold enough to pay. While the people of our country have neither 31 money nor the least bit of boldness.

32 You will know everything by degrees. Was Shri Ramakrishna 33 the Saviour of India merely? It is this narrow idea that has brought 34 about India's ruin, and her welfare is an impossibility so long as this 35 is not rooted out. Had I the money I would send each one of you to 36 travel all over the world. No great idea can have a place in the 37 heart unless one steps out of his little corner. It will be verified in 38 time. Every great achievement is done slowly. Such is the Lord's 39 will. . . .

40 Why didn't any of you write about Daksha and Harish? I shall 41 be glad to know if you watch their whereabouts. That Sanyal is 42 feeling miserable is because his mind is not yet pure like the water 43 of the Ganga. It is not yet selfless, but will be in time. He will have 44 no misery if he can give up the little crookedness and be straight-45 forward. My special loving greetings to Rakhal and Hari. Take great 46 care of them. . . . Never forget that Rakhal was the special object of 47 Shri Ramakrishna's love. Let nothing daunt you. Who on earth has 48 the power to snub us so long as the Lord favours us? Even if you 49 are at your last breath, be not afraid. Work on with the intrepidity 50 of a lion but, at the same time with the tenderness of a flower. Let 51 this year's Shri Ramakrishna festival be celebrated in great pomp.
52 Let the feeding be quite ordinary--Prasada being distributed in earthen plates among the devotees standing in rows. There should be readings from Shri Ramakrishna's Life. Place books like the Vedas and the Vedanta together and perform Arati before them. . . . Avoid issuing invitation cards of the old style. "{Sanskrit}--With Bhagavan Shri Ramakrishna's blessings and our great esteem we have the pleasure to invite you." Write some such line, and then write that to defray the expenses of Shri Ramakrishna's Birthday Festival and those of the maintenance of the Math, you want his assistance. That if he likes, he may kindly send the money to such and such, at such and such address, and so on. Also add a page in English. The term "Lord Ramakrishna" has no meaning. You must give it up. Write "Bhagavan" in English characters, and add a line or two in English:

THE ANNIVERSARY OF BHAGAVAN SHRI RAMAKRISHNA

Sir, we have great pleasure in inviting you to join us in celebrating the ___th anniversary of Bhagavan Ramakrishna Paramahansa. For the celebration of this great occasion and for the maintenance of the Alambazar Math funds are absolutely necessary. If you think that the cause is worthy of your sympathy, we shall be very grateful to receive your contribution to the great work.

Yours

obediently,

(Name)

If you get more than enough money, spend only a little of it and keep the surplus as a reserve fund to defray your expenses. On the plea of offering the food to the Lord, do not make everybody wait till he is sick, to have a stale and unsavoury dinner. Have two filters made and use that filtered water for both cooking and drinking purposes. Boil the water before filtering. If you do this, you will never more hear of malaria. Keep a strict eye on everybody's health. If you can give up lying on the floor--in other words, if you can get the money to do it, it will be excellent indeed. Dirty clothes are the chief cause of disease. . . . About the food offering, let me tell you that only a little Payasanna (milk-rice with sugar) will do. He used to love that alone. It is true that the worship-room is a help to many, but it is no use indulging in Rajasika and Tamasika food. Let the ceremonials give place to a certain extent to a little study of the Gita or the Upanishads or other sacred books. What I mean is this--let there be as little materialism as possible, with the maximum of spirituality. . . . Did Shri Ramakrishna come for this or that particular individual, or for the world at large? If the latter, then you must present him in such a light that the whole world may understand him. . . . You must not identify yourselves with any life of his written by anybody nor give your sanction to any. There is no danger so long as such books do not come out associated with our name. . . . "Say yea, yea, to all and stick to your own."

. . . A thousand thanks to Mahendra Babu for his kindly helping us. He is a very liberal-hearted man. . . . About Sanyal, he will attain the highest good by doing his bit of work attentively, that

1 is, by simply serving Shri Ramakrishna's children. . . . Brother 2 Tarak is doing very good work. Bravo! Well done! That is what we 3 want. Let me see all of you shoot like so many meteors! What is 4 Gangadhar doing? Some Zemindars in Rajputana respect him. Tell 5 him to get some money from them as Bhiksha; then he is a man. . . .

6 Just now I read Akshaya's book. Give him a hundred thousand 7 hearty embraces from me. Through his pen Shri Ramakrishna is 8 manifesting himself. Blessed is Akshaya! Let him recite that Punthi 9 before all. He must recite it before all in the Festival. If the work be 10 too large, let him read extracts of it. Well, I do not find a single 11 irrelevant word in it. I cannot tell in words the joy I have 12 experienced by reading his book. Try all of you to give the book an 13 extensive sale. Then ask Akshaya to go from village to village to 14 preach. Well done Akshaya! He is doing his work. Go from village to 15 village and proclaim to all Shri Ramakrishna's teachings, can there 16 be a more blessed lot than this? I tell you, Akshaya's book and 17 Akshaya himself must electrify the masses. Dear, dear, Akshaya, I 18 bless you with all my heart, my dear brother. May the Lord sit in 19 your tongue! Go and spread his teachings from door to door. There 20 is no need whatever of your becoming a Sannyasin. . . . Akshaya is 21 the future apostle for the masses of Bengal. Take great care of 22 Akshaya; his faith and devotion have borne fruit.

23 Ask Akshaya to write these few points in the third section of 24 his book, "The Propagation of the Faith".

25 1. Whatever the Vedas, the Vedanta, and all other 26 Incarnations have done in the past, Shri Ramakrishna lived to 27 practise in the course of a single life.

28 2. One cannot understand the Vedas, the Vedanta, the 29 Incarnations, and so forth, without understanding his life. For he 30 was the explanation.

31 3. From the very date that he was born, has sprung the Satya-32 Yuga (Golden Age). Henceforth there is an end to all sorts of 33 distinctions, and everyone down to the Chandala will be a sharer in 34 the Divine Love. The distinction between man and woman, between 35 the rich and the poor, the literate and illiterate, Brahmins and 36 Chandalas--he lived to root out all. And he was the harbinger of 37 Peace--the separation between Hindus and Mohammedans, 38 between Hindus and Christians, all are now things of the past. That 39 fight about distinctions that there was, belonged to another era. In 40 this Satya-Yuga the tidal wave of Shri Ramakrishna's Love has 41 unified all.

42 Tell him to expand these ideas and write them in his own
43 style.

44 Whoever--man or woman--will worship Shri Ramakrishna, be 45 he or she ever so low, will be then and there converted into the very 46 highest. Another thing, the Motherhood of God is prominent in this 47 Incarnation. He used to dress himself as a woman--he was, as it 48 were, our Mother--and we must likewise look upon all women as the 49 reflections of the Mother. In India there are two great evils.
50 Trampling on the women, and grinding the poor through caste

1 restrictions. He was the Saviour of women, Saviour of the masses, 2 Saviour of all, high and low. And let Akshaya introduce his worship 3 in every home--Brahmin or Chandala, man or woman--everyone has 4 the right to worship him. Whoever will worship him only with 5 devotion shall be blessed for ever.

6 Tell him to write in this strain. Never mind anything--the Lord 7 will be at his side.

9 affectionately,

10 Vivekananda

11 PS. . . . Ask Sanyal to send me a copy each of the Narada and 12 Shandilya Sutras , and one of the Yogavasishtha , that has been 13 translated in Calcutta. I want the English translation of the last, not 14 a Bengali edition. . . .

24 Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

25 Glad to receive your letters. There are two defects in the 26 letters which you all write, specially in yours. The first is that very 27 few of the important points I ask are answered. Secondly, there is 28 unusual delay in replying. . . . I have to work day and night, and am 29 always whirling from place to place besides. . . . These are 30 countries where the people are most luxurious, fashionable folk, 31 and nobody would touch a man who has but a speck of dirt on his 32 body. . . . I hoped that somebody would come while I was still here, 33 but as yet nothing has been settled I see. . . . Business is business, 34 that is, you must do everything promptly; delay and shuffling won't 35 do. By the end of next week I shall go to America, so there is no
36 chance of my meeting him who is coming. . . . These are countries 37 of gigantic scholars. Is it a joke to make disciples of such people?
38 You are but children and talk like children. Only this much is 39 needed that there should be someone to teach a little Sanskrit, or 40 translate a bit in my absence, that's all. Why not let Girish Babu 41 visit these lands? It is a good idea. It will cost him but 3000 rupees 42 to visit England and America, and go back. The more people come 43 to these countries, the better. But then it sets my nerves on edge to 44 look at those who don hats and pose as Sahibs !

45 Black as chimney sweeps, and calling themselves Europeans!
46 Why not wear one's country-dress, as befits gentlemen?--Instead of 47 that, to add to that frightfulness of appearance! Good heavens! . . .

1 Here, as in our country one has to spend from one's own pocket to 2 give lectures, but one can make good the expenses if one lives long 3 enough and makes a reputation. Another thing, my incessant 4 lecturing tours are making my constitution very nervous, causing 5 insomnia and other troubles. Over and above that, I have to work 6 single-handed. It is no use depending on my countrymen. No one (in 7 Bengal) has hitherto helped me with a penny, nor has a single soul 8 stepped forward to my assistance. Everybody in this world seeks 9 help, and the more you help him, the more he wants. And if you can 10 do no further, he will call you a cheat. . . . I love ___ and trust him. . .
11 . He will be free from disease through the Lord's grace. I take all 12 his responsibility. . . .

24 Dear Shashi {Ramakrishnananda},

25 . . . I am in receipt of Rakhal's letter today. I am sorry to hear 26 that ___ has suffered from gravel. Most probably it was due to 27 indigestion. Gopal's debts have been cleared; now ask him to join 28 the monastic order. The worldly-wise instinct is most difficult to root 29 out. . . . Let him come and work in the Math. One is apt to imbibe a 30 lot of mischievous ideas by concerning oneself too long in worldly 31 affairs. If he refuses to take the monastic vow, please tell him to 32 clear out. I don't want amphibious type of men who will be half 33 monks and half householders. . . . Haramohan has coined a Lord
34 Ramakrishna Paramahansa, I see. What does he mean? English 35 Lord, or Duke? Tell Rakhal, let people say whatever they will--"Men 36 (who wrongly criticise) are to be treated as worms!" as Shri 37 Ramakrishna used to say. Let there be no disparity between what 38 you profess and what you do, also eschew the very name of 39 Jesuitism. Was I ever an orthodox, Pauranika Hindu, an adherent of 40 social usages? I do not pose as one. You will not have to say things 41 that will be pleasant to any section of people. You must not so 42 much as notice what the Bengalis say for or against us. . . . They 43 could not do a penny-worth of service to him whose birth has 44 sanctified their country where the primary laws of health and 45 sanitation are trampled, and yet they would talk big! What matters 46 is, my brother, what such men have got to say! . . . It is for you to go 47 on doing your own work. Why look up to men for approbation, look 48 up to God! I hope Sharat will be able to teach them the Gita and the 49 Upanishads and their commentaries somehow, with the help of the 1 dictionary.--Or, is it an empty Vairagya that you have? The days of 2 such Vairagya are gone! It is not for everyone, my boy, to become 3 Ramakrishna Paramahansa! I hope Sharat has started by this time.

4 Please send a copy of the Panchadashi , a copy of the Gita (with as 5 many commentaries as possible), a copy each of the Narada and 6 Shandilya Sutras (published in Varanasi), a translation (good, not 7 worthless) of the Panchadashi --if it is available--and the translation
8 by Kalivara Vedantavagisha of Shankara's Commentary. And if there 9 be any translation, Bengali or English (by Shrish Babu of 10 Allahabad), of Panini's Sutras, or the Kashika-Vritti, or the Phani- 11 Bhashya , please send a copy of each. . . . Now, just tell your 12 Bengalis to send me a copy of the Vachaspathya Dictionary, and that 13 will be a good test for those tall-talking people. In England, 14 religious movements make very slow progress. These people here 15 are either bigots or atheists. And the former again have only a bit of 16 formal religion. They say, "Patriotism is our religion." That is all.

17 Send the books to America, c/o Miss Mary Phillips, 19 West 18 38th Street, New York, U.S.A. That is my American address. By the 19 end of November I shall go to America. So send my books etc., 20 there. If Sharat has started immediately on your receipt of my 21 letter, then only I may meet him, otherwise not. Business is 22 business, no child's play. Mr. Sturdy will see to him and 23 accommodate him. This time I have come to England just to probe a 24 little. Next summer I shall try to make some stir. The winter after 25 that, I shall go to India. . . . Correspond regularly with those who 26 are interested in us, so as to keep up their interest. Try to open 27 centres in places all over Bengal. . . . This much for the present. In 28 my next I shall give you more details. Mr. Sturdy is a very nice 29 gentleman, a staunch Vedantist, and understands a smattering of 30 Sanskrit. It is with a good deal of labour that you can do a little bit 31 of work in these countries; a sheer uphill task, with cold and rain 32 into the bargain. Moreover, here you must support yourself and do 33 your labour of love. Englishmen won't spend a penny on lectures or 34 things of that sort. If they do come to listen to you, well, thank your 35 stars--as is the case in our country. Besides, the common people 36 here do not even know of me now. In addition to all this, they will 37 give you a wide berth if you preach God and such things to them.
38 They think this must be another clergyman! Well, you just patiently 39 do one thing--set about collecting everything that books, beginning 40 with the Rig-Veda down to the most insignificant of Puranas and 41 Tantras, have got to say about creation and annihilation of the 42 universe, about race, heaven, and hell, the soul, consciousness, and

Dear Rakhal,

. . . Your suggestion to me to go back to India is no doubt right, but a seed has been sown in this country, and there is the possibility of its being nipped in the bud if I go away all on a sudden. Hence I have to wait some time. Moreover it will be possible to manage everything nicely from here. Everybody requests me to return to India. It is all right, but don't you see it is not wise to depend upon others. A wise man should stand firm on his own legs and act. Everything will come about slowly. For the present don't forget to be on the look-out for a site. We want a big plot-of about ten to twenty thousand rupees--it must be right on the Ganga. Though my capital is small, I am exceedingly bold. Have an eye on securing the land. At present we shall have to work three centres, one in New York, another in Calcutta and a third in Madras. Then, by degrees, as the Lord will arrange. . . . You must keep a strict eye on your health; let everything else be subordinated to that. . . .

Brother Tarak is eager for travel. Well, it is good, but these are very expensive countries; a preacher needs here at least a thousand rupees a month. But Brother Tarak has boldness, and it is God who provides everything. Quite true, but he must have to improve his English a little. The thing is, one has to snatch one's bread from the jaws of the missionary scholars. That is, one must prevail over these people by dint of learning, or one will be blown off at a puff. They understand neither Sadhus nor your Sannyasins, nor the spirit of renunciation. What they do understand is the vastness of learning, the display of eloquence and tremendous activity. Over and above that, the whole country will be searching for flaws, the clergy will day and night try to snub you, through force or guile. You must get rid of these obstructions to preach your doctrines. Through the mercy of the Divine Mother everything is possible. But in my opinion if Brother Tarak goes on starting some societies in the Punjab and Madras, and you become organised, it will be the best thing. It is indeed a great thing to discover a new path, but it is as difficult a task to cleanse that path and make it spacious and nice. If you live for some time in places where I have sown the seeds of our Master's ideals and succeed in developing the seeds into plants, you will be doing much greater work than I did. What will they who cannot manage some ready-made thing do with regard to things that are yet to come? If you cannot add a little salt to a dish almost done, how am I to believe that you will collect all the ingredients? Let Brother Tarak, as an alternative, start a Himalayan Math at Almora and have a library there, so that we may spend some of our spare time in a cool place and practise spiritual exercises. However, I have nothing to say against any particular course which any one may be led to adopt; on the contrary, God-speed--"{Sanskrit}--May your journey be prosperous". Tell him to wait a bit. What's the good of being in a hurry? You shall all travel

1 the whole world. Courage! Brother Tarak has a great capacity for 2 work within him. Hence I expect much of him.. . . You remember, I
3 suppose, how after Shri Ramakrishna's passing away, all forsook us
4 as so many worthless, ragged boys. Only people like Balaram, 5 Suresh, Master, and Chuni Babu were our friends at that hour of 6 need. And we shall never be able to repay our debts to them. . . .
7 Tell Chuni Babu in private that he has nothing to fear, that those 8 who are protected by the Lord must be above fear. I am a puny
9 man, but the glories of the Lord are infinite. {Sanskrit}--Discard 10 fear. Let not your faith be shaken. . . . Has danger any power over 11 one whom the Lord has taken into His fold?

12 Ever yours,

22 Dear Mrs. Bull,

23 Mr. Sturdy and I want to get hold of a few of the best, say, 24 strong and intelligent men in England to form a society, and 25 therefore we must proceed slowly. We must take care not to be run 26 over with "fads" from the first. This you will know has been my 28 Sannyasins in their manner for some time. He is an exceedingly 29 energetic man, educated and well versed in Sanskrit. . . . So far so

15 Dear Mother {Mrs. F. H. Leggett},

16 You have not forgotten your son? Where are you now? And 17 Tante and the babies? What about our saintly worshipper at your 18 shrine? Joe Joe is not entering "Nirvana" so soon, but her deep 19 silence almost seems to be a big "Samadhi".

20 Are you on the move? I am enjoying England very much. I am 21 living with my friend on philosophy , leaving a little margin for 22 eating and smoking. We are getting nothing else but Dualism and 23 Monism and all the rest of them.

24 Hollister has become very manly, I suppose, in his long 25 trousers; and Alberta is studying German.

26 The Englishmen here are very friendly. Except a few Anglo-27 Indians, they do not hate black men at all. Not even do they hoot at 28 me in the streets. Sometimes I wonder whether my face has turned 29 white, but the mirror tells the truth. Yet they are all so friendly 30 here.

31 Again, the English men and women who love India are more 32 Hindu than the Hindus themselves. I am getting plenty of 33 vegetables cooked, you will be surprised to hear, a la Indienne 34 perfectly. When an Englishman takes up a thing, he goes to its very 35 depths. Yesterday I met a Prof. Fraser, a high official here. He has 36 been half his life in India; and he has lived so much in ancient 37 thought and wisdom that he does not care a fig for anything out of 38 India!! You will be astonished to hear that many of the thoughtful 39 English men and women think that the Hindu caste is the only 40 solution of the social problem. With that idea in their head you may 41 imagine how they hate the socialists and other social democrats!!
42 Again, here the men--and the most highly educated--take the 43 greatest interest in Indian thought, and very few women. The 44 woman's sphere is narrower here than in America. So far 45 everything is going very well with me. I shall let you know any 46 further developments.

1 With my love to paterfamilias, to the Queen Mother, to Joe Joe

27 My dear Rakhal,

28 You know that I am now in England. I shall stay here for 29 about a month and go back to America. Next summer I shall again 30 come to England. At present there is not much prospect in England, 31 but the Lord is omnipotent. Let us wait and see. . . .

32 It is impossible for __ to come now. The thing is, the money 33 belongs to Mr. Sturdy, and we must have the kind of man he likes.
34 Mr. Sturdy has taken initiation from me, and is a very enterprising 35 and good man.

36 In the first place we want a man who has a thorough mastery
37 of English and Sanskrit. It is true that __ will be able to pick up 38 English soon should he come here but I am as yet unable to bring 39 men here to learn. We want them, first, who will be able to teach. In 40 the second place, I trust those that will not desert me in prosperity 41 and adversity alike. . . . The most trustworthy men are needed.
42 Then, after the foundation is laid, let him who will, come and make 43 a noise, there is no fear. __ gave no proof of wisdom in being 44 carried away by a hubbub and joining the party of those charlatans.

1 Sir, granted that Ramakrishna Paramahansa was a sham, granted 2 that it has been a very serious mistake, indeed, to take refuge in 3 him, but what is the way out now? What if one life is spent in vain, 4 but shall a man eat his own words? Can there be such a thing as 5 having a dozen husbands? Any of you may join any party you like, I 6 have no objection, no, not in the least, but travelling this world over 7 I find that save and except his circle alone, everywhere else thought 8 and act are at variance. For those that belong to him, I have the 9 utmost love, the utmost confidence. I have no alternative in the 10 matter. Call me one-sided if you will, but there you have my bona 11 fide avowal. If but a thorn pricks the foot of one who has 12 surrendered himself to Shri Ramakrishna, it makes my bones ache.
13 All others I love; you will find very few men so unsectarian as I am;
14 but you must excuse me, I have that bit of bigotry. If I do not appeal
15 to his name, whose else shall I? It will be time enough to seek for a 16 big Guru in our next birth; but in this, it is that unlearned Brahmin 17 who has bought this body of mine for ever.

18 I give you a bit of my mind; don't be angry, pray. I am your 19 slave so long as you are his--step a hair's breadth outside that, and 20 you and I are on a par. All the sects and societies that you see, the 21 whole host of them, inside the country or out, he has already 22 swallowed them all, my brother. "{Sanskrit}--These have verily 23 been killed by Myself long ago, be only the instrument, O Arjuna." 24 Today or tomorrow they will be merged in your own body. O man of 25 little faith! Through his grace, "{Sanskrit}--The whole universe 26 becomes a hoof-mark of the cow." Be not traitors, that is a sin past 27 atonement. Name, fame, good deeds, "{Sanskrit} etc--Whatever 28 sacrifices you perform, whatever penances you undergo, whatever 29 you eat"--surrender everything to his feet. What on earth do we 30 want? He has given us refuge, what more do we want? Bhakti is 31 verily its own reward--what else is needed? My brother, he who 32 made men of us by feeding and clothing and imparting wisdom and 33 knowledge, who opened the eyes of our self, whom day and night
34 we found the living God--must we be traitors to him!!! And you 35 forget the mercy of such a Lord! The lives of Buddha and Krishna 36 and Jesus are matters of ancient history, and doubts are entertained 37 about their historicity, and you in spite of seeing the greatness of 38 Shri Ramakrishna's life in flesh and blood sometimes lose your 39 head! Fie upon you! I have nothing to say. His likeness is being 40 worshipped in and out of your country, by godless and heartless 41 men, and you are stranded at times on disbelief!! In a breath he will 42 create for himself hundreds of thousands of such as you are.
43 Blessed is your birth, blessed your lineage, and blessed your 44 country that you were allowed to take the dust of his feet. Well I 45 can't help. He is protecting us, forsooth--I see it before my eyes.
46 Insane that you are, is it through my own strength that beauty like 47 that of fairies, and hundreds of thousands of rupees, lose their 48 attraction and appear as nothing to me? Or is it he who is 49 protecting me? He who has no faith in him and no reverence for the 50 Holy Mother will be a downright loser, I tell you plainly.

51 . . . Haramohan has written about his troubled circumstances, 52 and says he will be dislodged from his home soon. He has asked for

1 some lectures; but I have none at present, but have still some 2 money left in my purse, which I shall send him. So he need not be 3 afraid. I could send him at once, but I suspect that the money I last 4 sent was miscarried, therefore I postpone sending it. Secondly, I
5 know, besides, of no address to send it to. I see the Madras people
6 have failed to start the paper. Practical wisdom is altogether 7 wanting in the Hindu race, I see. Whenever you promise to do any 8 work, you must do it exactly at the appointed time, or people lose 9 their faith in you. Money matters require a speedy reply. . . . If 10 Master Mahashaya be willing, tell him to be my Calcutta agent, for 11 I have an implicit faith in him, and he understands a good deal of 12 these things; it is not for a childish and noisy rabble to do it. Tell 13 him to fix upon a centre, an address that will not change every hour, 14 and to which I shall direct all my Calcutta correspondence. . . .
15 Business is business. . . .

39 My Dear Akhandananda,

40 I am very glad to receive your letter. It is excellent work that 41 you are doing. R_ is very liberal and open-handed, but no 42 advantage should be taken over him for that reason. About the 43 raising of funds by Shriman_, well, it is a fair enterprise; but my 44 boy, this is a very queer world, where even the World-Gods Brahma 45 and Vishnu find it difficult to evade the clutches of lust and gold.
46 Wherever there is any the least concern with money, there is the 1 chance for misunderstanding. Let therefore nobody undertake such 2 work as raising money on behalf of the Math. . . . Whenever you 3 hear of any householder collecting funds in my or our name on the 4 plea of erecting a Math, or some such thing, the first thing you

5 should do is to distrust him, and never set your hand to it. The more 6 so, as householders of poor means take to various tricks to supply 7 their wants. Therefore, if ever a trusty devotee or a householder 8 with a heart, being of affluent circumstances, undertakes such 9 works as the founding of a Math, or if the funds raised be kept in 10 the custody of a trusty householder of wealth--well and good, 11 otherwise never have a hand in it. On the contrary, you must 12 dissuade others from such a thing. You are but a boy and are 13 ignorant of the snare of gold. Opportunities will turn even a staunch 14 moralist into a cheat. This is the way of the world. . . .

15 It is not at all in our nature to do a work conjointly. It is to this 16 that our miserable condition is due. He who knows how to obey 17 knows how to command. Learn obedience first. Among these 18 Western nations, with such a high spirit of independence, the spirit
19 of obedience is equally strong. We are all of us self-important-- 20 which never produces any work. Great enterprise, boundless 21 courage, tremendous energy, and, above all, perfect obedience-- 22 these are the only traits that lead to individual and national 23 regeneration. These traits are altogether lacking in us.

24 Go on with the work as you are doing it, but then you must 25 pay particular attention to study. J__ Babu has sent a Hindi 26 magazine, in which Pundit R__ of Alwar has published a translation 27 of my Chicago Address. Please convey my special indebtedness and 28 thanks to both.

29 Let me now address myself to you--take particular care to 30 start a centre in Rajputana. It must be in some central place like 31 Jaipur or Ajmer. Then branches must be established in towns like 32 Alwar and Khetri. You must mix with all, we do not want to quarrel 33 with any. Give my loving embrace to Pundit N__; the man is very 34 energetic, and will be a very practical man in time. Tender my 35 loving regards to Mr. M__ and __ji too. A Religious Association or 36 something of the kind has been afoot at Ajmer--what is it? Let me 37 know all about it. M__ Babu writes that he and others have written 38 me letters; but I have not received any up till now. . . .

39 About Maths, or centres, or anything of the kind, it is no use 40 starting them in Calcutta; Varanasi is the place for them. I have 41 many plans like that, but all depends on funds. You will know of 42 them by degrees. You might have noticed from the papers that our 43 movement is steadily gaining ground in England. Every enterprise 44 in this country takes some time to have a go. But once John Bull 45 sets his hand to a thing, he will never let it go. The Americans are 46 quick, but they are somewhat like straw on fire, ready to be 47 extinguished. Do not preach to the public that Ramakrishna 48 Paramahansa was an Incarnation, and things of that sort. I have 49 some followers at __ look after them. . . . Infinite power will come 50 unto you--never fear. Be pure, have faith, be obedient.

51 Teach against the marriage of boys. No scripture ever

1 sanctions it. But for the present say nothing against little girls being 2 married. Directly you stop the marriage of boys, that of girls will 3 stop of itself. Girls surely are not going to marry among themselves!
4 Write to the Secretary, Arya Samaj, Lahore, asking the whereabouts
5 of a Sannyasin named Achyutananda who used to live with them.
6 Make special inquiry of the man. . . . Never fear.

29 Dear Alberta,

30 Received your nice letter last evening. Very kind of you to 31 remember me. I am going soon to see the "Heavenly Pair". Mr.
32 Leggett is a saint as I have told you already, and your mother is a 33 born empress, every inch of her, with a saint's heart inside.

34 I am so glad you are enjoying the Alps so much. They must be 35 wonderful. It is always in such places that the human soul aspires 36 for freedom. Even if the nation is spiritually poor, it aspires for 37 physical freedom. I met a young Swiss in London. He used to come 38 to my classes. I was very successful in London, and though I did not 39 care for the noisy city, I was very much pleased with the people. In 40 your country, Alberta, the Vedantic thought was introduced in the 41 beginning by ignorant "cranks", and one has to work his way 42 through the difficulties created by such introductions. You may have 43 noticed that only a few men or women of the upper classes ever 44 joined my classes in America. Again in America the upper classes 45 being the rich, their whole time is spent in enjoying their wealth

1 and imitating (aping?) the Europeans. On the other hand in England
2 the Vedantic ideas have been introduced by the most learned men 3 in the country, and there are a large number among the upper 4 classes in England who are very thoughtful. So you will be 5 astonished to hear that I found my grounds all prepared, and I am 6 convinced that my work will have more hold on England than 7 America. Add to this the tremendous tenacity of the English 8 character, and judge for yourself. By this you will find that I have 9 changed a good deal of my opinion about England, and I am glad to 10 confess it. I am perfectly sure that we will do still better in 11 Germany. I am coming back to England next summer. In the 12 meanwhile my work is in very able hands. Joe Joe has been the 13 same kind good pure friend to me here as in America, and my debt 14 to your family is simply immense. My love and blessings to Hollister 15 and you. The steamer is standing at anchor on account of fog. The 16 purser has very kindly given me a whole cabin by myself. Every 17 Hindu is a Raja, they think, and are very polite--and the charm will 18 break, of course, when they find that the Raja is penniless!!

28 Dear Mrs. Bull,

29 Many thanks for your kind note of welcome. I arrived last 30 Friday after ten days of a very tedious voyage. It was awfully rough 31 and for the first time in my life I was very badly seasick. . . . I have 32 left some strong friends in England who will work in my absence
33 expecting my arrival next summer. My plans are not settled yet 34 about the work here. Only I have an idea to run to Detroit and 35 Chicago meanwhile, and then come back to New York. The public 36 lecture plan I intend to give up entirely, as I find the best thing for 37 me to do is to step entirely out of the money question--either in 38 public lectures or private classes. In the long run it does harm and 39 sets a bad example.

40 In England I worked on this principle and refused even the 41 voluntary collections they made. Mr. Sturdy, being a rich man, bore 42 the major part of the expenses of lecturing in big halls--the rest I 43 bore. It worked well.

44 Again, to use rather a vulgar illustration, even in religion 45 there is no use overstocking the market. The supply must follow the 46 demand, and the demand alone. If people want me, they will get up 47 lectures. I need not bother myself about these things. If you think 48 after consultation with Mrs. Adams and Miss Locke that it would be 49 practicable for me to come to Chicago for a course of lectures,

1 write to me. Of course the money question should be left entirely 2 out.

3 My idea is for autonomic, independent groups in different 4 places. Let them work on their own account and do the best they 5 can. As for myself, I do not want to entangle myself in any 6 organisation. Hoping you are enjoying good health both physically 7 and mentally,

35 Dear Sister {Miss S. Farmer},

36 In this universe where nothing is lost, where we live in the 37 midst of death in life, every thought that is thought, in public or in 38 private, in crowded thoroughfares or in the deep recesses of 39 primeval forests, lives. They are continuously trying to become self-40 embodied, and until they have embodied themselves, they will 41 struggle for expression, and any amount of repression cannot kill 42 them. Nothing can be destroyed--those thoughts that caused evil in 43 the past are also seeking embodiment, to be filtered through 44 repeated expression and, at last, transfigured into perfect good.

As such, there is a mass of thought which is at the present time struggling to get expression. This new thought is telling us to give up our dreams of dualism, of good and evil in essence, and the still wilder dream of suppression. It teaches us that higher direction and not destruction is the law. It teaches us that it is not a world of bad and good, but good and better--and still better. It stops short of nothing but acceptance. It teaches that no situation is hopeless, and as such accepts every form of mental, moral, or spiritual thought where it already stands, and without a world of condemnation tells it that so far it has done good, now is the time to do better. What in old times was thought of as the elimination of bad, it teaches as the transfiguration of evil and the doing of better. It, above all, teaches that the kingdom of heaven is already in existence if we will have it, that perfection is already in man if he will see it.

The Greenacre meetings last summer were so wonderful, simply because you opened yourself fully to that thought which has found in you so competent a medium of expression, and because you took your stand on the highest teaching of this thought that the kingdom of heaven already exists.

You have been consecrated and chosen by the Lord as a channel for converting this thought into life, and every one that helps you in this wonderful work is serving the Lord.

Our scripture teaches that he who serves the servants of the Lord is His highest worshipper. You are a servant of the Lord, and as a disciple of Krishna I will always consider it a privilege and worship to render you any service in the carrying out of your inspired mission wherever I be.

brother. Ever your affectionate

Dear Sarada,

. . . Your idea of the paper is very good indeed. Apply yourself to it heart and soul. . . . Never mind the funds. . . . There are many to preach Christianity and Mohammedanism--you just go through the preaching of your own country's religion. But then if you can get hold of a Mohammedan who is versed in Arabic and have old Arabic books translated, it will be a good plan. There is much of Indian history in the Persian language. If you can have the books translated bit by bit, it will be a good regular item. We want quite a number of writers, then there is the difficult task of getting subscribers. The way out is this: You lead a wandering life; wherever you find Bengali language spoken, thrust the paper on whomsoever you can lay your hands on. Enlist them by

1 vehemence!--they would always turn tail the moment they have to 2 spend something. Never mind anything! Push it on! Begin to 3 contribute articles, all of you who can. It won't do merely to sit idle.
4 You have done a heroic deed! Bravo! Those who falter and vacillate
5 will lag behind, and you will jump straight on top of all! Those that 6 are working for their own salvation will neither have their own nor 7 that of others. Let the commotion that you make be such as to 8 resound to the world's end. There are people who are ready to pick 9 holes in everything, but when it comes to the question of work, not 10 a scent of them can be had! To work!--as far as in you lies! Then I 11 shall go to India and move the whole country. What fear! "Even a 12 snake loses its venom if it is insisted that it has none." These people 13 will go on the negative track, till they are actually reduced to 14 nothing! . . .

15 Gangadhar has done right heroic work! Well done! Kali has 16 joined him in work--thrice well done!! Let one go to Madras, and 17 another to Bombay, let the world shake on its hinges! Oh, the grief!
18 If I could get two or three like me, I could have left the world 19 convulsed. As it is, I have to proceed gently. Move the world to its 20 foundations! Send one to China, another to Japan! What will the 21 poor householders do, with their little bits of life? It is for the 22 Sannyasins, Shiva's demons, to rend the skies with their shouts of 23 "Hara! Hara! Shambho!"

35 Dear Yogen,

36 . . . I am very sorry to hear that your health is not yet all right.
37 Can you go to a very cold climate where there is plenty of snowfall 38 in the winter, Darjeeling, for instance? The severity of the cold will 39 set your stomach right, as it has done in my case. And can you give 40 up altogether the habit of using ghee and spices? Butter digests 41 more quickly than ghee. . . .

42 Three months more and I go to England, to try once more to 43 make some stir; the following winter to India--and after that, it 44 depends on the Lord.

45 Put forth all nerve for the magazine that Sarada is wanting to 46 publish. Ask Shashi to look to it. One thing, neither Kali nor 47 anybody else has any need of coming to England at present. I shall 48 train them first when I go to India, and then they may go wherever 1 they please.

2 We would do nothing ourselves and would scoff at others who 3 try to do something--this is the bane that has brought about our 4 downfall as a nation. Want of sympathy and lack of energy are at 5 the root of all misery, and you must therefore give these two up.
6 Who but the Lord knows what potentialities there are in particular 7 individuals--let all have opportunities, and leave the rest to the 8 Lord. It is indeed very difficult to have an equal love for all, but 9 without it there is no Mukti.

19 Dear Mrs. Bull,

20 Your letter to Sturdy has been sent over to me. It was very 21 kind of you to write that note. This year, I am afraid, I am getting 22 overworked, as I feel the strain. I want a rest badly. So it is very 23 good, as you say, that the Boston work be taken up in the end of 24 March. By the end of April I will start for England.

25 Land can be had in large plots in the Catskills for very little 26 money. There is a plot of 101 acres for $200. The money I have 27 ready, only I cannot buy the land in my name. You are the only 28 friend in this country in whom I have perfect trust. If you consent, I 29 will buy the land in your name. The students will go there in 30 summer and build cottages or camps as they like and practise 31 meditation. Later on, if they can collect funds, they may build 32 something up. I am sorry, you cannot come just now. Tomorrow will 33 be the last Sunday lecture of this month. The first Sunday of next 34 month there will be a lecture in Brooklyn; the rest, three in New 35 York, with which I will close this year's New York lectures.

36 I have worked my best. If there is any seed of truth in it, it 37 will come to life. So I have no anxiety about anything. I am also 38 getting tired of lecturing and having classes. After a few months' 39 work in England I will go to India and hide myself absolutely for 40 some years or for ever. I am satisfied in my conscience that I did not 41 remain an idle Swami. I have a note-book which has travelled with 42 me all over the world. I find these words written seven years 43 ago--"Now to seek a corner and lay myself there to die!" Yet all this 44 Karma remained. I hope I have worked it out. I hope the Lord will 45 give me freedom from this preaching and adding good bondages.

46 "If you have known the Atman as the one existence and that 47 nothing else exists, for whom, for what desire, do you trouble 48 yourself?" Through Maya all this doing good etc. came into my

1 brain--now they are leaving me. I get more and more convinced that 2 there is no other object in work except the purification of the soul-- 3 to make it fit for knowledge. This world with its good and evil will 4 go on in various forms. Only the evil and good will take new names
5 and new seats. My soul is hankering after peace and rest eternal 6 undisturbed.

7 "Live alone, live alone. He who is alone never comes into 8 conflict with others--never disturbs others, is never disturbed by 9 others." I long, oh! I long for my rags, my shaven head, my sleep 10 under the trees, and my food from begging! India is the only place 11 where, with all its faults, the soul finds its freedom, its God. All this 12 Western pomp is only vanity, only bondage of the soul. Never more 13 in my life I realised more forcibly the vanity of the world. May the 14 Lord break the bondage of all--may all come out of Maya--is the 15 constant prayer of

24 Dear Sarada,

25 Your letter informed me of everything; but I note that you do 26 not so much as refer to the cable I sent about the celebration. The 27 dictionary that Shashi sent a few months ago has not arrived so 28 far. . . . I am going to England soon. Sharat need not come now at 29 all; for I am myself going to England. I do not want people who take 30 such a long time to make up their minds. I did not invite him for a 31 European tour, and I do not have the money either. So ask him not 32 to come, and none else need.

33 On perusal of your letter on Tibet, I came to lose all regard 34 for your common sense. In the first place, it is nonsense to say that 35 Notovitch's book is genuine. Did you see any original copy, or bring 36 it to India? Secondly, you say you saw in the Kailas Math the 37 portrait of Jesus and the Samaritan Woman. How do you know that 38 it was Jesus' portrait, and not that of a man in the street? Even 39 taking it for granted, how do you know that it was not put up in the 40 said Math by someone who was a Christian? And your opinions on 41 the Tibetans too are unsound; you did not certainly see the heart of 42 Tibet, but only a fringe of the trade route. In places like those only 43 the dregs of a nation are to be met. If on seeing the Chinabazar and 44 Barabazar quarters of Calcutta, anybody called every Bengali a liar, 45 would that be correct?

46 Consult Shashi properly when writing any article. . . . What 47 you need is only obedience. . . .

Dear Sarada,

Glad to hear everything in your letter. I have got news that Sharat arrived safe. I am in receipt of your letter and the copy of the Indian Mirror. Your contribution is good, go on writing regularly. . . . It is very easy to search for faults, but the characteristic of a saint lies in looking for merits--never forget this. . . . You need a little business faculty. . . . Now what you want is organisation--that requires strict obedience and division of labour. I shall write out everything in every particular from England, for which I start tomorrow. I am determined to make you decent workers thoroughly organised. . . .

The term "Friend" can be used with all. In the English language you have not that sort of cringing politeness common in Bengali, and such Bengali terms translated into English become ridiculous. That Ramakrishna Paramahansa was God--and all that sort of thing--has no go in countries like this. M__ has a tendency to put that stuff down everybody's throat, but that will make our movement a little sect. You keep aloof from such attempts; at the same time, if people worship him as God, no harm. Neither encourage nor discourage. The masses will always have the person, the higher ones the principle; we want both. But principles are universal, not persons. Therefore stick to the principles he taught, let people think whatever they like of his person. . . . Truce to all quarrels and jealousies and bigotry! These will spoil everything. "But many that are first shall be last; and the last first." "{Sanskrit}--Those who are the devotees of My devotees are My best devotees."

Dear Mrs. Bull,

. . . Day before yesterday I had a fine visit with Prof. Max Muller. He is a saintly man and looks like a young man in spite of his seventy years, and his face is without a wrinkle. I wish I had half his love for India and Vedanta. At the same time he is a friend of Yoga too and believes in it. Only he has no patience with humbugs.

1 Above all, his reverence for Ramakrishna Paramahansa is 2 extreme, and he has written an article on him for the Nineteenth 3 Century. He asked me, "What are you doing to make him known to 4 the world?" Ramakrishna has charmed him for years. Is it not good 5 news? . . .

6 Things are going on here slowly but steadily. I am to begin 7 from next Sunday my public lectures.

Dear Mrs. Bull,

The Raja-Yoga book is going on splendidly. Saradananda goes to the States soon.

I do not like any one whom I love to become a lawyer, although my father was one. My Master was against it, and I believe that that family is sure to come to grief where there are several lawyers. Our country is full of them; the universities turn them out by the hundreds. What my nation wants is pluck and scientific genius. So I want Mohin to be an electrician. Even if he fails in life, still I will have the satisfaction that he strove to become great and really useful to his country. . . . In America alone there is something in the air which brings out whatever is best in every one.
. . . I want him to be daring, bold, and to struggle to cut a new path for himself and his nation. An electrical engineer can make a living in India.

Yours with
love,

Vivekananda

PS. Goodwin is writing to you this mail with reference to a magazine in America. I think something of the sort is necessary to keep the work together, and shall of course do all that I can to help it on in the line he suggests.

. . . I think it very probable that he will come over with Saradananda.

Dear Shashi,

Max Muller wants all the sayings of Shri Ramakrishna classified, that is, all on Karma in one place, on Vairagya in another place, so on Bhakti, Jnana, etc., etc. You must undertake to do this forthwith. . . . We must take care to present only the universal aspect of his teachings. . . .

Sharat starts for America tomorrow. The work here is coming to a head. We have already got funds to start a London Centre. Next month I go to Switzerland to pass a month or two there, then I shall return to London. What will be the good of my going home?--This London is the hub of the world. The heart of India is here. How can I leave without laying a sure foundation here? Nonsense! For the present, I shall have Kali here, tell him to be ready. . . .

We want great spirit, tremendous energy, and boundless enthusiasm, no womanishness will do. Try to go on exactly as I wrote to you in my last. We want organisation. Organisation is power, and the secret of this is obedience.

affectionately,

Dear Shashi,

Send Kali to England as soon as you get this letter. . . . He will have to bring some books for me. I have only got Rig-Veda Samhita. Ask him to bring the Yajur-Veda, Sama-Veda, Atharva-Samhita, as many of the Brahmanas as he can get, beginning with the Shatapatha, some of the Sutras, and Yaska's Nirukta. . . .

Let there be no delay as in Sharat's case, but let Kali come at once. Sharat has gone to America, as he had no work to do here. That is to say, he was late by six months, and then when he came, I was here. . . .

5 Dear Frankincense {Mr. Leggett},

6 . . . Things are going on with me very well on this side of the Atlantic.

7 The Sunday lectures were quite successful; so were the 8 classes. The season has ended and I too am thoroughly exhausted. I 9 am going to make a tour in Switzerland with Miss Muller. The 10 Galsworthys have been very very kind. Joe brought them round 11 splendidly. I simply admire Joe in her tact and quiet way. She is a 12 feminine statesman or woman. She can wield a kingdom. I have 13 seldom seen such strong yet good common sense in a human being.
14 I will return next autumn and take up the work in America.

15 The night before last I was at a party at Mrs. Martin's, about 16 whom you must already know a good deal from Joe.

17 Well, the work is growing silently yet surely in England.
18 Almost every other man or woman came to me and talked about the 19 work. This British Empire with all its drawbacks is the greatest 20 machine that ever existed for the dissemination of ideas. I mean to 21 put my ideas in the center of this machine, and they will spread all 22 over the world. Of course, all great work is slow, and the difficulties 23 are too many, especially as we Hindus are the conquered race. Yet, 24 that is the very reason why it is bound to work, for spiritual ideals 25 have always come from the downtrodden. Jews overwhelmed the 26 Roman Empire with their spiritual ideals. You will be pleased to 27 know that I am also learning my lessons every day in patience and, 28 above all, in sympathy. I think I am beginning to see the Divine, 29 even inside the high and mighty Anglo-Indians. I think I am slowly 30 approaching to that state when I should be able to love the very 31 "Devil" himself, if there were any.

32 At twenty years of age I was the most unsympathetic, 33 uncompromising fanatic; I would not walk on the footpath on the 34 theatre side of the streets in Calcutta. At thirty-three, I can live in 35 the same house with prostitutes and never would think of saying a 36 word of reproach to them. Is it degenerate? Or is it that I am 37 broadening out into the Universal Love which is the Lord Himself?
38 Again I have heard that if one does not see the evil round him he 39 cannot do good work--he lapses into a sort of fatalism. I do not see 40 that. On the other hand, my power of work is immensely increasing 41 and becoming immensely effective. Some days I get into a sort of 42 ecstasy. I feel that I must bless every one, everything, love and 43 embrace everything, and I do see that evil is a delusion. I am in one 44 of these moods now, dear Francis, and am actually shedding tears 45 of joy at the thought of you and Mrs. Leggett's love and kindness to 46 me. I bless the day I was born. I have had so much of kindness and 47 love here, and that Love Infinite that brought me into being has 48 guarded every one of my actions, good or bad, (don't be 49 frightened), for what am I, what was I ever, but a tool in His hands, 50 for whose service I have given up everything, my beloved ones, my

1 joys, my life? He is my playful darling, I am His playfellow. There is 2 neither rhyme nor reason in the universe! What reason binds Him?
3 He the playful one is playing these tears and laughters over all 4 parts of the play! Great fun, great fun, as Joe says.

5 It is a funny world, and the funniest chap you ever saw is He-- 6 the Beloved Infinite! Fun, is it not? Brotherhood or playmatehood--a 7 school of romping children let out to play in this playground of the 8 world! Isn't it? Whom to praise, whom to blame, it is all His play.
9 They want explanations, but how can you explain Him? He is 10 brainless, nor has He any reason. He is fooling us with little brains 11 and reason, but this time He won't find me napping.

12 I have learnt a thing or two: Beyond, beyond reason and 13 learning and talking is the feeling, the "Love", the "Beloved". Ay, 14 sake , fill up the cup and we will be mad.

15 Yours ever in 16 madness,

32 My dear Shashi,

33 Today I received a letter from Ramdayal Babu, in which he 34 writes that many public women attend the Ramakrishna
35 anniversary festival at Dakshineswar, which makes many less 36 inclined to go there. Moreover, in his opinion, one day should be 37 appointed for men and another for women. My decision on the point 38 is this:

39 1. If public women are not allowed to go to such a great place 40 of pilgrimage as Dakshineswar, where else shall they go to? If is for 41 the sinful that the Lord manifests Himself specially, not so much for 42 the virtuous.

43 2. Let distinctions of sex, caste, wealth, learning, and the

1 whole host of them, which are so many gateways to hell, be 2 confined to the world alone. If such distinctions persist in holy 3 places of pilgrimage, where then lies the difference between them 4 and hell itself?

5 3. Ours is a gigantic City of Jagannatha, where those who 6 have sinned and those who have not, the saintly and the vicious, 7 men and women and children irrespective of age, all have equal 8 right. That for one day at least in the year thousands of men and 9 women get rid of the sense of sin and ideas of distinction and sing
10 and hear the name of the Lord, is in itself a supreme good.

11 4. If even in a place of pilgrimage people's tendency to evil be 12 not curbed for one day, the fault lies with you, not them. Create 13 such a huge tidal wave of spirituality that whatever people come 14 near will be swept away.

15 5. Those who, even in a chapel, would think this is a public 16 woman, that man is of a low caste, a third is poor, and yet another 17 belongs to the masses--the less be the number of such people (that 18 is, whom you call gentlemen) the better. Will they who look to the 19 caste, sex, or profession of Bhaktas appreciate our Lord? I pray to 20 the Lord that hundreds of public women may come and bow their 21 heads at His feet; it does not matter if not one gentleman comes.
22 Come public women, come drunkards, come thieves and all--His 23 Gate is open to all. "It is easier for a camel to pass through the eye 24 of a needle than for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of God." Never 25 let such cruel, demoniacal ideas have a place in your mind.

26 6. But then some social vigilance is needed. How are we to do 27 that? A few men (old men, preferably) should take charge as the 28 warders for the day. They will make circuits round the scene of the 29 festival, and in case they find any man or woman showing 30 impropriety of speech or conduct, they will at once expel them out 31 of the garden. But so long as they behave like good men and 32 women, they are Bhaktas and are to be respected--be they men or 33 women, honest citizens or unchaste.

34 I am at present travelling in Switzerland, and shall soon go to 35 Germany, to see Professor Deussen. I shall return to England from 36 there about the 23rd or 24th September, and the next winter will 37 find me back in my country.

1 Dear Mrs. Bull,

2 I received your last today. By this time you must have 3 received my receipt for £5 you sent. I do not know what 4 membership you mean. I have no objection to have my name to be 5 put on the list of membership of any society. As for Sturdy, I do not 6 know what his opinions are. I am now travelling in Switzerland; 7 from hence I go to Germany, then to England, and next winter to 8 India. I am very glad to hear that Saradananda and Goodwin are 9 doing good work in the U.S. As for me, I do not lay any claim to that 10 £500 for any work. I think I have worked enough. I am now going to 11 retire. I have sent for another man from India who will join me next 12 month. I have begun the work, let others work it out. So you see, to 13 set the work going I had to touch money and property, for a time.
14 Now I am sure my part of the work is done, and I have no more 15 interest in Vedanta or any philosophy in the world or the work itself.
16 I am getting ready to depart to return no more to this hell, this 17 world. Even its religious utility is beginning to pall me. May Mother 18 gather me soon to Herself never to come back any more! These 19 works, and doing good, etc., are just a little exercise to cleanse the 20 mind. I had enough of it. This world will be world ever and always.
21 What we are, so we see it. Who works? Whose work? There is no 22 world. It is God Himself. In delusion we call it world. Neither I nor 23 thou nor you--it is all He the Lord, all One. So I do not want 24 anything to do about money matters from this time. It is your 25 money. You spend what comes to you just as you like, and blessings 26 follow you.

27 Yours in the 28 Lord,

29 Vivekananda

30 PS. I have entire sympathy with the work of Dr. Janes and 31 have written him so. If Goodwin and Saradananda can speed the 32 work in U.S., Godspeed to them. They are in no way bound to me or 33 to Sturdy or to anybody else. It was an awful mistake in the 34 Greenacre programme that it was printed that Saradananda was 35 there by the kind permission (leave of absence from England) of 36 Sturdy. Who is Sturdy or anybody else to permit a Sannyasin?
37 Sturdy himself laughed at it and was sorry too. It was a piece of 38 folly. Nothing short of that. It was an insult to Sturdy and would 39 have proved serious for my work if it had reached India.
40 Fortunately I tore all those notices to pieces and threw them into 41 the gutter, and wondered whether it was the celebrated "Yankee"
42 manners the English people delight in talking about. Even so, I am 43 no master to any Sannyasin in this world. They do whatever it suits 44 them, and if I can help them--that is all my connection with them. I 45 have given up the bondage of iron, the family tie--I am not to take 46 up the golden chain of religious brotherhood. I am free, must 47 always be free. I wish everyone to be free--free as the air. If New 48 York needs Vedanta, or Boston, or any other place in the U.S., it 49 must receive them and keep them and provide for them. As for me, 50 I am as good as retired. I have played my part in the world.

Dear Sister {Harriet Hale},

Your very welcome news reached me just now, on my return here from Switzerland. I am very, very happy to learn that at last you have thought it better to change your mind about the felicity of "Old Maids Home". You are perfectly right now--marriage is the truest goal for ninety-nine per cent of the human race, and they will live the happiest life as soon as they have learnt and are ready to abide by the eternal lesson--that we are bound to bear and forbear and that life to every one must be a compromise.

Believe me, dear Harriet, perfect life is a contradiction in terms. Therefore we must always expect to find things not up to our highest ideal. Knowing this, we are bound to make the best of everything. From what I know of you, you have the calm power which bears and forbears to a great degree, and therefore I am safe to prophesy that your married life will be very happy.

All blessings attend you and your fiance and may the Lord make him always remember what good fortune was his in getting such a wife as you--good, intelligent, loving, and beautiful. I am afraid it is impossible for me to cross the Atlantic so soon. I wish I could, to see your marriage.

The best I can do in the circumstances is to quote from one of our books: "May you always enjoy the undivided love of your husband, helping him in attaining all that is desirable in this life, and when you have seen your children's children, and the drama of life is nearing its end, may you help each other in reaching that infinite ocean of Existence, Knowledge, and Bliss, at the touch of whose waters all distinctions melt away and we are all one!"

"May you be like Uma, chaste and pure throughout life--may your husband be like Shiva, whose life was in Uma!"

Your loving brother,

Vivekananda

{To Josephine MacLeod}

Once more in London, dear Joe Joe, and the classes have begun already. Instinctively I looked about for one familiar face which never had a line of discouragement, never changed, but was always helpful, cheerful, and strengthening--and my mind conjured up that face before me, in spite of a few thousand miles of space. For what is space in the realm of spirit? Well, you are gone to your home of rest and peace. For me, ever-increasing mad work; yet I have your blessings with me always, have I not? My natural tendency is to go into a cave and be quiet, but a fate behind pushes me forward and I go. Whoever could resist fate?

Why did not Christ say in the Sermon on the Mount, "Blessed are they that are always cheerful and always hopeful for they have already the kingdom of heaven"? I am sure, He must have said it, He with the sorrows of a whole world in His heart, He who likened the saintly soul with the child--but it was not noted down; of a thousand things they noted down only one, I mean, remembered.

Most of our friends came--one of the Galsworthys too--i.e. the married daughter. Mrs. Galsworthy could not come today; it was very short notice. We have a hall now, a pretty big one holding about 200 or more. There is a big corner which will be fitted up as the Library. I have another man from India now to help me.

I enjoyed Switzerland immensely, also Germany. Prof. Deussen was very kind--we came together to London and had great fun here. Prof. Max Muller is very, very friendly too. In all, the English work is becoming solid --and respectable too, seeing that great scholars are sympathising. Probably I go to India this winter with some English friends. So far about my own sweet self.

Now what about the holy family? Everything is going on first-rate, I am sure. You must have heard of Fox by this time. I am afraid I rather made him dejected the day before he sailed by telling him that he could not marry Mabel, until he began to earn a good deal of money! Is Mabel with you now? Give her my love. Also give me your present address.

How is Mother? Frankincense, same solid sterling gold as ever, I am sure. Alberta, working at her music and languages, laughing a good deal and eating a good many apples as usual? By the by, I now live mostly on fruits and nuts. They seem to agree with me well. If ever the old doctor, with "land" up somewhere, comes to see you, you may confide to him this secret. I have lost a good deal of my fat. But on days I lecture, I have to go on solid food. How is Hollis? I never saw a sweeter boy--may all blessings ever attend him through life.

I hear your friend Cola is lecturing on Zoroastrian philosophy--surely the stars are not smiling on him. What about your Miss Andreas and our Yogananda? What news about the brotherhood of the ZZZ's and our Mrs. (forgotten!)? I hear that half a shipload of Hindus and Buddhists and Mohammedans and Brotherhoods and what not have entered the U.S., and another

1 cargo of Mahatma-seekers, evangelists etc. have entered India!
2 Good. India and the U.S. seem to be two countries for religious 3 enterprise. Have a care, Joe; the heathen corruption is dreadful. I 4 met Madam Sterling in the street today. She does not come any 5 more for my lectures, good for her. Too much of philosophy is not 6 good. Do you remember that lady who used to come to every 7 meeting too late to hear a word but button-holed me immediately
8 after and kept me talking, till a battle of Waterloo would be raging 9 in my internal economy through hunger? She came. They are all 10 coming and more. That is cheering.

11 It is getting late in the night. So goodnight, Joe. (Is strict 12 etiquette to be followed in New York too?) And Lord bless you ever 13 and ever.

14 "Man's all-wise maker, wishing to create a faultless form 15 whose matchless symmetry should far transcend creation's choicest 16 works, did call together by his mighty will, and garner up in his 17 eternal mind, a bright assemblage of all lovely things, and then, as 18 in a picture, fashioned them into one perfect and ideal form. Such 19 the divine, the wondrous prototype whence her fair shape was 20 moulded into being." (Shakuntalam by Kalidasa, translated by 21 Monier Williams).

22 That is you, Joe Joe; only I would add, the same the creator 23 did with all purity and nobility and other qualities and then Joe was 24 made.

25 Ever yours, with love and
26 blessings,

27 Vivekananda

37 Dear (Miss S.E. Waldo),

38 . . . I had a fine rest in Switzerland and made a great friend of 39 Prof. Paul Deussen. My European work in fact is becoming more 40 satisfactory to me than any other work, and it tells immensely on 41 India. The London classes were resumed, and today is the opening 42 lecture. I now have a hall to myself holding two hundred or more. . .
43 .

44 You know of course the steadiness of the English; they are the 45 least jealous of each other of all nations, and that is why they 46 dominate the world. They have solved the secret of obedience 47 without slavish cringing--great freedom with great law-abidingness.

1 I know very little of the young man R__. He is a Bengali and 2 can teach a little Sanskrit. You know my settled doctrine. I do not 3 trust any one who has not conquered "lust and gold". You may try 4 him in theoretical subjects, but keep him off from teaching Raja-5 Yoga--that is a dangerous game except for the regularly trained to 6 play at. Of Saradananda, the blessing of the greatest Yogi of 7 modern India is on him--and there is no danger. Why do you not 8 begin to teach? . . . You have a thousand times more philosophy
9 than this boy R__. Send notices to the class and hold regular talks 10 and lectures.

11 I will be thousand times more pleased to see one of you start 12 than any number of Hindus securing success in America--even one 13 of my brethren. "Man wants Victory from everywhere, but defeat 14 from his own children". . . . Make a blaze! Make a blaze!

15 With all love and

24 Dear Mrs. Bull,

25 . . . I met in Germany Prof. Deussen. I was his guest at Kiel 26 and we travelled together to London and had some very pleasant 27 meetings here. . . . Although I am in full sympathy with the various 28 branches of religious and social work, I find that specification of 29 work is absolutely necessary. Our special branch is to preach 30 Vedanta. Helping in other work should be subservient to that one 31 ideal. I hope you will inculcate this in the mind of Saradananda very 32 strongly.

33 Did you read Max Muller's article on Ramakrishna? . . .
34 Things are working very favourably here in England. The work is 35 not only popular but appreciated.

45 My dear Mary {Hale},

1 "Silver and gold", my dear Mary, "have I none; but such as I
2 have give I thee" freely, and that is the knowledge that the goldness 3 of gold, the silverness of silver, the manhood of man, the 4 womanhood of woman, the reality of everything is the Lord--and 5 that this Lord we are trying to realise from time without beginning 6 in the objective, and in the attempt throwing up such "queer"
7 creatures of our fancy as man, woman, child, body, mind, the earth, 8 sun, moon, stars, the world, love, hate, property, wealth, etc.; also 9 ghosts, devils, angels and gods, God etc.

10 The fact being that the Lord is in us, we are He, the eternal 11 subject, the real ego, never to be objectified, and that all this 12 objectifying process is mere waste of time and talent. When the 13 soul becomes aware of this, it gives up objectifying and falls back 14 more and more upon the subjective. This is the evolution, less and 15 less in the body and more and more in the mind--man the highest 16 form, meaning in Sanskrit manas, thought--the animal that thinks 17 and not the animal that "senses" only. This is what in theology is 18 called "renunciation". The formation of society, the institution of 19 marriage, the love for children, our good works, morality, and ethics
20 are all different forms of renunciation. All our lives in every society 21 are the subjection of the will, the thirst, the desire. This surrender 22 of the will or the fictitious self--or the desire to jump out of 23 ourselves, as it were--the struggle still to objectify the subject--is 24 the one phenomenon in this world of which all societies and social 25 forms are various modes and stages. Love is the easiest and 26 smoothest way towards the self-surrender or subjection of the will, 27 and hatred, the opposite.

28 People have been cajoled through various stories or 29 superstitions of heavens and hells and Rulers above the sky, 30 towards this one end of self-surrender. The philosopher does the 31 same knowingly without superstition, by giving up desires.

32 An objective heaven or millennium therefore has existence 33 only in the fancy--but a subjective one is already in existence. The 34 musk-deer, after vain search for the cause of the scent of the musk, 35 at last will have to find it in himself.

36 Objective society will always be a mixture of good and evil-- 37 objective life will always be followed by its shadow, death, and the 38 longer the life, the longer will also be the shadow. It is only when 39 the sun is on our own head that there is no shadow. When God and 40 good and everything else is in us, there is no evil. In objective life, 41 however, every bullet has its billet--evil goes with every good as its 42 shadow. Every improvement is coupled with an equal degradation.
43 The reason being that good and evil are not two things but one, the 44 difference being only in manifestation--one of degree, not kind.

45 Our very lives depend upon the death of others--plants or 46 animals or bacilli! The other great mistake we often make is that 47 good is taken as an ever-increasing item, whilst evil is a fixed 48 quantity. From this it is argued that evil being diminished every day, 49 there will come a time when good alone will remain. The fallacy lies 50 in the assumption of a false premise. If good is increasing, so is evil.
51 My desires have been much more than the desires of the masses

1 among my race. My joys have been much greater than theirs--but 2 my miseries a million times more intense. The same constitution 3 that makes you feel the least touch of good makes you feel the least 4 of evil too. The same nerves that carry sensations of pleasure carry 5 the sensations of pain too--and the same mind feels both. The 6 progress of the world means more enjoyment and more misery too.
7 This mixture of life and death, good and evil, knowledge and 8 ignorance is what is called Maya--or the universal phenomenon. You 9 may go on for eternity inside this net, seeking for happiness--you 10 find much, and much evil too. To have good and no evil is childish 11 nonsense. Two ways are left open--one by giving up all hope to take 12 up the world as it is and bear the pangs and pains in the hope of a 13 crumb of happiness now and then. The other, to give up the search 14 for pleasure, knowing it to be pain in another form, and seek for 15 truth --and those that dare try for truth succeed in finding that truth 16 as ever present--present in themselves. Then we also discover how 17 the same truth is manifesting itself both in our relative error and 18 knowledge--we find also that the same truth is bliss which again is 19 manifesting itself as good and evil, and with it also we find real 20 existence which is manifesting itself as both death and life.

21 Thus we realise that all these phenomena are but the 22 reflections, bifurcated or manifolded, of the one existence, truth-23 bliss-unity--my real Self and the reality of everything else. Then and 24 then only is it possible to do good without evil, for such a soul has 25 known and got the control of the material of which both good and 26 evil are manufactured, and he alone can manifest one or the other 27 as he likes, and we know he manifests only good. This is the Jivan-28 mukta--the living free--the goal of Vedanta as of all other 29 philosophies.

30 Human society is in turn governed by the four castes--the 31 priests, the soldiers, the traders, and the labourers. Each state has 32 its glories as well as its defects. When the priest (Brahmin) rules, 33 there is a tremendous exclusiveness on hereditary grounds; the 34 persons of the priests and their descendants are hemmed in with all 35 sorts of safeguards--none but they have any knowledge--none but 36 they have the right to impart that knowledge. Its glory is that at this 37 period is laid the foundation of sciences. The priests cultivate the 38 mind, for through the mind they govern.

39 The military (Kshatriya) rule is tyrannical and cruel, but they 40 are not exclusive; and during that period arts and social culture 41 attain their height.

42 The commercial (Vaishya) rule comes next. It is awful in its 43 silent crushing and blood-sucking power. Its advantage is, as the 44 trader himself goes everywhere, he is a good disseminator of ideas
45 collected during the two previous states. They are still less 46 exclusive than the military, but culture begins to decay.

47 Last will come the labourer (Shudra) rule. Its advantages will 48 be the distribution of physical comforts--its disadvantages, 49 (perhaps) the lowering of culture. There will be a great distribution 50 of ordinary education, but extraordinary geniuses will be less and 51 less.

If it is possible to form a state in which the knowledge of the priest period, the culture of the military, the distributive spirit of the commercial, and the ideal of equality of the last can all be kept intact, minus their evils, it will be an ideal state. But is it possible?

Yet the first three have had their day. Now is the time for the last-they must have it-none can resist it. I do not know all the difficulties about the gold or silver standards (nobody seems to know much as to that), but this much I see that the gold standard has been making the poor poorer, and the rich richer. Bryan was right when he said, "We refuse to be crucified on a cross of gold." The silver standard will give the poor a better chance in this unequal fight. I am a socialist not because I think it is a perfect system, but half a loaf is better than no bread.

The other systems have been tried and found wanting. Let this one be tried--if for nothing else, for the novelty of the thing. A redistribution of pain and pleasure is better than always the same persons having pains and pleasures. The sum total of good and evil in the world remains ever the same. The yoke will be lifted from shoulder to shoulder by new systems, that is all.

Let every dog have his day in this miserable world, so that after this experience of so-called happiness they may all come to the Lord and give up this vanity of a world and governments and all other botherations.

With love to you all,

Ever your faithful

brother,

Vivekananda

Dear Mrs. Bull,

. . . I am very soon starting for India, most probably on the 16th of December. As I am very desirous to see India once before I come again to America, and as I have arranged to take several friends from England with me to India, it is impossible for me to go to America on my way, however I might have liked it.

Dr. Janes is doing splendid work indeed. I can hardly express my gratitude for the many kindnesses and the help he has given me and my work. . . . The work is progressing beautifully here.

You will be interested to know that the first edition of Raja-Yoga is sold out, and there is a standing order for several hundreds more.

Dear Lalaji {Lala Badri Sah},

I reach Madras about the 7th of January; after a few days in the plains I intend to come up to Almora.

I have three English friends with me. Two of them, Mr. and Mrs. Sevier, are going to settle in Almora. They are my disciples, you know, and they are going to build the Math for me in the Himalayas. It was for that reason I asked you to look for some suitable site. We want a whole hill, with a view of the snow-range, all to ourselves. It would of course take time to fix on a site and complete the building. In the meanwhile will you kindly engage a small bungalow for my friends? The bungalow ought to accommodate three persons. I do not require a large one. A small one would do for the present. My friends will live in this bungalow in Almora and then go about looking for a site and building.

You need not reply to this letter, as before your reply will reach me, I shall be on my way to India. I will wire to you from Madras as soon as I reach there.

With love and blessings to you all,

Yours,
Vivekananda

15 Dear Sisters {Mary and Harriet Hale},

16 . . . I feel impelled to write a few lines to you before my 17 departure for India. The work in London has been a roaring 18 success. The English are not so bright as the Americans, but once 19 you touch their heart, it is yours for ever. Slowly have I gained, and 20 it is strange that in six months' work altogether I would have a 21 steady class of 120 persons apart from public lectures. Here every 22 one means work--the practical Englishman. Capt. and Mrs. Sevier 23 and Mr. Goodwin are going to India with me to work and spend 24 their own money on it! There are scores here ready to do the same: 25 men and women of position, ready to give up everything for the 26 idea, once they feel convinced! And last though not the least, the 27 help in the shape of money to start my "work" in India has come 28 and more will follow. My ideas about the English have been 29 revolutionised. I now understand why the Lord has blessed them 30 above all other races. They are steady, sincere to the backbone, 31 with great depths of feeling--only with a crust of stoicism on the 32 surface; if that is broken, you have your man.

33 Now I am going to start a centre in Calcutta and another in 34 the Himalayas. The Himalayan one will be an entire hill about 7,000 35 ft. high--cool in summer, cold in winter. Capt. and Mrs. Sevier will 36 live there, and it will be the centre for European workers, as I do 37 not want to kill them by forcing on them the Indian mode of living 38 and the fiery plains. My plan is to send out numbers of Hindu boys 39 to every civilised country to preach--get men and women from 40 foreign countries to work in India. This would be a good exchange.
41 After having established the centres, I go about up and down like 42 the gentleman in the book of Job.

43 Here I must end to catch the mail. Things are opening for me.
44 I am glad, and I know so you are. Now all blessings be yours and all 45 happiness.

46 With eternal
47 love,

42 My dear Mary,

1 Things are turning out most curiously for me. From Colombo
2 in Ceylon, where I landed, to Ramnad, the nearly southernmost 3 point of the Indian continent where I am just now as the guest of 4 the Raja of Ramnad, my journey has been a huge procession-- 5 crowds of people, illuminations, addresses, etc., etc. A monument 6 forty feet high is being built on the spot where I landed. The Raja of 7 Ramnad has presented his address to "His most Holiness" in a huge 8 casket of solid gold beautifully worked. Madras and Calcutta are on 9 the tiptoe of expectation as if the whole nation is rising to honour 10 me. So you see, Mary, I am on the very height of my destiny, yet the 11 mind turns to quietness and peace, to the days we had in Chicago, 12 of rest, of peace, and love; and that is why I write just now, and may 13 this find you all in health and peace! I wrote a letter to my people 14 from London to receive Dr. Barrows kindly. They accorded him a big 15 reception, but it was not my fault that he could not make any 16 impression there. The Calcutta people are a hard-headed lot! Now 17 Barrows thinks a world of me, I hear! Such is the world.

27 25th Feb., 1897

28 Dear Mrs. Bull,

29 Saradananda sends £20 to be placed in the famine relief in 30 India. But as there is famine in his own home, I thought it best to 31 relieve that first, as the old proverb says. So it has been employed 32 accordingly.

33 I have not a moment to die as they say, what with processions 34 and tomtomings and various other methods of reception all over the 35 country; I am almost dead. As soon as the Birthday is over I will fly 36 off to the hills. I received an address from the Cambridge 37 Conference as well as one from the Brooklyn Ethical Association.
38 One from the Vedanta Association of New York, as mentioned in Dr.
39 Janes's letter, has not yet arrived.

40 Also there is a letter from Dr. Janes suggesting work along 41 the line of your conference, here in India. It is almost impossible for 42 me to pay any attention to these things. I am so, so tired. I do not 43 know whether I would live even six months more or not, unless I 44 have some rest.

45 Now I have to start two centres, one in Madras, the other in 46 Calcutta. The Madras people are deeper and more sincere, and I 47 am sure, will be able to collect funds from Madras itself. The 48 Calcutta people are mostly enthusiastic (I mean the aristocracy)

1 through patriotism, and their sympathy would never materialise. On 2 the other hand, the country is full of persons, jealous and pitiless, 3 who would leave no stones unturned to pull my work to pieces.

4 But as you know well, the more the opposition, the more the 5 demon in me is roused. My duty would not be complete if I die
6 without starting the two places, one for the Sannyasins, the other 7 for the women.

8 I have already £500 from England about, £500 from Mr.
9 Sturdy, and if your money be added to it, I am sure I will be able to 10 start the two. I think, therefore, you ought to send the money as 11 soon as possible. The safest way is to put the money in a bank in 12 America in your and my name jointly, so that either of us may draw 13 it. In case I die before the money is employed, you will be able to 14 draw it all and put it to the use I wanted. So that, in case of my 15 death, none of my people would be able to meddle with it. The 16 English money has been put in the bank in the same position in the 17 joint names of Mr. Sturdy and myself.

18 With love to Saradananda and eternal love and gratitude to 19 yourself,

25 Darjeeling

26 April 28,

27 1897

28 Dear Mary,

29 A few days ago I received your beautiful letter. Yesterday
30 came the card announcing Harriet's marriage. Lord bless the happy 31 pair!

32 The whole country here rose like one man to receive me.
33 Hundreds of thousands of persons, shouting and cheering at every 34 place, Rajas drawing my carriage, arches all over the streets of the 35 capitals with blazing mottoes etc.!!! The whole thing will soon come 36 out in the form of a book, and you will have a copy soon. But 37 unfortunately I was already exhausted by hard work in England;
38 and this tremendous exertion in the heat of Southern India 39 prostrated me completely. I had of course to give up the idea of 40 visiting other parts of India and fly up to the nearest hill station, 41 Darjeeling. Now I feel much better, and a month more in Almora 42 would complete the cure. By the bye, I have just lost a chance of 43 coming over to Europe. Raja Ajit Singh and several other Rajas 44 start next Saturday for England. Of course, they wanted hard to get 45 me to go over with them. But unfortunately the doctors would not 46 hear of my undertaking any physical or mental labour just now. So 47 with the greatest chagrin I had to give it up, reserving it for a near 48 future.

1 Dr. Barrows has reached America by this time, I hope. Poor
2 man! He came here to preach the most bigoted Christianity, with 3 the usual result that nobody listened to him. Of course they 4 received him very kindly; but it was my letter that did it. I could not 5 put brains into him! Moreover, he seems to be a queer sort of man.
6 I hear that he was mad at the national rejoicings over my coming 7 home. You ought to have sent a brainier man anyway, for the 8 Parliament of Religions has been made a farce of in the Hindu mind
9 by Dr. Barrows. On metaphysical lines no nation on earth can hold a 10 candle to the Hindus; and curiously all the fellows that come over 11 here from Christian land have that one antiquated foolishness of an 12 argument that because the Christians are powerful and rich and the 13 Hindus are not, so Christianity must be better than Hinduism. To 14 which the Hindus very aptly retort that, that is the very reason why 15 Hinduism is a religion and Christianity is not; because, in this 16 beastly world, it is blackguardism and that alone which prosper , 17 virtue always suffers. It seems, however advanced the Western 18 nations are in scientific culture, they are mere babies in 19 metaphysical and spiritual education. Material science can only 20 give worldly prosperity, whilst spiritual science is for eternal life. If 21 there be no eternal life, still the enjoyment of spiritual thoughts as 22 ideas is keener and makes a man happier, whilst the foolery of 23 materialism leads to competition and undue ambition and ultimate 24 death, individual and national.

25 This Darjeeling is a beautiful spot with a view of the glorious 26 Kanchenjanga (28,146 ft.) now and then when the clouds permit it, 27 and from a near hilltop one can catch a glimpse of Gauri Shankar 28 (29,000 ft?) now and then. Then, the people here too are 29 picturesque, the Tibetans and Nepalese and, above all, the 30 beautiful Lepcha women. Do you know one Colston Turnbull of 31 Chicago? He was here a few weeks before I reached India. He 32 seems to have had a great liking for me, with the result that Hindu
33 people all liked him very much. What about Joe, Mrs. Adams, Sister 34 Josephine, and all the rest of our friends? Where are our beloved 35 Mills? Grinding slow but sure? I wanted to send some nuptial 36 presents to Harriet, but with your "terrible" duties I must reserve it 37 for some near future. Maybe I shall meet them in Europe very soon.
38 I would have been very glad, of course, if you could announce your 39 engagement, and I would fulfil my promise by filling up half a dozen 40 papers in one letter. . . .

41 My hair is turning grey in bundles, and my face is getting 42 wrinkled up all over; that losing of flesh has given me twenty years 43 of age more. And now I am losing flesh rapidly, because I am made 44 to live upon meat and meat alone--no bread, no rice, no potatoes, 45 not even a lump of sugar in my coffee!! I am living with a Brahmin 46 family who all dress in knickerbockers, women excepted of course!
47 I am also in knickers. I would have given you a surprise if you had 48 seen me bounding from rock to rock like a chamois, or galloping 49 might and main up and down mountain roads.

50 I am very well here, for life in the plains has become a 51 torture. I cannot put the tip of my nose out into the streets, but 52 there is a curious crowd!! Fame is not all milk and honey!! I am

1 going to train a big beard; now it is turning grey. It gives a
2 venerable appearance and saves one from American scandal-
3 mongers! O thou white hair, how much thou canst conceal, all glory
4 unto thee, Hallelujah!

5 The mail time is nearly up, so I finish. Good dreams, good 6 health, all blessings attend you.

7 With love to father and mother and you all,

8 Yours,

9 Vivekananda

14 30th May,

15 1897

16 {original in Bengali}

17 Dear Sir {Pramada Das Mitra},

18 I hear some unavoidable domestic grief has come upon you.
19 To you, a man of wisdom, what can this misery do? Yet the 20 amenities of friendly intercourse, incidental to relative existence in 21 this world, require my making mention of it. Those moments of 22 grief, however, very often bring out a better spiritual realisation. As 23 if for a while the clouds withdraw and the sun of truth shines out. In 24 the case of some, half of the bondage is loosened. Of all bondages 25 the greatest is that of position--the fear of reputation is stronger 26 than the fear of death; but even this bondage appears to relax a 27 little. As if the mind sees for a moment that it is much better to 28 listen to the indwelling Lord than to the opinions of men. But again 29 the clouds close up, and this indeed is Maya.

30 Though for a long time I had no direct correspondence with 31 you, yet I have often been receiving from others almost all the news 32 about you. Some time ago you kindly sent me to England a copy of a 33 translation of the Gita. The cover only bore a line of your 34 handwriting. The few words in acknowledgment of this gift, I am 35 told, raised doubts in your mind about my old affection towards you.

36 Please know these doubts to be groundless. The reason of 37 that laconic acknowledgement is that I was given to see, during 38 four or five years, only that one line of your handwriting on the 39 cover of an English Gita, from which fact I thought, if you had no 40 leisure to write more, would you have leisure enough to read much?
41 Secondly, I learnt, you were particularly the friend of white-skinned 42 missionaries of the Hindu religion and the roguish black natives 43 were repelling! There was apprehension on this score. Thirdly, I am 44 a Mlechchha, Shudra, and so forth; I eat anything and everything, 45 and with anybody and everybody--and that in public both abroad
46 and here. In my views, besides, much perversion has supervened-- 47 one attributeless absolute Brahman, I see, I fairly understand, and I

1 see in some particular individuals the special manifestations of that 2 Brahman; if those individuals are called by the name of God, I can 3 well follow--otherwise the mind does not feel inclined towards 4 intellectual theorisings such as the postulated Creator and the like.

5 Such a God I have seen in my life, and his commands I live to 6 follow. The Smritis and the Puranas are productions of men of 7 limited intelligence and are full of fallacies, errors, the feelings of 8 class and malice. Only parts of them breathing broadness of spirit 9 and love are acceptable, the rest are to be rejected. The 10 Upanishads and the Gita are the true scriptures; Rama, Krishna, 11 Buddha, Chaitanya, Nanak, Kabir, and so on are the true Avatars, 12 for they had their hearts broad as the sky--and above all,
13 Ramakrishna. Ramanuja, Shankara etc., seem to have been mere 14 Pundits with much narrowness of heart. Where is that love, that 15 weeping heart at the sorrow of others?--Dry pedantry of the Pandit-- 16 and the feeling of only oneself getting to salvation hurry-scurry! But 17 is that going to be possible, sir? Was it ever likely or will it ever be 18 so? Can anything be attained with any shred of "I" left anyhow?

19 Another great discrepancy: the conviction is daily gaining on 20 my mind that the idea of caste is the greatest dividing factor and 21 the root of Maya; all caste either on the principle of birth or of 22 merit is bondage. Some friends advise, "True, lay all that at heart, 23 but outside, in the world of relative experience, distinctions like 24 caste must needs be maintained." . . . The idea of oneness at heart 25 (with a craven impotence of effort, that is to say), and outside, the 26 hell-dance of demons--oppression and persecution--ay, the dealer of 27 death to the poor, but if the Pariah be wealthy enough, "Oh, he is 28 the protector of religion!"

29 Over and above, I come to see from my studies that the 30 disciplines of religion are not for the Shudra; if he exercises any 31 discrimination about food or about going out to foreign lands, it is 32 all useless in his case, only so much labour lost. I am a Shudra, a 33 Mlechchha, so I have nothing to do with all that botheration. To me 34 what would Mlechchha's food matter or Pariah's? It is in the books 35 written by priests that madnesses like that of caste are to be found, 36 and not in books revealed from God. Let the priests enjoy the fruits 37 of their ancestors' achievement, while I follow the word of God, for 38 my good lies there.

39 Another truth I have realised is that altruistic service only is 40 religion, the rest, such as ceremonial observances, are madness-- 41 even it is wrong to hanker after one's own salvation. Liberation is 42 only for him who gives up everything for others, whereas others 43 who tax their brains day and night harping on "my salvation", "my 44 salvation", wander about with their true well-being ruined, both 45 present and prospective; and this I have seen many a time with my 46 own eyes. Reflecting on all these sundry matters, I had no heart for 47 writing a letter to you. If notwithstanding all these discrepancies, 48 you find your attachment for me intact, I shall feel it to be a very 49 happy issue indeed.

50 Yours etc.,

51 Vivekananda

TRANSLATION:

Almora,

1st June,

1897

Dear Shuddhananda,

Glad to know from your letter that all are doing well there, and to go through the news in detail. I too am in better health; the rest you will know from Dr. Shashi Bhushan. Let the teaching go on for the present in the method revised by Brahmananda, and if any changes are needed in future, have them done. But it should never be lost sight of that this must be done with the consent of all.

I am now living in a garden belonging to a merchant, situated a little to the north of Almora. Before e are the snow-peaks of the Himalayas looking, in the reflection of the sun, like a mass of silver, a delight to the heart. By taking free air, regular diet, and plenty of exercise, I have grown strong and healthy in body. But I hear that Yogananda is very ill. I am inviting him to come here. But then, he fears the mountain air and water. I wrote to him today, saying, "Stay in this garden for some days, and if you find your illness shows no improvement, you may go to Calcutta." He will do as he pleases.

At Almora, every evening Achyutananda gathers the people together and reads t them the Gita and other Shastras. Many residents of the town, as also soldiers from the cantonment, come there daily. I learn also that he is appreciated by all.

The Bengali interpretation that you have given of the Shloka {Sanskrit}¹³⁰ etc., does not seem to me to be right. The interpretation in question is this: "When(the land) is flooded with water, what is the use of drinking water?" If the law of nature be such that when a land is flooded with water, drinking it is useless, that through certain air passages or through any other recondite ways people's thirst may be allayed, then only can this novel interpretation be relevant, otherwise not. It is Shankara whom you should follow. Or you may explain it in this way: As, even when whole tracts are flooded with water, small pools are also of great use to the thirsty (that is to say, just a little water suffices him, and he says, as it were, " Let the vast sheet of water be, even a little of water will satisfy my object."), of identical use are the whole Vedas to a learned Brahmin. As even when the land is overflowed, one's concern lies in drinking the water and no more, so in all the Vedas illumination alone is the concern.

¹³⁰ ? {Sanskrit} (Gita, II.46.)

Here is another interpretation which hits better the meaning the author wishes to convey: Even when the land is overflowed, it is only that water which is drinkable and salutary, that people seek for, and no other kind. There are various kinds of water, which differ in quality and properties--even though the land be flooded over--according to the differences in property of their substratum, the soil. Likewise a skilful Brahmin, too, will, for the quenching of the worldly thirst, choose from that sea of words known as the Vedas which is flooded over with diverse courses of knowledge, that which alone will be of potency to lead to liberation. And it is the knowledge of the Brahman which will do this.

With blessing and good wishes.

Yours

Vivekananda.

Almora

3rd June,

1897.

Dear Miss Noble,

...As for myself I am quite content. I have rouse a good many of our people, and that was all I wanted. Let things have their course and Karma its sway. I have no bonds here below. I have seen life, and it is all self-- life is for self, love for self, honour for self, everything for self. I look back and scarcely find any action I have done for self--even my wicked deed were not for the self. So I am content; not that I feel I have done anything specially good or great, but the world is so little, life so mean a thing, existence so, so servile-- that I wonder and smile that human beings, rational souls, should be running after this self--so mean and detestable a prize.

This is the truth. We are caught in a trap, and the sooner one gets out, the better for one. I have seen the truth--let the body float up or down, who cares?

It is a beautiful mountain park I am living in now. On the north, extending almost all along the horizon, are peak after peak of the snow-clad Himalayas--forests abounding. It is not cold here, neither very warm; the evenings and mornings are simply delicious. I should like to be here this summer, and when the rains set in, I go down to the plains to work.

I was born for the life of a scholar--retired, quiet, poring over my books. But the Mother dispenses otherwise--yet the tendency is there.

Yours etc.,

Vivekananda.

3 Dear Rakhal,

4 I am wholly in sympathy with the subject-matter of the letter
5 of Charu that you have sent me.

6 In the proposed Address to the Queen-Empress the following 7 points should be noted:

8 1. That it must be free from exaggeration, in other words, 9 statements to the effect that she is God's regent and so forth, which 10 are so common to us natives.

11 2. That all religions have been protected during her reign, we 12 have been able fearlessly to preach our Vedantic doctrines both in 13 India and England.

14 3. Her kindness towards the Indian poor--as, for instance, her 15 inspiring the English to unique acts of charity by contributing 16 herself to the cause of famine-relief.

17 4. Prayer for her long life and for the continual growth of 18 happiness and prosperity a month the people of her dominions.

19 Have this written in correct English and send it to me at 20 Almora, and I shall sign it and send it to Simla. Let me know to 21 whom it should be addressed in simla.

22 Yours
23 affectionately,

24 Vivekananda.

25 PS. Let Shuddhananda preserve a copy of the weekly letters 26 that he writes to me from the Math.

32 My dear Akhandananada,

33 I am getting detailed reports of you and getting more and 34 more delighted. It is that sort of work which can conquer the world.
35 What do differences of sect and opinions matter! Bravo! Accept a 36 hundred thousand embraces and blessings from me. Work, work, 37 work--I care for nothing else. Work, work, work, even unto death!
38 Those that are weak must make themselves great workers, great 39 heroes--never mind money, it will drop from the heavens. Let them 40 whose gifts you will accept, give in their own name if they like, no 41 harm. Whose name, and what is it worth? Who cares for name? Off 42 with it! If in the attempt to carry morsels of food to starving 43 mouths, name and possession and all be doomed even--{Sanskrit}-- 44 thrice blessed art thou! It is the heart, the heart that conquers, not 45 the brain. Books and learning, Yoga and meditation and 46 illumination--all are but dust compared with love. It is love that

1 gives you the supernatural powers, love that gives you Bhakti, love 2 that gives illumination, and love, again, that leads to emancipation.
3 This indeed is worship, worship of the Lord in the human 4 tabernacle,"{Sanskrit}--not this that people worship".¹³¹ This is but 5 the beginning, and unless we spread over the whole of India, nay, 6 the whole earth, in that way, where lies the greatness of our Lord!

7 Let people see whether or not the touch of our Lord's feet
8 confers divinity on man! It is this that is called liberation-in-life-- 9 when the last trace of egoism and selfishness is gone. Well done!
10 Glory to the Lord! Gradually try to spread. If you can, go to 11 Calcutta, and raise a fund with the help of another band of boys; set 12 one or two of them to work at some place, and begin somewhere 13 else. Spread in that way, and go on inspecting them. You will see 14 that the work will gradually become permanent, and spread of 15 religion and education will follow as a matter of course. I have 16 given particular instructions to them in Calcutta. Do that kind of 17 work, and I shall carry you on my shoulders--bravo! You will see 18 that by degrees every district will become a centre--and that a 19 permanent one. I am soon going down to the plains. I am a fighter, 20 and shall die in the battlefield. Does it behove me to sit up here 21 like a zenana lady?

22 Yours with all
23 love,

24 Vivekananda.

29 Dear Rakhal,

30 Glad to learn that you are better in health than before. Well, it 31 is seldom that Brother Yogen reports the bare truths, so do not at 32 all be anxious to hear them. I am all right now, with plenty of 33 muscular strength, and no thirst....The liver, too, acts well. I am not 34 certain as to what effects Shashi (Babu)'s medicine had. So I have 35 stopped using it. I am having plenty of mangoes. I am getting 36 exceptionally adept in riding, and do not feel the least pain or 37 exhaustion even after a run of twenty or thirty miles at a stretch.
38 Milk I have altogether stopped for fear of corpulence.

39 Yesterday I came to Almora, and shall not go any more to the 40 garden. Henceforth I am to have three meals a day in the English 41 fashion, as Miss Muller's guest....

42 Shuddhananda writes to say that they are going on with 43 Ruddock's Practice of Medicine or something of that sort. What 44 nonsense do you mean by having such things taught in the class? A 45 set of common apparatus for physics and another for chemistry, an 46 ordinary telescope and a microscope--all these can be had for 47 Rupees 150 to 200. Shashi Babu may give a lecture on practical 48 chemistry once a week, and Hariprasanna on physics etc. And buy

1 ¹³¹ ?That is, things other than God.

1 all the good scientific books that you can have in Bengali, and have

7 Salutations to Bhagavan Ramakrishna!

8 Almora

9 10th July,
10 1897.

11 My dear Rakhal,

12 Today I send back the proofs of the objects of our Association
13 that you sent me, corrected. The rules and regulations portion 14 (which the members of our Association had read) is full of mistakes.
15 Correct it very carefully and reprint it, or people will laugh.

16 ...The kind of work that is going on at Berhampore is 17 exceedingly nice. It is those works that will triumph--can doctrines 18 and dogmas touch the heart? Work, work--live the life; what do 19 doctrines and opinions count? Philosophy and Yoga and penance-- 20 the worship-room--your sunned rice or vegetable offerings--all these 21 constitute the religion of one man or one country; doing good to 22 others is the one great, universal religion. Men and women, young 23 and old, down to the Pariah, nay, the very animal--all can grasp this 24 religion. Can a merely negative religion be of any avail? The stone 25 is never unchaste, the cow never tells a lie, nor do trees commit 26 theft or robbery, but what does it matter? Granted that you do not 27 steal, nor tell a lie, nor lead an unchaste life, but meditate four 28 hours a day and religiously ring the bell for twice as many hours-- 29 yet, what matters it after all? That work, little as it is, that you have 30 done, has brought Berhampore to your feet for ever--now people 31 will do whatever you wish them to. Now you will no longer have to 32 argue to the people that "Ramakrishna is God." Without it what will 33 mere lectures do?--Do fine words butter any parsnips? If you could 34 do like that in ten districts, all the ten would become yours to have 35 and hold. Therefore, like the intelligent boy you are, lay your 36 greatest stress, for the present, on that work department, and try 37 heart and soul to augment the utility of that alone. Organise a 38 number of boys to go from door to door, let them fetch, in the 39 manner of the Alakhia Sadhus, whatever they get--money, or worn 40 out clothes, or rice and eatables, or anything. Then distribute them.
41 That is work, work indeed. After that people will have faith, and will 42 then do what they are told.

43 Whatever is left over after defraying the expenses of the 44 Calcutta meeting, remit for famine relief, or help with it the 45 countless poor that live in the slums of Calcutta; let Memorial Halls 46 and things of that kind go to the dogs. The Lord will do what He 47 thinks best. I am at present in excellent health....

48 Why are you not collecting materials?--I shall go down and 49 start the paper myself. Kindness and love can buy you the whole

1 world; lectures and books and philosophy all stand lower than 2 these.

3 Please write to Shashi to open a work department like this for 4 the service of the poor.

5 ...Curtail the expenses of worship to a rupee or two per 6 mensem. The children of the Lord are dying of starvation....Worship 7 with water and Tulasi leaves alone, and let the allowance for His 8 Bhoga (food offerings) be spent in offering food to the Living God 9 who dwells in the persons of the poor--then will His grace descend 10 on everything. Yogen felt unwell here; so today he started for 11 Calcutta. I shall again go to Dewaldhar tomorrow. Please accept my 12 love and tender it to all.

13 Affly. yours,

14 Vivekananda.

16 Salutation to Bhagavan Ramakrishna

17 Almora,

18 24th July,

19 1897.

20 My dear Akhandananda,

21 I am very glad to receive your letter and go through the 22 contents. Your wishes about the orphanage are very food and Shri 23 Maharaj¹³² will not fail to fulfil them at an early date. Try your best 24 to found a permanent centre....Never worry about money.
25 Tomorrow I shall leave Almora for the plains; and wherever there 26 will be made some stir, I shall open a subscription list for famine-- 27 set your mind easy on that score. When in every district there will 28 be a Math on the model of our Math in Calcutta, then will my 29 heart's desire be fulfilled. Let not the work of preaching, too, be at 30 a standstill, and greater even than preaching, is the work of 31 imparting education. By means of lectures and the like, the village 32 people must be taught religion, history, and such other subjects-- 33 specially history. To help our educational work there is a Society in 34 England, which, as I find from reports, is doing excellent work. In 35 time we shall get help of this kind from everywhere, don't be 36 frightened. They only do work who think that help will come, 37 directly they are on the field of work.

38 All strength is in you, have faith in it. It will not go 39 unmanifested. Accept my heartiest love and blessings, and convey 40 them to the Brahmacharin. Write now and then fiery letters to the 41 Math, so that all may take heart and work. Victory to the Guru!

42 Yours affly.,

44 CXXXII*

45 Almora,

1 ¹³² ?Shri Ramakrishna,

30th July

1897.

My dear Akhandananda,

According to your instructions, I write a letter to Mr. Levinge, the Dist. Magistrate. Besides, you will write a big letter to the Indian Mirror, describing in detail his method of work (having got the same revised by Dr. Shashi), and send a copy of it to the gentleman named above. Our fools only search for people's shortcomings. let them see some virtues too.

I am leaving this place next Monday. ...

What do you talk of the difficulty in getting orphans? Better ask for four or five men from the Math, if you like; you can find some orphans in two days, if you seek from village to village.

Of course we must have a permanent centre. And can anything be done in this country unless the--help? Do not mix in politics etc., nor have any connection with them. At the same time you need not have any quarrel with anybody. you must put your body, mind, and all you have to some one work. Here I gave a lecture to a European audience in English, and another to the Indian residents in Hindi. This was my maiden speech in Hindi, but everyone liked it for all that. Of course the Westerners, as is their wont, were in raptures over it, as coming from a "nigger"! "Oh, how wonderful!" and that sort of thing. Next Saturday there will be another lecture for the Europeans. A big Association has been set on foot here--let us wait and see how far it works in future. The object of the Association is to impart education and religion.

Monday next, trip to Bareilly then to Saharanpur, next to Ambala, thence, most probably, to Mussoorie with Captain Sevier, and as soon as it is a little cool, return to the plains and journey to Rajputana etc. Go on working at top speed. Never fear! I, too, have determined to work. The body must go, no mistake about that. Why then let it go in idleness? It is better to wear out than rust out. Don't be anxious even when I die, my very bones will work miracles. We must spread over the whole of India in ten years, short of this it is no good. To work like an athlete! Victory to the Guru! Money and all will come of themselves, we want men, not money. It is man that makes everything, what can money do?--Men we want, the more you get, the better. . . . Here, for instance, was M__ who brought together a lot of money, but there was no man, and what good did he achieve?

Yours affly.,

Vivekananda

1 Dear Mrs. Bull,

2 . . . My health is indifferent, and although I have some rest, I
3 do not think I shall be able to regain my usual vigour till winter 4 next. I had a letter from Joe saying that you are both coming to 5 India. I, of course, will be very glad to see you in India, only you 6 ought to know from the first that India is the dirtiest and 7 unhealthiest hole in the world, with scarcely any European comforts 8 except in the big capitals.

9 I learn from England that Mr. Sturdy is sending Abhedananda 10 to New York. It seems that the English work is impossible without 11 me. Only a magazine will be started and worked by Mr. Sturdy. I 12 had arranged to come to England this season, but I was foolishly 13 prevented by the doctors. In India the work is going on.

14 I do not think any European or American will be of any 15 service here just now, and it will be hard for any Westerner to bear 16 the climate. Annie Besant with her exceptional powers works only 17 among the Theosophists, and thus she submits to all the indignities 18 of isolation which a Mlechchha is made to undergo here. Even 19 Goodwin smarts now and then and has to be called to order.
20 Goodwin is doing good work, as he is a man and can mix with the 21 people. Women have no place in men's society here, and she can do 22 good only among her own sex in India. The English friends that 23 came over to India have not been of any help as yet, and do not 24 know whether they will be of any in the future. With all these, if 25 anybody wants to try, she is welcome.

26 If Saradananda wants to come, he may, and I am sure he will 27 be of very good service to me just now in organising the work, now 28 that my health is broken. There is a young English woman, Miss 29 Margaret Noble, very eager to come to India to learn the state of 30 things, so that she may do some work when she is back home. I 31 have written her to accompany you in case you come via London.
32 The great difficulty is that you can never understand the situation 33 here from a distance. The two types are so entirely different in all 34 things that it is not possible to form any idea from America or 35 England.

36 You ought to think that you are starting for the interior of 37 Africa, and if you meet anything better, that will be unexpected.

38 Ever yours
39 etc.,

40 Vivekananda

Dear Mother {Shrimati Indumati Mitra},

47

Please be not anxious because I could not write to you and

1 could not go to Belgaon. I was suffering very much from illness and 2 it was impossible for me to go then. Now thanks to my travels in the 3 Himalayas, I have greatly regained my health. I shall soon resume 4 work. In two weeks I am going to the Punjab, and just after 5 delivering a lecture or two at Lahore and Amritsar, I shall start via 6 Karachi for Gujarat, Cutch, etc. I shall surely see you at Karachi.

7 This Kashmir is a veritable heaven on earth. Nowhere else in 8 the world is such a country as this. Mountains and rivers, trees and 9 plants, men and women, beasts and birds--all vie with one another 10 for excellence. I feel a pang at heart not to have visited it so long.
11 Please write to me in detail how you are doing, mentally and 12 physically, and accept my special blessings. I am constantly having 13 your welfare at heart, know this for certain.

24 Dear Sarada,

25 I am sorry to learn from your letter that you are not doing
26 well. If you can make an unpopular man popular, then I call you a 27 clever fellow. There is no prospect of work there in the future; it 28 would have been better had you gone rather to Dacca, or some 29 other place. However, it is a good thing that the work will close in 30 November. If you get very badly off in health, you should better 31 come away. There is much field for work in the Central Provinces; 32 and even without famine, there is no lack of poverty-stricken people 33 in our country. Wherever it is, if you can choose a site with an eye 34 to prospect, you are sure to turn out good work. However, be not 35 sorry. What one does has no destruction--no, never. Who knows, at 36 that very place the future may reap golden results.

37 I shall very soon begin my work in the plains. I have now no 38 need of travelling over the mountains.

39 Keep watch over your health.

My dear Akhandananda,

I am very glad to receive your letter. You need not make a big plan for the present, but do only what is possible under existing circumstances. Gradually the way will open to you. We must certainly have the orphanage, no hesitating in that. We must not leave the girls in the lurch either. But then we must have a lady superintendent for an orphanage of girls. I believe Mother will be a very good hand for that. Or engage for this task some aged widow of the village who has no issue. And there must be separate places for the boys and girls. Captain Sevier is ready to send you money to help in this. Nedou's Hotel, Lahore--that is his address. If you write to him, write the words, "To wait arrival", on the letter. I am soon going to Rawalpindi, tomorrow or the day after; then I visit Lahore and other places via Jammu, and return to Rajputana via Karachi etc.,

I am doing well.

Yours,
Vivekananda

PS. You must admit Mohammedan boys, too, but never tamper with their religion. The only thing you will have to do is to make separate arrangements for their food etc., and teach them so that they may be moral, manly, and devoted to doing good to others. This indeed is religion.

Shelve your intricate philosophical speculations for the present. In our country we at present need manhood and kindness. "{Sanskrit}--The Lord is the Essence of unutterable love." But instead of saying "{Sanskrit}--He is manifest in special objects", we should say, "{Sanskrit}--He is ever manifest as Love in all beings." What other God--the creation of your mind--are you then going to worship! Let the Vedas, the Koran, the Puranas, and all scriptural lumber rest now for some time--let there be worship of the visible God of Love and Compassion in the country. All idea of separation is bondage, that of non-differentiation is Mukti. Let not the words of people dead-drunk with worldliness terrify you. "{Sanskrit}--Be fearless" "Ignore the ordinary critics as worms!" Admit boys of all religions--Hindu, Mohammedan, Christian, or anything; but begin rather gently--I mean, see that they get their food and drink a little separately, and teach them only the universal side of religion.

Be mad over this, and strike others with this madness! This life has no other end. Preach His name, let His teachings penetrate the world to the very bone. Never forget. Repeat this Mantra in your heart of hearts unceasingly, as you go the round of your daily duties.

Yours,

V.

Dear Rakhal,

Reached Murree from Kashmir in the evening of the day before yesterday. Everybody had an enjoyable time of it, only Krishnalal (Dhirananda) and Gupta (Sadananda) suffered now and then from fever, which, however, was but slight. This Address is to be sent to the Raja of Khetri. Have it printed in gilt etc. The Raja is expected at Bombay about the 21st or 22nd of October. None of us is staying at Bombay at present--if there be any, send him a copy so that he may present the same to the Raja even on Board the ship, or somewhere in the city of Bombay. Send the superior copy to Khetri. Have this passed in a meeting and if any change is needed, no harm. Then sign it, all of you, only leaving a blank for my name, and I shall sign it on going to Khetri. Let no pains be spared in this.

. . . Captain Sevier says he is very anxious for a site. He wishes to have a spot near Mussoorie or in some other central place, as soon as possible. . . . The thing is that we do not want a place which is too cold, at the same time it must not be too hot. Dehra Dun is unbearable in summer, but pleasant in winter; Mussoorie itself is, I dare say, not the right place for many in winter. Above or below it, that is, in British or Garhwal territory, some land is sure to be found. At the same time there must be a supply of water at the place throughout the year, for drinking purposes and for everyday use. My plan is this: With only Achyutananda and Gupta I go from Murree to Rawalpindi, thence to Jammu, thence to Lahore, and from Lahore straight to Karachi. . . . Give my hearty love and blessings to Shashi Babu. I see that Master Mahashaya has buckled to work after such a long time. Give him my special love and greetings. To see him, with his feminine retiringness, stirred to work, my courage has gone up by leaps and bounds. I am writing to him tomorrow even. Victory to the Lord!--To work! To work!

21 Dear Mother {Shrimati Indumati Mitra},

22 It is a matter of deep regret that in spite of my earnest
23 wishes, I do not find it feasible to go to Karachi this time and see 24 you. First, because Captain and Mrs. Sevier, who have come from 25 England and are travelling with me for the last nine months nearly, 26 are very anxious to buy some land at Dehra Dun and start an 27 orphanage there. It is their special request that I should go and 28 open the work. This makes it unavoidable to go to Dehra Dun.

1 Secondly, owing to my kidney troubles I cannot count upon a 2 long life. Even now it is one of my desires to start a Math in 3 Calcutta, towards which as yet I could do nothing. Moreover, the 4 people of my country have withheld the little help that they used to 5 give to our Math of late. They have got a notion that I have brought 6 plenty of money from England! Over and above that, it is impossible 7 to celebrate Shri Ramakrishna's festival this year, for the 8 proprietors of Rasmani's garden would not let me go there, as I am 9 returned from the West! Hence my first duty lies in seeing the few 10 friends we have in Rajputana and trying my best to have a centre in 11 Calcutta. For these reasons I have been very sorry to postpone my 12 tour to Sindh at present. I shall try my best to go there via 13 Rajputana and Kathiawar. Please do not be sorry. Never for a day 14 do I forget you all. But duty must be done first. It will ease me of my 15 anxiety when a Math is established in Calcutta. Then I can hope 16 that the work for which I struggled all my life through all sorts of 17 privation and suffering will not die out after I cease to live in this 18 body. I start for Dehra Dun this very day. After a week's stay there, 19 to Rajputana, thence to Kathiawar, and so on.

20 With blessings,

21

Yours

32 I have duly received your letter and that of dear Haripada. Of 33 course you have ample reason to feel sorry for, but you see, I 34 couldn't help it. And what took me here also became a fiasco;
35 neither could I go to Sindh. It is the Lord's will. Now, I have an idea 36 of proceeding to Calcutta through Rajputana, Kathiawar, and 37 Sindh. But some difficulty may crop up on the way. If all goes well, I 38 am certainly coming to Sindh. You must have undergone a lot of 39 difficulty in coming to Hyderabad by arranging for leave etc. Any 40 least trouble undergone, is bound to produce its excellent results.
41 Friday next I shall leave this place, and have a mind to go via 42 Saharanpur to Rajputana direct. I am doing well now, and trust you

My dear Friend {Mohammed Sarfaraz Husain},

I appreciate your letter very much and am extremely happy to learn that the Lord is silently preparing wonderful things for our motherland.

Whether we call it Vedantism or any ism, the truth is that Advaitism is the last word of religion and thought and the only position from which one can look upon all religions and sects with love. I believe it is the religion of the future enlightened humanity. The Hindus may get the credit of arriving at it earlier than other races, they being an older race than either the Hebrew or the Arab; yet practical Advaitism, which looks upon and behaves to all mankind as one's own soul, was never developed among the Hindus universally.

On the other hand, my experience is that if ever any religion approached to this equality in an appreciable manner, it is Islam and Islam alone.

Therefore I am firmly persuaded that without the help of practical Islam, theories of Vedantism, however fine and wonderful they may be, are entirely valueless to the vast mass of mankind. We want to lead mankind to the place where there is neither the Vedas, nor the Bible, nor the Koran; yet this has to be done by harmonising the Vedas, the Bible and the Koran. Mankind ought to be taught that religions are but the varied expressions of THE RELIGION, which is Oneness, so that each may choose that path that suits him best.

For our own motherland a junction of the two great systems, Hinduism and Islam--Vedanta brain and Islam body--is the only

1 hope.

2 I see in my mind's eye the future perfect India rising out of 3 this chaos and strife, glorious and invincible, with Vedanta brain
4 and Islam body.

5 Ever praying that the Lord may make of you a great 6 instrument for the help of mankind, and especially of our poor, poor 7 motherland.

17 Dear Margot {Nivedita},

18 It is a lazy life I am leading for the last two months, floating 19 leisurely in a boat, which is also my home, up and down the 20 beautiful Jhelum, through the most gorgeous scenery God's world 21 can afford, in nature's own park, where the earth, air, land, grass, 22 plants, trees, mountains, snows, and the human form, all express, 23 on the outside at least, the beauty of the Lord--with almost no 24 possessions, scarcely a pen or an inkstand even, snatching up a 25 meal whenever or wherever convenient, the very ideal of a Rip Van 26 Winkle! . . .

27 Do not work yourself out. It is no use; always 28 remember--"Duty is the midday sun whose fierce rays are burning 29 the very vitals of humanity." It is necessary for a time as a 30 discipline; beyond that, it is a morbid dream. Things go on all right 31 whether we lend them our helping hands or not. We in delusion only 32 break ourselves. There is a false sentiment which goes the extreme 33 of unselfishness, only to injure others by its submission to every 34 evil. We have no right to make others selfish by our unselfishness; 35 have we? . . .

CL

12th Dec.,

1899

My dear Mrs. Bull,

You are perfectly right; I am brutal, very indeed. But about the tenderness etc., that is my fault. I wish I had less, much less of that--that is my weakness--and alas! all my sufferings have come from that. Well, the municipality is trying to tax us out--good; that is my fault as I did not make the Math public property by a deed of trust. I am very sorry I use harsh language to my boys; but they also know I love them more than anybody else on earth. I may have had Divine help--true; but oh, the pound of blood every bit of Divine help has been to me!! I would be gladder and a better man without that. The present looks very gloomy indeed; but I am a fighter and must die fighting, not give way--that is why I get crazy at the boys. I don't ask them to fight, but not to hinder my fight.

I don't grudge my fate. But oh! now I want a man, one of my boys, to stand by me and fight against all odds! Don't you vex yourself; if anything is to be done in India, my presence is necessary; and I am much better in health; possibly the sea will make me better. Anyway I did not do anything this time in America except bother my friends. Possibly Joe will help me out with the passage, and I have some money with Mr. Leggett. I have hopes of collecting some money in India yet. I did not see any of my friends in different parts of India. I have hope of collecting the fifteen thousand that will make up the fifty thousand, and a deed of trust will bring down the municipal taxes. If I cannot collect that--it is better to struggle and die for it than vegetate here in America. My mistakes have been great; but everyone of them was from too much love. How I hate love ! Would I never had any Bhakti! Indeed, I wish I could be an Advaitist, calm and heartless. Well, this life is done. I will try in the next. I am sorry, especially now, that I have done more injury to my friends than there have been blessings on them. The peace, the quiet I am seeking, I never found.

I went years ago to the Himalayas, never to come back; and my sister committed suicide, the news reached me there, and that weak heart flung me off from that prospect of peace! It is the weak heart that has driven me out of India to seek some help for those I love, and here I am! Peace have I sought, but the heart, that seat of Bhakti, would not allow me to find it. Struggle and torture, torture and struggle. Well, be it then, since it is my fate, and the quicker it is over, the better. They say I am impulsive, but look at the circumstances!!! I am sorry I have been the cause of pain to you, to you above all, who love me so much, who have been so, so kind. But it is done--was a fact. I am now going to cut the knot or die in the attempt.

Ever your son,

Vivekananda

1 PS. As Mother wants it, so let it be. I am going to beg of Joe a 2 passage via San Francisco to India. If she gives it, I start
3 immediately via Japan. It would take a month. In India, I think, I can 4 raise some money to keep things straight or on a better footing--at 5 least to leave things where I get them all muddled. The end is 6 getting very dark and very much muddled; well, I expected it so.
7 Don't think I give in in a moment. Lord bless you; if the Lord has 8 made me His hack to work and die on the streets, let Him have it. I 9 am more cheerful just now after your letter than I was for years-- 10 Wah Guru ki Fateh! Victory unto the Guru!! Yes, let the world 11 come, the hells come, the gods come, let Mother come, I fight and 12 do not give in. Ravana got his release in three births by fighting the 13 Lord Himself! It is glorious to fight Mother.

14 All blessings on you and yours. You have done for me more, 15 much more, than I deserved ever.

25 My dear Margot {Nivedita},

26 Yes, I am really getting well under the manipulations of 27 magnetic healing! At any rate I am all right. There was never 28 anything serious with my organs--it was nerves and dyspepsia.

29 Now I walk miles every day, at any time--before or after 30 meals. I am perfectly well--and am going to remain so, I am sure.

31 The wheel is turning up, Mother is working it up. She cannot 32 let me go before Her work is done--and that is the secret.

33 See, how England is working up. After this blood-letting, 34 people will then have time of thinking better and higher things than 35 "war", "war", "war". That is our opportunity. We run in quick, get 36 hold of them by the dozens and then set the Indian work in full 37 swing.

38 I pray that England will lose Cape Colony, so that she will be 39 able to concentrate her energy on India. These capes and 40 promontories never are of any use to England except in puffing up a 41 false pride and costing her hordes of money and blood.

Los Angeles,

Dear Margot {Nivedita},

I am afraid that the rest and peace I seek for will never come. But Mother does good to others through me, at least some to my native land, and it is easier to be reconciled to one's fate as a sacrifice. We are all sacrifices--each in his own way. The great worship is going on--no one can see its meaning except that it is a great sacrifice. Those that are willing escape a lot of pain. Those who resist are broken into submission and suffer more. I am now determined to be a willing one.

Yours etc.,
Vivekananda

My dear Nivedita,

Yours of the __ reached me today at Pasadena. I see Joe has missed you at Chicago--although I have not heard anything from them yet from New York.

There was a bundle of English newspapers from England with a line on the envelope expressing good wishes for me and signed, F.H.M. Nothing important was in those, however. I would have written a letter to Miss Muller, but I do not know the address; then I was afraid to frighten her.

In the meanwhile, Mrs. Leggett started a plan of a $100 subscription each a year for ten years to help me, and headed the list with her $100 for 1900, and got 2 others here to do the same. Then she went on writing letters to all my friends asking each to join in it. When she went on writing to Mrs. Miller I was rather shy--but she did it before I knew. A very polite but cold letter came to her in reply from Mrs. Hale, written by Mary, expressing their inability and assuring her of their love for me. I am afraid Mrs. Hale and Mary are displeased. But it was not my fault at all!!

I get news from Mrs. Sevier that Niranjana is seriously ill in Calcutta. I do not know if he has passed away.

1 Well--but I am strong now, Margo, stronger than ever I was 2 mentally. I was mentally getting a sort of ironing over my heart. I
3 am getting nearer a Sannyasin's life now. I have not had any news
4 from Saradananda for two weeks. I am glad you got the stories;
5 rewrite them if you think so--get them published if you find anybody
6 to do it and take the proceeds, if any, for your work. I do not want 7 any. I have got a few hundred dollars here. Going to San Francisco
8 next week, and hope to do better there. Tell Mary when you see her 9 next that I had nothing whatsoever to do with the proposal of $100
10 a year subscription to Mrs. Hale. I am so grateful to them.

11 Well, money will come for your school, never fear--it has got 12 to come; if it does not come, who cares? One road is quite as good 13 as the other. Mother knows best. I don't know whether I am very 14 soon going to the East or not. If I have an opportunity, of course I 15 will go to Indiana.

16 The international scheme is a good one and by all means join 17 it, and be the medium of getting some Indian women's clubs to join 18 it through you, which is better. . . .

19 Things shall look up for us, never mind. As soon as the war is 20 finished we go to England and try to do a big work there. What do 21 you think? Shall I write to Mother Superior? If so, send her 22 whereabouts. Has she written to you? Sturdies and "Shakies" will 23 all come round--hold on.

24 You are learning your lessons--that is all I want. So am I; the 25 moment we are fit, money and men must flow towards us. Between 26 my nerves and your emotion we may make a mess of everything just 27 now. So Mother is curing my nerves and drilling you into level-
28 headedness--and then we go. This time good is coming in chunks, I 29 am sure. We will make the foundations of the old land shake this 30 time.

31 . . . I am getting cool as a cucumber--let anything come, I am 32 ready. The next move--any blow shall tell--not one miss--such is the 33 next chapter.

34 With all love,

43 My dear Akhandananda,

44 I am very glad to receive your letter and go through the 45 details of news. Learning and wisdom are superfluities, the surface 46 glitter merely, but it is the heart that is the seat of all power. It is 47 not in the brain but in the heart that the Atman, possessed of 1 knowledge, power, and activity, has Its seat. "{Sanskrit}--The 2 nerves of the heart are a hundred and one" etc. The chief nerve-3 centre near the heart, called the sympathetic ganglia, is where the 4 Atman has Its citadel. The more heart you will be able to manifest, 5 the greater will be the victory you achieve. It is only a few that 6 understand the language of the brain, but everyone, from the 7 Creator down to a clump of grass, understands the language that 8 comes from the heart. But then, in our country, it is a case of 9 rousing men that are, as it were, dead. It will take time, but if you 10 have infinite patience and perseverance, success is bound to come.

11 No mistake in that.

12 How are the English officials to blame? Is the family, of whose 13 unnatural cruelty you have written, an isolated one in India? Or, are 14 there plenty of such? It is the same story all over the country. But 15 then, it is not as a result of pure wickedness that the selfishness 16 commonly met with in our country has come. This bestial 17 selfishness is the outcome of centuries of failure and repression. It 18 is not real selfishness, but deep-rooted despair. It will be cured at 19 the first inkling of success. It is only this that the English officials 20 are noticing all round; so how can they have faith at the very 21 outset? But tell me, do they not sympathise with any real work that 22 they meet with? . . .

23 In these days of dire famine, flood, disease, and pestilence, 24 tell me where your Congressmen are. Will it do merely to say,
25 "Hand the government of the country over to us"? And who is there 26 to listen to them? If a man does work, has he to open his mouth to 27 ask for anything? If there be two thousand people like you working 28 in several districts, won't it be the turn of the English themselves to 29 consult you in matter of political moment? "{Sanskrit} The wise 30 man should achieve his object." . . . A__ was not allowed to open a 31 centre, but what of that! Has not Kishengarh allowed it?--Let him 32 work on without ever opening his lips; there is no use of either 33 telling anything to anybody, or quarrelling with any. Whoever will 34 assist in this work of the Divine Mother of the universe, will have 35 Her grace, and whoever will oppose it will not only be "{Sanskrit}-- 36 raising a deadly enemy for nothing", but also laying the axe to his 37 own prospects. {Sanskrit} etc.,--all in good time. Many a little 38 makes a mickle. When a great work is being done, when the 39 foundations are laid or a road constructed, when super-human 40 energy is needed--it is one or two extraordinary men who silently 41 and noiselessly work through the world of obstacles and difficulties.
42 When thousands of people are benefited, there is a great 43 tomtoming, and the whole country is loud in notes of praise. But 44 then the machine has already been set agoing, and even a boy can 45 work it, or a fool add to it some impetus. Grasp this that, that 46 benefit done to a village or two, that orphanage with its twenty 47 orphans, those ten or twenty workers--all these are enough; they 48 form the nucleus, never to be destroyed. From these, hundreds of 49 thousands of people will be benefited in time. Now we want half a 50 dozen lions, then excellent work will be turned out by even 51 hundreds of jackals. . . .

52 If orphan girls happen to come to your hands for shelter, you

1 must take them in above all else. Otherwise, Christian missionaries
2 will take them, poor things, away! What matters it that you have no
3 particular arrangements for them? Through the Divine Mother's 4 will, they will be provided for. When you get a horse, never you
5 worry about the whip. . . . Get together whomsoever you can lay 6 your hands on, no picking and choosing now--everything will be set 7 right in course of time. In every attempt there are many obstacles 8 to cope with, but gradually the path becomes smooth.

9 Convey to the European officer many thanks from me. Work 10 on fearlessly--there is a hero! Bravo! Thrice well done! The starting 11 of a centre at Bhagalpur that you have written about is no doubt a 12 good idea--enlightening the schoolboys and things of that sort. But 13 our mission is for the destitute, the poor, and the illiterate 14 peasantry and labouring classes, and if, after everything has been 15 done for the first, there is spare time, then only for the gentry.
16 Those peasants and labouring people will be won over by love.
17 Afterwards it will be they who will collect small sums and start 18 missions at their own villages, and gradually, from among those 19 very men, teachers will spring.

20 Teach some boys and girls of the peasant classes the 21 rudiments of learning and infuse a number of ideas into their 22 brains. Afterwards the peasants of each village will collect funds 23 and have one of these in their village. "{Sanskrit}--One must raise 24 oneself by one's own exertions"--this holds good in all spheres. We 25 help them to help themselves. That they are supplying you with 26 your daily bread is a real bit of work done. The moment they will 27 come to understand their own condition and feel the necessity of 28 help and improvement, know that your work is taking effect and is 29 in the right direction, while the little good that the moneyed
30 classes, out of pity, do to the poor, does not last, and ultimately it 31 does nothing but harm to both parties. The peasants and labouring 32 classes are in a moribund condition, so what is needed is that the 33 moneyed people will only help them to regain their vitality, and 34 nothing more. Then leave the peasants and labourers to look to 35 their own problem, to grapple with and solve it. But then you must 36 take care not to set up class-strife between the poor peasants, the 37 labouring people, and the wealthy classes. Make it a point not to 38 abuse the moneyed classes. "{Sanskrit}--The wise man should 39 achieve his own object."

40 Victory to the Guru! Victory to the Mother of the Universe!
41 What fear! Opportunity, remedy, and its application will present 42 themselves. I do not care about the result, well or ill. I shall be 43 happy if only you do this much of work. Wordy warfares, texts and 44 scriptures, doctrines and dogmas--all these I am coming to loathe 45 as poison in this my advanced age. Know this for certain that he 46 who will work will be the crown on my head. Useless bandying of 47 words and making noise is taking away our time, is consuming our 48 life-energy, without pushing the cause of humanitarianism a step 49 further. {Sanskrit}--Away with fear! Bravo! There is a hero indeed!
50 May the blessed Guru be enthroned in your heart, and the Divine 51 Mother guide your hands.

Yours

1 affectionately,

2 Vivekananda

10 Dear Nivedita,

11 I don't want to work. I want to be quiet, and rest. I know the 12 time and the place; but the fate or Karma, I think, drives me on-- 13 work, work. We are like cattle driven to the slaughter-house--hastily 14 nibbling a bite of grass on the roadside as they are driven along 15 under the whip. And all this is our work, our fear--fear, the 16 beginning of misery, of disease, etc. By being nervous and fearful 17 we injure others. By being so fearful to hurt we hurt more. By 18 trying so much to avoid evil we fall into its jaws.

19 What a mass of namby-pamby nonsense we create round 20 ourselves!! It does us no good, it leads us on to the very thing we 21 try to avoid--misery. . . .

22 Oh, to become fearless, to be daring, to be careless of 23 everything! . . .

34 I am much better and am growing very strong. I feel 35 sometimes that freedom is near at hand, and the tortures of the last 36 two years have been great lessons in many ways. Disease and 37 misfortune come to do us good in the long run, although at the time 38 we feel that we are submerged for ever.

39 I am the infinite blue sky; the clouds may gather over me, but 40 I am the same infinite blue.

41 I am trying to get a taste of that peace which I know is my 43 dreams of happiness and misery--what are they?

44 My dreams are breaking. Om Tat Sat!

My dear Margot,

I am so glad at your good fortune. Things have got to come round if we are steady. I am sure you will get all the money you require here or in England.

I am working hard; and the harder I work, the better I feel. This ill health has done me a great good, sure. I am really understanding what non-attachment means. And I hope very soon to be perfectly non-attached.

We put all our energies to concentrate and get attached to one thing; but the other part, though equally difficult, we seldom pay any attention to--the faculty of detaching ourselves at a moment's notice from anything.

Both attachment and detachment perfectly developed make a man great and happy.

I am so glad at Mrs. Leggett's gift of $1,000. She is working up, wait. She has a great part to play in Ramakrishna's work, whether she knows it or not.

I enjoyed your accounts of Prof. Geddes, and Joe has a funny account of a clairvoyant. Things are just now beginning to turn. . . .

This letter, I think, will reach you at Chicago. . . .

I had a nice letter from Max Gysic, the young Swiss who is a great friend of Miss Souter. Miss Souter also sends her love, and they ask to know the time when I come over to England. Many people are inquiring, they say.

Things have got to come round--the seed must die underground to come up as the tree. The last two years were the underground rotting. I never had a struggle in the jaws of death, but it meant a tremendous upheaval of the whole life. One such brought me to Ramakrishna, another sent me to the U.S., this has been the greatest of all. It is gone--I am so calm that it astonishes me sometimes!! I work every day morning and evening, eat anything any hour--and go to bed at 12 p.m. in the night--but such fine sleep!! I never had such power of sleeping before!

Yours with all love and
blessings,

My dear Joe,

Just now I received yours and Mrs. Bull's welcome letter. I direct this to London. I am so glad Mrs. Leggett is on the sure way to recovery.

I am so sorry Mr. Leggett resigned the presidency.

Well, I keep quiet for fear of making further trouble.

You know my methods are extremely harsh and once roused I may rattle A__ too much for his peace of mind.

I wrote to him only to tell him that his notions about Mrs. Bull are entirely wrong.

Work is always difficult; pray for me Joe that my works stop for ever, and my whole soul be absorbed in Mother. Her works, She knows.

You must be glad to be in London once more--the old friends, give them all my love and gratitude.

I am well, very well mentally. I feel the rest of the soul more than that of the body. The battles are lost and won. I have bundled my things and am waiting for the great deliverer.

"Shiva, O Shiva, carry my boat to the other shore."

After all, Joe, I am only the boy who used to listen with rapt wonderment to the wonderful words of Ramakrishna under the Banyan at Dakshineswar. That is my true nature; works and activities, doing good and so forth are all superimpositions. Now I again hear his voice; the same old voice thrilling my soul. Bonds are breaking--love dying, work becoming tasteless--the glamour is off life. Only the voice of the Master calling.--"I come Lord, I come." "Let the dead bury the dead, follow thou Me."--"I come, my beloved Lord, I come."

Yes, I come. Nirvana is before me. I feel it at times--the same infinite ocean of peace, without a ripple, a breath.

I am glad I was born, glad I suffered so, glad I did make big blunders, glad to enter peace. I leave none bound, I take no bonds. Whether this body will fall and release me or I enter into freedom in the body, the old man is gone, gone for ever, never to come back again! The guide, the Guru, the leader, the teacher has passed away; the boy, the student, the servant is left behind.

You understand why I do not want to meddle with A__. Who am I to meddle with anyone, Joe? I have long given up my place as a leader--I have no right to raise my voice. Since the beginning of this

1 year I have not dictated anything in India. You know that. Many 2 thanks for what you and Mrs. Bull have been to me in the past. All 3 blessings follow you ever! The sweetest moments of my life have 4 been when I was drifting: I am drifting again--with the bright warm 5 sun ahead and masses of vegetation around--and in the heat 6 everything is so still, so calm--and I am drifting languidly--in the 7 warm heart of the river! I dare not make a splash with my hands or 8 feet--for fear of breaking the marvellous stillness, stillness that 9 makes you feel sure it is an illusion!

10 Behind my work was ambition, behind my love was 11 personality, behind my purity was fear, behind my guidance the 12 thirst of power! Now they are vanishing, and I drift. I come!
13 Mother, I come! In Thy warm bosom, floating wheresoever Thou 14 takest me, in the voiceless, in the strange, in the wonderland, I 15 come--a spectator, no more an actor.

16 Oh, it is so calm! My thoughts seem to come from a great, 17 great distance in the interior of my own heart. They seem like faint, 18 distant whispers, and peace is upon everything, sweet, sweet 19 peace--like that one feels for a few moments just before falling into 20 sleep, when things are seen and felt like shadows--without fear, 21 without love, without emotion. Peace that one feels alone, 22 surrounded with statues and pictures--I come! Lord, I come!

23 The world is, but not beautiful nor ugly, but as sensations
24 without exciting any emotion. Oh, Joe, the blessedness of it!
25 Everything is good and beautiful; for things are all losing their 26 relative proportions to me--my body among the first. Om That 27 Existence!

28 I hope great things to come to you all in London and Paris.
29 Fresh joy--fresh benefits to mind and body.

30 With love as ever to you and Mrs. Bull,

31
32 faithfully,

Yours

Dear Nivedita,

Your letter reached me just now. Many thanks for the kind expressions.

I gave a chance to Mrs. Bull to draw her money out of the Math; and as she did not say anything about it, and the trust deeds were waiting here to be executed, I got them executed duly at the British Consulate; and they are on their way to India now.

Now I am free, as I have kept no power or authority or position for me in the work. I also have resigned the presidentship of the Ramakrishna Mission.

The Math etc., belong now to the immediate disciples of Ramakrishna except myself. The presidentship is now Brahmananda's--next it will fall on Premananda etc., etc., in turn.

I am so glad a whole load is off me, now I am happy. I have served Ramakrishna through mistakes and success for 20 years now. I retire for good and devote the rest of my life to myself.

I no longer represent anybody, nor am I responsible to anybody. As to my friends, I had a morbid sense of obligation. I have thought well and find I owe nothing to anybody; if anything, I have given my best energies, unto death almost, and received only hectoring and mischief-making and botheration. I am done with everyone here and in India.

Your letter indicates that I am jealous of your new friends. You must know once for all, I am born without jealousy, without avarice, without the desire to rule--whatever other vices I am born with.

I never directed you before; now, after I am nobody in the work, I have no direction whatever. I only know this much: So long as you serve "Mother" with a whole heart, She will be your guide.

I never had any jealousy about what friends you made. I never criticised my brethren for mixing up in anything. Only I do believe the Western people have the peculiarity of trying to force upon others whatever seems good to them, forgetting that what is good for you may not be good for others. As such, I am afraid you might try to force upon others whatever turn your mind might take in contact with new friends. That was the only reason I sometimes tried to stop any particular influence, and nothing else.

You are free, have your own choice, your own work. . . .

Friends or foes, they are all instruments in Her hands to help us work out our own Karma, through pleasure or pain. As such "Mother" bless them all.

With all love and blessings,

Yours

affectionately,

Vivekananda

Dear Nivedita,

Such is life--grind, grind; and yet what else are we to do? Grind, grind! Something will come--some way will be opened. If it does not, as it probably never will--then, then--what then? All our efforts are only to stave off, for a season, the great climax--death! Oh, what would the world do without you, Death! Thou great healer!

The world, as it is, is not real, is not eternal, thank the Lord!! How can the future be any better? That must be an effect of this one--at least like this, if not worse!

Dreams, oh dreams! Dream on! Dream, the magic of dream, is the cause of this life, it is also the remedy. Dream, dream, only dream! Kill dream by dream!

I am trying to learn French, talking to __ here. Some are very appreciative already. Talk to all the world--of the eternal riddle, the eternal spool of fate, whose thread-end no one finds and everyone seems to find, at least to his own satisfaction, at least for a time--to fool himself a moment, isn't it?

Well, now great things are to be done! Who cares for great things? Why not do small things as well? One is as good as the other. The greatness of little things, that is what the Gita teaches--bless the old book!! . . .

I have not had much time to think of the body. So it must be well. Nothing is ever well here. We forget them at times, and that is being well and doing well. . . .

We play our parts here--good or bad. When the dream is finished and we have left the stage, we will have a hearty laugh at all this--of this only I am sure.

Yours etc.,

Vivekananda

Dear Mother {Mrs. Leggett},

We had a congress of cranks here in this house.

The representatives came from various countries, from India in the south, to Scotland in the north, with England and America buttressing the sides.

We were having great difficulty in electing the president, for though Dr. James (Professor William James) was there, he was more mindful of the blisters raised on him by Mrs. Melton (probably a magnetic healer) than solution of world problems.

I proposed Joe (Josephine MacLeod), but she refused on the ground of non-arrival of her new gown--and went to a corner to watch the scene, from a coign of vantage.

Mrs. (Ole) Bull was ready, but Margot (Sister Nivedita) objected to this meeting being reduced to a comparative philosophy class.

When we were thus in a fix--up sprung a short, square, almost round figure from the corner, and without any ceremony declared that all difficulties will be solved, not only of electing a president but of life itself, if we all took to worshipping the Sun God and Moon God. He delivered his speech in five minutes; but it took his disciple, who was present, fully three quarters of an hour to translate. In the meanwhile, the master began to draw the rugs in your parlour up in a heap, with the intention, as he said, of giving us an ocular demonstration of the power of "Fire God", then and there.

At this juncture Joe interposed and insisted that she did not want a fire sacrifice in her parlour; whereupon the Indian saint looked daggers at Joe, entirely disgusted at the behaviour of one he confidently believed to be a perfect convert to fire worship.

Then Dr. James snatched a minute from nursing his blisters and declared that he would have something very interesting to speak upon Fire God and his brethren, if he were not entirely occupied with the evolution of Meltonian blisters. Moreover his great Master, Herbert Spencer, not having investigated the subject before him, he would stick to golden silence.

1 "Chutney is the thing", said a voice near the door. We all
2 looked back and saw Margot. "It is Chutney," she said, "Chutney 3 and Kali, that will remove all difficulties of life, and make it easy for 4 us to swallow all evils, and relish what is good." But she stopped all 5 of a sudden and vehemently asserted that she was not going to 6 speak any further, as she has been obstructed by a certain male 7 animal in the audience in her speech. She was sure one man in the 8 audience had his head turned towards the window and was not 9 paying the attention proper to a lady, and though as to herself she 10 believed in the equality of the sexes, yet she wanted to know the 11 reason of that disgusting man's want of due respect for women.
12 Then one and all declared that they had been giving her the most 13 undivided attention, and all above the equal right, her due, but to 14 no purpose. Margot would have nothing to do with that horrible 15 crowd and sat down.

16 Then Mrs. Bull of Boston took the floor and began to explain 17 how all the difficulties of the world were from not understanding 18 the true relation between the sexes. She said, "The only panacea 19 was a right understanding of the proper persons, and then to find 20 liberty in love and freedom in liberty and motherhood, brotherhood, 21 fatherhood, Godhood, love in freedom and freedom in love, in the 22 right holding up of the true ideal in sex."

23 To this the Scotch delegate vehemently objected and said that 24 as the hunter chased the goatherd, the goatherd the shepherd, the 25 shepherd the peasant, and the peasant drove the fisher into the sea, 26 now we wanted to fish out of the deep the fisher and let him fall 27 upon the peasant, the peasant upon the shepherd, and so on; and 28 the web of life will be completed and we will be all happy. He was 29 not allowed to continue his driving business long. In a second 30 everyone was on his feet, and we could only hear a confusion of 31 voices--"Sun God and Moon God", "Chutney and Kali," "Freedom 32 holding up right understanding, sex, motherhood", "Never, the 33 fisherman must go back to the shore", etc. Whereupon Joe declared 34 that she was yearning to be the hunter for the time and chase them 35 all out of the house if they did not stop their nonsense.

36 Then was peace and calm restored, and I hasten to write you 37 about it.

38 Yours affly.,
39 Vivekananda

48 Dear Alberta,

1 I am surely coming this evening and of course will be very

15 Dear Joe,

16 I arrived night before last. Alas! my hurrying was of no use.

17 Poor Captain Sevier passed away, a few days ago--thus two 18 great Englishmen gave up their lives for us--us the Hindus. Thus is 19 martyrdom if anything is. Mrs. Sevier I have written to just now, to 20 know her decision.

21 I am well, things are well here--every way. Excuse this haste.
22 I will write longer ere long.

31 Dear Nivedita,

32 Just a voice across the continents to say, how do you do? Are 33 you not surprised? Verily I am a bird of passage. Gay and busy 34 Paris, grim old Constantinople, sparkling little Athens, and 35 pyramidal Cairo are left behind, and here I am writing in my room 36 on the Ganga, in the Math. It is so quiet and still! The broad river is 37 dancing in the bright sunshine, only now and then an occasional 38 cargo boat breaking the silence with the splashing of the oars. It is 39 the cold season here, but the middle of the day is warm and bright 40 every day. But it is the winter of Southern California. Everything is

Dear Joe,

This mail brought your letter including that of Mother and Alberta. What the learned friend of Alberta says about Russia is about the same I think myself. Only there is one difficulty of thought: Is it possible for the Hindu race to be Russianised?

Dear Mr. Sevier passed away before I could arrive. He was cremated on the banks of the river that flows by his Ashrama, a la Hindu, covered with garlands, the Brahmins carrying the body and boys chanting the Vedas.

The cause has already two martyrs. It makes me love dear old England and its heroic breed. The Mother is watering the plant of future India with the best blood of England. Glory unto Her!

Dear Mrs. Sevier is calm. A letter she wrote me to Paris comes back this mail, I am going up tomorrow to pay her a visit. Lord bless her, dear brave soul!

I am calm and strong. Occasion never found me low yet; Mother will not make me now depressed.

It is very pleasant here, now the winter is on. The Himalayas will be still more beautiful with the uncovered snows.

The young man who started from New York, Mr. Johnston, has taken the vow of a Brahmacharin and is at Mayavati.

Send the money to Saradananda in the Math, as I will be away in the hills.

They have worked all right as far as they could; I am glad, and feel myself quite a fool on account of my nervous chagrin.

They are as good and as faithful as ever, and they are in good health. Write all this to Mrs. Bull and tell her she was always right and I was wrong, and I beg a hundred thousand pardons of her.

Oceans of love for her and for M__.

I look behind and after

And find that all is right.

In my deepest sorrows

There is a soul of light.

All love to M__, Mrs. C__, to Dear J. B.__, and to you, Dear Joe, Pranams.

Dear Nivedita,

We all work by bits, that is to say, in this cause. I try to keep down the spring, but something or other happens, and the spring goes whirr, and there you are--thinking, remembering, scribbling, scrawling, and all that!

Well, about the rains---they have come down now in right earnest, and it is a deluge, pouring, pouring, pouring night and day. The river is rising, flooding the banks; the ponds and tanks have overflowed. I have just now returned from lending a hand in cutting a deep drain to take off the water from the Math grounds. The rain-water stands at places some feet high. My huge stork is full of glee, and so are the ducks and geese. My tame antelope fled from the Math and gave us some days of anxiety in finding him out. One of my ducks unfortunately died yesterday. She had been gasping for breath more than a week. One of my waggish old monks says, "Sir, it is no use living in this Kali-Yuga when ducks catch cold from damp and rain, and frogs sneeze!"

One of the geese had her plumes falling off. Knowing no other method, I left her some minutes in a tub of water mixed with mild carbolic, so that it might either kill or heal; and she is all right now.

Yours etc.,

Vivekananda

(From the Diary of a Disciple¹³³)

[Place: Calcutta, the house of the late Babu Priyanath Mukhopadhyaya, Baghbazar. Year: 1897.]

It is three or four days since Swamiji has set his foot in Calcutta¹³⁴ after his return from the West. The joy of the devotees of Shri Ramakrishna knows no bounds at enjoying his holy presence after a long time. And the well-to-do among them are considering themselves blessed to cordially invite Swamiji to their own houses. This afternoon Swamiji had an invitation to the house of Srijut Priyanath Mukhopadhyaya, a devotee of Shri Ramakrishna, at Rajballabhpara in Baghbazar. Receiving this news, many devotees assembled today in his house.

The disciple also, informed of it through indirect sources, reached the house of Mr. Mukherjee at about 2:30 p.m. He had not yet made his acquaintance with Swamiji. So this was to be his first meeting with the Swami.

On the disciple's reaching there, Swami Turiyananda took him to Swamiji and introduced him. After his return to the Math, the Swami had already heard about him, having read a Hymn on Shri Ramakrishna composed by the disciple.

Swamiji also had come to know that the disciple used to visit Nag Mahashaya, a foremost devotee of Shri Ramakrishna.¹³⁵

When the disciple prostrated himself before him and took his seat, Swamiji addressed him in Sanskrit and asked him about Nag Mahashaya and his health, and while referring to his superhuman renunciation, his unbounded love for God, and his humility, he said: {Sanskrit}¹³⁶--"We are undone by our vain quest after reality; while, O bee, you are indeed blessed with success!" He then asked the disciple to send these words to Nag Mahashaya. Afterwards, finding it rather inconvenient to talk to the disciple in the crowd, he called him and Swami Turiyananda to a small room to the west and, addressing himself to the disciple, began to recite these words from ¹³³ ?The disciple is Sharatchandra Chakravarty, who published his records in a Bengali book, Swami-Shishya-Samvada, in two parts. The present series of "Conversations and Dialogues" is a revised translation from this book. Five dialogues of this series have already appeared in the Complete Works, Vol. V.

¹³⁴ ?On February 20, 1897.

¹³⁵ ?Durgacharan Nag, the great saint and perfected soul, living as a householder, who wonderfully reflected in his life--in many of its phases--the greatness of the Master, Shri Ramakrishna.

¹³⁶ ?Words addressed by King Dushyanta to the bee which was teasing Shakuntala by darting at her lips--Kalidasa's Shakuntalam.

1 the Vivekachudamani (43): {Sanskrit}--"O wise one, fear not; you
2 have not to perish. Means there are for crossing the ocean of this 3 round of birth and death. I shall show you the same way by which 4 holy men of renunciation have crossed this ocean." He then asked 5 him to read Acharya Shankara's work named Vivekachudamani.

6 At these words, the disciple went on musing within himself.
7 Was the Swami in this way hinting at the desirability of his own 8 formal initiation? The disciple was at that time a staunch orthodox 9 man in his ways, and a Vedantin. He had not yet settled his mind as 10 regards the adoption of a Guru and was a devoted advocate of 11 Varnashrama or caste ordinances.

12 While various topics were going on, a man came in and 13 announced that Mr. Narendranath Sen, the Editor of the Mirror, 14 had come for an interview with Swamiji. Swamiji asked the bearer 15 of this news to show him into that small room. Narendra Babu came 16 and taking a seat there introduced various topics about England 17 and America. In answer to his questions Swamiji said, "Nowhere in 18 the world is to be found another nation like the Americans, so 19 generous, broad-minded, hospitable, and so sincerely eager to 20 accept new ideas." "Wherever work", he went on, "has been done in 21 America has not been done through my power. The people of 22 America have accepted the ideas of Vedanta, because they are so 23 good-hearted." Referring to England he said, "There is no nation in 24 the world so conservative as the English. They do not like so easily 25 to accept any new idea, but if through perseverance they can be 26 once made to understand any idea, they will never give it up by any 27 means. Such firm determination you will find in no other nation.
28 This is why they occupy the foremost position in the world in power 29 and civilisation."

30 Then declaring that if qualified preachers could be had, there 31 was greater likelihood of the Vedanta work being permanently
32 established in England than in America, he continued, "I have only 33 laid the foundation of the work. If future preachers follow my path, 34 a good deal of work may be done in time."

35 Narendra Babu asked, "What future prospect is there for us 36 in preaching religion in this way?"

37 Swamiji said: "In our country there is only this religion of 38 Vedanta. Compared with the Western civilisation, it may be said, we 39 have hardly got anything else. But by the preaching of this 40 universal religion of Vedanta, a religion which gives equal rights to 41 acquire spirituality to men of all creeds and all paths of religious 42 practice, the civilised West would come to know what a wonderful 43 degree of spirituality once developed in India and how that is still 44 existing. By the study of this religion, the Western nations will have 45 increasing regard and sympathy for us. Already these have grown 46 to some extent. In this way, if we have their real sympathy and 47 regard, we would learn from them the sciences bearing on our 48 material life, thereby qualifying ourselves better for the struggle for 49 existence. On the other hand, by learning this Vedanta from us, they 50 will be enabled to secure their own spiritual welfare."

51 Narendra Babu asked, "Is there any hope of our political 1 progress in this kind of interchange?"

2 Swamiji said, "They (the Westerners) are the children of the 3 great hero Virochana! Their power makes the five elements play 4 like puppets in their hands. If you people believe that we shall in 5 case of conflict with them gain freedom by applying those material
6 forces, you are profoundly mistaken. Just as a little piece of stone 7 figures before the Himalayas, so we differ from them in point of 8 skill in the use of those forces. Do you know what my idea is? By 9 preaching the profound secrets of the Vedanta religion in the 10 Western world, we shall attract the sympathy and regard of these 11 mighty nations, maintaining for ever the position of their teacher in 12 spiritual matters, and they will remain our teachers in all material 13 concerns. The day when, surrendering the spiritual into their 14 hands, our countrymen would sit at the feet of the West to learn 15 religion, that day indeed the nationality of this fallen nation will be 16 dead and gone for good. Nothing will come of crying day and night 17 before them, 'Give me this or give me that.' When there will grow a 18 link of sympathy and regard between both nations by this give-and-19 take intercourse, there will be then no need for these noisy cries.
20 They will do everything of their own accord. I believe that by this 21 cultivation of religion and the wider diffusion of Vedanta, both this 22 country and the West will gain enormously. To me the pursuit of 23 politics is a secondary means in comparison with this. I will lay 24 down my life to carry out this belief practically. If you believe in any 25 other way of accomplishing the good of India, well, you may go on 26 working your own way."

27 Narendra Babu shortly left, expressing his unqualified
28 agreement with Swamiji's ideas. The disciple, hearing the above 29 words from Swamiji, astonishingly contemplated his luminous 30 features with steadfast gaze.

31 When Narendra Babu had departed, an enthusiastic preacher 32 belonging to the society for the protection of cows came for an 33 interview with Swamiji. He was dressed almost like a Sannyasin, if 34 not fully so--with a Gerua turban on the head; he was evidently an 35 up-country Indian. At the announcement of this preacher of cow-
36 protection Swamiji came out to the parlour room. The preacher
37 saluted Swamiji and presented him with a picture of the mother-38 cow. Swamiji took that in his hand and, making it over to one 39 standing by, commenced the following conversation with the 40 preacher:

41 Swamiji: What is the object of your society?

42 Preacher: We protect the mother-cows of our country from 43 the hands of the butcher. Cow-infirmaries have been founded in 44 some places where the diseased, decrepit mother-cows or those 45 bought from the butchers are provided for.

46 Swamiji: That is very good indeed. What is the source of your 47 income?

48 Preacher: The work of the society is carried on only by gifts
49 kindly made by great men like you.

50 Swamiji: What amount of money have you now laid by?

1 Preacher: The Marwari traders' community are the special 2 supporters of this work. They have given a big amount for this 3 cause.

4 Swamiji: A terrible famine has now broken out in Central 5 India. The Indian Government has published a death-roll of nine 6 lakhs of starved people. Has your society done anything to render 7 help in this time of famine?

8 Preacher: We do not help during famine or other distresses.
9 This society has been established only for the protection of mother-10 cows.

11 Swamiji: During a famine when lakhs of people, your own 12 brothers and sisters, have fallen into the jaws of death, you have 13 not thought it your duty, though having the means, to help them in 14 that terrible calamity with food!

15 Preacher: No. This famine broke out as a result of men's 16 Karma, their sins. It is a case of "like Karma, like fruit".

17 Hearing the words of the preacher, sparks of fire, as it were, 18 scintillated in Swamiji's large eyes; his face became flushed. But he 19 suppressed his feeling and said: "Those associations which do not 20 feel sympathy for men and, even seeing their own brothers dying 21 from starvation, do not give them a handful of rice to save their 22 lives, while giving away piles of food to save birds and beasts, I 23 have not the least sympathy for, and I do not believe that society 24 derives any good from them. If you make a plea of Karma by saying 25 that men die through their Karma, then it becomes a settled fact 26 that it is useless to try or struggle for anything in this world; and 27 your work for the protection of animals is no exception. With regard 28 to your cause also, it can be said--the mother-cows through their 29 own Karma fall into the hands of the butchers and die, and we need 30 not do anything in the matter."

31 The preacher was a little abashed and said: "Yes, what you 32 say is true, but the Shastras say that the cow is our mother."

33 Swamiji smilingly said, "Yes, that the cow is our mother, I 34 understand: who else could give birth to such accomplished 35 children?"

36 The up-country preacher did not speak further on the subject; 37 perhaps he could not understand the point of Swamiji's poignant 38 ridicule. He told Swamiji that he was begging something of him for 39 the objects of the society.

40 Swamiji: I am a Sannyasin, a fakir. Where shall I find money
41 enough to help you? But if ever I get money in my possession, I 42 shall first spend that in the service of man. Man is first to be saved; 43 he must be given food, education, and spirituality. If any money is 44 left after doing all these, then only something would be given to 45 your society.

46 At these words, the preacher went away after saluting 47 Swamiji. Then Swamiji began to speak to us: "What words, these, 48 forsooth! Says he that men are dying by reason of their Karma, so 49 what avails doing any kindness to them! This is decisive proof that

1 the country has gone to rack and ruin! Do you see how much 2 abused the Karma theory of your Hinduism has been? Those who 3 are men and yet have no feeling in the heart for man, well, are such 4 to be counted as men at all?" While speaking these words, 5 Swamiji's whole body seemed to shiver in anguish and grief.

6 Then, while smoking, Swamiji said to the disciple, "Well, see 7 me again."

8 Disciple: Where will you be staying, sir? Perhaps you might 9 put up in some rich man's house. Will he allow me there?

10 Swamiji: At present, I shall be living either at the Alambazar 11 Math or at the garden-house of Gopal Lal Seal at Cossipore. You 12 may come to either place.

13 Disciple: Sir, I very much wish to speak with you in solitude.

14 Swamiji: All right. Come one night. We shall speak plenty of 15 Vedanta.

16 Disciple: Sir, I have heard that some Europeans and 17 Americans have come with you. Will they not get offended at my 18 dress or my talk?

19 Swamiji: Why, they are also men, and moreover they are 20 devoted to the Vedanta religion. They will be glad to converse with 21 you.

22 Disciple: Sir, Vedanta speaks of some distinctive qualifications 23 for its aspirants; how could these come out in your Western 24 disciples? The Shastras say--he who has studied the Vedas and the 25 Vedanta, who has formally expiated his sins, who has performed all 26 the daily and occasional duties enjoined by the scriptures, who is 27 self-restrained in his food and general conduct, and specially he 28 who is accomplished in the four special Sadhanas (preliminary 29 disciplines), he alone has a right to the practice of Vedanta. Your 30 Western disciples are in the first place non-Brahmins, and then they 31 are lax in point of proper food and dress; how could they 32 understand the system of Vedanta?

33 Swamiji: When you speak with them, you will know at once 34 whether they have understood Vedanta or not.

35 Swamiji, perhaps, could now see that the disciple was rigidly
36 devoted to the external observances of orthodox Hinduism. Swamiji 37 then, surrounded by some devotees of Shri Ramakrishna, went over 38 to the house of Srijut Balaram Basu of Baghbazar. The disciple 39 bought the book Vivekachudamani at Bat-tala and went towards his 40 own home at Darjipara.

42 II

43 [Place: On the way from Calcutta to Cossipore and in the 44 garden of the late Gopal Lal Seal. Year: 1897.]

45 Today Swamiji was taking rest at noon in the house of Srijut 46 Girish Chandra Ghosh. The disciple arriving there saluted him and 47 found that Swamiji was just ready to go to the garden-house of 1 Gopal Lal Seal. A carriage was waiting outside. He said to the 2 disciple, "Well, come with me." The disciple agreeing, Swamiji got 3 up with him into the carriage and it started. When it drove up the 4 Chitpur road, on seeing the Ganga, Swamiji broke forth in a chant, 5 self-involved: {Sanskrit} etc.¹³⁷ The disciple listened in silent 6 wonder to that wave of music, when after a short while, seeing a 7 railway engine going towards the Chitpur hydraulic bridge, Swamiji 8 said to the disciple, "Look how it goes majestically like a lion!" The 9 disciple replied, "But that is inert matter. Behind it there is the 10 intelligence of man working, and hence it moves. In moving thus, 11 what credit is there for it?"

12 Swamiji: Well, say then, what is the sign of consciousness?

13 Disciple: Why, sir, that indeed is conscious which acts through 14 intelligence.

15 Swamiji: Everything is conscious which rebels against nature:
16 there, consciousness is manifested. Just try to kill a little ant, even it 17 will once resist to save its life. Where there is struggle, where there 18 is rebellion, there is the sign of life, there consciousness is 19 manifested.

20 Disciple: Sir, can that test be applied also in the case of men 21 and of nations?

22 Swamiji: Just read the history of the world and see whether it 23 applies or not. You will find that excepting yours, it holds good in 24 the case of all other nations. It is you only who are in this world 25 lying prostrate today like inert matter. You have been hypnotised.
26 From very old times, others have been telling you that you are 27 weak, that you have no power, and you also, accepting that, have 28 for about a thousand years gone on thinking, "We are wretched, we 29 are good for nothing." (Pointing to his own body:) This body also is 30 born of the soil of your country; but I never thought like that. And 31 hence you see how, through His will, even those who always think 32 us low and weak, have done and are still doing me divine honour. If 33 you can think that infinite power, infinite knowledge and 34 indomitable energy lie within you, and if you can bring out that 35 power, you also can become like me.

36 Disciple: Where is the capacity in us for thinking that way, 37 sir? Where is the teacher or preceptor who from our childhood will 38 speak thus before us and make us understand? What we have heard 39 and have learnt from all is that the object of having an education 40 nowadays is to secure some good job.

41 Swamiji: For that reason is it that we have come forward with 42 quite another precept and example. Learn that truth from us, 43 understand it, and realise it; and then spread that idea broadcast, 44 in cities, in towns, and in villages. Go and preach to all, "Arise, 45 awake, sleep no more; within each of you there is the power to 46 remove all wants and all miseries. Believe this, and that power will 47 be manifested." Teach this to all, and, with that, spread among the 1 ¹³⁷ ?From Vyasa's Hymn to Vishvanatha, meaning "whose matted locks look 2 charming with the waves of the Ganga playing among them".

3

1 masses in plain language the central truths of science, philosophy, 2 history, and geography. I have a plan to open a centre with the 3 unmarried youths; first of all I shall teach them, and then carry on 4 the work through them.

5 Disciple: But that requires a good deal of money. Where will 6 you get this money?

7 Swamiji: What do you talk! Isn't it man that makes money?
8 Where did you ever hear of money making man? If you can make 9 your thoughts and words perfectly at one, if you can, I say, make 10 yourself one in speech and action, money will pour in at your feet of 11 itself, like water.

12 Disciple: Well, sir, I take it for granted that money will come, 13 and you will begin that good work. But what will that matter?
14 Before this, also, many great men carried out many good deeds. But 15 where are they now? To be sure, the same fate awaits the work 16 which you are going to start. Then what is the good of such an 17 endeavour?

18 Swamiji: He who always speculates as to what awaits him in 19 future, accomplishes nothing whatsoever. What you have 20 understood as true and good, just do that at once. What's the good 21 of calculating what may or may not befall in future? The span of life 22 is so, so short--and can anything be accomplished in it if you go on 23 forecasting and computing results. God is the only dispenser of 24 results; leave it to Him to do all that. What have you got to do with 25 it? Don't look that way, but go on working.

26 While he was thus going on, the cab reached the garden-27 house. Many people from Calcutta came to the garden that day to 28 see Swamiji. Swamiji got down from the carriage, took his seat in 29 the room, and began conversation with them all. Mr. Goodwin, a 30 Western disciple of Swamiji, was standing near by, like the 31 embodiment of service, as it were. The disciple had already made 32 his acquaintance; so he came to Mr. Goodwin, and both engaged in 33 a variety of talk about Swamiji.

34 In the evening Swamiji called the disciple and asked him, 35 "Have you got the Katha Upanishad by heart?"

36 Disciple: No, sir, I have only read it with Shankara's 37 commentary.

38 Swamiji: Among the Upanishads, one finds no other book so 39 beautiful as this. I wish you would all get it by heart. What will it do 40 only to read it? Rather try to bring into your life the faith, the 41 courage, the discrimination, and the renunciation of Nachiketa.

42 Disciple: Give your blessings, please, that I may realise these.

43 Swamiji: You have heard of Shri Ramakrishna's words, 44 haven't you? He used to say, "The breeze of mercy is already 45 blowing, do you only hoist the sail." Can anybody, my boy, thrust 46 realisation upon another? One's destiny is in one's hands--the Guru 47 only makes this much understood. Through the power of the seed 48 itself the tree grows, the air and water are only aids.

49 Disciple: There is, sir, the necessity also of extraneous help.

1 Swamiji: Yes, there is. But you should know that if there be no
2 substance within, no amount of outside help will avail anything. Yet 3 there comes a time for everyone to realise the Self. For everyone is 4 Brahman. The distinction of higher and lower is only in the degree 5 of manifestation of that Brahman. In time, everyone will have 6 perfect manifestation. Hence the Shastras say, "{Sanskrit}--In time, 7 That is realised in one's self."

8 Disciple: When, alas, will that happen, sir? From the 9 Shastras we hear how many births we have had to pass in 10 ignorance!

11 Swamiji: What's the fear? When you have come here this 12 time, the goal shall be attained in this life. Liberation or Samadhi-- 13 all this consists in simply doing away with the obstacles to the 14 manifestation of Brahman. Otherwise the Self is always shining 15 forth like the sun. The cloud of ignorance has only veiled it. Remove 16 the cloud and the sun will manifest. Then you get into the state of 17 {Sanskrit} ("the knot of the heart is broken") etc. The various paths 18 that you find, all advise you to remove the obstacles on the way. The 19 way by which one realises the Self, is the way which he preached to 20 all. But the goal of all is the knowledge of the Self, the realisation of 21 this Self. To it all men, all beings have equal right. This is the view 22 acceptable to all.

23 Disciple: Sir, when I read or hear these words of the Shastras, 24 the thought that the Self has not yet been realised makes the heart 25 very disconsolate.

26 Swamiji: This is what is called longing. The more it grows the 27 more will the cloud of obstacles be dispelled, and stronger will faith 28 be established. Gradually the Self will be realised like a fruit on the 29 palm of one's hand. This realisation alone is the soul of religion.
30 Everyone can go on abiding by some observances and formalities.
31 Everyone can fulfil certain injunctions and prohibitions, but how 32 few have this longing for realisation! This intense longing-- 33 becoming mad after realising God or getting the knowledge of the 34 Self-is real spirituality. The irresistible madness which the Gopis 35 had for the Lord, Shri Krishna, yea, it is intense longing like that 36 which is necessary for the realisation of the Self! Even in the Gopis' 37 mind there was a slight distinction of man and woman. But in real 38 Self-knowledge, there is not the slightest distinction of sex.

39 While speaking thus, Swamiji introduced the subject of Gita-
40 Govindam (of Jayadeva) and continued saying:

41 Jayadeva was the last poet in Sanskrit literature, though he 42 often cared more for the jingling of words than for depth of 43 sentiment. But just see how the poet has shown the culmination of 44 love and longing in the Shloka {Sanskrit} etc.¹³⁸ Such love indeed is 45 necessary for Self-realisation. There must be fretting and pining 46 within the heart. Now from His playful life at Vrindaban come to 47 the Krishna of Kurukshetra, and see how that also is fascinating--

138 ?{Sanskrit}--"At the flying of a bird or the stirring of a leaf, she fancies you are coming; she arranges your bed with eyes all alert looking towards the way you would come."

1 how, amidst all that horrible din and uproar of fighting, Krishna
2 remains calm, balanced, and peaceful. Ay, on the very battlefield, 3 He is speaking the Gita to Arjuna and getting him on to fight, which 4 is the Dharma of a Kshatriya! Himself an agent to bring about this 5 terrible warfare, Shri Krishna remains unattached to action--He did 6 not take up arms! To whichever phase of it you look, you will find 7 the character of Shri Krishna perfect. As if He was the embodiment 8 of knowledge, work, devotion, power of concentration, and 9 everything! In the present age, this aspect of Shri Krishna should 10 be specially studied. Only contemplating the Krishna of Vrindaban 11 with His flute won't do nowadays--that will not bring salvation to 12 humanity. Now is needed the worship of Shri Krishna uttering forth 13 the lion-roar of the Gita, of Rama with His bow and arrows, of 14 Mahavira, of Mother Kali. Then only will the people grow strong by 15 going to work with great energy and will. I have considered the 16 matter most carefully and come to the conclusion that of those who 17 profess and talk of religion nowadays in this country, the majority 18 are full of morbidity--crack-brained or fanatic. Without development 19 of an abundance of Rajas, you have hopes neither in this world, nor 20 in the next. The whole country is enveloped in intense Tamas; and 21 naturally the result is--servitude in this life and hell in the next.

22 Disciple: Do you expect in view of the Rajas in the Westerners 23 that they will gradually become Sattvika?

24 Swamiji: Certainly. Possessed of a plenitude of Rajas, they 25 have now reached the culmination of Bhoga, or enjoyment. Do you 26 think that it is not they, but you, who are going to achieve Yoga--you 27 who hang about for the sake of your bellies? At the sight of their 28 highly refined enjoyment, the delineation in Meghaduta--{Sanskrit}
29 etc.¹³⁹--comes to my mind. And your Bhoga consists in lying on a 30 ragged bed in a muggy room, multiplying progeny every year like a 31 hog!--Begetting a band of famished beggars and slaves! Hence do I 32 say, let people be made energetic and active in nature by the 33 stimulation of Rajas. Work, work, work; "{Sanskrit}--There is no 34 other path of liberation but this."

35 Disciple: Sir, did our forefathers possess this kind of Rajas?

36 Swamiji: Why, did they not? Does not history tell us that they 37 established colonies in many countries, and sent preachers of 38 religion to Tibet, China, Sumatra, and even to far-off Japan? Do you 39 think there is any other means of achieving progress except 40 through Rajas?

41 As conversation thus went on, night approached; and

1 ¹³⁹ ?{Sanskrit}--"The mansions of that city may well be compared with you, O 2 cloud, there is correspondence in features: while flashes of lightning play within 3 you, they have charmingly attired damsels moving within them; while you have 4 the rainbow, they have their paintings; you have your deep, rolling rumble, they 5 have their drums sounding forth music; you contain pellucid water within you, 6 they have their interior bedecked with transparent gems; you soar so high, their 7 roofs also kiss the sky" (Meghaduta, II. 1).

8 Kalidasa thus introduces his description of the enjoyments of Alakapuri. So the 9 reference here is not only to the first verse quoted, but also to the whole 10 description which follows.
11

1 meanwhile Miss Muller came there. She was an English lady,
2 having great reverence for Swamiji. Swamiji introduced the disciple
3 to her, and after a short talk Miss Muller went upstairs.

4 Swamiji: See, to what a heroic nation they belong! How far-
5 off is her home, and she is the daughter of a rich man--yet how long 6 a way has she come, only with the hope of realising the spiritual 7 ideal!

8 Disciple: Yes, sir, but your works are stranger still! How so 9 many Western ladies and gentlemen are always eager to serve you!
10 For this age, it is very strange indeed!

11 Swamiji: If this body lasts, you will see many more things. If I 12 can get some young men of heart and energy, I shall revolutionise 13 the whole country. There are a few in Madras. But I have more 14 hope in Bengal. Such clear brains are to be found scarcely in any 15 other country. But they have no strength in their muscles. The brain 16 and muscles must develop simultaneously. Iron nerves with an 17 intelligent brain--and the whole world is at your feet.

18 Word was brought that supper was ready for Swamiji. He said 19 to the disciple, "Come and have a look at my food." While going on 20 with the supper, he said, "It is not good to take much fatty or oily 21 substance. Roti is better than Luchi. Luchi is the food of the sick.
22 Take fish and meat and fresh vegetables, but sweets sparingly."
23 While thus talking, he inquired, "Well, how many Rotis have I 24 taken? Am I to take more?" He did not remember how much he took 25 and did not feel even if he yet had any appetite. The sense of body 26 faded away so much while he was talking!

27 He finished after taking a little more. The disciple also took 28 leave and went back to Calcutta. Getting no cab for hire, he had to 29 walk; and while walking, he thought over in his mind how soon 30 again he could come the next day to see Swamiji.

33 III

34 [Place: Cossipore, at the garden of the late Gopal Lal Seal.
35 Year: 1897.]

36 After his first return from the West, Swamiji resided for a few 37 days at the garden of the late Gopal Lal Seal at Cossipore. Some 38 well-known Pundits living at Barabazar, Calcutta, came to the 39 garden one day with a view to holding a disputation with him. The 40 disciple was present there on the occasion.

41 All the Pundits who came there could speak in Sanskrit
42 fluently. They came and greeting Swamiji, who sat surrounded by a 43 circle of visitors, began their conversation in Sanskrit. Swamiji also 44 responded to them in melodious Sanskrit. The disciple cannot 45 remember now the subject on which the Pundits argued with him 46 that day. But this much he remembers that the Pundits, almost all in 47 one strident voice, were rapping out to Swamiji in Sanskrit subtle 48 questions of philosophy, and he, in a dignified serious mood, was 49 giving out to them calmly his own well-argued conclusions about

1 those questions.

2 In the discussion with the Pundits Swamiji represented the 3 side of the Siddhanta or conclusions to be established, while the 4 Pundits represented that of the Purvapaksha or objections to be 5 raised. The disciple remembers that, while arguing, Swamiji 6 wrongly used in one place the word Asti instead of Svasti, which 7 made the Pundits laugh out. At this, Swamiji at once submitted:
8 "{Sanskrit}--I am but a servant of the Pundits, please excuse this 9 mistake." The Pundits also were charmed at this humility of 10 Swamiji. After a long dispute, the Pundits at last admitted that the 11 conclusions of the Siddhanta side were adequate, and preparing to 12 depart, they made their greetings to Swamiji.

13 After the Pundits had left, the disciple learnt from Swamiji
14 that these Pundits who took the side of the Purvapaksha were well 15 versed in the Purva-Mimamsa Shastras, Swamiji advocated the 16 philosophy of the Uttara-Mimamsa or Vedanta and proved to them 17 the superiority of the path of knowledge, and they were obliged to 18 accept his conclusions.

19 About the way the Pundits laughed at Swamiji, picking up one 20 grammatical mistake, he said that this error of his was due to the 21 fact of his not having spoken in Sanskrit for many years together.
22 He did not blame the Pundits a bit for all that. But he pointed out in 23 this connection that in the West it would imply a great incivility on 24 the part of an opponent to point out any such slip in language, 25 deviating from the real issue of dispute. A civilised society in such 26 cases would accept the idea, taking no notice of the language. "But 27 in your country, all the fighting is going on over the husk, nobody 28 searches for the kernel within." So saying, Swamiji began to talk 29 with the disciple in Sanskrit. The disciple also gave answers in 30 broken Sanskrit. Yet Swamiji praised him for the sake of 31 encouragement. From that day, at the request of Swamiji, the 32 disciple used to speak with him in Sanskrit off and on.

33 In reply to the question, what is civilisation, Swamiji said that 34 day: "The more advanced a society or nation is in spirituality, the 35 more is that society or nation civilised. No nation can be said to 36 have become civilised only because it has succeeded in increasing 37 the comforts of material life by bringing into use lots of machinery 38 and things of that sort. The present-day civilisation of the West is 39 multiplying day by day only the wants and distresses of men. On the 40 other hand, the ancient Indian civilisation, by showing people the 41 way to spiritual advancement, doubtless succeeded, if not in 42 removing once for all, at least in lessening, in a great measure, the 43 material needs of men. In the present age, it is to bring into 44 coalition both these civilisations that Bhagavan Shri Ramakrishna 45 was born. In this age, as on the one hand people have to be 46 intensely practical, so on the other hand they have to acquire deep 47 spiritual knowledge." Swamiji made us clearly understand that day 48 that from such interaction of the Indian civilisation with that of the 49 West would dawn on the world a new era. In the course of dilating 50 upon this, he happened to remark in one place, "Well, another 51 thing. People there in the West think that the more a man is 52 religious, the more demure he must be in his outward bearing--no

1 word about anything else from his lips! As the priests in the West 2 would on the one hand be struck with wonder at my liberal 3 religious discourses, they would be as much puzzled on the other 4 hand when they found me, after such discourses, talking frivolities
5 with my friends. Sometimes they would speak out to my face: 6 'Swami, you are a priest, you should not be joking and laughing in 7 this way like ordinary men. Such levity does not look well in you.' To 8 which I would reply, 'We are children of bliss, why should we look 9 morose and sombre?' But I doubt if they could rightly catch the drift 10 of my words."

11 That day Swamiji spoke many things about Bhava Samadhi 12 and Nirvikalpa Samadhi as well. These are produced below as far 13 as possible:

14 Suppose a man is cultivating that type of devotion to God
15 which Hanuman represents. The more intense the attitude 16 becomes, the more will the pose and demeanour of that aspirant, 17 nay even his physical configuration, be cast in that mould. It is in 18 this way that transmutation of species takes place. Taking up any 19 such emotional attitude, the worshipper becomes gradually shaped 20 into the very form of his ideal. The ultimate stage of any such 21 sentiment is called Bhava Samadhi. While the aspirant in the path 22 of Jnana, pursuing the process of Neti, Neti, "not this, not this", 23 such as "I am not the body, nor the mind, nor the intellect", and so 24 on, attains to the Nirvikalpa Samadhi when he is established in 25 absolute consciousness. It requires striving through many births to 26 reach perfection or the ultimate stage with regard to a single one of 27 these devotional attitudes. But Shri Ramakrishna, the king of the 28 realm of spiritual sentiment, perfected himself in no less than 29 eighteen different forms of devotion! He also used to say that his 30 body would not have endured, had he not held himself on to this 31 play of spiritual sentiment.

32 The disciple asked that day, "Sir, what sort of food did you use 33 to take in the West?"

34 Swamiji: The same as they take there. We are Sannyasins and 35 nothing can take away our caste!

36 On the subject of how he would work in future in this country, 37 Swamiji said that day that starting two centres, one in Madras and 38 another in Calcutta, he would rear up a new type of Sannyasins for 39 the good of all men in all its phases. He further said that by a 40 destructive method no progress either for the society or for the 41 country could be achieved. In all ages and times progress has been 42 effected by the constructive process, that is, by giving a new mould 43 to old methods and customs. Every religious preacher in India, 44 during the past ages, worked in that line. Only the religion of 45 Bhagavan Buddha was destructive. Hence that religion has been 46 extirpated from India.

47 The disciple remembers that while thus speaking on, he 48 remarked, "If the Brahman is manifested in one man, thousands of 49 men advance, finding their way out in that light. Only the knowers 50 of Brahman are the spiritual teachers of mankind. This is 51 corroborated by all scriptures and by reason too. It is only the

1 selfish Brahmins who have introduced into this country the system
2 of hereditary Gurus, which is against the Vedas and against the 3 Shastras. Hence it is that even through their spiritual practice men 4 do not now succeed in perfecting themselves or in realising 5 Brahman. To remove all this corruption in religion, the Lord has 6 incarnated Himself on earth in the present age in the person of Shri 7 Ramakrishna. The universal teachings that he offered, if spread all 8 over the world, will do good to humanity and the world. Not for 9 many a century past has India produced so great, so wonderful, a 10 teacher of religious synthesis."

11 A brother-disciple of Swamiji at that time asked him, "Why 12 did you not publicly preach Shri Ramakrishna as an Avatara in the 13 West?"

14 Swamiji: They make much flourish and fuss over their science 15 and philosophy. Hence, unless you first knock to pieces their 16 intellectual conceit through reasoning, scientific argument, and 17 philosophy, you cannot build anything there. Those who finding 18 themselves off their moorings through their utmost intellectual 19 reasoning would approach me in a real spirit of truth-seeking, to 20 them alone, I would speak of Shri Ramakrishna. If, otherwise, I had 21 forthwith spoken of the doctrine of incarnation, they might have 22 said, "Oh, you do not say anything new--why, we have our Lord 23 Jesus for all that!"

24 After thus spending some three or four delightful hours, the 25 disciple came back to Calcutta that day along with the other 26 visitors.

27 28 IV

29 [Place: The Kali-temple at Dakshineswar and the Alambazar
30 Math. Year: 1897, March.]

31 When Swamiji returned from England for the first time, the 32 Ramakrishna Math was located at Alambazar. The birthday 33 anniversary of Bhagavan Shri Ramakrishna was being celebrated 34 this year at the Kali-temple of Rani Rasmani at Dakshineswar.
35 Swamiji with some of his brother-disciples reached there from the 36 Alambazar Math at about 9 or 10 a.m. He was barefooted, with a 37 yellow turban on his head. Crowds of people were waiting to see 38 and hear him. In the temple of Mother Kali, Swamiji prostrated 39 himself before the Mother of the Universe, and thousands of heads, 40 following him, bent low. Then after prostrating himself before 41 Radhakantaji he came into the room which Shri Ramakrishna used 42 to occupy. There was not the least breathing space in the room.

43 Two European ladies who accompanied Swamiji to India
44 attended the festival. Swamiji took them along with himself to show 45 them the holy Panchavati and the Vilva tree.¹⁴⁰ Though the disciple 46 was not yet quite familiar with Swamiji, he followed him, and 47 presented him with the copy of a Sanskrit Ode about the Utsava

1 ¹⁴⁰ Panchavati is a grove of five special trees arranged and grown to serve 2 purposes of spiritual practice. The Vilva is also a holy tree of that sort.
3

1 (celebration) composed by himself. Swamiji read it while walking
2 towards the Panchavati. And on the way he once looked aside
3 towards the disciple and said, "Yes, it's done well. Attempt others 4 like it."

5 The householder devotees of Shri Ramakrishna happened to 6 be assembled on one side of the Panchavati, among whom was 7 Babu Girish Chandra Ghosh. Swamiji, accompanied by a throng, 8 came to Girish Babu and saluted him, saying, "Hallo! here is Mr.
9 Ghosh." Girish Babu returned his salutation with folded hands.
10 Reminding Girish Babu of the old days, Swamiji said, "Think of it, 11 Mr. Ghosh--from those days to these, what a transition!" Girish 12 Babu endorsed Swamiji's sentiment and said, "Yes, that is true; but 13 yet the mind longs to see more of it." After a short conversation, 14 Swamiji proceeded towards the Vilva tree situated on the north-east 15 of the Panchavati.

16 Now a huge crowd stood in keen expectancy to hear a lecture
17 from Swamiji. But though he tried his utmost, Swamiji could not 18 speak louder than the noise and clamour of the people. Hence he 19 had to give up attempting a lecture and left with the two European 20 ladies to show them sites connected with Shri Ramakrishna's 21 spiritual practices and introduce them to particular devotees and 22 followers of the Master.

23 After 3 p.m. Swamiji said to the disciple, "Fetch me a cab, 24 please; I must go to the Math now." The disciple brought one 25 accordingly. Swamiji himself sat on one side and asked Swami 26 Niranjanananda and the disciple to sit on the other and they drove 27 towards the Alambazar Math. On the way, Swamiji said to the 28 disciple, "It won't do to live on abstract ideas merely. These 29 festivals and the like are also necessary; for then only, these ideas 30 will spread gradually among the masses. You see, the Hindus have 31 got their festivals throughout the year, and the secret of it is to 32 infuse the great ideals of religion gradually into the minds of the 33 people. It has also its drawback, though. For people in general miss 34 their inner significance and become so much engrossed in externals
35 that no sooner are these festivities over than they become their old 36 selves again. Hence it is true that all these form the outer covering 37 of religion, which in a way hide real spirituality and self-knowledge.

38 "But there are those who cannot at all understand in the 39 abstract what 'religion' is or what the 'Self' is, and they try to 40 realise spirituality gradually through these festivals and 41 ceremonies. Just take this festival celebrated today; those that 42 attended it will at least once think of Shri Ramakrishna. The 43 thought will occur to their mind as to who he was, in whose name 44 such a great crowd assembled and why so many people came at all 45 in his name. And those who will not feel that much even, will come 46 once in a year to see all the devotional dancing and singing, or at 47 least to partake of the sacred food-offerings, and will also have a 48 look at the devotees of Shri Ramakrishna. This will rather benefit 49 them than do any harm."

50 Disciple: But, sir, suppose somebody thinks these festivals 51 and ceremonies to be the only thing essential, can he possibly

1 advance any further? They will gradually come down to the level of 2 commonplace observances, like the worship in our country of (the 3 goddesses) Shashthi, Mangala-chandi, and the like. People are 4 found to observe these rites till death; but where do we find even 5 one among them rising through such observances to the knowledge 6 of Brahman?

7 Swamiji: Why? In India so many spiritual heroes were born, 8 and did they not make them the means of scaling the heights of 9 greatness? When by persevering in practice through these props
10 they gained a vision of the Self, they ceased to be keen on them.
11 Yet, for the preservation of social balance even great men of the 12 type of Incarnations follow these observances.

13 Disciple: Yes, they may observe these for appearance only.
14 But when to a knower of the Self even this world itself becomes 15 unreal like magic, is it possible for him to recognise these external 16 observances as true?

17 Swamiji: Why not? Is not our idea of truth also a relative one, 18 varying in relation to time, place, and person? Hence all 19 observances have their utility, relatively to the varying 20 qualifications in men. It is just as Shri Ramakrishna used to say, 21 that the mother cooks Polao and Kalia (rich dishes) for one son, and 22 sago for another.

23 Now the disciple understood at last and kept quiet.
24 Meanwhile the carriage arrived at the Alambazar Math. The 25 disciple followed Swamiji into the Math where Swamiji, being 26 thirsty, drank some water. Then putting off his coat, he rested 27 recumbent on the blanket spread on the floor. Swami 28 Niranjanananda, seated by his side, said, "We never had such a 29 great crowd in any year's Utsava before! As if the whole of Calcutta 30 flocked there!"

31 Swamiji: It was quite natural; stranger things will happen 32 hereafter.

33 Disciple: Sir, in every religious sect are found to exist external 34 festivals of some kind or other. But there is no amity between one 35 sect and another in this matter. Even in the case of such a liberal 36 religion as that of Mohammed, I have found in Dacca that the Shias 37 and Sunnis go to loggerheads with each other.

38 Swamiji: That is incidental more or less wherever you have 39 sects. But do you know what the ruling sentiment amongst us is?-- 40 non-sectarianism. Our Lord was born to point that out. He would 41 accept all forms, but would say withal that, looked at from the 42 standpoint of the knowledge of Brahman, they were only like 43 illusory Maya.

44 Disciple: Sir, I can't understand your point. Sometimes it 45 seems to me that, by thus celebrating these festivals, you are also 46 inaugurating another sect round the name of Sri Ramakrishna. I 47 have heard it from the lips of Nag Mahashaya that Shri 48 Ramakrishna did not belong to any sect. He used to pay great 49 respect to all creeds such as the Shaktas, the Vaishnavas, the 50 Brahmos, the Mohammedans, and the Christians.

1 Swamiji: How do you know that we do not also hold in great 2 esteem all the religious creeds?

3 So saying, Swamiji called out in evident amusement to Swami
4 Niranjanananda: "Just think what this Bangal is saying!"

5 Disciple: Kindly make me understand, sir, what you mean.

6 Swamiji: Well, you have, to be sure, read my lectures. But 7 where have I built on Shri Ramakrishna's name? It is only the pure 8 Upanishadic religion that I have gone about preaching in the world.

9 Disciple: That's true, indeed. But what I find by being familiar 10 with you is that you have surrendered yourself, body and soul, to 11 Ramakrishna. If you have understood Shri Ramakrishna to be the 12 Lord Himself, why not give it out to the people at large?

13 Swamiji: Well, I do preach what I have understood. And if you 14 have found the Advaitic principles of Vedanta to be the truest 15 religion, then why don't you go out and preach it to all men?

16 Disciple: But I must realise, before I can preach it to others. I 17 have only studied Advaitism in books.

18 Swamiji: Good; realise first and then preach. Now, therefore, 19 you have no right to say anything of the beliefs each man tries to 20 live by. For you also proceed now by merely putting your faith on 21 some such beliefs.

22 Disciple: True, I am also living now by believing in something; 23 but I have the Shastras for my authority. I do not accept any faith 24 opposed to the Shastras.

25 Swamiji: What do you mean by the Shastras? If the 26 Upanishads are authority, why not the Bible or the Zendavesta 27 equally so?

28 Disciple: Granted these scriptures are also good authority, 29 they are not, however, as old as the Vedas. And nowhere, moreover, 30 is the theory of the Atman better established than in the Vedas.

31 Swamiji: Supposing I admit that contention of yours, what 32 right have you to maintain that truth can be found nowhere except 33 in the Vedas?

34 Disciple: Yes, truth may also exist in all the scriptures other 35 than the Vedas, and I don't say anything to the contrary. But as for 36 me, I choose to abide by the teachings of the Upanishads, for I have 37 very great faith in them.

38 Swamiji: Quite welcome to do that, but if somebody else has 39 "very great" faith in any other set of doctrines, surely you should 40 allow him to abide by that. You will discover that in the long run 41 both he and yourself will arrive at the same goal. For haven't you 42 read in the Mahimnah-stotram, " {Sanskrit}--Thou art as the ocean 43 to the rivers falling into it"?

44

45

[Place: Alambazar Math. Year: 1897, May.]

It was the 19th Vaishakha (April-May) of the year 1303 B.S. Swamiji had agreed to initiate the disciple today. So, early in the morning, he reached the Alambazar Math. Seeing the disciple Swamiji jocosely said, "Well, you are to be 'sacrificed' today, are you not?"

After this remark to the disciple, Swamiji with a smile resumed his talk with others about American subjects. And in due relevancy came along such topics also as how one-pointed in devotion one has to be in order to build up a spiritual life, how firm faith and strong devotion to the Guru have to be kept up, how deep reliance has to be placed on the words of the Guru, and how even one's life has to be laid down for his sake. Then putting some questions to the disciple, Swamiji began to test his heart: "Well, are you ready to do my bidding to your utmost, whatever it be and whenever it may come? If I ask you to plunge into the Ganga or to jump from the roof of a house, meaning it all for your good, could you do even that without any hesitation? Just think of it even now; otherwise don't rush forward on the spur of the moment to accept me as your Guru." And the disciple nodded assent to all questions of the kind.

Swamiji then continued: "The real Guru is he who leads you beyond this Maya of endless birth and death--who graciously destroys all the griefs and maladies of the soul. The disciple of old used to repair to the hermitage of the Guru, fuel in hand; and the Guru, after ascertaining his competence, would teach him the Vedas after initiation, fastening round his waist the threefold filament of Munja, a kind of grass, as the emblem of his vow to keep his body, mind, and speech in control. With the help of this girdle, the disciples used to tie up their Kaupinas. Later on, the custom of wearing the sacred thread superseded this girdle of Munja grass."

Disciple: Would you, then, say, sir, that the use of the holy thread we have adopted is not really a Vedic custom?

Swamiji: Nowhere is there mention of thread being so used in the Vedas. The modern author of Smritis, Raghunandana Bhattacharya, also puts it thus: "At this stage, the sacrificial girdle should be put on." Neither in Gobhila's Grihya-Sutras do we find any mention of the girdle made of thread. In the Shastras, this first Vedic Samskara (purification ceremony) before the Guru has been called the Upanayana; but see, to what a sad pass our country has been brought! Straying away from the true path of the Shastras, the country has been overwhelmed with usages and observances originating in particular localities, or popular opinion, or with the womenfolk! That's why I ask you to proceed along the path of the Shastras as in olden times. Have faith within yourselves and thereby bring it back into the country. Plant in your heart the faith of Nachiketa. Even go up to the world of Yama like him. Yes, if to know the secrets of the Atman, to liberate your soul, to reach the true solution of the mystery of birth and death, you have to go to the very jaws of death and realise the truth thereby, well, go there

1 with an undaunted heart. It is fear alone that is death. You have to 2 go beyond all fear. So from this day be fearless. Off at once, to lay 3 down your life for your own liberation and for the good of others.
4 What good is it carrying along a load of bones and flesh! Initiated
5 into the Mantra of extreme self-sacrifice for the sake of God, go, lay 6 down for others this body of flesh and bones like the Muni 7 Dadhichi! Those alone, say the Shastras, are the real Gurus, who 8 have studied the Vedas and the Vedanta, who are knowers of the 9 Brahman, who are able to lead others beyond to fearlessness; when 10 such are at hand, get yourself initiated, "no speculation in such a 11 case". Do you know what has become of this principle now?--"like 12 the blind leading the blind"!

13 The initiation ceremony was duly gone through in the chapel.
14 After this Swamiji spoke out: "Give me the Guru-dakshina." The 15 disciple replied, "Oh, what shall I give?" On this Swamiji suggested, 16 "Well, fetch any fruit from the store-room." So the disciple ran to 17 the store-room and came back into the chapel with ten or twelve 18 lichis. These Swamiji took from his hand and ate them one by one, 19 saying, "Now, your Guru-dakshina is made."

20 A member of the Math, Brahmachari (now Swami) 21 Shuddhananda, also had his initiation from Swamiji on this 22 occasion.

23 Swamiji then had his dinner and went to take a short rest.

24 After the siesta, he came and sat in the hall of the upper 25 storey. The disciple finding this opportunity asked, "Sir, how and 26 whence came the ideas of virtue and vice?"

27 Swamiji: It is from the idea of the manifold that these have 28 evolved. The more a man advances towards oneness, the more 29 ideas of "I" and "you" subside, ideas from which all these pairs of 30 opposites such as virtue and vice have originated. When the idea 31 that So-and-so is different from me comes to the mind, all other 32 ideas of distinction begin to manifest, while with the complete 33 realisation of oneness, no more grief or illusion remains for man, 34 "{Sanskrit}--For him who sees oneness, where is there any grief or 35 delusion?" Sin may be said to be the feeling of every kind of 36 weakness. From this weakness spring jealousy, malice, and so forth.
37 Hence weakness is sin. The Self within is always shining forth 38 resplendent. Turning away from that people say "I", "I", "I", with 39 their attention held up by this material body, this queer cage of 40 flesh and bones. This is the root of all weakness. From that habit 41 only, the relative outlook on life has emerged in this world. The 42 absolute Truth lies beyond that duality.

43 Disciple: Well, is then all this relative experience not true?

1 Swamiji: As long as the idea of "I" remains, it is true. And the 2 instant the realisation of "I" as the Atman comes, this world of 3 relative existence becomes false. What people speak of as sin is the 4 result of weakness--is but another form of the egoistic idea, "I am 5 the body". When the mind gets steadfast in the truth, "I am the 6 Self", then you go beyond merit and demerit, virtue and vice. Shri 7 Ramakrishna used to say, "When the 'I' dies, all trouble is at an 8 end."

9 Disciple: Sir, this "I" has a most tenacious life. It is very 10 difficult to kill it.

11 Swamiji: Yes, in one sense, it is very difficult, but in another 12 sense, it is quite easy. Can you tell me where this "I" exists? How 13 can you speak of anything being killed, which never exists at all?
14 Man only remains hypnotised with the false idea of an ego. When 15 this ghost is off from us, all dreams vanish, and then it is found that 16 the one Self only exists from the highest Being to a blade of brass.
17 This will have to be known, to be realised. All practice or worship is 18 only for taking off this veil. When that will go, you will find that the 19 Sun of Absolute Knowledge is shining in Its own lustre. For the 20 Atman only is self-luminous and has to be realised by Itself. How 21 can that, which can be experienced only by itself, be known with 22 the help of any other thing? Hence the Shruti says, "{Sanskrit}-- 23 Well, through what means is that to be known which is the 24 Knower?" Whatever you know, you know through the 25 instrumentality of your mind. But mind is something material. It is 26 active only because there is the pure Self behind it. So, how can you 27 know that Self through your mind? But this only becomes known, 28 after all, that the mind cannot reach the pure Self, no, nor even the 29 intellect. Our relative knowledge ends just there. Then, when the 30 mind is free from activity or functioning, it vanishes, and the Self is 31 revealed. This state has been described by the commentator 32 Shankara as {Sanskrit} or supersensuous perception.

33 Disciple: But, sir, the mind itself is the "I". If that mind is 34 gone, then the "I" also cannot remain.

35 Swamiji: Yes, the state that comes then is the real nature of 36 the ego. The "I" that remains then is omnipresent, all-pervading, the 37 Self of all. Just as the Ghatakasha, when the jar is broken, becomes 38 the Mahakasha,¹⁴¹ for with the destruction of the jar the enclosed 39 space is not destroyed. The puny "I" which you were thinking of as 40 confined in the body, becomes spread out and is thus realised in the 41 form of the all-pervading "I" or the Self. Hence what matters it to 42 the real "I" or the Self, whether the mind remains or is destroyed?
43 What I say you will realise in course of time. "{Sanskrit}--It is 44 realised within oneself in due time." As you go on with Shravana 45 and Manana (proper hearing and proper thinking), you will fully 46 understand it in due time and then you will go beyond mind. Then 47 there will be no room for any such question.

1 ¹⁴¹ ?Ghatakasha and Mahakasha are technical terms in Vedanta, meaning the 2 space enclosed by the jar and the omnipresent. The two are one and the same, 3 only the former is limited by the Upadhi (adjunct) of the Ghata or jar.
4

1 Hearing all this, the disciple remained quiet on his seat, and 2 Swamiji, as he gently smoked, continued: "How many Shastras have 3 been written to explain this simple thing, and yet men fail to 4 understand it! How they are wasting this precious human life on 5 the fleeting pleasures of some silver coins and the frail beauty of 6 women! Wonderful is the influence of Mahamaya (Divine Illusion)!
7 Mother! Oh Mother!"

10 [Place: Baghbazar, Calcutta. Year: 1897.]

11 Swamiji has been staying for some days at the house of the 12 late Balaram Babu. At his wish, a large number of devotees of Shri 13 Ramakrishna have assembled at the house at 3 p.m. (on May 1, 14 1897). Swami Yogananda is amongst those present here. The object 15 of Swamiji is to form an Association. When all present had taken 16 their seats, Swamiji proceeded to speak as follows:

17 "The conviction has grown in my mind after all my travels in 18 various lands that no great cause can succeed without an 19 organisation. In a country like ours, however, it does not seem quite 20 practicable to me to start an organisation at once with a democratic 21 basis or work by general voting. People in the West are more 22 educated in this respect, and less jealous of one another than 23 ourselves. They have learnt to respect merit. Take for instance my 24 case. I was just an insignificant man there, and yet see how 25 cordially they received and entertained me. When with the spread 26 of education the masses in our country grow more sympathetic and 27 liberal, when they learn to have their thoughts expanded beyond 28 the limits of sect or party, then it will be possible to work on the 29 democratic basis of organisation. For this reason it is necessary to 30 have a dictator for this Society. Everybody should obey him, and 31 then in time we may work on the principle of general voting.

32 "Let this Association be named after him, in whose name, 33 indeed, we have embraced the monastic life, with whom as your 34 Ideal in life you all toil on the field of work from your station in 35 family life, within twenty years of whose passing away a wonderful 36 diffusion of his holy name and extraordinary life has taken place 37 both in the East and the West. We are the servants of the Lord. Be 38 you all helpers in this cause."

39 When Srijut Girish Chandra Ghosh and all other householder
40 disciples present had approved of the above proposal, the future 41 programme of the Society of Shri Ramakrishna was taken up for 42 discussion. The Society was named the Ramakrishna Mission.

43 Swamiji himself became the general president of the Mission
44 and other office-bearers also were elected. The rule was laid down 45 that the Association should hold meetings at the house of Balaram 46 Babu every Sunday at 4 p.m. Needless to say that Swamiji used to 47 attend these meetings whenever convenient.

48 When the meeting had broken up and the members departed, 49 addressing Swami Yogananda, Swamiji said, "So the work is now

1 begun this way; let us see how far it succeeds by the will of Shri
2 Ramakrishna."

3 Swami Yogananda: You are doing these things with Western 4 methods. Should you say Shri Ramakrishna left us any such 5 instructions?

6 Swamiji: Well, how do you know that all this is not on Shri 7 Ramakrishna's lines? He had an infinite breadth of feeling, and 8 dare you shut him up within your own limited views of life? I will 9 break down these limits and scatter broadcast over the earth his 10 boundless inspiration. He never instructed me to introduce any 11 rites of his own worship. We have to realise the teachings he has 12 left us about religious practice and devotion, concentration and 13 meditation, and such higher ideas and truths, and then preach 14 these to all men. The infinite number of faiths are only so many 15 paths. I haven't been born to found one more sect in a world 16 already teeming with sects. We have been blessed with obtaining 17 refuge at the feet of the Master, and we are born to carry his 18 message to the dwellers of the three worlds.

19 Swami Yogananda uttered no word of dissent, and so Swamiji 20 continued: Time and again have I received in this life marks of his 21 grace. He stands behind and gets all this work done by me. When 22 lying helpless under a tree in an agony of hunger, when I had not 23 even a scrap of cloth for Kaupina, when I was resolved on travelling 24 penniless round the world, even then help came in all ways by the 25 grace of Shri Ramakrishna. And again when crowds jostled with 26 one another in the streets of Chicago to have a sight of this 27 Vivekananda, then also, just because I had his grace, I could digest 28 without difficulty all that honour--a hundredth part of which would 29 have been enough to turn mad any ordinary man; and by his will, 30 victory followed everywhere. Now I must conclude by doing 31 something in this country. So casting all doubt away, please help my 32 work; and you will find everything fulfilled by his will.

33 Swami Yogananda: Yes, whatever you will, shall be fulfilled;
34 and are we not all ever obedient to you? Now and then I do clearly 35 see how Shri Ramakrishna is getting all these things done through 36 you. And yet, to speak plainly, some misgiving rises at intervals, for 37 as we saw it, his way of doing things was different. So I question 38 myself: "Are we sure that we are not going astray from Shri 39 Ramakrishna's teachings?" And so I take the opposing attitude and 40 warn you.

41 Swamiji: You see, the fact is that Shri Ramakrishna is not 42 exactly what the ordinary followers have comprehended him to be.
43 He had infinite moods and phases. Even if you might form an idea 44 of the limits of Brahmajnana, the knowledge of the Absolute, you 45 could not have any idea of the unfathomable depths of his mind!
46 Thousands of Vivekanandas may spring forth through one gracious 47 glance of his eyes! But instead of doing that, he has chosen to get 48 things done this time through me as his single instrument, and what 49 can I do in this matter, you see?

50 Saying this, Swamiji left to attend to something else waiting 51 for him, and Swami Yogananda went on praising Swamiji's versatile

1 gifts.

2 Meanwhile Swamiji returned and asked the disciple, "Do the 3 people in your part of the country know much of Shri
4 Ramakrishna?"

5 Disciple: Only one man, Nag Mahashaya, came to Shri 6 Ramakrishna from our part of Bengal; it is from him that many 7 came to hear of him and had their curiosity excited to know more.
8 But that Shri Ramakrishna was the Incarnation of God, the people 9 there have not yet come to know, and some would not believe it 10 even if told so.

11 Swamiji: Do you think it is an easy matter to believe so? We 12 who had actual dealings with him in every respect, we who heard of 13 that fact again and again from his own lips, we who lived and 14 stayed with him for twenty-four hours of the day--even we off and 15 on have doubts about it coming over us! So what to speak of others!

16 Disciple: Did Shri Ramakrishna, out of his own lips, ever say 17 that he was God, the all-perfect Brahman?

18 Swamiji: Yes, he did so many times. And he said this to all of 19 us. One day while he was staying at the Cossipore garden, his body 20 in imminent danger of falling off for ever, by the side of his bed I 21 was saying in my mind, "Well, now if you can declare that you are 22 God, then only will I believe you are really God Himself." It was only 23 two days before he passed away. Immediately, he looked up towards 24 me all on a sudden and said, "He who was Rama, He who was 25 Krishna, verily is He now Ramakrishna in this body. And that not 26 merely from the standpoint of your Vedanta!" At this I was struck 27 dumb. Even we haven't had yet the perfect faith, after hearing it 28 again and again from the holy lips of our Lord himself--our minds 29 still get disturbed now and then with doubt and despair--and so, 30 what shall we speak of others being slow to believe? It is indeed a 31 very difficult matter to be able to declare and believe a man with a 32 body like ours to be God Himself. We may just go to the length of 33 declaring him to be a "perfected one", or a "knower of Brahman".
34 Well, it matters nothing, whatever you may call him or think of him, 35 a saint, or a knower of Brahman, or anything. But take it from me, 36 never did come to this earth such an all-perfect man as Shri 37 Ramakrishna! In the utter darkness of the world, this great man is 38 like the shining pillar of illumination in this age! And by his light 39 alone will man now cross the ocean of Samsara!

40 Disciple: To me it seems, sir, that true faith comes only after 41 actually seeing or hearing something. Mathur Babu, I have heard, 42 actually saw so many things about Shri Ramakrishna, and thus he 43 had that wonderful faith in him.

44 Swamiji: He who believes not, believes not even after seeing, 45 and thinks that it is all hallucination, or dream and so on. The great 46 transfiguration of Krishna--the Vishvarupa (form universal)--was 47 seen alike by Duryodhana and by Arjuna. But only Arjuna believed, 48 while Duryodhana took it to be magic! Unless He makes us 49 understand, nothing can be stated or understood. Somebody comes 50 to the fullest faith even without seeing or hearing, while somebody

1 else remains plunged in doubt even after witnessing with his own
2 eyes various extraordinary powers for twelve years! The secret of it
3 all is His grace! But then one must persevere, so that the grace may 4 be received.

5 Disciple: Is there, sir, any law of grace?

6 Swamiji: Yes and no.

7 Disciple: How is that?

8 Swamiji: Those who are pure always in body, mind, and 9 speech, who have strong devotion, who discriminate between the 10 real and the unreal, who persevere in meditation and 11 contemplation--upon them alone the grace of the Lord descends.
12 The Lord, however, is beyond all natural laws--is not under any 13 rules and regulations, or just as Shri Ramakrishna used to say, He 14 has the child's nature--and that's why we find some failing to get 15 any response even after calling on Him for millions of births, while 16 some one else whom we regard as a sinful or penitent man or a 17 disbeliever, would have Illumination in a flash! --On the latter the 18 Lord perhaps lavishes His grace quite unsolicited! You may argue 19 that this man had good merits stored up from previous life, but the 20 mystery is really difficult to understand. Shri Ramakrishna used to 21 say sometimes, "Do rely on Him; be like the dry leaf at the mercy of 22 the wind"; and again he would say, "The wind of His grace is always 23 blowing, what you need to do is to unfurl your sail."

24 Disciple: But, sir, this is a most tremendous statement. No 25 reasoning, I see, can stand here.

26 Swamiji: Ah, all reasoning and arguing is within the limit of 27 the realm of Maya; it lies within the categories of space, time, and 28 causation. But He is beyond these categories. We speak of His law, 29 still He is beyond all law. He creates, or becomes, all that we speak 30 of as laws of nature, and yet He is outside of them all. He on whom 31 His grace descends, in a moment goes beyond all law. For this 32 reason there is no condition in grace. It is as His play or sport. And 33 this creation of the universe is like His play--"{Sanskrit}"--It is the 34 pure delight of sport, as in the case of men" (Vedanta-Sutras, II. i.
35 33). Is it not possible for Him who creates and destroys the 36 universe as if in play to grant salvation by grace to the greatest 37 sinner? But then it is just His pleasure, His play, to get somebody 38 through the practice of spiritual discipline and somebody else 39 without it.

40 Disciple: Sir, I can't understand this.

41 Swamiji: And you needn't. Only get your mind to cling to Him 42 as far as you can. For then only the great magic of this world will 43 break of itself. But then, you must persevere. You must take off your 44 mind from lust and lucre, must discriminate always between the 45 real and the unreal--must settle down into the mood of bodilessness 46 with the brooding thought that you are not this body, and must 47 always have the realisation that you are the all-pervading Atman.
48 This persevering practice is called Purushakara (self-exertion--as 49 distinguished from grace). By such self-exertion will come true 50 reliance on Him, and that is the goal of human achievement.

1 After a pause Swamiji resumed: Had you not been receiving 2 His grace, why else would you come here at all? Shri Ramakrishna
3 used to say, "Those who have had the grace of God cannot but come 4 here. Wherever they might be, whatever they might be doing, they 5 are sure to be affected by words or sentiments uttered from 6 here."¹⁴² Just take your own case--do you think it is possible without 7 the grace of God to have the blessed company of Nag Mahashaya, a 8 man who rose to spiritual perfection through the strength of divine 9 grace and came to know fully what this grace really means?
10 "{Sanskrit}"--One attains the highest stage after being perfected by 11 the practice of repeated births" (Gita, VI. 45). It is only by virtue of 12 great religious merit acquired through many births that one comes 13 across a great soul like him. All the characteristics of the highest 14 type of Bhakti, spoken of in the scriptures, have manifested
15 themselves in Nag Mahashaya. It is only in him that we actually see 16 fulfilled the widely quoted text, {Sanskrit}.¹⁴³ Blessed indeed is 17 your East Bengal to have been hallowed by the touch of Nag 18 Mahashaya's feet!

19 While speaking thus, Swamiji rose to pay a visit to the great 20 poet, Babu Girish Chandra Ghosh. Swami Yogananda and the 21 disciple followed him. Reaching Girish Babu's place, Swamiji seated 22 himself and said, "You see, G.C., the impulse is constantly coming 23 nowadays to my mind to do this and to do that, to scatter broadcast 24 on earth the message of Shri Ramakrishna and so on. But I pause
25 again to reflect, lest all this give rise to another sect in India. So I 26 have to work with a good deal of caution. Sometimes I think, what if 27 a sect does grow up. But then again the thought comes, 'No. Shri 28 Ramakrishna never disturbed anybody's own spiritual outlook; he 29 always looked at the inner sameness.' Often do I restrain myself 30 with this thought. Now, what do you say?"

31 Girish Babu: What can I say to this? You are the instrument in 32 his hand. You have to do just what he would have you do. I don't 33 trouble myself over the detail. But I see that the power of the Lord 34 is getting things done by you, I see it clear as daylight.

35 Swamiji: But I think we do things according to our own will.
36 Yet, that in misfortunes and adversities, in times of want and 37 poverty, he reveals himself to us and guides us along the true path-- 38 this I have been able to realise. But alas, I still fail to comprehend in 39 any way the greatness of his power.

40 Girish Babu: Yes, he said, "If you understand it to the full, 41 everything will at once vanish. Who will work then, or who will be 42 made to work?"

43 After this the talk drifted on to America. And Swamiji grew 44 warm on his subject and went on describing the wonderful wealth

1 ¹⁴² ?With his egoism perfectly merged in the consciousness of the Mother, the 2 use of the word "here" by Shri Ramakrishna would often stand for the ordinary 3 reference to self. By "here" is evidently meant the centre of the Mother's self-4 revelation.

5 ¹⁴³ ?"Lowlier far than the lowly stalk of grass."

5 [Place: Calcutta. Year: 1897.]

6 For some days past, Swamiji has been staying at Balaram
7 Bose's house, Baghbazar. There will be a total eclipse of the sun 8 today. The disciple is to cook for Swamiji this morning, and on his 9 presenting himself, Swamiji said, "Well, the cooking must be in the 10 East Bengal style; and we must finish our dinner before the eclipse 11 begins."

12 The inner apartments of the house were all unoccupied now.
13 So the disciple went inside into the kitchen and started his cooking.
14 Swamiji also was looking in now and then with a word of 15 encouragement and sometimes with a joke, as, "Take care, the soup 16 must be after the East Bengal fashion."

17 The cooking had been almost completed, when Swamiji came 18 in after his bath and sat down for dinner, putting up his own seat 19 and plate. "Do bring in anything finished, quick," he said, "I can't 20 wait, I'm burning with hunger!" While eating, Swamiji was pleased 21 with the curry with bitters and remarked, "Never have I enjoyed 22 such a nice thing! But none of the things is so hot as your soup."
23 "It's just after the style of the Burdwan District", said Swamiji 24 tasting the sour preparation. He then brought his dinner to a close 25 and after washing sat on the bedstead inside the room. While 26 having his after-dinner smoke, Swamiji remarked to the disciple, 27 "Whoever cannot cook well cannot become a good Sadhu; unless 28 the mind is pure, good tasteful cooking is not possible."

29 Soon after this, the sound of bells and conch-shells, etc., rose 30 from all quarters, when Swamiji said, "Now that the eclipse has 31 begun, let me sleep, and you please massage my feet!" Gradually 32 the eclipse covered the whole of the sun's disc and all around fell 33 the darkness of dusk.

34 While there were fifteen or twenty minutes left for the eclipse
35 to pass off, Swamiji rose from his siesta, and after washing, jocosely 36 said while taking a smoke, "Well, people say that whatever one does 37 during an eclipse, one gets that millionfold in future; so I thought 38 that the Mother, Mahamaya, did not ordain that this body might 39 have good sleep, and if I could get some sleep during the eclipse, I 40 might have plenty of it in future. But it all failed, for I slept only for 41 fifteen minutes at the most."

42 After this, at the behest of Swamiji some short speeches were 43 made. There was yet an hour left before dusk. When all had 44 assembled in the parlour, Swamiji told them to put him any question 45 they liked.

46 Swamiji Shuddhananda asked, "What is the real nature of 47 meditation, sir?"

48 Swamiji: Meditation is the focusing of the mind on some 49 object. If the mind acquires concentration on one object, it can be

1 so concentrated on any object whatsoever.

2 Disciple: Mention is made in the scriptures of two kinds of 3 meditation--one having some object and the other objectless. What 4 is meant by all that, and which of the two is the higher one?

5 Swamiji: First, the practice of meditation has to proceed with 6 some one object before the mind. Once I used to concentrate my 7 mind on some black point. Ultimately, during those days, I could not 8 see the point any more, nor notice that the point was before me at 9 all--the mind used to be no more--no wave of functioning would rise, 10 as if it were all an ocean without any breath of air. In that state I 11 used to experience glimpses of supersensuous truth. So I think, the 12 practice of meditation even with some trifling external object leads 13 to mental concentration. But it is true that the mind very easily 14 attains calmness when one practises meditation with anything on 15 which one's mind is most apt to settle down. This is the reason why 16 we have in this country so much worship of the images of gods and 17 goddesses. And what wonderful art developed from such worship!
18 But no more of that now. The fact, however, is that the objects of 19 meditation can never be the same in the case of all men. People 20 have proclaimed and preached to others only those external objects 21 to which they held on to become perfected in meditation. Oblivious 22 of the fact, later on, that these objects are aids to the attainment of 23 perfect mental calmness, men have extolled them beyond 24 everything else. They have wholly concerned themselves with the 25 means, getting comparatively unmindful of the end. The real aim is 26 to make the mind functionless, but this cannot be got at unless one 27 becomes absorbed in some subject.

28 Disciple: But if the mind becomes completely engrossed and 29 identified with some object, how can it give us the consciousness of 30 Brahman?

31 Swamiji: Yes, though the mind at first assumes the form of the 32 object, yet later on the consciousness of that object vanishes. Then 33 only the experience of pure "isness" remains.

34 Disciple: Well, sir, how is it that desires rise even after mental 35 concentration is acquired?

36 Swamiji: Those are the outcome of previous Samskaras 37 (deep-rooted impressions or tendencies). When Buddha was on the 38 point of merging in Samadhi (superconsciousness), Mara made his 39 appearance. There was really no Mara extraneous to the mind; it 40 was only the external reflection of the mind's previous Samskaras.

41 Disciple: But one hears of various fearful experiences prior to 42 the attainment of perfection. Are they all mental projections?

43 Swamiji: What else but that? The aspiring soul, of course, 44 does not make out at that time that all these are external 45 manifestations of his own mind. But all the same, there is nothing 46 outside of it. Even what you see as this world does not exist outside.
47 It is all a mental projection. When the mind becomes functionless, it 48 reflects the Brahman-consciousness. Then the vision of all spheres 49 of existence may supervene, "{Sanskrit}--Whatsoever sphere one 50 may call up in mind" (Mundaka, III.i.10). Whatsoever is resolved on 1 becomes realised at once. He who, even on attaining this state of 2 unfalsified self-determination, preserves his watchfulness and is 3 free from the bondage of desire, verily attains to the knowledge of 4 Brahman. But he who loses his balance after reaching this state 5 gets the manifold powers, but falls off from the supreme goal.

6 So saying, Swamiji began to repeat "Shiva, Shiva", and then 7 continued: There is no way, none whatsoever, to the solution of the 8 profound mystery of this life except through renunciation.
9 Renunciation, renunciation and renunciation--let this be the one 10 motto of your lives. "{Sanskrit}--For men, all things on earth are 11 infected with fear, Vairagya (renunciation) alone constitutes 12 fearlessness" (Vairagya-Shatakam).

[Place: Calcutta. Year: 1897, March or April.]

16 Today the disciple came to meet Swamiji at Baghbazar, but 17 found him ready for a visiting engagement. "Well, come along with 18 me", were the words with which Swamiji accosted him as he went 19 downstairs, and the disciple followed. They then put themselves 20 into a hired cab which proceeded southwards.

21 Disciple: Sir, where are you going to visit, please?

22 Swamiji: Well, come with me and you will see.

23 Thus keeping back the destination from the disciple, Swamiji 24 opened the following conversation as the carriage reached the 25 Beadon Street: One does not find any real endeavour in your 26 country to get the women educated. You, the men, are educating 27 yourselves to develop your manhood, but what are you doing to 28 educate and advance those who share all your happiness and 29 misery, who lay down their lives to serve you in your homes?

30 Disciple: Why, sir, just see how many schools and colleges 31 have sprung up nowadays for our women, and how many of them
32 are getting degrees of B.A. and M.A.

33 Swamiji: But all that is in the Western style. How many 34 schools have been started on your own national lines, in the spirit of 35 your own religious ordinances? But alas, such a system does not 36 obtain even among the men of your country, what to speak of 37 women! It is seen from the official statistics that only three or four 38 per cent of the people in India are educated, and not even one per 39 cent of the women.

40 Otherwise, how could the country come to such a fallen 41 condition? How can there be any progress of the country without 42 the spread of education, the dawning of knowledge? Even no real 43 effort or exertion in the cause is visible among the few in your 44 country who are the promise of the future, you who have received 45 the blessings of education. But know for certain that absolutely 46 nothing can be done to improve the state of things, unless there is 47 spread of education first among the women and the masses. And so 48 I have it in my mind to train up some Brahmacharins and 49 Brahmacharinis, the former of whom will eventually take the vow of 1 Sannyasa and try to carry the light of education among the masses, 2 from village to village, throughout the country, while the latter will 3 do the same among women. But the whole work must be done in 4 the style of our own country. Just as centres have to be started for 5 men, so also centres have to be started for teaching women.

6 Brahmacharinis of education and character should take up the task
7 of teaching at these different centres. History and the Puranas, 8 housekeeping and the arts, the duties of home-life and principles 9 that make for the development of an ideal character have to be 10 taught with the help of modern science, and the women students 11 must be trained up in ethical and spiritual life. We must see to their 12 growing up as ideal matrons of home in time. The children of such 13 mothers will make further progress in the virtues that distinguish 14 the mothers. It is only in the homes of educated and pious mothers 15 that great men are born. And you have reduced your women to 16 something like manufacturing machines; alas, for heaven's sake, is 17 this the outcome of your education? The uplift of the women, the 18 awakening of the masses must come first, and then only can any 19 real good come about for the country, for India.

20 Near Chorebagan Swamiji gave it out to the disciple that the 21 foundress of the Mahakali Pathashala, the Tapasvini Mataji (ascetic 22 mother), had invited him to visit her institution. When our carriage 23 stopped at its destination, three or four gentlemen greeted Swamiji 24 and showed him up to the first floor. There the Tapasvini mother 25 received him standing. Presently she escorted him into one of the 26 classes, where all the maidens stood up in greeting. At a word from 27 Mataji all of them commenced reciting the Sanskrit meditation of 28 Lord Shiva with proper intonation. Then they demonstrated at the 29 instance of the Mother how they were taught the ceremonies of 30 worship in their school. After watching all this with much delight 31 and interest, Swamiji proceeded to visit the other classes. After 32 this, Mataji sent for some particular girl and asked her to explain 33 before Swamiji the first verse of the third canto of Kalidasa's 34 Raghuvamsham, which she did in Sanskrit. Swamiji expressed his 35 great appreciation of the measure of success Mataji had attained by 36 her perseverance and application in the cause of diffusing 37 education among women. In reply, she said with much humility, "In 38 my service to my students, I look upon them as the Divine Mother; 39 well, in starting the school I have neither fame nor any other object 40 in view."

41 Being asked by Mataji, Swamiji recorded his opinion about 42 the institution in the Visitors' Book, the last line of which was: "The 43 movement is in the right direction."

44 After saluting Mataji, Swamiji went back to his carriage, 45 which then proceeded towards Baghbazar, while the following
46 conversation took place between Swamiji and the disciple.

47 Swamiji: How far is the birthplace of this venerable lady! She 48 has renounced everything of her worldly life, and yet how diligent 49 in the service of humanity! Had she not been a woman, could she 50 ever have undertaken the teaching of women in the way she is 51 doing? What I saw here was all good, but that some male 52 householders should be pitchforked as teachers is a thing I cannot

1 approve of. The duty of teaching in the school ought to devolve in 2 every respect on educated widows and Brahmacharinis. It is good 3 to avoid in this country any association of men with women's 4 schools.

5 Disciple: But, sir, how would you get now in this country
6 learned and virtuous women like Gargi, Khana, or Lilavati?

7 Swamiji: Do you think women of the type don't exist now in 8 the country? Still on this sacred soil of India, this land of Sita and 9 Savitri, among women may be found such character, such spirit of 10 service, such affection, compassion, contentment, and reverence, as 11 I could not find anywhere else in the world! In the West, the women 12 did not very often seem to me to be women at all, they appeared to 13 be quite the replicas of men! Driving vehicles, drudging in offices, 14 attending schools, doing professional duties! In India alone the 15 sight of feminine modesty and reserve soothes the eye! With such 16 materials of great promise, you could not, alas, work out their 17 uplift! You did not try to infuse the light of knowledge into them. If 18 they get the right sort of education, they may well turn out to be the 19 ideal women in the world.

20 Disciple: Do you think, sir, the same consummation would be 21 reached through the way Mataji is educating her students? These 22 students would soon grow up and get married and would presently 23 shade into the likeness of all other women of the common run. So I 24 think, if these girls might be made to adopt Brahmacharya, then 25 only could they devote their lives to the cause of the country's 26 progress and attain to the high ideals preached in our sacred books.

27 Swamiji: Yes, everything will come about in time. Such 28 educated men are not yet born in this country, who can keep their 29 girls unmarried without fear of social punishment. Just see how 30 before the girls exceed the age of twelve or thirteen, people hasten 31 to give them away in marriage out of this fear of their social equals.
32 Only the other day, when the Age of Consent Bill was being passed, 33 the leaders of society massed together millions of men to send up 34 the cry "We don't want the Bill." Had this been in any other country, 35 far from getting up meetings to send forth a cry like that, people 36 would have hidden their heads under their roofs in shame, that 37 such a calumny could yet stain their society.

38 Disciple: But, sir, I don't think the ancient law-givers 39 supported this custom of early marriage without any rhyme or 40 reason. There must have been some secret meaning in this attitude 41 of theirs.

42 Swamiji: Well, what might have been this secret meaning, 43 please?

44 Disciple: Take it, for instance, in the first place that if the girls 45 are married at an early age, they may come over to their husbands' 46 home to learn the particular ways and usages of the family from the 47 early years of their life. They may acquire adequate skill in the 48 duties of the household under the guidance of their parents-in-law.
49 In the homes of their own parents, on the other hand, there is the 50 likelihood of grown-up daughters going astray. But married early,

1 they have no chance of thus going wrong, and over and above this,
2 such feminine virtues as modesty, reserve, fortitude, and diligence 3 are apt to develop in them.

4 Swamiji: In favour of the other side of the question, again, it
5 may be argued that early marriage leads to premature child-6 bearing, which accounts for most of our women dying early; their 7 progeny also, being of low vitality, go to swell the ranks of our 8 country's beggars! For if the physique of the parents be not strong 9 and healthy, how can strong and healthy children be born at all?
10 Married a little later and bred in culture, our mothers will give birth 11 to children who would be able to achieve the real good of the 12 country. The reason why you have so many widows in every home 13 lies here, in this custom of early marriage. If the number of early 14 marriages declines, that of widows is bound to follow suit.

15 Disciple: But, sir, it seems to me, if our women are married 16 late in life, they are apt to be less mindful of their household duties.
17 I have heard that the mothers-in-law in Calcutta very often do all 18 the cooking, while the educated daughters-in-law sit idle with red 19 paint round their feet! But in our East Bengal such a thing is never 20 allowed to take place.

21 Swamiji: But everywhere under the sun you find the same 22 blending of the good and the bad. In my opinion society in every 23 country shapes itself out of its own initiative. So we need not 24 trouble our heads prematurely about such reforms as the abolition 25 of early marriage, the remarriage of widows, and so on. Our part of 26 the duty lies in imparting true education to all men and women in 27 society. As an outcome of that education, they will of themselves be 28 able to know what is good for them and what is bad, and will 29 spontaneously eschew the latter. It will not be then necessary to 30 pull down or set up anything in society by coercion.

31 Disciple: What sort of education, do you think, is suited to our 32 women?

33 Swamiji: Religion, arts, science, housekeeping, cooking, 34 sewing, hygiene--the simple essential points in these subjects ought 35 to be taught to our women. It is not good to let them touch novels 36 and fiction. The Mahakali Pathashala is to a great extent moving in 37 the right direction. But only teaching rites of worship won't do; 38 their education must be an eye-opener in all matters. Ideal 39 characters must always be presented before the view of the girls to 40 imbue them with a devotion to lofty principles of selflessness. The 41 noble examples of Sita, Savitri, Damayanti, Lilavati, Khana, and 42 Mira should be brought home to their minds, and they should be 43 inspired to mould their own lives in the light of these.

44 Our cab now reached the house of the late Babu Balaram
45 Bose at Baghbazar. Swamiji alighted from it and went upstairs.
46 There he recounted the whole of his experience at the Mahakali
47 Pathashala to those who had assembled there to see him.

48 Then while discussing what the members of the newly formed 49 Ramakrishna Mission should do, Swamiji proceeded to establish by 50 various arguments the supreme importance of the "gift of learning"

1 and the "gift of knowledge". Turning to the disciple he said,
2 "Educate, educate, '{Sanskrit}'--Than this there is no other way'."
3 And referring in banter to the party who do not favour educational 4 propaganda, he said, "Well, don't go into the party of the 5 Prahladas!" Asked as to the meaning of the expression he replied, 6 "Oh, haven't you heard? Tears rushed out of the eyes of Prahlada at 7 the very sight of the first letter 'Ka' of the alphabet as it reminded 8 him of Krishna; so how could any studies be proceeded with? But 9 then the tears in Prahlada's eyes were tears of love, while your 10 fools affect tears in fright! Many of the devotees are also like that."
11 All of those present burst out laughing on hearing this, and Swami 12 Yogananda said to Swamiji, "Well, once you have the urge within 13 towards anything to be done, you won't have any peace until you 14 see the utmost done about it. Now what you have a mind to have 15 done shall be done no doubt."

20 [Place: Calcutta. Year: 1897.]

21 For the last ten days, the disciple had been studying Sayana's 22 commentary on the Rig-Veda with Swamiji, who was staying then at 23 the house of the late Babu Balaram Bose at Baghbazar. Max 24 Muller's volumes on the Rig-Veda had been brought from a wealthy 25 friend's private library. Swamiji was correcting the disciple every 26 now and then and giving him the true pronunciation or construction 27 as necessary. Sometimes while explaining the arguments of Sayana 28 to establish the eternity of the Vedas, Swamiji was praising very 29 highly the commentator's wonderful ingenuity; sometimes again 30 while arguing out the deeper significance of the doctrine, he was 31 putting forward a difference in view and indulging in an innocent 32 squib at Sayana.

33 While our study had proceeded thus for a while, Swamiji
34 raised the topic about Max Muller and continued thus: Well, do you 35 know, my impression is that it is Sayana who is born again as Max 36 Muller to revive his own commentary on the Vedas? I have had this 37 notion for long. It became confirmed in my mind, it seems, after I 38 had seen Max Muller. Even here in this country, you don't find a 39 scholar so persevering, and so firmly grounded in the Vedas and the 40 Vedanta. Over and above this, what a deep, unfathomable respect 41 for Shri Ramakrishna! Do you know, he believes in his Divine 42 Incarnation! And what great hospitality towards me when I was his 43 guest! Seeing the old man and his lady, it seemed to me that they 44 were living their home-life like another Vasishtha and Arundhati! At 45 the time of parting with me, tears came into the eyes of the old 46 man.

47 Disciple: But, sir, if Sayana himself became Max Muller, then 48 why was he born as a Mlechchha instead of being born in the 49 sacred land of India?

1 Swamiji: The feeling and the distinction that I am an Aryan 2 and the other is a Mlechchha come from ignorance. But what are 3 Varnashrama and caste divisions to one who is the commentator of 4 the Vedas, the shining embodiment of knowledge? To him they are 5 wholly meaningless, and he can assume human birth wherever he 6 likes for doing good to mankind. Specially, if he did not choose to be 7 born in a land which excelled both in learning and wealth, where 8 would he secure the large expenses for publishing such stupendous 9 volumes? Didn't you hear that the East India Company paid nine 10 lakhs of rupees in cash to have the Rig-Veda published? Even this 11 money was not enough. Hundreds of Vedic Pundits had to be 12 employed in this country on monthly stipends. Has anybody seen in 13 this age, here in this country, such profound yearning for 14 knowledge, such prodigious investment of money for the sake of 15 light and learning? Max Muller himself has written it in his preface, 16 that for twenty-five years he prepared only the manuscripts. Then 17 the printing took another twenty years! It is not possible for an 18 ordinary man to drudge for forty-five years of his life with one 19 publication. Just think of it! Is it an idle fancy of mine to say he is 20 Sayana himself?

21 After this talk about Max Muller the reading of the Vedas was 22 resumed. Now Swamiji began variously to support the view of 23 Sayana that creation proceeded out of the Vedas. He said: Veda 24 means the sum total of eternal truths; the Vedic Rishis experienced 25 those truths; they can be experienced only by seers of the 26 supersensuous and not by common men like us. That is why in the 27 Vedas the term Rishi means "the seer of the truth of the Mantras", 28 and not any Brahmin with the holy thread hanging down the neck.
29 The division of society into castes came about later on. Veda is of 30 the nature of Shabda or of idea. It is but the sum total of ideas.
31 Shabda, according to the old Vedic meaning of the term, is the 32 subtle idea, which reveals itself by taking the gross form later on.
33 So owing to the dissolution of the creation the subtle seeds of the 34 future creation become involved in the Veda. Accordingly, in the 35 Puranas you find that during the first Divine Incarnation, the 36 Minavatara, the Veda is first made manifest. The Vedas having been 37 first revealed in this Incarnation, the other creative manifestations 38 followed. Or in other words, all the created objects began to take 39 concrete shape out of the Shabdas or ideas in the Veda. For in 40 Shabda or idea, all gross objects have their subtle forms. Creation 41 had proceeded in the same way in all previous cycles or Kalpas.
42 This you find in the Sandhya Mantra of the Vedas: "{Sanskrit}--The 43 Creator projected the sun, the moon, the earth, the atmosphere, the 44 heaven, and the upper spheres in the same manner and process as 45 in previous cycles." Do you understand?

46 Disciple: But, sir, how in the absence of an actual concrete 47 object can the Shabda or idea be applied and for what? And how 48 can the names too be given at all?

49 Swamiji: Yes, that is what on first thought seems to be the 50 difficulty. But just think of this. Supposing this jug breaks into 51 pieces; does the idea of a jug become null and void? No. Because, 52 the jug is the gross effect, while the idea, "jug", is the subtle state

1 of the Shabda-state of the jug. In the same way, the Shabda-state of 2 every object is its subtle state, and the things we see, hear, touch, 3 or perceive in any manner are the gross manifestations of entities
4 in the subtle or Shabda state. Just as we may speak of the effect 5 and its cause. Even when the whole creation is annihilated, the 6 Shabda, as the consciousness of the universe or the subtle reality of 7 all concrete things, exists in Brahman as the cause. At the point of 8 creative manifestation, this sum total of causal entities vibrates into 9 activity, as it were, and as being the sonant, material substance of it 10 all, the eternal, primal sound of "Om" continues to come out of 11 itself. And then from the causal totality comes out first the subtle 12 image or Shabda-form of each particular thing and then its gross 13 manifestation. Now that causal Shabda, or word-consciousness, is 14 Brahman, and it is the Veda. This is the purport of Sayana. Do you 15 now understand?

16 Disciple: No, sir, I can't clearly comprehend it.

17 Swamiji: Well, you understand, I suppose, that even if all the 18 jugs in the universe were to be destroyed, the idea or Shabda, 19 "jug", would still exist. So if the universe be destroyed--I mean if all 20 the things making up the universe be smashed to atoms--why 21 should not the ideas or Shabdas, representing all of them in 22 consciousness, be still existing? And why cannot a second creation 23 be supposed to come out of them in time?

24 Disciple: But, sir, if one cries out "jug", "jug", that does not 25 cause any jug to be produced!

26 Swamiji: No, nothing is produced if you or I cry out like that; 27 but a jug must be revealed if the idea of it rises in Brahman which 28 is perfect in Its creative determinations. When we see even those 29 established in the practice of religion (Sadhakas) bring about by 30 will-power things otherwise impossible to happen, what to speak of 31 Brahman with perfect creativeness of will? At the point of creation 32 Brahman becomes manifest as Shabda (Idea), and then assumes 33 the form of "Nada" or "Om". At the next stage, the particular 34 Shabdas or ideas, that variously existed in former cycles, such as 35 Bhuh, Bhuvah, Svah, cow, man, etc., begin to come out of the "Om".
36 As soon as these ideas appear in Brahman endowed with perfect 37 will, the corresponding concrete things also appear, and gradually 38 the diversified universe becomes manifest. Do you now understand 39 how Shabda is the source of creation?

40 Disciple: Yes, I just form some idea of it, but there is no clear 41 comprehension in the mind.

42 Swamiji: Well, clear comprehension, inward realisation, is no
43 small matter, my son. When the mind proceeds towards self-44 absorption in Brahman, it passes through all these stages one by 45 one to reach the absolute (Nirvikalpa) state at last. In the process 46 of entering into Samadhi, first the universe appears as one mass of 47 ideas; then the whole thing loses itself in a profound "Om". Then 48 even that melts away, even that seems to be between being and 49 non-being. That is the experience of the eternal Nada. And then the 50 mind becomes lost in the Reality of Brahman, and then it is done!
51 All is peace!

1 The disciple sat mute, thinking that none could express and 2 explain it in the way Swamiji was doing, unless the whole thing
3 were a matter of one's own experience!

4 Swamiji then resumed the subject: Great men like Avataras,
5 in coming back from Samadhi to the realm of "I" and "mine", first 6 experience the unmanifest Nada, which by degrees grows distinct 7 and appears as Om, and then from Omkara, the subtle form of the 8 universe as a mass of ideas becomes experienced, and last, the 9 material universe comes into perception. But ordinary Sadhakas 10 somehow reach beyond Nada through immense practice, and when 11 once they attain to the direct realisation of Brahman, they cannot 12 again come back to the lower plane of material perception. They 13 melt away in Brahman, "{Sanskrit}"--Like water in milk."

14 When all this talk on the theory of creation was going on, the 15 great dramatist, Babu Girish Chandra Ghosh, appeared on the 16 scene. Swamiji gave him his courteous greetings and continued his 17 lessons to the disciple.

18 Shabdas are again divided into two classes, the Vedic 19 Shabdas and those in common human use. I found this position in 20 the Nyaya book called Shabdashaktiprakashika. There the 21 arguments no doubt indicate great power of thought; but, oh, the 22 terminology confounds the brain!

23 Now turning to Girish Babu Swamiji said: What do you say, G.
24 C.? Well, you do not care to study all this, you pass your days with 25 your adoration of this and that god, eh?

26 Girish Babu: What shall I study, brother? I have neither time 27 nor understanding enough to pry into all that. But this time, with 28 Shri Ramakrishna's grace, I shall pass by with greetings to your 29 Vedas and Vedanta, and take one leap to the far beyond! He gets 30 you through all these studies, because he wants to get many a thing 31 done by you. But we have no need of them. Saying this, Girish Babu 32 again and again touched the big Rig-Veda volumes with his head, 33 uttering, "All Victory to Ramakrishna in the form of Veda!"

34 Swamiji was now in a sort of deep reverie, when Girish Babu 35 suddenly called out to him and said: Well, hear me, please. A good 36 deal of study you have made in the Vedas and Vedanta, but say, did 37 you find anywhere in them any way for us out of all these profound 38 miseries in the country, all this starvation, all these crimes of 39 adultery, and the many horrible sins?

40 Saying this he painted over and over again the horrid pictures 41 of society. Swamiji remained perfectly quiet and speechless, while 42 at the thought of the sorrows and miseries of his fellow men, tears 43 began to flow out of his eyes, and seemingly to hide his feelings 44 from us, he rose and left the room.

45 Meanwhile, addressing the disciple, Girish Babu said: Did you
46 see, Bangal? What a great loving heart! I don't honour your Swamiji 47 simply for being a Pundit versed in the Vedas; but I honour him for 48 that great heart of his which just made him retire weeping at the 49 sorrows of his fellow beings.

1 The disciple and Girish Babu then went on conversing with 2 each other, the latter proving that knowledge and love were 3 ultimately the same.

4 In the meantime, Swamiji returned and asked the disciple,
5 "Well, what was all this talk going on between you?" The disciple 6 said, "Sir, we are talking about the Vedas, and the wonder of it is 7 that our Girish Babu has not studied these books but has grasped 8 the ultimate truths with clean precision!"

9 Swamiji: All truths reveal themselves to him who has got real 10 devotion to the Guru; he has hardly any need of studies. But such 11 devotion and faith are very rare in this world. He who possesses 12 those in the measure of our friend here need not study the 13 Shastras. But he who rushes forward to imitate him will only bring 14 about his own ruin. Always follow his advice, but never attempt to 15 imitate his ways.

16 Disciple: Yes, sir.

17 Swamiji: No saying ditto merely! Do grasp clearly the words I 18 say. Don't nod assent like a fool to everything said. Don't put 19 implicit faith, even if I declare something. First clearly grasp and 20 then accept. Shri Ramakrishna always used to insist on my 21 accepting every word of his only after clear comprehension of it.
22 Walk on your path, only with what sound principle, clear reasoning, 23 and scripture all declare as true. Thus by constant reflection, the 24 intellect will become clear, and then only can Brahman be reflected 25 therein. Do you understand?

26 Disciple: Yes, sir, I do. But the brain gets puzzled with the 27 different views of different men. This very moment I was being told 28 by Girish Babu, "What will you do with all this studying?" And then 29 you come and say, "Reflect on what you hear and read about." So 30 what exactly am I to do?

31 Swamiji: Both what he and I have advised you are true. The 32 only difference is that the advice of both has been given from 33 different standpoints. There is a stage of spiritual life where all 34 reasonings are hushed; "{Sanskrit}--Like some delicious taste 35 enjoyed by the dumb". And there is another mode of spiritual life in 36 which one has to realise the Truth through the pursuit of scriptural 37 learning, through studying and teaching. You have to proceed 38 through studies and reflection, that is your way to realisation. Do 39 you see?

40 Receiving such a mandate from Swamiji, the disciple in his 41 folly took it to imply Girish Babu's discomfiture, and so turning 42 towards him said: "Do you hear, sir? Swamiji's advice to me plainly 43 is just to study and reflect on the Vedas and Vedanta."

44 Girish Babu: Well, you go on doing so; with Swamiji's 45 blessings, you will, indeed, succeed in that way.

46 Swami Sadananda arrived there at that moment, and seeing 47 him, Swamiji at once said, "Do you know, my heart is sorely 48 troubled by the picture of our country's miseries G. C. was 49 depicting just now; well, can you do anything for our country?"

1 Sadananda: Maharaj, let the mandate once go forth; your 2 slave is ready.

3 Swamiji: First, on a pretty small scale, start a relief-centre, 4 where the poor and the distressed may obtain relief and the 5 diseased may be nursed. Helpless people having none to look after 6 them will be relieved and served there, irrespective of creed or 7 colour, do you see?

8 Sadananda: Just as you command, sir.

9 Swamiji: There is no greater Dharma than this service of 10 living beings. If this Dharma can be practised in the real spirit, then 11 "{Sanskrit}--Liberation comes as a fruit on the very palm of one's 12 hand".

13 Addressing Girish Babu now, Swamiji said, "Do you know, 14 Girish Babu, it occurs to me that even if a thousand births have to 15 be taken in order to relieve the sorrows of the world, surely I will 16 take them. If by my doing that, even a single soul may have a little 17 bit of his grief relieved, why, I will do it. Well, what avails it all to 18 have only one's own liberation? All men should be taken along with 19 oneself on that way. Can you say why a feeling like this comes up 20 foremost in my mind?

21 Girish Babu: Ah, otherwise why should Shri Ramakrishna 22 declare you to be greater than all others in spiritual competence?

23 Saying this, Girish Babu took leave of us all to go elsewhere 24 on some business.

27 [Place: The Alambazar Math. Year: 1897.]

28 After Swamiji's first return to Calcutta from the West, he 29 always used to place before the zealous young men who visited him 30 the lofty ideals of renunciation, and anyone expressing his desire of 31 accepting Sannyasa would receive from him great encouragement 32 and kindness. So, inspired by his enthusiasm some young men of 33 great good fortune gave up their worldly life in those days and 34 became initiated by him into Sannyasa. The disciple was present at 35 the Alambazar Math the day the first four of this batch were given 36 Sannyasa by Swamiji.

37 Often has the disciple heard it from the Sannyasins of the 38 Math that Swamiji was repeatedly requested by his brother-monks
39 not to admit one particular candidate into Sannyasa, whereupon 40 Swamiji replied: "Ah, if even we shrink from working out the 41 salvation of the sinful, the heavy-laden, the humiliated, and the 42 afflicted in soul, who else are to take care of them in this world?
43 No, don't you please stand against me in this matter." So Swamiji's 44 strong opinion triumphed, and always the refuge of the helpless, he 45 resolved out of his great love to give him Sannyasa.

46 The disciple had been staying at the Math for the last two 47 days, when Swamiji called him and said: "Well, you belong to the 48 priestly class; tomorrow you get them to perform their Shraddha,

1 and the next day I shall give them Sannyasa. So get yourself ready 2 by consulting the books of ceremonials today." The disciple bowed 3 to this mandate of Swamiji, and the ceremony was duly gone 4 through.

5 But the disciple became very much depressed at the thought 6 of the great sternness of Sannyasa. Swamiji detecting his mental 7 agitation asked him, "Well, I see, you feel some dread in your mind 8 at all this experience, is it not so?" And when the disciple confessed 9 it to be so, Swamiji said: "From this day these four are dead to the 10 world, and new bodies, new thoughts, new garments will be theirs
11 from tomorrow--and shining in the glory of Brahman they will live 12 like flaming fire! '{Sanskrit}'--Not by work, nor by progeny, nor by 13 wealth, but by renunciation alone some (rare ones) attained
14 Immortality' (Kaivalya Upanishad)."

15 After the ceremony, the four Brahmacharins bowed at the feet 16 of Swamiji. He blessed them and said, "You have the enthusiasm to 17 embrace the loftiest vow of human life; blessed indeed is your birth, 18 blessed your family, blessed the mothers who held you in their 19 womb! '{Sanskrit}'--The whole family-line becomes hallowed, the 20 mother achieves her highest!"

21 That day after supper, Swamiji talked of the ideal of Sannyasa
22 alone. To the zealous candidates for Sannyasa, he said: The real aim 23 of Sannyasa is "{Sanskrit}"--For one's highest freedom and for the 24 good of the world". Without having Sannyasa none can really be a 25 knower of Brahman--this is what the Vedas and the Vedanta 26 proclaim. Don't listen to the words of those who say, "We shall both 27 live the worldly life and be knowers of Brahman." That is the 28 flattering self-consolation of crypto-pleasure-seekers. He who has 29 the slightest desire for worldly pleasures, even a shred of some 30 such craving, will feel frightened at the thought of the path you are 31 going to tread; so, to give himself some consolation he goes about 32 preaching that impossible creed of harmonising Bhoga and Tyaga.
33 That is all the raving of lunatics, the frothings of the demented--idle 34 theories contrary to the scriptures, contrary to the Vedas. No 35 freedom without renunciation. Highest love for God can never be 36 achieved without renunciation. Renunciation is the 37 word--"{Sanskrit}"--There's no other way than this." Even the Gita 38 says, "{Sanskrit}"--The sages know Sannyasa to be the giving up of 39 all work that has desire for its end."

40 Nobody attains freedom without shaking off the coils of 41 worldly worries. The very fact that somebody lives the worldly life 42 proves that he is tied down to it as the bonds slave of some craving or 43 other. Why otherwise will he cling to that life at all? He is the slave 44 either of lust or of gold, of position or of fame, of learning or of 45 scholarship. It is only after freeing oneself from all this thralldom 46 that one can get on along the way of freedom. Let people argue as 47 loud as they please, I have got this conviction that unless all these 48 bonds are given up, unless the monastic life is embraced, none is 49 going to be saved, no attainment of Brahmajnana is possible.

50 Disciple: Do you mean, sir, that merely taking up Sannyasa
51 will lead one to the goal?

1 Swamiji: Whether the goal is attained or not is not the point
2 before us now. But until you get out of this wheel of Samsara, until 3 the slavery of desire is shaken off, you can't attain either Bhakti or 4 Mukti. To the knower of Brahman, supernatural powers or 5 prosperity are mere trivialities.

6 Disciple: Sir, is there any special time for Sannyasa, and are 7 there different kinds of it?

8 Swamiji: There is no special time prescribed for a life of 9 Sannyasa. The Shruti says: "{Sanskrit}--Directly the spirit of 10 renunciation comes, you should take to Sannyasa." The 11 Yogavasishta also says: {Sanskrit}--"Owing to life itself being frail 12 and uncertain, one should be devoted to religion even in one's 13 youth. For who knows when one's body may fall off?"

14 The Shastras are found to speak of four kinds of Sannyasa: 15 (1) Vidvat, (2) Vividisha, (3) Markata, (4) Atura. The awakening of 16 real renunciation all at once and the consequent giving up of the 17 world through Sannyasa is something that never happens unless 18 there are strong Samskaras or tendencies, developed from previous 19 birth. And this is called the Vidvat Sannyasa. Vividisha Sannyasa is 20 the case of one who, out of a strong yearning for the knowledge of 21 the Self through the pursuit of scriptural study and practice, goes 22 to the man of realisation and from him embraces Sannyasa to give 23 himself up to those pursuits. Markata Sannyasa is the case of a man 24 who is driven out of the world by some of its chastisements such as 25 the death of a relative or the like and then takes to Sannyasa, 26 though in such a case the renouncing spirit does not endure long.
27 Shri Ramakrishna used to say of it, "With this kind of renunciation 28 one hastens away to the up-country and then happens to get hold of 29 a nice job; and then eventually perhaps arranges to get his wife 30 brought over to him or perhaps takes to a new one!" And last, there 31 is another kind of Sannyasa which the Shastras prescribe for a man 32 who is lying on his death-bed, the hope of whose life has been given 33 up. For then, if he dies, he dies with the holiest of vows upon him, 34 and in his next birth the merit of it will accrue to him. And in case 35 he recovers, he shall not go back to his old life again but live the 36 rest of his days in the noble endeavour after Brahmajnana. Swami 37 Shivananda gave this kind of Sannyasa to your uncle. The poor man 38 died; but through that initiation he will come to a new birth of 39 higher excellence. After all, there is no other way to the knowledge 40 of the Self but through Sannyasa.

41 Disciple: What then, sir, will be the fate of the householders?

42 Swamiji: Why, through the merit of good Karma, they shall 43 have this renunciation in some future birth of theirs. And directly 44 this renunciation comes, there is an end of all troubles--with no 45 further delay he gets across this mystery of life and death. But then 46 all rules have their exceptions. A few men, one or two, may be seen 47 to attain the highest freedom by the true fulfilment of the 48 householder's Dharma, as we have amongst us Nag Mahashaya, for 49 instance.

50 Disciple: Sir, even the Upanishads etc. do not clearly teach 51 about renunciation and Sannyasa.

1 Swamiji: You are talking like a madman! Renunciation is the 2 very soul of the Upanishads. Illumination born of discriminative
3 reflection is the ultimate aim of Upanishadic knowledge. My belief, 4 however, is that it was since the time of Buddha that the monastic 5 vow was preached more thoroughly all over India, and 6 renunciation, the giving up of sense-enjoyment, was recognised as 7 the highest aim of religious life. And Hinduism has absorbed into 8 itself this Buddhistic spirit of renunciation. Never was a great man 9 of such renunciation born in this world as Buddha.

10 Disciple: Do you then mean, sir, that before Buddha's advent 11 there was very little of the spirit of renunciation in the country, and 12 there were hardly any Sannyasins at all?

13 Swamiji: Who says that? The monastic institution was there, 14 but the generality of people did not recognise it as the goal of life; 15 there was no such staunch spirit for it, there was no such firmness 16 in spiritual discrimination. So even when Buddha betook himself to 17 so many Yogis and Sadhus, nowhere did he acquire the peace he 18 wanted. And then to realise the Highest he fell back on his own 19 exertions, and seated on a spot with the famous words, 20 "{Sanskrit}--Let my body wither away on this seat" etc., rose from 21 it only after becoming the Buddha, the Illumined One. The many 22 monasteries that you now see in India occupied by monks were 23 once in the possession of Buddhism. The Hindus have only made 24 them their own now by modifying them in their own fashion. Really 25 speaking, the institution of Sannyasa originated with Buddha; it was 26 he who breathed life into the dead bones of this institution.

27 Swami Ramakrishnananda, a brother-disciple of Swamiji
28 interposed, "But the ancient law-books and Puranas are good 29 authority that all the four Ashramas had existed in India before 30 Buddha was born." Swamiji replied, "Most of the Puranas, the 31 codes of Manu and others, as well as much of the Mahabharata 32 form but recent literature. Bhagavan Buddha was much earlier than 33 all that." "On that supposition," rejoined Swami Ramakrishnananda, 34 "discussions about Buddhism would be found in the Vedas, 35 Upanishads, the law-books, Puranas, and the like. But since such 36 discussions are not found in these ancient books, how can you say 37 that Buddha antedated them all? In a few old Puranas, of course, 38 accounts of the Buddhistic doctrine are partially given; but from 39 these, it can't be concluded that the scriptures of the Hindus such 40 as the law-books and Puranas are of recent date."

41 Swamiji: Please read history,¹⁴⁴ and you will find that 42 Hinduism has become so great only by absorbing all the ideas of 43 Buddha.

44 Swami Ramakrishnananda: It seems to me that Buddha has

1 ¹⁴⁴ ?Evidently, during the argumentation, Swamiji was taking his stand on the 2 conclusions of modern historical studies, thereby giving his encouragement and 3 support to such new efforts and methods. But we know from one of his letters to 4 Swami Swarupananda (C.W. Vol. V, p. 171) that Swamiji broke off later on from 5 the position of these modern scholars and worked out the pre-Buddhistic origin of 6 much of modern Hinduism.
7

1 only left revived the great Hindu ideas, by thoroughly practising 2 in his life such principles as renunciation, non-attachment, and so 3 on.

4 Swamiji: But this position can't be proved. For we don't get 5 any history before Buddha was born. If we accept history only as 6 authority, we have to admit that in the midst of the profound 7 darkness of the ancient times, Buddha only shines forth as a figure 8 radiant with the light of knowledge.

9 Now the topic of Sannyasa was resumed and Swamiji said:
10 Wheresoever might lie the origin of Sannyasa, the goal of human 11 life is to become a knower of Brahman by embracing this vow of 12 renunciation. The supreme end is to enter the life of Sannyasa.
13 They alone are blessed indeed who have broken off from worldly 14 life through a spirit of renunciation.

15 Disciple: But many people are of opinion nowadays, sir, that 16 with the increase of wandering monks in the country, much harm
17 has been done to its material progress. They assert it on the ground 18 that these monks idly roam about depending on householders for 19 their living, that these are of no help to the cause of social and 20 national advancement.

21 Swamiji: But will you explain to me first what is meant by the 22 term material or secular advancement?

23 Disciple: Yes, it is to do as people in the West are doing by 24 securing the necessities of life through education, and promoting 25 through science such objects in life as commerce, industry, 26 communications, and so on.

27 Swamiji: But can all these be ever brought about, if real Rajas
28 is not awakened in man? Wandering all over India, nowhere I found 29 this Rajas manifesting itself. It is all Tamas and Tamas! The masses 30 lie engulfed in Tamas, and only among the monks could I find this 31 Rajas and Sattva. These people are like the backbone of the 32 country. The real Sannyasin is a teacher of householders. It is with 33 the light and teaching obtained from them that householders of old 34 triumphed many a time in the battles of life. The householders give 35 food and clothing to the Sadhus, only in return for the invaluable 36 teachings. Had there been no such mutual exchange in India, her 37 people would have become extinct like the American Indians by this 38 time. It is because the householders still give a few morsels of food 39 to the Sadhus that they are yet able to keep their foothold on the 40 path of progress. The Sannyasins are not idle. They are really the 41 fountain-head of all activity. The householders see lofty ideals 42 carried into practice in the lives of the Sadhus and accept from 43 them such noble ideas; and this it is that has up till now enabled 44 them to fight their battle of life from the sphere of Karma. The 45 example of holy Sadhus makes them work out holy ideas in life and 46 imbibe real energy for work. The Sannyasins inspire the 47 householders in all noble causes by embodying in their lives the 48 highest principle of giving up everything for the sake of God and 49 the good of the world, and as a return the householders give them a 50 few doles of food. And the very disposition and capacity to grow 51 that food develops in the people because of the blessings and good

1 wishes of the all-renouncing monks. It is because of their failure to 2 understand the deeper issues that people blame the monastic 3 institution. Whatever may be the case in other countries, in this 4 land the bark of householders' life does not sink only because the 5 Sannyasins are at its helm.

6 Disciple: But, sir, how many monks are to be found who are 7 truly devoted to the good of men?

8 Swamiji: Ah, quite enough if one great Sannyasin like Shri 9 Ramakrishna comes in a thousand years! For a thousand years after 10 his advent, people may well guide themselves by those ideas and 11 ideals he leaves behind. It is only because this monastic institution 12 exists in the country that men of his greatness are born here. There 13 are defects, more or less, in all the institutions of life. But what is 14 the reason that in spite of its faults, this noble institution stands yet 15 supreme over all the other institutions of life? It is because the true 16 Sannyasins forgo even their own liberation and live simply for doing 17 good to the world. If you don't feel grateful to such a noble 18 institution, fie on you again and again!

19 While speaking these words, Swamiji's countenance became 20 aglow. And before the eyes of the disciple he shone as the very 21 embodiment of Sannyasa.

22 Then, as if realising deep within his soul the greatness of this 23 institution, self-absorbed, he broke forth in sweetest symphony:

24 {Sanskrit}--"Brooding blissful in mind over the texts of the 25 Vedanta, quite contented with food obtained as alms and wandering 26 forth with a heart untouched by any feeling of grief, thrice blessed 27 are the Sannyasins, with only their loin-cloth for dress."

28 Resuming the talk, he went on: For the good of the many, for 29 the happiness of the many is the Sannyasin born. His life is all vain, 30 indeed, who, embracing Sannyasa, forgets this ideal. The 31 Sannyasin, verily, is born into this world to lay down his life for 32 others, to stop the bitter cries of men, to wipe the tears of the 33 widow, to bring peace to the soul of the bereaved mother, to equip 34 the ignorant masses for the struggle for existence, to accomplish 35 the secular and spiritual well-being of all through the diffusion of 36 spiritual teachings and to arouse the sleeping lion of Brahman in all 37 by throwing in the light of knowledge. Addressing then his brothers 38 of the Order, he said: Our life is "{Sanskrit}--for the sake of our 39 self-liberation as well as for the good of the world". So what are you 40 sitting idle for? Arise, awake; wake up yourselves, and awaken 41 others. Achieve the consummation of human life before you pass 42 off--"Arise, awake, and stop not till the goal is reached."

43 44 XI

45 [Place: The house of the late Babu Navagopal Ghosh,
46 Ramakrishnapur, Howrah, 6th February, 1898.]

47 Today the festival of installing the image of Shri Ramakrishna 48 was to come off at the residence of Babu Navagopal Ghosh of 49 Ramakrishnapur, Howrah. The Sannyasins of the Math and the 1 householder devotees of Shri Ramakrishna had all been invited 2 there.

3 Swamiji with his party reached the bathing ghat at 4 Ramakrishnapur. He was dressed in the simplest garb of ochre with 5 turban on his head and was barefooted. On both sides of the road
6 were standing multitudes of people to see him. Swamiji commenced
7 singing the famous Nativity Hymn on Shri Ramakrishna--"Who art 8 Thou laid on the lap of a poor Brahmin mother", etc., and headed a 9 procession, himself playing on the Khol. All the devotees assembled 10 there followed, joining in the chorus.

11 Shortly after the procession reached its destination, Swamiji 12 went upstairs to see the chapel. The chapel was floored with 13 marble. In the centre was the throne and upon it was the porcelain 14 image of Shri Ramakrishna. The arrangement of materials was 15 perfect and Swamiji was much pleased to see this.

16 The wife of Navagopal Babu prostrated herself before 17 Swamiji with the other female members of the house and then took 18 to fanning him. Hearing Swamiji speaking highly of every 19 arrangement, she addressed him and said, "What have we got to 20 entitle us to the privilege of worshipping Thakur (the Master, 21 Lord)?--A poor home and poor means! Do bless us please by 22 installing him here out of your own kindness!"

23 In reply to this, Swamiji jocosely said, "Your Thakur never had 24 in his fourteen generations such a marble-floored house to live in!
25 He had his birth in that rural thatched cottage and lived his days on 26 indifferent means. And if he does not live here so excellently 27 served, where else should he live?" Swamiji's words made 28 everybody laugh out.

29 Now, with his body rubbed with ashes and gracing the seat of 30 the priest, Swamiji himself conducted the worship, with Swami
31 Prakashananda to assist him. After the worship was over, Swamiji 32 while still in the worship-room composed extempore this Mantra for 33 prostration before Bhagavan Shri Ramakrishna: {Sanskrit}--"I bow 34 down to Ramakrishna, who established the religion, embodying in 35 himself the reality of all religions and being thus the foremost of 36 divine Incarnations."

37 All prostrated before Shri Ramakrishna with this Mantra. In 38 the evening Swamiji returned to Baghbazar.

39 XII

40 [Place: Balaram Babu's residence, Calcutta. Year: 1898.]

41 Swamiji had been staying during the last two days at Balaram 42 Babu's residence at Baghbazar. He was taking a short stroll on the 43 roof of the house, and the disciple with four or five others was in 44 attendance. While walking to and fro, Swamiji took up the story of 45 Guru Govind Singh and with his great eloquence touched upon the 46 various points in his life--how the revival of the Sikh sect was 47 brought about by his great renunciation, austerities, fortitude, and 48 life-consecrating labours--how by his initiation he re-Hinduised 49

1 Mohammedan converts and took them back into the Sikh
2 community--and how on the banks of the Narmada he brought his 3 wonderful life to a close. Speaking of the great power that used to 4 be infused in those days into the initiates of Guru Govind, Swamiji
5 recited a popular Doha (couplet) of the Sikhs: {Sanskrit}

6 The meaning is: "When Guru Govind gives the Name, i.e. the 7 initiation, a single man becomes strong enough to triumph over a 8 lakh and a quarter of his foes." Each disciple, deriving from his 9 inspiration a real spiritual devotion, had his soul filled with such 10 wonderful heroism! While holding forth thus on the glories of 11 religion, Swamiji's eyes dilating with enthusiasm seemed to be 12 emitting fire, and his hearers, dumb-stricken and looking at his 13 face, kept watching the wonderful sight.

14 After a while the disciple said: "Sir, it was very remarkable 15 that Guru Govind could unite both Hindus and Mussulmans within 16 the fold of his religion and lead them both towards the same end. In 17 Indian history, no other example of this can be found."

18 Swamiji: Men can never be united unless there is a bond of 19 common interest. You can never unite people merely by getting up 20 meetings, societies, and lectures if their interests be not one and 21 the same. Guru Govind made it understood everywhere that the 22 men of his age, be they Hindus or Mussulmans, were living under a 23 regime of profound injustice and oppression. He did not create any 24 common interest, he only pointed it out to the masses. And so both 25 Hindus and Mussulmans followed him. He was a great worshipper 26 of Shakti. Yet, in Indian history, such an example is indeed very 27 rare.

28 Finding then that it was getting late into the night, Swamiji 29 came down with others into the parlour on the first floor, where the 30 following conversation on the subject of miracles took place.

31 Swamiji said, "It is possible to acquire miraculous powers by 32 some little degree of mental concentration", and turning to the 33 disciple he asked, "Well, should you like to learn thought-reading? I 34 can teach that to you in four or five days."

35 Disciple: Of what avail will it be to me, sir?

36 Swamiji: Why, you will be able to know others' minds.

37 Disciple: Will that help my attainment of the knowledge of 38 Brahman?

39 Swamiji: Not a bit.

40 Disciple: Then I have no need to learn that science. But, sir, I 41 would very much like to hear about what you have yourself seen of 42 the manifestation of such psychic powers.

43 Swamiji: Once when travelling in the Himalayas I had to take 44 up my abode for a night in a village of the hill-people. Hearing the 45 beating of drums in the village some time after nightfall, I came to 46 know upon inquiring of my host that one of the villagers had been 47 possessed by a Devata or good spirit. To meet his importunate 48 wishes and to satisfy my own curiosity, we went out to see what the 49 matter really was. Reaching the spot, I found a great concourse of 1 people. A tall man with long, bushy hair was pointed out to me, and 2 I was told that person had got the Devata on him. I noticed an axe 3 being heated in fire close by the man; and after a while, I found the 4 red-hot thing being seized and applied to parts of his body and also 5 to his hair! But wonder of wonders, no part of his body or hair thus 6 branded with the red-hot axe was found to be burnt, and there was 7 no expression of any pain in his face! I stood mute with surprise.

8 The headman of the village, meanwhile, came up to me and said,
9 "Maharaj, please exorcise this man out of your mercy." I felt myself 10 in a nice fix, but moved to do something, I had to go near the 11 possessed man. Once there, I felt a strong impulse to examine the 12 axe rather closely, but the instant I touched it, I burnt my fingers, 13 although the thing had been cooled down to blackness. The 14 smarting made me restless and all my theories about the axe
15 phenomenon were spirited away from my mind! However, smarting 16 with the burn, I placed my hand on the head of the man and 17 repeated for a short while the Japa. It was a matter of surprise to 18 find that the man came round in ten or twelve minutes. Then oh, the 19 gushing reverence the villagers showed to me! I was taken to be 20 some wonderful man! But, all the same, I couldn't make any head or 21 tail of the whole business. So without a word one way or the other, I 22 returned with my host to his hut. It was about midnight, and I went 23 to bed. But what with the smarting burn in the hand and the 24 impenetrable puzzle of the whole affair, I couldn't have any sleep 25 that night. Thinking of the burning axe failing to harm living human 26 flesh, it occurred again and again to my mind, "There are more 27 things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamt of in your 28 philosophy."

29 Disciple: But, could you later on ever explain the mystery, sir?

30 Swamiji: No. The event came back to me in passing just now, 31 and so I related it to you.

32 He then resumed: But Shri Ramakrishna used to disparage 33 these supernatural powers; his teaching was that one cannot attain 34 to the supreme truth if the mind is diverted to the manifestation of 35 these powers. The human mind, however, is so weak that, not to 36 speak of householders, even ninety per cent of the Sadhus happen 37 to be votaries of these powers. In the West, men are lost in 38 wonderment if they come across such miracles. It is only because 39 Shri Ramakrishna has mercifully made us understand the evil of 40 these powers as being hindrances to real spirituality that we are 41 able to take them at their proper value. Haven't you noticed how for 42 that reason the children of Shri Ramakrishna pay no heed to them?

43 Swami Yogananda said to Swamiji at this moment, "Well, why 44 don't you narrate to our Bangal that incident of yours in Madras 45 when you met the famous ghost-tamer?"

46 At the earnest entreaty of the disciple Swamiji was persuaded 47 to give the following account of his experience:

48 Once while I was putting up at Manmatha Babu's place, I 49 dreamt one night that my mother had died. My mind became much 50 distracted. Not to speak of corresponding with anybody at home, I 51 used to send no letters in those days even to our Math. The dream

1 being disclosed to Manmatha, he sent a wire to Calcutta to 2 ascertain facts about the matter. For the dream had made my mind 3 uneasy on the one hand, and on the other, our Madras friends, with 4 all arrangements ready, were insisting on my departing for America 5 immediately, and I felt rather unwilling to leave before getting any 6 news of my mother. So Manmatha who discerned this state of my 7 mind suggested our repairing to a man living some way off from 8 town, who having acquired mystic powers over spirits could tell 9 fortunes and read the past and the future of a man's life. So at 10 Manmatha's request and to get rid of my mental suspense, I agreed 11 to go to this man. Covering the distance partly by railway and partly 12 on foot, we four of us--Manmatha, Alasinga, myself, and another-- 13 managed to reach the place, and what met our eyes there was a 14 man with a ghoulish, haggard, soot-black appearance, sitting close 15 to a cremation ground. His attendants used some jargon of South
16 Indian dialect to explain to us that this was the man with perfect 17 power over the ghosts. At first the man took absolutely no notice of 18 us; and then, when we were about to retire from the place, he made 19 a request for us to wait. Our Alasinga was acting as the interpreter, 20 and he explained the requests to us. Next, the man commenced 21 drawing some figures with a pencil, and presently I found him 22 getting perfectly still in mental concentration. Then he began to 23 give out my name, my genealogy, the history of my long line of 24 forefathers and said that Shri Ramakrishna was keeping close to 25 me all through my wanderings, intimating also to me good news
26 about my mother. He also foretold that I would have to go very soon 27 to far-off lands for preaching religion. Getting good news thus about 28 my mother, we all travelled back to town, and after arrival received 29 by wire from Calcutta the assurance of mother's doing well.

30 Turning to Swami Yogananda, Swamiji remarked, "Everything 31 that the man had foretold came to be fulfilled to the letter, call it 32 some fortuitous concurrence or anything you will."

33 Swami Yogananda said in reply, "It was because you would 34 not believe all this before that this experience was necessary for 35 you."

36 Swamiji: Well, I am not a fool to believe anything and 37 everything without direct proof. And coming into this realm of 38 Mahamaya, oh, the many magic mysteries I have come across 39 alongside this bigger magic conjuration of a universe! Maya, it is all 40 Maya! Goodness! What rubbish we have been talking so long this 41 day! By thinking constantly of ghosts, men become ghosts 42 themselves, while whoever repeats day and night, knowingly or 43 unknowingly, "I am the eternal, pure, free, self-illuminated Atman", 44 verily becomes the knower of Brahman.

45 Saying this, Swamiji affectionately turned to the disciple and 46 said, "Don't allow all that worthless nonsense to occupy your mind.
47 Always discriminate between the real and the unreal, and devote 48 yourself heart and soul to the attempt to realise the Atman. There is 49 nothing higher than this knowledge of the Atman; all else is Maya, 50 mere jugglery. The Atman is the one unchangeable Truth. This I 51 have come to understand, and that is why I try to bring it home to 52 you all. {Sanskrit}--"One Brahman there is without a second",

1 "There is nothing manifold in existence" (Brihadaranyaka, IV. iv. 19).
2 All this conversation continued up to eleven o'clock at night.
3 After that, his meal being finished, Swamiji retired for rest. The 4 disciple bowed down at his feet to bid him good-bye. Swamiji asked, 5 "Are you not coming tomorrow?"
6 Disciple: Yes, sir, I am coming, to be sure. The mind longs so 7 much to meet you at least once before the day is out.
8 Swamiji: So good-night now, it is getting very late.

INSPIRED TALKS

(Recorded by Miss S. E. Waldo, A Disciple)

Wednesday, June 19, 1895.

(This day marks the beginning of the regular teaching given daily by Swami Vivekananda to his disciples at Thousand Island Park. We had not yet all assembled there, but the Master's heart was always in his work, so he commenced at once to teach the three or four who were with him. He came on this first morning with the Bible in his hand and opened to the Book of John, saying that since we were all Christians, it was proper that he should begin with the Christian scriptures.)

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." The Hindu calls this Maya, the manifestation of God, because it is the power of God. The Absolute reflecting through the universe is what we call nature. The Word has two manifestations--the general one of nature, and the special one of the great Incarnations of God--Krishna, Buddha, Jesus, and Ramakrishna. Christ, the special manifestation of the Absolute, is known and knowable. The absolute cannot be known: we cannot know the Father, only the Son. We can only see the Absolute through the "tint of humanity", through Christ.

In the first five verses of John is the whole essence of Christianity: each verse is full of the profoundest philosophy.

The Perfect never becomes imperfect. It is in the darkness, but is not affected by the darkness. God's mercy goes to all, but is not affected by their wickedness. The sun is not affected by any disease of our eyes which may make us see it distorted. In the twenty-ninth verse, "taketh away the sin of the world" means that Christ would show us the way to become perfect. God became Christ to show man his true nature, that we too are God. We are human coverings over the Divine; but as the divine Man, Christ and we are one.

The Trinitarian Christ is elevated above us; the Unitarian Christ is merely a moral man; neither can help us. The Christ who is the Incarnation of God, who has not forgotten His divinity, that Christ can help us, in Him there is no imperfection. These Incarnations are always conscious of their own divinity; they know it from their birth. They are like the actors whose play is over, but who, after their work is done, return to please others. These great Ones are untouched by aught of earth; they assume our form and our limitations for a time in order to teach us; but in reality they are never limited, they are ever free. . . .

Good is near Truth, but is not yet Truth. After learning not to be disturbed by evil, we have to learn not to be made happy by good. We must find that we are beyond both evil and good; we must study their adjustment and see that they are both necessary.

1 The idea of dualism is from the ancient Persians.¹⁴⁵ Really 2 good and evil are one¹⁴⁶ and are in our own mind. When the mind is 3 self-poised, neither good nor bad affects it. Be perfectly free; then 4 neither can affect it, and we enjoy freedom and bliss. Evil is the iron
5 chain, good is the gold one; both are chains. Be free, and know once 6 for all that there is no chain for you. Lay hold of the golden chain to 7 loosen the hold of the iron one, then throw both away. The thorn of 8 evil is in our flesh; take another thorn from the same bush and 9 extract the first thorn; then throw away both and be free. . . .

10 In the world take always the position of the giver. Give 11 everything and look for no return. Give love, give help, give service, 12 give any little thing you can, but keep out barter. Make no
13 conditions, and none will be imposed. Let us give out of our own 14 bounty, just as God gives to us.

15 The Lord is the only Giver, all the men in the world are only 16 shopkeepers. Get His cheque, and it must be honoured everywhere.

17 "God is the inexplicable, inexpressible essence of love", to be 18 known, but never defined.

19 In our miseries and struggles the world seems to us a very 20 dreadful place. But just as when we watch two puppies playing and 21 biting we do not concern ourselves at all, realising that it is only fun 22 and that even a sharp nip now and then will do no actual harm, so 23 all our struggles are but play in God's eyes. This world is all for play 24 and only amuses God; nothing in it can make God angry.

25 "Mother! In the sea of life my bark is sinking.

26 The whirlwind of illusion, the storm of attachment is growing 27 every moment.

28 My five oarsmen (senses) are foolish, and the helmsman 29 (mind) is weak.

30 My bearings are lost, my boat is sinking.

31 O Mother! Save me!"

32 "Mother, Thy light stops not for the saint or the sinner; it 33 animates the lover and the murderer." Mother is ever manifesting 34 through all. The light is not polluted by what it shines on, nor 35 benefited by it. The light is ever pure, ever changeless. Behind 36 every creature is the "Mother", pure, lovely, never changing.
37 "Mother, manifested as light in all beings, we bow down to Thee!"
38 She is equally in suffering, hunger, pleasure, sublimity. "When the 39 bee sucks honey, the Lord is eating." Knowing that the Lord is 40 everywhere, the sages give up praising and blaming. Know that 41 nothing can hurt you. How? Are you not free? Are you not Atman?
42 He is the Life of our lives, the hearing of our ears, the sight of our 43 eyes.

1 ¹⁴⁵ ?Parsees, the followers of Zoroaster who taught that the whole creation has 2 come out of two primary principles, one being called Ormuzd (the principle of 3 Good) and the other Ahriman (the principle of Evil).

5 ¹⁴⁶ ?Because they are both chains and products of Maya.
6

1 We go through the world like a man pursued by a policeman
2 and see the barest glimpses of the beauty of it. All this fear that 3 pursues us comes from believing in matter. Matter gets its whole
4 existence from the presence of mind behind it. What we see is God 5 percolating through nature.¹⁴⁷

6
7 Sunday, June 23.

8 Be brave and be sincere; then follow any path with devotion, 9 and you must reach the Whole. Once lay hold of one link of the 10 chain, and the whole chain must come by degrees. Water the roots 11 of the tree (that is, reach the Lord), and the whole tree is watered; 12 getting the Lord, we get all.

13 One-sidedness is the bane of the world. The more sides you 14 can develop the more souls you have, and you can see the universe
15 through all souls--through the Bhakta (devotee) and the Jnani
16 (philosopher). Determine your own nature and stick to it. Nishtha 17 (devotion to one ideal) is the only method for the beginner; but with 18 devotion and sincerity it will lead to all. Churches, doctrines, forms, 19 are the hedges to protect the tender plant, but they must later be 20 broken down that the plant may become a tree. So the various 21 religions, Bibles, Vedas, dogmas--all are just tubs for the little plant; 22 but it must get out of the tub. Nishtha is, in a manner, placing the 23 plant in the tub, shielding the struggling soul in its path. . . .

24 Look at the "ocean" and not at the "wave"; see no difference 25 between ant and angel. Every worm is the brother of the Nazarene.
26 How say one is greater and one less? Each is great in his own 27 place. We are in the sun and in the stars as much as here. Spirit is 28 beyond space and time and is everywhere. Every mouth praising 29 the Lord is my mouth, every eye seeing is my eye. We are confined 30 nowhere; we are not body, the universe is our body. We are 31 magicians waving magic wands and creating scenes before us at 32 will. We are the spider in his huge web, who can go on the varied 33 strands wheresoever he desires. The spider is now only conscious 34 of the spot where he is, but he will in time become conscious of the 35 whole web. We are now conscious only where the body is, we can 36 use only one brain; but when we reach ultra-consciousness, we 37 know all, we can use all brains. Even now we can "give the push" in 38 consciousness, and it goes beyond and acts in the superconscious.

39 We are striving "to be" and nothing more, no "I" even--just 40 pure crystal, reflecting all, but ever the same. When that state is 41 reached, there is no more doing; the body becomes a mere 42 mechanism, pure without care for it; it cannot become impure.

43 Know you are the Infinite, then fear must die. Say ever, "I 44 and my Father are one."

45 In time to come Christs will be in numbers like bunches of 46 grapes on a vine; then the play will be over and will pass out--as 47 water in a kettle beginning to boil shows first one bubble, then 48 another, then more and more, until all is in ebullition and passes out

1 ¹⁴⁷ ?Here "nature" means matter and mind.
2

1 as steam. Buddha and Christ are the two biggest "bubbles" the 2 world has yet produced. Moses was a tiny bubble, greater and 3 greater ones came. Sometime, however, all will be bubbles and 4 escape; but creation, ever new, will bring new water to go through 5 the process all over again.

6
7 Monday, June 24. (The reading today was from the Bhakti- 8 Sutras by Narada)

9 "Extreme love to God is Bhakti, and this love is the real 10 immortality, getting which a man becomes perfectly satisfied, 11 sorrows for no loss, and is never jealous; knowing which man 12 becomes mad."

13 My Master used to say, "This world is a huge lunatic asylum 14 where all men are mad, some after money, some after women, some 15 after name or fame, and a few after God. I prefer to be mad after 16 God. God is the philosophers' stone that turns us to gold in an 17 instant; the form remains, but the nature is changed--the human 18 form remains, but no more can we hurt or sin."

19 "Thinking of God, some weep, some sing, some laugh, some 20 dance, some say wonderful things, but all speak of nothing but 21 God."

22 Prophets preach, but the Incarnations like Jesus, Buddha, 23 Ramakrishna, can give religion; one glance, one touch is enough.
24 That is the power of the Holy Ghost, the "laying on of hands"; the 25 power was actually transmitted to the disciples by the Master--the 26 "chain of Guru-power". That, the real baptism, has been handed 27 down for untold ages.

28 "Bhakti cannot be used to fulfil any desires, itself being the 29 check to all desires." Narada gives these as the signs of love: 30 "When all thoughts, all words, and all deeds are given up unto the 31 Lord, and the least forgetfulness of God makes one intensely 32 miserable, then love has begun."

33 "This is the highest form of love because therein is no desire 34 for reciprocity, which desire is in all human love."

35 "A man who has gone beyond social and scriptural usage, he 36 is a Sannyasin. When the whole soul goes to God, when we take 37 refuge only in God, then we know that we are about to get this 38 love."

39 Obey the scriptures until you are strong enough to do
40 without them; then go beyond them. Books are not an end-all.
41 Verification is the only proof of religious truth. Each must verify for 42 himself; and no teacher who says, "I have seen, but you cannot", is 43 to be trusted, only that one who says, "You can see too". All 44 scriptures, all truths are Vedas in all times, in all countries; because 45 these truths are to be seen, and any one may discover them.

46 "When the sun of Love begins to break on the horizon, we 47 want to give up all our actions unto God; and when we forget Him 48 for a moment, it grieves us greatly."

1 Let nothing stand between God and your love for Him. Love
2 Him, love Him, love Him; and let the world say what it will. Love is 3 of three sorts--one demands, but gives nothing; the second is 4 exchange; and the third is love without thought of return--love like 5 that of the moth for the light.

6 "Love is higher than work, than Yoga, than knowledge."

7 Work is merely a schooling for the doer; it can do no good to 8 others. We must work out our own problem; the prophets only show 9 us how to work. "What you think, you become ", so if you throw 10 your burden on Jesus, you will have to think of Him and thus 11 become like Him--you love Him.

12 "Extreme love and highest knowledge are one."

13 But theorising about God will not do; we must love and work.
14 Give up the world and all worldly things, especially while the 15 "plant" is tender. Day and night think of God and think of nothing 16 else as far as possible. The daily necessary thoughts can all be 17 thought through God. Eat to Him, drink to Him, sleep to Him, see 18 Him in all. Talk of God to others; this is most beneficial.

19 Get the mercy of God and of His greatest children; these are 20 the two chief ways to God. The company of these children of light is 21 very hard to get; five minutes in their company will change a whole 22 life; and if you really want it enough, one will come to you. The 23 presence of those who love God makes a place holy, "such is the 24 glory of the children of the Lord". They are He; and when they 25 speak, their words are scriptures. The place where they have been 26 becomes filled with their vibrations, and those going there feel 27 them and have a tendency to become holy also.

28 "To such lovers there is no distinction of caste, learning, 29 beauty, birth, wealth, or occupation; because all are His."

30 Give up all evil company, especially at the beginning. Avoid 31 worldly company, that will distract your mind. Give up all "me and 32 mine". To him who has nothing in the universe the Lord comes. Cut 33 the bondage of all worldly affections; go beyond laziness and all 34 care as to what becomes of you. Never turn back to see the result 35 of what you have done. Give all to the Lord and go on and think not 36 of it. The whole soul pours in a continuous current to God; there is 37 no time to seek money, or name, or fame, no time to think of 38 anything but God; then will come into our hearts that infinite, 39 wonderful bliss of Love. All desires are but beads of glass. Love of 40 God increases every moment and is ever new, to be known only by 41 feeling it. Love is the easiest of all, it waits for no logic, it is natural.
42 We need no demonstration, no proof. Reasoning is limiting 43 something by our own minds. We throw a net and catch something, 44 and then say that we have demonstrated it; but never, never can we 45 catch God in a net.

46 Love should be unrelated. Even when we love wrongly, it is of 47 the true love, of the true bliss; the power is the same, use it as we 48 may. Its very nature is peace and bliss. The murderer when he 49 kisses his baby forgets for an instant all but love. Give up all self, all 50 egotism; get out of anger, lust, give all to God. "I am not, but Thou

1 art; the old man is all gone, only Thou remainest." "I am Thou."
2 Blame none; if evil comes, know the Lord is playing with you and be 3 exceeding glad.

4 Love is beyond time and space, it is absolute.

5
6 Tuesday, June 25.

7 After every happiness comes misery; they may be far apart
8 or near. The more advanced the soul, the more quickly does one 9 follow the other. What we want is neither happiness nor misery.
10 Both make us forget our true nature; both are chains--one iron, one 11 gold; behind both is the Atman, who knows neither happiness nor 12 misery. These are states and states must ever change; but the 13 nature of the Soul is bliss, peace, unchanging. We have not to get it, 14 we have it; only wash away the dross and see it.

15 Stand upon the Self, then only can we truly love the world.
16 Take a very, very high stand; knowing our universal nature, we must 17 look with perfect calmness upon all the panorama of the world. It 18 is but baby's play, and we know that, so cannot be disturbed by it. If 19 the mind is pleased with praise, it will be displeased with blame. All 20 pleasures of the senses or even of the mind are evanescent; but 21 within ourselves is the one true unrelated pleasure, dependent 22 upon nothing. It is perfectly free, it is bliss. The more our bliss is 23 within, the more spiritual we are. The pleasure of the Self is what 24 the world calls religion.

25 The internal universe, the real, is infinitely greater than the 26 external, which is only a shadowy projection of the true one. This 27 world is neither true nor untrue, it is the shadow of truth.
28 "Imagination is the gilded shadow of truth", says the poet.

29 We enter into creation, and then for us it becomes living.
30 Things are dead in themselves; only we give them life, and then, 31 like fools, we turn around and are afraid of them, or enjoy them.
32 But be not like certain fisherwomen, who, caught in a storm on 33 their way home from market, took refuge in the house of a florist.
34 They were lodged for the night in a room next to the garden where 35 the air was full of the fragrance of flowers. In vain did they try to 36 rest, until one of their number suggested that they wet their fishy 37 baskets and place them near their heads. Then they all fell into a 38 sound sleep.

39 The world is our fish basket, we must not depend upon it for 40 enjoyment. Those who do are the Tamasas or the bound. Then there 41 are the Rajasas or the egotistical, who talk always about "I", "I".
42 They do good work sometimes and may become spiritual. But the 43 highest are the Sattvikas, the introspective, those who live only in 44 the Self. These three qualities, Tamas, Rajas, and Sattva (idleness, 45 activity, and illumination), are in everyone, and different ones 46 predominate at different times.

47 Creation is not a "making" of something, it is the struggle to 48 regain the equilibrium, as when atoms of cork are thrown to the 49 bottom of a pail of water and rush to rise to the top, singly or in

1 clusters. Life is and must be accompanied by evil. A little evil is the 2 source of life; the little wickedness that is in the world is very good; 3 for when the balance is regained, the world will end, because 4 sameness and destruction are one. When this world goes, good and 5 evil go with it; but when we can transcend this world, we get rid of 6 both good and evil and have bliss.

7 There is no possibility of ever having pleasure without pain, 8 good without evil; for living itself is just the lost equilibrium. What 9 we want is freedom, not life, nor pleasure, nor good. Creation is 10 infinite, without beginning and without end--the ever-moving ripple 11 in an infinite lake. There are yet unreached depths and others 12 where the equilibrium has been regained; but the ripple is always 13 progressing, the struggle to regain the balance is eternal. Life and 14 death are only different names for the same fact, the two sides of 15 the one coin. Both are Maya, the inexplicable state of striving at 16 one time to live, and a moment later to die. Beyond this is the true 17 nature, the Atman. While we recognise a God, it is really only the 18 Self which we have separated ourselves from and worship as 19 outside of us; but it is our true Self all the time--the one and only 20 God.

21 To regain the balance we must counteract Tamas by Rajas; 22 then conquer Rajas by Sattva, the calm beautiful state that will 23 grow and grow until all else is gone. Give up bondage; become a 24 son, be free, and then you can "see the Father", as did Jesus.
25 Infinite strength is religion and God. Avoid weakness and slavery.
26 You are only a soul, if you are free; there is immortality for you, if 27 you are free; there is God, if He is free. . . .

28 The world for me, not I for the world. Good and evil are our 29 slaves, not we theirs. It is the nature of the brute to remain where 30 he is (not to progress); it is the nature of man to seek good and 31 avoid evil; it is the nature of God to seek neither, but just to be 32 eternally blissful. Let us be God! Make the heart like an ocean, go 33 beyond all the trifles of the world, be mad with joy even at evil; see 34 the world as a picture and then enjoy its beauty, knowing that 35 nothing affects you. Children finding glass beads in a mud puddle, 36 that is the good of the world. Look at it with calm complacency; see 37 good and evil as the same--both are merely "God's play"; enjoy all.

38 My Master used to say, "All is God; but tiger-God is to be 39 shunned. All water is water; but we avoid dirty water for drinking."

40 The whole sky is the censer of God, and sun and moon are 41 the lamps. What temple is needed? All eyes are Thine, yet Thou has 42 not an eye; all hands are Thine; yet Thou hast not a hand.

43 Neither seek nor avoid, take what comes. It is liberty to be 44 affected by nothing; do not merely endure, be unattached.
45 Remember the story of the bull. A mosquito sat long on the horn of 46 a certain bull. Then his conscience troubled him, and he said, "Mr.
47 Bull, I have been sitting here a long time, perhaps I annoy you. I am 48 sorry, I will go away." But the bull replied, "Oh no, not at all! Bring 49 your whole family and live on my horn; what can you do to me?"

1 Wednesday, June 26.

2 Our best work is done, our greatest influence is exerted, 3 when we are without thought of self. All great geniuses know this.
4 Let us open ourselves to the one Divine Actor, and let Him act, and 5 do nothing ourselves. "O Arjuna! I have no duty in the whole world", 6 says Krishna. Be perfectly resigned, perfectly unconcerned; then 7 alone can you do any true work. No eyes can see the real forces, we 8 can only see the results. Put our self, lose it, forget it; just let God 9 work, it is His business. We have nothing to do but stand aside and 10 let God work. The more we go away, the more God comes in. Get rid 11 of the little "I", and let only the great "I" live.

12 We are what our thoughts have made us; so take care of 13 what you think. Words are secondary. Thoughts live, they travel far.
14 Each thought we think is tinged with our own character, so that for 15 the pure and holy man, even his jests or abuse will have the twist of 16 his own love and purity and do good.

17 Desire nothing; think of God and look for no return. It is the 18 desireless who bring results. The begging monks carry religion to 19 every man's door; but they think that they do nothing, they claim 20 nothing, their work is unconsciously done. If they should eat of the 21 tree of knowledge, they would become egoists, and all the good 22 they do would fly away. As soon as we say "I", we are humbugged 23 all the time; and we call it "knowable", but it is only going round 24 and round like a bullock tied to a tree. The Lord has hidden Himself 25 best, and His work is best; so he who hides himself best, 26 accomplishes most. Conquer yourself, and the whole universe is 27 yours.

28 In the state of Sattva we see the very nature of things, we go 29 beyond the senses and beyond reason. The adamant wall that 30 shuts us in is egoism; we refer everything to ourselves, thinking. "I 31 do this, that, and the other." Get rid of this puny "I"; kill this 32 diabolism in us; "Not I, but Thou"--say it, feel it, live it. Until we give 33 up the world manufactured by the ego, never can we enter the 34 kingdom of heaven. None ever did, none ever will. To give up the 35 world is to forget the ego, to know it not at all--living in the body, 36 but not of it. This rascal ego must be obliterated. Bless men when 37 they revile you. Think how much good they are doing you; they can 38 only hurt themselves. Go where people hate you, let them thrash 39 the ego out of you, and you will get nearer to the Lord. Like the 40 mother-monkey, we hug our "baby", the world, as long as we can, 41 but at last when we are driven to put it under our feet and step on 42 it¹⁴⁸ then we are ready to come to God. Blessed it is to be 43 persecuted for the sake of righteousness. Blessed are we if we 44 cannot read, we have less to take us away from God.

45 Enjoyment is the million-headed serpent that we must tread
46 under foot. We renounce and go on, then find nothing and despair; 47 but hold on, hold on. The world is a demon. It is a kingdom of which

1 ¹⁴⁸ ?The mother-monkey is very fond of her young, but if an iron plate is heated 2 under her feet and it becomes unbearable, she throws down the baby and stands 3 on it to save herself.

1 the puny ego is king. Put it away and stand firm. Give up lust and 2 gold and fame and hold fast to the Lord, and at last we shall reach a 3 state of perfect indifference. The idea that the gratification of the 4 senses constitutes enjoyment is purely materialistic. There is not 5 one spark of real enjoyment there; all the joy there is, is a mere 6 reflection of the true bliss.

7 Those who give themselves up to the Lord do more for the 8 world than all the so-called workers. One man who has purified 9 himself thoroughly accomplishes more than a regiment of 10 preachers. Out of purity and silence comes the word of power.

11 "Be like a lily--stay in one place and expand your petals; and 12 the bees will come of themselves." There was a great contrast 13 between Keshab Chandra Sen and Shri Ramakrishna. The second 14 never recognised any sin or misery in the world, no evil to fight 15 against. The first was a great ethical reformer, leader, and founder 16 of the Brahmo-Samaj. After twelve years the quiet prophet of 17 Dakshineswar had worked a revolution not only in India, but in the 18 world. The power is with the silent ones, who only live and love and 19 then withdraw their personality. They never say "me" and "mine"; 20 they are only blessed in being instruments. Such men are the 21 makers of Christs and Buddhas, ever living fully identified with God, 22 ideal existences, asking nothing, and not consciously doing 23 anything. They are the real movers, the Jivanmuktas,¹⁴⁹ absolutely 24 selfless, the little personality entirely blown away, ambition non-25 existent. They are all principle, no personality.

27 Thursday, June 27. (The Swami brought the New Testament 28 this morning and talked again on the book of John.)

29 Mohammed claimed to be the "Comforter" that Christ
30 promised to send. He considered it unnecessary to claim a 31 supernatural birth for Jesus. Such claims have been common in all 32 ages and in all countries. All great men have claimed gods for their 33 fathers.

34 Knowing is only relative; we can be God, but never know 35 Him. Knowledge is a lower state; Adam's fall was when he came to 36 "know". Before that he was God, he was truth, he was purity. We 37 are our own faces, but can see only a reflection, never the real 38 thing. We are love, but when we think of it, we have to use a 39 phantasm, which proves that matter is only externalised thought.¹⁵⁰

40 Nivritti is turning aside from the world. Hindu mythology 41 says that the four first-created¹⁵¹ were warned by a Swan (God

1 ¹⁴⁹ ?Literally, free even while living.
2

3 ¹⁵⁰ ?Since the knower can know only his reflection and not himself, he is ever 4 unknowable. So knowledge is distinct and separate from the knower, and as such 5 it is externalised thought or thought standing outside the knower as a separate 6 entity. Since the knower goes by the name of Spirit, that which is distinct and 7 separate from it should go by the name of Matter. Hence the Swami says, 8 "Matter is only externalised thought."
9

10 ¹⁵¹ ?The four first-created were Sanaka, Sanandana, Sanatana, and

1 Himself) that manifestation was only secondary; so they remained 2 without creating. The meaning of this is that expression is 3 degeneration, because Spirit can only be expressed by the letter
4 and then the "letter killeth";¹⁵² yet principle is bound to be clothed 5 in matter, though we know that later we shall lose sight of the real 6 in the covering. Every great teacher understands this, and that is 7 why a continual succession of prophets has to come to show us the 8 principle and give it a new covering suited to the times. My Master 9 taught that religion is one; all prophets teach the same; but they 10 can only present the principle in a form; so they take it out of the 11 old form and put it before us in a new one. When we free ourselves 12 from name and form, especially from a body--when we need no
13 body, good or bad--then only do we escape from bondage. Eternal 14 progression is eternal bondage; annihilation of form is to be 15 preferred. We must get free from any body, even a "god-body". God 16 is the only real existence, there cannot be two. There is but One 17 Soul, and I am That.

18 Good works are only valuable as a means of escape; they do 19 good to the doer, never to any other.

20 Knowledge is mere classification. When we find many things 21 of the same kind we call the sum of them by a certain name and are 22 satisfied; we discover "facts", never "why". We take a circuit in a 23 wider field of darkness and think we know something! No "why" 24 can be answered in this world; for that we must go to God. The 25 Knower can never be expressed; it is as when a grain of salt drops 26 into the ocean, it is at once merged in the ocean.

27 Differentiation creates; homogeneity or sameness is God. Get 28 beyond differentiation; then you conquer life and death and reach 29 eternal sameness and are in God, are God. Get freedom, even at the
